After the death of Ebenezer Thompson (3), the father of Mrs. Alexander H. Vinton, Mrs. Thompson lived on in Pomfret with her son, Ebenezer (4), until his death in 1842. Finding the care of the place too much for her, it was decided by the heirs to sell it. Dr. Vinton bought it from them, and thus the name of Vinton became prominent in the town of Pomfret. Dr. Vinton sold one hundred acres in 1849 or 1850 to a stranger, and sixty-five to his brother-in-law, Charles S. Thompson, keeping for himself and his heirs the beautiful place and homestead, finding thirty-five acres enough for the time he could spend upon them. The children of Alexander H. and Eleanor S. Vinton were: Frederick Schwarz, who died of scarlet fever; Eleanor, who owns the home place, and lives at Hamlet Lodge; Mary, who married Randolph Marshall Clark, of Boston, and is a resident of Pomfret during the summer months in her beautiful home near her sister. To this marriage were born: Eleanor Vinton, born March 3, 1867, who married Dr. T. Morris Murray, July 12, 1900, of Washington, D. C.; Ethel Randolph, born June 6, 1870, who married, June 23, 1898, Ezra Ripley Thayer, of Boston, son of James Bradley Thayer, of the Harvard Law School; Anna, who died in infancy; Alexander, who died Nov. 7, 1881; Emily, who died in infancy.

CHARLES OTIS THOMPSON, second son of Charles S. and Clara Thompson, lives in his father's home. He is a prominent man in the town, with the steadfastness and high characteristics of his race. He married, Feb. 14, 1889, Caroline Wadsworth, daughter of Charles Massi Wadsworth, of New York. They have two children, Dorothy Otis, born Aug. 29, 1890; Elisabeth Wadsworth, born July 20, 1892. Thus two of the grandchildren of Ebenezer Thompson (3) are still living in Pomfret, Conn., Miss Eleanor Vinton keeping up the old place. It is not often that one family retains the original house so long without a broken line.

The present Episcopal Church in Pomfret was built in memory of Dr. Alexander H. and Eleanor S. Vinton, by their daughters, Eleanor and Mary, and consecrated May 1, 1883. It is on the site of the old church.

HENRY M. NILES is a successful farmer and an esteemed resident of Ellington, Tolland county, where his many manly qualities and genuine manhood have won him many friends.

Isaac Niles, his great-grandfather, came from Boston, and settled on a farm in Willington, Tolland county, where he spent his life. A large land owner and an influential man, he is remembered as a capable and worthy citizen of the old time. He was twice married, and became the father of two children by each wife: Isaac, Jr., the grandfather of Henry M.; Joshua, who was a farmer all his life in Willington and married Sybil Hyde; James, who followed farming in Willington and married Rhoda Hughes; and Phoebe, who married William Rice, and died in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Isaac Niles, grandfather of Henry M., was born in Willington, March 1, 1786, and was a lifelong farmer, living near Willington Hill, where he bought and sold several farms. His later years were spent in Tolland county, near the Willington line, where he died Oct. 7, 1858; his remains were interred in Willington. He was a Democrat, prominent in local politics, and held many town offices. He married Alice Scripture, who was born July 14, 1790, and survived him several years, dying March 3, 1863, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. William Gager, in Ellington. Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Niles were the parents of the following children: John M., the father of Henry M.; Mary F., who married Elisha Jennings, a shoemaker, and removed to Springfield, Ill., where they both died, her death occurring Oct. 12, 1884; Phoebe, who is the widow of Austin Chapman, and resides in North Somers, Conn.; Isaac, who was three times married, first to Mary Stoddard, and second to Marilda Merrick, and died in Springfield, Ill., where he was a clergyman of the Baptist Church, March 4, 1877, at the age of sixty-two years; Susan, who married Jesse Daggett, a farmer, and died in Ellington, March 11, 1888; Francis, who married Melissa West, and was engaged in farming in North Wilbraham, Mass., where he died Jan. 10, 1867; Louisa, who married William Gager, and died in Ellington, May 22, 1878, at the age of fifty-three years.

John M. Niles was born in 1808 in Willington, Conn., where he was reared a farmer boy. After his marriage he moved to Mansfield, and then to Hartford, where he was engaged in teaming and trucking, in 1840 coming to Ellington, where he bought a farm, and spent the rest of his life, dying Jan. 20, 1886; his remains were laid to rest at Ellington. Mr. Niles was a Democrat, and held several town offices, proving himself a competent man in every position to which he was called.

John M. Niles married Caroline Haywood, who was born in 1810 in Providence, R. I., and they became the parents of the following named children: Emily, the widow of Pliny Allen, a prominent manufacturer in his time, who lived in Hampden, Mass.; Henry M., the gentleman whose name introduces this article; Alice A., who died when she was nearly seventeen years of age, June 14, 1860.

Henry M. Niles was born March 8, 1838, in Mansfield, Conn., and came to Ellington when a child of two and a half years, with his parents. In Ellington he attended the common schools and the Rockville high school, remaining on the home farm until after his marriage; he was also engaged in teaming there. In 1872 he bought his present home farm of John Morton, known as the "Gillett Place," and consisting of thirty-one acres. The buildings have been enlarged and remodeled by him, and there he has followed farming to the present time, giving especial attention to the culture of broad-leaf tobacco, of which he has about four and a half acres each year.

Mr. Niles and Miss Mary Edwards Ellsworth were married in East Windsor, Conn., March 24, 1862. Mrs. Niles was born in Essex, Conn., daughter of Joseph and Mary Ann (Starkey) Ellsworth. To this union have come the following children: Alice C., born June 14, 1866, the wife of Max C. Crampton, residing in New York, where Mr. Crampton is the general manager of Gray's Telautograph Company; Harry, born Sept. 4, 1868, who died April 2, 1875, aged six years and seven months; Edwards Ellsworth, born March 8, 1872, who married Mabel Russell, daughter of Everett

P. and Amelia A. Russell, of Somers, Conn., and lives in New York; Matie E., born March 14, 1876, a bookkeeper and stenographer in the store of her brother, in New York; Ethel M., born April 2, 1877, who died at the age of seven months.

E. Ellsworth Niles was educated in the district schools and the Rockville high school, and when sixteen years of age started out for himself. The beginning of his interesting and successful business career was the purchase of silk of the Belding Bros., and with this line of goods he traveled the roads of Connecticut, replenishing the stock several times, and making a fine profit. Arriving at the town of Essex, Conn., he engaged as a clerk in a store, and while holding that position was offered a place in the bank, which he declined, preferring to make his place in the business world in other lines. Removing to Middletown, he was engaged with James Bunice, the well-known merchant of that city, where his services were given entirely to the millinery department. After two years he removed to Rockville, taking charge of the millinery department of Carroll & McDonald's store. Later he went to Waterbury, Conn., to take charge of a millinery department, and thence to Brooklyn, N. Y., where he was the designer for a millinery department in a leading house, with which he remained two years or more. He finally located in New York, starting his present successful business at No. 5 East, 30th street, in the building up of which he has been greatly assisted by his accomplished and talented wife.

Henry M. Niles is a Democrat, and has served as selectman, assessor and member of the board of relief. He is a hard-working and enterprising man, and has met with much success in his every enterprise. Mrs. Niles belongs to the Episcopal Church of Essex, and in a much respected lady in the community where she lives.

Joseph Ellsworth, the father of Mrs. Niles, was born in East Windsor. On his mother's side he was a descendant of Cotton Mather, and on the paternal side of Timothy and Jonathan Edwards. He graduated from Yale College, and prepared to practice law, but after his marriage removed to Essex to engage in the ship-building business in company with his father-in-law, Timothy Starkey. They continued in business together for many years, and then Mr. Ellsworth removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., where he was engaged in the insurance business. Later still he went to Detroit, where he became a prominent merchant. His stay in Michigan, however, was somewhat brief, as his health became so impaired that he felt it necessary to sell out his establishment and return to Connecticut, locating in Windsorville, where he died at the age of fifty-six years. His remains were buried at that place. Mr. Ellsworth was a prosperous and wealthy man, and quite influential, at one time representing Essex in the General Assembly. In politics he was a Whig, and he and his wife belonged to the Episcopal Church.

Joseph Ellsworth and Mary Ann Starkey, daughter of Timothy Starkey, were married in Essex. Mrs. Ellsworth was a lady of much character. Her people belonged to an old and leading family of the town. To this union were born ten children. (1) William H., a real-estate dealer in New Haven, married Emma Cummings. (2) Joseph W. is a member of the Produce Exchange of New York. (3) Mary Edwards, Mrs. Niles, attended Miss Porter's school at Farmington and the Thetford (Vt.) Seminary. She was eleven years old when she went to Miss Porter's school, and there were only three young pupils who boarded in the school then. Mrs. Niles remained in this school and was graduated when about in her sixteenth year, and then attended the Thetford Seminary two years, graduating from that school. (4) Isabella J. resides at Essex. (5) Abbie M. married Alfred Jarrett, and is living in California. (6) Caroline E. married Colt Post, and lives in Essex. (7) Emily K., the widow of Charles Pease, lives in Manchester, Conn. (8) Ella R. is unmarried, and lives in San Francisco. (9) Charles E. died in Seattle, Wash. (10) Alfred S. is living in Ellington, and is unmarried.

DEACON GEORGE PATRIDGE FIELD was born Dec. 3, 1826, in South Hadley, Mass., and is a son of George Patridge Field, who was born April 19, 1794, in Northfield, Mass. The father was a farmer the greater part of his life and at one time drove a stage from Hartford to Northampton, Mass. For several years he conducted the summer hotel, "The Holyoke House," on Mount Holyoke, and operated a refreshment stand on the peak. He died in Worcester, Mass. He was a Whig, but did not give much attention to political affairs. In religion he was a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Field was married for the first time to Permelia Bardwell, in Deerfield, Mass., Dec. 4, 1819. She was born in 1796, and was the daughter of Thomas Bardwell, of Deerfield. Her death occurred at Northfield, April 24, 1836. To this union were born: (1) Charles William, born Oct. 3, 1820, who married Mary M. Williams, of Walpole, N. H., and ran a tailor shop many years in Clinton, Mass., where he died in September, 1894; (2) Mary H., born Oct. 10, 1822, at South Hadley Falls, Mass., who died in infancy; (3) George P.; (4) Catherine H., born May 7, 1828, at Fletchertown, Mass., who married Horace H. Merrill, and died in California; (5) Edwin, born Sept. 10, 1829, at Old Hadley, Mass., who is living on the Pacific coast, and owns considerable property in Washington, California and Wyoming.

The second Mrs. Field was Lucy Tarbell, who was born June 4, 1816, and married Mr. Field, March 17, 1839. She was a daughter of Nathaniel Tarbell, of Chester, Vt., and died May 3, 1879, in Proctorsville, Vt. To this marriage were born:

(1) Sarah M. A., born Feb. 24, 1841, in Chester, Vt., who died Nov. 13, 1847; (2) Mary H., born April 10, 1843, at Chester, Vt., who married George E. McAllister, and is living in Monson, Mass., where Mr. McAllister is engaged in farming; (3) Josephine, born Oct. 24, 1844, in Chester, Vt., who died Nov. 12, 1847, at Manchester, Vt.; (4) Warren B., born Oct. 24, 1849, in Leicester, Mass., for a time a traveling man, but now engaged in manufacturing gum in New York, who married Emma Stevenson, of New Haven; (5) William D., twin brother to Warren B., who died Sept. 20, 1850, at Worcester, Mass.

Abner Field, the grandfather of Deacon George P. Field, lived in Northfield, Mass., and the house which he made his home was built as a fort during the Pequot war. He is supposed to have participated in the war of the Revolution. Farming was his life work, and he is remembered as a hardy and robust worker.

Deacon Field, of Tolland, was born in South Hadley, Mass., and when he was but two years of age was taken by his parents to Belchertown, and from there to Northfield, where he had his first schooling. His education was completed at Chester, Vt., when he was eighteen years of age. Remaining at home, he engaged in farming until 1846, when he came to Hartford, working for his uncle, Roswell Field, who was the landlord of the "New England Hotel" on Front street. The same year he began to clerk for Carlos Glazier, a grocery and meat dealer. With this gentleman he spent the succeeding four years. In 1847 Mr. Field entered the employ of M. P. Holt, confectioner and tobacconist, and his work was to drive the wagon and peddle goods all the way from Hartford to Bellows Falls, taking in all the towns on both sides of the Connecticut river. Mr. Field followed this business three years, and then in company with Franklin B. Adams started a grocery and provision store at 63½ State street, Hartford, under the firm name of Adams & Field. At the end of two years Mr. Field sold his interest to his partner, and started a grocery at the corner of Clinton and Warren streets, in Brooklyn. This business he continued until 1855, when he closed out, and sailed for California, making the outward journey by the Nicaragua route, and arrived in San Francisco in about thirty days from the time of his leaving home. Mr. Field settled in Allegheny town, Sierra county, where he was a clerk in a general store for some two years. At the end of that period Mr. Field left the store, and went to mining, having an interest in certain locations: until 1868 this was his business, when he took up a ranch and for two years was engaged in its cultivation. In 1870 he sold out his interests to his partner, David Preston, and April 30 sailed for home, making the return trip by way of Panama.

Mr. Field purchased the Luther Baldwin farm in August, 1870. This is a farm of a hundred acres on the Tolland and Ellington road, and is situated near the Snipsic Lake, and there he devotes himself to general farming. Mr. Field has given much attention to small fruits and garden products, and has done a fine business since his location there. Mr. Field is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and while in California served as secretary of the local lodge. He is a charter member of the Tolland Grange, and was its first secretary and then its overseer and master. He is now the past master of the Grange.

Mr. Field is a Republican, and has served a term as a member of the board of relief. For several years he has been on the school board, and was its chairman for two terms. For many years he has been justice of the peace.

Mr. Field united with the Baptist Church in Chester, Vt., in 1840, and in 1884 was elected deacon. He was elected superintendent of the Sunday-school in 1871, and was made clerk of the church soon after his coming to Tolland, a position which he filled for eighteen years. Mr. Field has practically been the life of the church, and his home has been headquarters for the various clergymen who have filled the pulpit of the church during the years of its activity.

Mr. Field was married Nov. 1, 1849, to Emily Lamitha Phelps, who was born Sept. 11, 1823, at Limesbury, Conn., a daughter of Edwin Phelps. Mrs. Field died July 6, 1898, and was greatly mourned by all who knew her. She joined the Baptist Church at Hartford and her life gave no shame to her faith. The children born to this union were four in number. (1) George Lyman, born in Hartford, Conn., Aug. 31, 1850, married Mary Elizabeth Brown, who was born Dec. 25, 1860, in Orwell, Vt.; he died Dec. 8, 1899, in Dove Park, Ark., where he was engaged in farming. He was the father to the following children: Marion Emily, Jennie Marena, Agnes Beatrice, Sarah Ella and Charles Edwin. The last two mentioned died young. (2) Charles Phelps, born Aug. 15, 1853, in Brooklyn, N. Y., died Dec. 1, 1855. (3) Edwin Bardwell, born April 24, 1862, in Allegheny, Cal., is living at home, and at one time or another has been connected with many of the large fruit growers in Connecticut. (4) Frank Lincoln, born Sept. 4, 1865, in Forest City, Cal., is in charge of the home farm. He married, Oct. 3, 1895, Mary Williams Rathbun, of Richmond, R. I., the daughter of Roland R. Rathbun, and the mother of Courtland Phelps, born Jan. 29, 1897.

WILLIAM ALONZO PATTEN. Among the very prosperous and highly respected citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is William Alonzo Patten, who was born June 25, 1833, in Somers, Conn., and is a son of William Patten and a brother of Nathaniel A. Patten, of Somers, Conn., one of the leading men of that community. [See sketch of Nathaniel A. Patten elsewhere in this volume.]

The education of William Alonzo Patten was received in his native city, and also at the Wilbraham Academy, where he attended for three terms. Leaving the academy at the age of nineteen, he began to farm in North Somers, purchasing the Capt. Calvin Kibbe farm, consisting of eighty acres. For seven years he continued improving his property and farming it, and then disposed of it and purchased the Elizur Hayes farm in West Stafford, consisting of thirty acres of fine land, and lived upon it for thirty-four years, or until 1899, when he removed to Stafford Springs and is now residing there, retired from active business life.

In 1870 he formed a partnership with Henry McKinney, under the firm name of McKinney & Patten, continuing this connection for about fifteen years, the firm being contractors and builders. During the time they were in partnership, these two built many of the finest residences and other structures in Stafford and vicinity, and attained an excellent reputation for their work.

On Dec. 15, 1857, Mr. Patten was married to Maryette Kibbe, who was born in Somers, and died there in 1862, a daughter of Calvin Kibbe, of Somers, Conn. To this union was born one child, Maryette Saphona, who died when only seven months of age. Mr. Patten was married the second time, Nov. 10, 1864, to Almira Holmes, a daughter of Josiah and Nellie (Case) Holmes, of West Stafford. The only child that was born was Katie Lincoln, who married Nov. 25, 1886, Robert Small, of Stafford Springs, a machinist in the Hopson & Chapin concern, in New London, Conn. Their children are: Harold Patten, born March 31, 1887, at home; and Robert Thomas, born March 30, 1900, who died in August, 1901.

Mr. Patten is a Republican and takes an active part in politics, and while as yet he has not found time to accept any office within the gift of the people, he is eminently fitted for such positions. For many years he has attended the Congregational Church of Stafford Springs, of which his wife is a member, and he is a man of highest character, genial and well liked throughout the community for his many excellent traits of character.

MICHAEL H. MANDELL is one of the representative citizens of Ellington, Tolland county, where his reputation for personal character is very high, and he is known as a leading citizen of the community, where for forty years he has been engaged in business and has made a host of friends.

Mr. Mandell was born Jan. 2, 1827, in Boston, and was but six years old when his father died. He attended the public schools in Boston, Mass., until he was about ten years old, when his oldest brother, David J., had a call from the Universalist Society of Westbrook, Maine, to become their pastor, and with his mother and family moved there. Four years later he had a call to go to Springfield, Mass., and moving there founded the first Universalist Society in that place. At about the age of fifteen years young Mandell engaged with Henry Woodman, of Springfield, to learn the trade of shoemaking, where he remained three years. The engagement was broken by an injury Mr. Woodman received in an altercation with a workman, which was of so serious a character as to cause his retirement from business. Young Mandell then engaged with a Mr. Townsley, but did not remain with him long, as shoemaking was altogether too tame and humdrum for him. Running away to Boston, he engaged with the master of a fishing smack bound for Newfoundland. The business proved quite satisfactory, and the second year he engaged with the same man for a percentage, but the expectations were disappointed by the wrecking of the vessel at Cape Ann, Mr. Mandell landing on the coast without a dollar and nothing except the clothes on his back. From Cape Ann to Springfield, a distance of 150 miles, he made his way on foot, and at the latter place soon found employment in the printing office of his brother-in-law, Elijah Ashley, where he remained for two years. He then went to Boston to work at shoemaking with a Mr. Odenwald, with whom he remained some time, and after leaving him became a journeyman shoemaker, working in a number of places in New England. For four years he was at Fitchburg, and then went to Athol, where he assisted his brother as practical printer and pressman in publishing the White Flag, the first paper published in that place. Returning to Fitchburg, he worked at his trade, and from there went to Stafford Springs, Conn., where he carried on a shoe store and employed several workmen. On April 1, 1860, Mr. Mandell came to Ellington, and opened a general store in the Conference building, doing shoemaking and repairing. When the present Congregational church was erected, Mr. Mandell purchased the Conference building, where he still carries on a general mercantile business.

Michael H. Mandell was married, June 3, 1847, in Lowell, Mass., to Marinda Russell Blake, who was born June 3, 1826, and who died July 5, 1852. To their union came one child, Mary, born Feb. 17, 1848, who was married Nov. 25, 1873, to Handel Robbins, who died May 12, 1892. She is now living in South Manchester and has two children: Wesley B., who married Minnie Atkins, of Williamantic, Conn., and has one child, Charles A.; and Bessie Mandell, who married George Wilcox, of New Haven, and resides in Waterbury, Connecticut.

Mr. Mandell married for his second wife, Dec. 16, 1855, in Troy, N. Y., Elizabeth N. Hoar, of Worcester, Mass., who was born March 9, 1835, daughter of Thomas N. and Dinah (Washburn) Hoar, and granddaughter of Reuben and Sarah (Norris) Hoar. The following named children blessed this union: (1) Charles W., born Feb. 13, 1858, was engaged in the drug business in Hartford, and later in Bayonne, N. J.,

E. N. Mandell

and then for seventeen years was in the employ of the Old Dominion Steamship Co., resigning in February, 1901, to accept a position as general manager of the Stephens & Condit Steamship Co., of New York and Newark, N. J., the main offices being at the latter place. Mr. Mandell was married in January, 1878, to Anna Ackley, daughter of William Brainard Ackley, now deceased, who was a lawyer living in Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Mandell have had seven children, Walter (who died in infancy), Frederick A., Andrew A. (who died in infancy), Ralph C., Grace E., Mabel A. and Sidney W. (2) Winifred A., born Sept. 30, 1859, is the wife of George McNeill, of Paterson, N. J., where he holds the position of overseer in the Lambert & Co. silk mill. They lost one child, Charles M., and have one daughter, Maude E., who survives. (3) Howard J., born Aug. 25, 1873, a graduate of the high school at Rockville, is teller of the First National Bank at that place.

Michael H. Mandell is a Republican in political faith. He served as justice of the peace from 1861 to 1897, when he reached the age limit. He was appointed postmaster at Ellington by President Harrison, was re-appointed by President McKinley, and still retains the position. For many years he has been a notary public and was registrar of voters for twenty-five years. For thirty years he had charge of the Congregational Church building at Ellington. For many years he led the choir, of which his wife was also a member, both having good voices, and taking delight in the musical service. No citizen in Ellington is more highly respected than 'Squire Mandell, as he is popularly known.

MENDALL or MANDELL. This family is well established at Hardwick, Mass., where it has been represented for many generations. John Mendall, the first of whom we have record, lived in Marshfield, Mass., and was a rope-maker by occupation. In his will made May 10, 1711; "being aged and weak in body," proved Feb. 8, 1720, he left all his tools to his grandson, Francis Crooker (see History of Hardwick, Mass., p. 415). He had five children: John, Mercy (Mrs. Tinkhum), Sarah (Mrs. Torrey), Hannah (Mrs. Tilden) and Ruth (Mrs. Doty).

(II) John Mendall (2), son of John, married Joanna Standlake, daughter of Richard Standlake, of Scituate, Mass. They lived in Rochester, Mass., where he engaged in farming, and where their three children were born, as follows: John, Dec. 15, 1688; Joanna, May 13, 1690; Moses, March 24, 1695. The will of John Mendall, the father, was proved July 14, 1743.

(III) Moses Mendall, son of John (2), born March 24, 1695, in Rochester, Mass., died May 18, 1746, in Dartmouth, Mass. His will was probated July 27, 1746, his real estate valued at £1,200. He lived at Rochester (1715), Falmouth (1725) and Dartmouth (Acushnet) (1740), and was a carpenter, drover, innholder, dealer and "gentleman." He and his wife Susanna had seven children, viz.: Lemuel; Noah, who died in Barre, Mass., in 1800-01; Paul, who is next in the line of descent; Susanna, Mrs. Bailey; Hannah, Mrs. Weaver; Joanna, Mrs. Nichols; and Mary, who died unmarried.

(IV) Paul Mandell, son of Moses, was the first to use the present spelling of the name. He was born about 1723, and lived to the great age of eighty-six, dying Sept. 16, 1809. He was a shopkeeper in Dartmouth until the spring of 1749, when he moved to Hardwick, Mass., where he became quite prominent. He was active in military matters, being captain of militia in the expedition against Crown Point Sept. 20, to Nov. 12, 1756, and in a second campaign, in 1758; was brigade major in 1778. He served as selectman for eleven years between 1756 and 1775; as assessor from 1751 to 1775; town clerk, 1770; justice of the peace (Sept. 29, 1775); representative, 1773-74; and delegate to the First and Second Provincial Congresses, 1774-75. He was called "Colonel" at the time of his appointment to the Provincial Congress. In 1776 he was the second largest tax payer in Hardwick. On Feb. 8, 1746-47, Paul Mandell married Susanna Ruggles, who was born about 1721, daughter of Rev. Timothy Ruggles, of Rochester, and died Dec. 16, 1813, aged nearly ninety-two. The record of their children is as follows: Hannah, born Jan. 10-20, 1747-48, at Dartmouth, married Gen. Jonathan Warner, Feb. 5, 1766. Susanna, born Nov. 16, 1749, at Hardwick, married John Stone, May 12, 1768, and died July 28, 1844, at Dana, Mass. Moses, born Dec. 16, 1751, is mentioned below. Paul, born Oct. 31, 1753, lived at Athol, Mass.; on Nov. 28, 1776, he married Mary Briggs, of Petersham, Mass., and they had a son Barnabas, who was executor of his father's estate, March 25, 1798. Mary, born Oct. 3, 1759, married John Doty Sept. 19, 1779.

(V) Moses Mandell, son of Paul, was born Dec. 16, 1751, in Hardwick, Mass., and passed all his life in that vicinity, dying there June 18, 1826. He inherited the homestead, and engaged in farming and dairying. He was one of the active citizens of his community. As captain he reported with his company for duty with the minute men at Cambridge, immediately after April 19, 1775; was aide-de-camp to his brother-in-law, Major Gen. Warner, before December, 1782, and was thereafter known as Major Mandell; served as selectman six years between 1785 and 1817; and as assessor seven years, between 1801 and 1819. In 1798 he signed a petition to the General Assembly for the improvement of the road from New York to Boston. Major Mandell was first married, May 28, 1777, to Mary Wheeler, daughter of Capt. Daniel Wheeler. She died April 20, 1782, without issue, and on Jan. 2, 1873, he married Abigail Mason, daughter of John Mason, of Barre, Mass. She was born about 1758, and died Aug. 7, 1840, aged eighty-two years. To this union came a large family: (1) Daniel, born Oct. 27, 1783, died June 26, 1822. He was a farmer and served as lieutenant in the militia. He married Eliza Patrick, and they had eight children, Martha Eliza, Delphia Maria, William Andrew, Moses Johnson, one that died in infancy, Mary Ann, Thaddeus Sobieski and George. (2) Martin was born July 20, 1785. (3) Mary, born Nov. 20, 1786, married Livy Lawton, Feb. 5, 1810, and died in Hardwick Aug. 5, 1884. (4) Sidney is mentioned more fully below. (5) Mason, born March 4, 1790, died July 4, 1825, in Barre, Mass. He was married and had a family. (6) Abigail, born March 13, 1792, was married, Sept. 25, 1820, to Elijah Utley, of Boston, and died March 13, 1834. (7) Moses, born Dec. 1, 1793, died Sept. 3, 1866. On April 1, 1819, at Bridgewater, he married Ann Pierce, and their children were Ann Jane, who died unmarried; Mary Caroline, Mrs. Seth H. Rice, also deceased; Elizabeth Tuttle, Mrs. George B. Harris, who died in Franklin, Pa., leaving two children, Lizzie and George; Emily Frances, Mrs. Mahlon Levis, who lives in Pana, Ill.; Samuel Pierce, who married Anna E. Dutton, and had four children, Ann Dutton and Eliza Spear (twins who died the day of birth), William Dutton (who married Caroline Braman and has three children, Dorothy, Winthrop Pierce and Suzanne), and George Snell; James Lyman, who married Mary (Goodhue) Bates; and Lavinia Williams, who died in infancy. Moses Mandell married for his second wife, on Sept. 20, 1843, Anne Jellison Clarke, who was born in 1803, daughter of Samuel and Mehitable Clarke, and was living in 1890 at Barre, Mass. (8) Walter was born Dec. 16, 1796. (9) Clara, born Oct. 3, 1799, was married April 11, 1825, to Ebenezer Jones, of Augusta, Maine, who died first.

(VI) Sidney Mandell, born July 4, 1788, in Hardwick, was reared a farmer boy. He was the fortunate possessor of a fine tenor voice, and when he was a young man he taught singing in Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. Previous to the war of 1812, he went to Boston where he engaged in a wholesale and retail dry-goods business, but the breaking out of the war wrecked a large business, and the nervous strain of the troubles that ensued destroyed Mr. Mandell's health, and brought about his death, after a long and lingering illness, Dec. 31, 1832. He was laid to rest in the family tomb of his wife's people, in the old burying ground on Boston Common.

On Dec. 27, 1812, Sidney Mandell married Eliza Jones, daughter of David Jones, of Boston, a veteran of the Revolution. She survived him many years, dying Nov. 8, 1866, at the age of seventy-four, at the home of her daughter, Eliza A. J. Ashley, in Ellington, and was buried in the local cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Mandell had the following children: (1) David married Kate Hathaway, and died in Windsor Locks, Conn., at the age of seventy-one years.

He was a Universalist minister, and had his home in Athol, Mass. (2) Algernon S. enlisted in the Union army, made a good record as a soldier and was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. (3) Jonathan W. was a florist in Somerville, Mass. (4) Eliza Ann Jones married Elijah Ashley, who was a physician in early life, and then became a merchant, having been engaged in business in both Tolland and Ellington, and dying in Windsor Locks, Conn. (5) One son died in infancy. (6) Michael H. has previously been spoken of.

NELSON CARPENTER was a successful and respected citizen of Putnam Heights, Windham county, at which place his death occurred quite unexpectedly, May 22, 1892. He was descended from an old family which first appeared in America in the person of (1) William Carpenter, born in England in 1605, who came to Rehoboth, Mass., with his wife Abigail, and died there Feb. 7, 1697.

(II) William Carpenter (2), son of William the emigrant, was born in England also, about 1631 or 1632, and came to America with his parents. He resided in Rehoboth, where he was town clerk for many years after 1686. He was also a deacon of the church there. He married (first) Priscilla Bennett and (second) Miriam Searls.

(III) John Carpenter, son of William (2), moved from Rehoboth to Woodstock, Conn., in 1690. He served in the Narragansett expedition, and was captain of a company from Woodstock in the French and Indian war. He married Rebecca Readway.

(IV) Eliphalet Carpenter, son of John, married for his second wife Abigail Bacon. Their son,

(V) Elijah Carpenter, born Nov. 27, 1742, enlisted from Sturbridge as a private in the Lexington raid, and enlisted a second time as a private in Capt. Martin's company, under Col. Leonard; he entered the service as a substitute for Simon Fish. Elijah Carpenter became mentally deranged during the latter part of his life. He died May 12, 1808. He married Hannah Carey, and their son Elijah was the father of Nelson Carpenter.

(VI) Elijah Carpenter, father of Nelson, moved from Sturbridge, Mass., to Cumberland, R. I., and died there. He married Abigail Pratt, and was the father of twelve children, six sons and six daughters.

(VII) Nelson Carpenter was born May 1, 1810, in Greene, R. I. His father being a poor man, his educational advantages were limited. He was put to work when only a very small boy. His employment was at farm work until he became a young man, when he learned the trade of a brick and stone mason, and made this his business. He located in Stonington, Conn., and established an extensive business as a master mason, employing many men. He erected numerous mills and other large buildings and a number of light-houses along the Sound. He continued as a contracting brick and stone mason there and in Putnam, to which place he moved about 1870. After a few years in Putnam he removed to Putnam Heights, purchasing there the old Congregational parsonage, in which he passed the rest of his life. He died in comfortable circumstances. He was entirely a self-made man, rising from poverty by hard work, his robust constitution enabling him to accomplish a lifetime of hard work. He was of medium height and of "stocky" build. His remains are buried on Putnam Heights. He was quite deaf for several years before his death.

Mr. Carpenter was a Republican in politics, but was not an office seeker. He was a devout member of the Putnam Heights Congregational Church, to which he was a very liberal contributor. He was a constant reader of the Bible and a follower of its teachings. He was well posted in general history, being an omnivorous reader of historical books of all kinds and having a remarkably retentive memory.

Mr. Carpenter was married four times. His first wife, whom he married July 13, 1834, was Mercy Brayton, of North Killingly. She died Aug. 7, 1843, the mother of four children: Mary Jane, born Sept. 23, 1836, who died Sept. 29, 1863; Frances Emeline, born Oct. 6, 1838, who married William Phelps, a builder, living in Putnam and later in Providence, where she died; Maria N., born June 20, 1840, who married (first) William T. Buckner, and (second) Emerson Hawthorne, an electrician, and resides in Worcester, Mass.; George N., born Oct. 30, 1842, who died Sept. 23, 1843. The second marriage of Mr. Carpenter was solemnized Nov. 16, 1845, with Harriet Adams, widow of Luke Curtis. She died Feb. 28, 1875. Her only child, Charles P., was born July 25, 1846, and died April 6, 1861. By the third marriage, to Julia Adams, there was no issue.

Mrs. Susan D. Payson, widow of John H. Payson, who had been for twenty years Mr. Carpenter's near neighbor, became his fourth and last wife. His marriage with her, which was celebrated Aug. 30, 1883, proved a most happy one, and his chief aim and desire was that she should have every comfort possible.

John H. Payson, the first husband of Mrs. Carpenter, was born April 28, 1826, in Woodstock, Conn., the son of Thomas and Lurana (Warren), the latter a daughter of Squire Luther Warren, of Killingly. John attended the district schools and Woodstock Academy. When a youth of sixteen he moved with his parents to North Killingly where he followed the occupation of farmer with success and died at the age of forty-three. He was a Democrat and a member of Putnam Heights Congregational Church, serving on the Society committee. He was also a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., of Danielson, and had a Masonic funeral. He is buried on Putnam Heights. The future Mrs. Carpenter was Mr. Payson's second wife. The first was Eliza Eaton Adams. She had one daughter, Mary Estelle, who married Elmer D. Cook and died at the age of eighteen years. Mrs. Carpenter had two children by Mr. Payson, both sons. The first died at the age of twenty-three, after living to be a very exemplary young man. The second, Warren Williams, died aged nine months.

Mrs. Susan D. Carpenter was born Nov. 12, 1837, in Rhode Island. She was the daughter of Jacob and Esther (Williams) Burgess. Her mother was a direct descendant in the fifth generation of Rev. Roger Williams, whose name is well known to every one familiar with the annals of our country. Susan D. Burgess first married John H. Payson, after whose death she remained a widow fourteen years. Anxious to be away from the scenes of her sorrows, Mrs. Carpenter purchased her late home in East Brooklyn, Windham county, in April, 1894, and removed there. She remodeled the dwelling to suit her own tastes and convenience, and she also owned one tenement and eight acres of land. She was a worthy member of the Putnam Heights Congregational Church, and much respected in the community where she dwelt until her death, which occurred Nov. 15, 1902.

WALTER PAINE SNOW, a highly respected farmer of Woodstock, Windham county, Conn., was born Jan. 26, 1829, in Brimfield, Mass., the younger of the two children that crowned the union of Elias and Polly (Lyman) Snow.

Elias Snow was born in Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., Jan. 22, 1785, and died in Woodstock, Feb. 15, 1858. His days were passed in Ashford until his marriage in 1821, when he came to Woodstock, where he lived for a few years and then removed to Brimfield, Mass., whence in 1837 he returned to Woodstock and in 1849 again went to Brimfield, living there until 1853, when he finally took up his home in Woodstock, where he passed the remainder of his life. Mr. Snow was a successful farmer; was of a kindly disposition and stood very high in the esteem of the members of the communities in which he passed his life. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a Congregationalist, being a regular attendant at the church on Woodstock Hill.

Mr. Snow was united in marriage March 29, 1821, to Polly Lyman, who was born July 22, 1786, in Woodstock and there died, March 28, 1882, when nearly ninety-six years of age. She was a lady of many personal virtues, was strong mentally and was beloved by all who knew her.

Rev. Eliphalet Lyman, father of Mrs. Polly Snow, was ordained pastor of the Congregational Church of Woodstock Hill in 1779 and officiated until 1824, when he resigned. He was not only a pious and eloquent clergyman, but an earnest advocate of secular education and took a leading part in organizing the Woodstock Academy. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Snow were two in number. Elias, who was born Dec. 10, 1824, in Brimfield, Mass., married May 22, 1848, Loran M. Tourtel-lotte, who was born Feb. 18, 1828, in Thompson, Conn., and bore her husband one child, Elias Fred, who was born July 28, 1855, and was killed by lightning when sixteen years old. The second child is Walter P.

Samuel Snow, grandfather of Walter P., was born in Ashford, Conn., where he also died a comparatively young man, but the father of three sons and three daughters. The earlier records of the Snow family will be found in the biographical notice of L. H. Snow, of Eastford, to be found on another page of this work.

The elements of an education were gleaned by Walter P. Snow in Brimfield, Mass., whence at the age of eight years he was brought by his parents to Woodstock, Conn., where he attended the district schools a few years and also the Woodstock Academy for several terms. At fifteen years old, however, he left school and became a clerk in the general store of George W. Briggs on Woodstock Hill, remained two years and then went to Providence, R. I., where he clerked for Joseph Burrows & Son, wholesale dealers in lumber, hardware and builders' supplies; he remained with them about one year and then for a short time clerked for Hosea Ballou, of Putnam, in a general store. He next returned to East Woodstock and clerked in the general store owned by Pliny Whitney for a year, in January, 1850, went to Greenwich, N. Y., and clerked for William J. Keith for a few months, and then returned to his native town of Brimfield.

Mr. Snow next engaged in peddling Yankee notions through Connecticut and Massachusetts, and then opened a general store on Woodstock Hill; this he conducted several years, then sold out and embarked in the manufacture of shoes, later adding heavy boots, the business being carried on by the firm of Snow, Andrews & Russell. Eventually Mr. Snow sold out his interest in this firm to his partners and again conducted a store in Woodstock, combined with the manufacture of shoes, until October, 1889, when he sold the business and purchased the Briggs farm of 160 acres near North Woodstock village, where he now keeps twenty cows and makes over 100 pounds of butter per week, which he sells in Grosvenor Dale, Conn., and Webster, Mass. Besides this dairy business Mr. Snow cultivates his farm for all it is capable of producing in the way of general crops.

In politics Mr. Snow is a staunch Republican, but never neglects his private business to meddle with party affairs. In religion he is a Congregationalist and in 1840 joined the congregation of Woodstock Hill. He was elected a deacon of the Congregational Church in North Woodstock in 1894, in which capacity he has since served.

The marriage of Walter Paine Snow was celebrated Jan. 16, 1850, with Mary S. Fisk, a daughter of Bingham Fisk, of Hampton, Conn., and as will be seen, the venerable couple have passed their golden wedding. Mrs. Mary S. Snow was born Aug. 31, 1832, in Hampton, and has borne her husband three children, viz.: Charles Fisk, Mary Josephine, and George Winthrop.

Charles Fisk Snow was born Aug. 29, 1856, in Woodstock. He learned the trade of shoe cutting under his father, which trade he carried on several years, but is now engaged with him in farming on the old place. He married, Jan. 2, 1894, Mrs. Margaret (Feeley) Cutler, widow of Frank S. Cutler, and a daughter of Joseph and Delia (Froly) Feeley, of Holliston, Mass.; their only child, Mary Lovan, was born Nov. 15, 1895, in Brookfield, Mass. Mary Josephine Snow was born June 30, 1858, and died in Woodstock, Dec. 7, 1884. George Winthrop Snow, born June 29, 1869, is still unmarried and is also associated with his father in conducting the home farm.

Bingham Fisk, father of Mrs. Snow, was a substantial farmer, a warm Universalist and an equally ardent Democrat, but strongly favored the abolition of slavery at the time that diabolical institution blotted the otherwise fair escutcheon of America; he was likewise prominent in the Masonic order. He married Lydia Avery, a daughter of Rev. David Avery, and Hannah (Chaplin) Avery, the latter of whom was a descendant of the family in whose honor the town of Chaplin, Windham county, was named. The death of Mr. Fisk occurred at the age of fifty-five, in Hampton, where he had passed his life.

Deacon Snow and his wife are genial and whole-souled, kindly and generous, and are greatly beloved and respected by each and every one of their neighbors.

ANTONI JACOBSEN was born in what was then the Danish province of Schleswig, Dec. 6, 1848, a son of Anders Jacobsen, who was born in Denmark, where he followed the occupation of farming and gardening. He married Anna M. Duee, by whom he became father of the following family: Nelson, who is living in Denmark; Morris, now living in Stafford Springs, Conn.; Jacob, who died in Denmark; Mary, who died in infancy; and Antoni.

Antoni Jacobsen had his education in the schools of his native community, which he attended until he was sixteen years old, when he began work for a neighboring farmer. In the meantime Schleswig had passed under German control, and if young Antoni remained at home he would be compelled to serve in the Prussian army. Rather than do this he moved into Denmark, where he remained a year, and then sought a home in the land of liberty, leaving Hamburg in March, 1871, and arriving in the city of New York, April 1, 1871. The young man came directly to Hartford, and secured a position on the Connecticut Western Railway, where he worked some seven years. He then worked on a farm for two years in Bloomfield, for Frank Kenyan, and at the expiration of that period, came to

Antoni Jacobsen

Tolland and purchased a farm from Fred Pierson of the Stafford road, consisting of seventy-five acres, which he conducted for about three years. He also ran a milk route in Stafford, pushing his work in all lines to the most productive conditions. In 1883 he bought the adjoining farm of 180 acres, the two combining make one of the choicest farms in this part of the State. Mr. Jacobsen keeps about seventeen cows and sells the milk to patrons in Stafford. He is a general farmer, and makes his highly cultivated land yield rich returns.

Mr. Jacobsen was a charter member of the Mountain Park Pleasure Club, and has been its treasurer since its organization. A staunch Republican, he has served as a juryman on several occasions. He and his family attend the Episcopal Church, though they are all Lutherans by birth and education.

In June, 1872, Mr. Jacobsen was married to Caroline B. Jensen, a native of Denmark, who died April 18, 1886. The following children were born to them: Anders married Jennie Kuhm, of Stafford, has one child, Harold Sidney, and is living in Stafford. Annie married Osra B. Usher, of Stafford, and is the mother of three children, Eva Gertrude, Clarence Arthur and Gladys Virginia. Gertrude married Peter Brodeson, of Stafford, and has one child, Esther. Eddie is at home. Mary Emma married Henry Hansen, and is living in Hartford. Antoni, Jr., and Charles complete the family. Mr. Jacobsen was married Oct. 1, 1888, to his second wife, Mary Agnes (Carney) Hansen, the widow of Charles Hansen, and the daughter of Edward Carney. Mr. Jacobsen has had an interesting and instructive career. Coming to this country in early manhood, practically without funds, and speaking a strange tongue, he has found a way to an exceedingly enviable position, very largely the result of his own energy and perseverance. He has proved himself an honest and industrious man, and his integrity early became apparent. It was found he could be trusted, and opportunities that were quickly utilized came his way. He has done well, and the unbounded respect of the community is his.

ALBERT DANIELSON, representative of the oldest and one of the most influential families of Killingly, is a son of Deacon Adam B. and Melancy (Robinson) Danielson, and was born in the house now owned and occupied by his brother, Simeon, Oct. 17, 1835. He attended the public schools and Killingly Academy, and when a young man taught in the schools of his neighborhood for several terms. Reared to an appreciation of the dignity and usefulness of an agricultural life, he continued to live on the home farm until about three years after his marriage, and then removed to the farm of 128 acres upon which he now lives, and which was purchased from the heirs of his uncle, Samuel S. Danielson. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and like the majority who have borne his name in the community, has accumulated a fair competence in return for years of well directed and honorable effort. Quiet and unassuming, he has avoided all publicity, and has lived near to the heart of his family, his work and his friends. A Republican in politics, he is not a politician in the usual acceptance of that term, his preference for quiet insuring against such a possibility. He is a member and constant attendant of the Westfield Congregational Church.

On Nov. 12, 1863, Mr. Danielson married Emma Jane Stearns, born in Killingly, Dec. 9, 1842, a daughter of Deacon Warren Stearns. To Mr. and Mrs. Danielson have been born six children. Everett Stearns, born July 31, 1866, a youth of great promise, died Nov. 14, 1884. Willard Sanford, born Nov. 15, 1868, graduated from the Danielson high school in 1887, and married Lucy Ames, Oct. 10, 1895; he is a member of the firm of Warren and Danielson, wood-workers, and is a deacon of the Congregational Church in Danielson. Caroline Frances, born May 17, 1871, educated in the Danielson high school and in Mt. Holyoke College, is now living at home. Bradford Williams, attorney at Moosup, and trial justice for the town of Plainfield, was born June 27, 1873, and received his preliminary education at the Danielson high school. He was afterward a clerk for the manufacturing firm of E. H. Jacobs & Co., of Danielson, and graduated from the Yale Law School in 1887. The same year he was admitted to the Windham county Bar, and located in Central Village before taking up his residence in Moosup. He is a bright and promising young attorney, and bids fair to occupy a prominent place at the Bar of his county. Sarah Ellen, the fifth child born to Albert Danielson and wife, was born May 4, 1880, and died Dec. 24, 1880. James Albert was born April 10, 1882, graduated from the Danielson high school in 1901, and is living at home.

Of the STEARNS family, Mr. Bond, the eminent historian of Watertown, says: "It is probable that all of the family of the name of Stearns in the United States are descended from three early emigrants; as in every instance where the lineage of a family has been traced back, it has been to one of the following, Isaac or Charles, who settled in Watertown; or Nathaniel, who settled in Dedham." This same eminent authority intimates a relationship between these three emigrants, and asserts that Isaac came to America in 1630, probably from Parish Nayland, in Suffolk, England.

Nathaniel Stearns, of Dedham, was born in Nottinghamshire, England, came to Dedham, Mass., 1644, and was a freeman in 1649; was a lieutenant and deputy of the general court in 1689-90; and after the death of his wife, Mary Stone, May 7, 1684, married, Oct. 24, 1687, Mary Raine, of Weymouth.

Samuel Stearns, born Oct. 16, 1666, married in July, 1696, Mary Brown, and of their children, Samuel, Mary, Nathaniel, Boaz, Hannah and Ebenezer settled in Plainfield, Conn.; there were also Mehitabel, Mehitabel (2), Mercy and Deliverance. The children were all born between 1697 and 1714-15.

Deacon Boaz Stearns, born Sept. 2, 1702, married Lydia Shepherd Nov. 18, 1725, and settled in Killingly, Conn., and became prominent in affairs of the town and church. He was deputy to the general court for fourteen years, and in later life removed to Mansfield, where he died in the autumn of 1796, aged ninety-five years. His children, born between 1726 and 1750, were: Samuel, Mercy, Oliver, Sarah and Stephen.

Samuel Stearns, born Sept. 2, 1726, married (first) Anna Wood and (second) Elizabeth Warren and settled in West Killingly, where he died Nov. 14, 1817. His children, born between 1748 and 1773, were, Lydia, Anna, Azuba, Boaz, Miriam and Samuel.

Samuel Stearns, born in 1773, married Mary Sprague, April 19, 1795, and settled in West Killingly, where he died March 20, 1806. His children were as follows: Warren, born Aug. 31, 1796; Selah, born April 26, 1801, who died Feb. 10, 1808; and Samuel, born Dec. 1, 1803.

Deacon Warren Stearns was born on Stearns Hill, Aug. 31, 1796. Although reared to farming he was a natural mechanic and very handy with all kinds of tools. He worked principally at farming and wagon-making, and also engaged in teaming, his entire life being spent on the farm now owned by his son, Theodore H. Stearns, where he died Jan. 23, 1862. He was diligent and frugal and persevering, but never attained to more than moderate circumstances. When sixteen years of age he united with the Congregational Church, and at the age of thirty-two was made a deacon; an office maintained until his death. Deacon Warren Stearns was a Republican, and a public-spirited man. He married Jan. 29, 1823, Mary Reed, born in Cornwall, Conn., May 7, 1799, a daughter of Holly and Selah (Wadsworth) Reed, who died Aug. 13, 1886. Of this union there were the following children: (1) George Ingersoll, born Sept. 7, 1825, attended Brooklyn Academy, Woodstock Academy, and spent a year at Brown University, eventually graduating from Amherst College in 1849, and from East Windsor Seminary in 1852. In the meantime he had engaged as a teacher, and Sept. 22, 1852, was ordained to the ministry at Windham Center, which continued to be his field of activity until his death, March 14, 1862. Sept. 6, 1852, he married Amelia D. Jones, a graduate of Mount Holyoke Seminary, who died in Boston, June 27, 1902. Their children are, Ella Louise, widow of Joseph Sparks, and now living in Boston; and George Warren, a graduate of Amherst College and Andover Theological Seminary, and a Congregational pastor at Middleboro, Mass., who married Sarah Dowe. (2) Abigail Selah was born Oct. 21, 1827, lives in Detroit, Mich., and is the widow of Lorenzo B. Austin, whom she married April 21, 1859. (3) Mary Frances, born March 12, 1833, married Rev. Augustine Root, and died Oct. 24, 1877, in Killingly. (4) John Warren, born Jan. 25, 1835, died Sept. 5, 1837. (5) Ellen Maria, born Sept. 10, 1837, died June 17, 1851. (6) Theodore Henry, born Dec. 29, 1839, married Adeline A. Kies, March 8, 1870, and is engaged in farming at Stearns Hill. His children are: Ida A., born March 17, 1871, who married Edgar H. Cortis, of North Grosvenor Dale, and has three children, Lucy Irma, Alice Mary and Herbert Stearns; William Henry, born Oct. 1, 1873; Edgar Theodore, born Oct. 27, 1875, who died March 19, 1877; Fred Kies, born March 19, 1878; Emma Josephine, born July 25, 1880, who is the wife of Burton Elliott, and lives at North Grosvenor Dale; and Fannie Theodora, born Nov. 7, 1887. (7) Emma Jane Stearns, the youngest child of Deacon Warren Stearns, is now the wife of Albert Danielson.

HENRY PALMER RIX, born Jan. 22, 1836, in Preston, New London Co., Conn., is one of the older and much esteemed citizens of Tolland and enjoys the respect his long and useful life so well merits.

Aaron Prentice Rix, father of Henry P., was born March 11, 1802, in Griswold, Conn., and died April 7, 1875, in Norwich. On Nov. 16, 1824, he married Mary Stanton, who was born Nov. 7, 1804, daughter of Joseph Stanton. Her death occurred Jan. 14, 1846, in North Stonington, Conn., and Mr. Rix subsequently married Mary Adams, of North Stonington. They had no children. To the first union came: Mary A., born Aug. 16, 1827, who died Jan. 14, 1846; James P., born June 29, 1829, who died in Rockville, where he had followed the machinist's trade, and where his widow, Mrs. Martha (Keeney) Rix, is still living; Joseph A., born Aug. 5, 1831, who married Sarah Atchison, and is a farmer in the town of Salem, Conn.; Hannah J., born Sept. 25, 1833, who died Oct. 4, 1854; Henry P.; Julia M., born May 22, 1838, who died May 5, 1856; Albert S., born July 15, 1840, who married Helen Bruce, and died in Hartford, where he was engaged in the milk business; Sarah E., born July 2, 1842, who died July 2, 1863. The father of this family was a hard-working farmer. In early life he was a sailor, but he soon returned to land, devoted himself to agriculture, and had a very successful career. His home was in Norwich. In politics he was a Democrat, but he never took much interest in the management of party affairs. He took an active part in the work of the Methodist Church, of which he was a member.

James Rix, the grandfather of Henry Palmer, was born in Griswold, Conn., in what was known as "Rixtown," and was a very successful farmer. By an accident he broke his leg, and could not walk for many years before his death, which occurred when he was eighty-seven years old. Mary Preston, his wife, was born in "Bean Hill," in the town of Norwich, Conn., and was the mother of the following family: James, Aaron P., Joel, Asa, Daniel, Hannah and Sybil.

James Rix, the great-grandfather of Henry Palmer, is supposed to have been born in Griswold. Two brothers of the name, according to the family traditions, came from Scotland at an early day, one settling in Griswold, Conn., and the other in Massachusetts, and from the first this family in Tolland is descended, though the ancestral line is not very definite.

Henry Palmer Rix was born in Preston, and at the age of three months, was taken by his parents to North Stonington, where the ensuing twelve years of his life were passed. When he was twelve the family moved to Norwich, where they spent two years, and then located in Mansfield, where his school days ended under the instruction of John M. Turner. When he was eighteen he left school, and spent two years at farming, when he entered the Rock mill at Rockville, to learn the trade of wool sorter under Hiram Fiske. Mr. Rix spent the ensuing nine years in that mill, when he worked a year in the New England mill, and another in the American mill. After this he became "boss sorter" of the three rooms of the E. N. Kellogg Company mill at Hartford, having under his direction seventy-five hands. For three years this was his work, successfully done, and at the end of this time he retired to farm labors.

Mr. Rix bought the Daniel Chapman farm of a hundred acres in Tolland in 1868, and six years later built the pleasant home where he now resides. It stands on the site of the "Chapman Hotel," an important center of travel during the Revolution, and which was built in 1757 on the Rockville and Tolland Road. In connection with his farming operations Mr. Rix ran a dairy for twenty-four years, but is now selling the milk to the Vernon creamery, of which he was one of the original stockholders and incorporators. Mr. and Mrs. Rix are both members of Tolland Grange, and attend the Union Congregational Church, of Rockville, of which Mrs. Rix is a member. Mrs. Rix is also a member of the Woman's Relief Corps of Rockville.

Mr. Rix is a staunch Republican, has served on the board of selectmen for three years, and was assessor for a year. He has served as grand juror, and in 1884 came within one vote of being elected Representative to the General Assembly, although the town is strongly Democratic.

Mr. Rix was married March 28, 1860, to Miss Lizzie Hale, who was born July 13, 1841, the daughter of Orrin Hale and his wife Sophia Fox, of Glastonbury, and to them were born the following children: George Henry, born Feb. 12, 1861, who married Sadie Beckwith, and is a farmer and dairyman at Beaumont, Texas; Charles Prentice, born Aug. 12, 1863, who married Annie Rogers, of Rockville, and is a salesman for a large coal firm in Newark, N. J.; Frederick Stanton, born Aug. 11, 1865, who died Oct. 26, 1868; Burt Hale, born Aug. 5, 1867, who married Martha Rogers, of Rockville, and is employed in Royce's laundry in Springfield, Mass., taking orders and collecting; Ella Louisa, born Nov. 5, 1869, who died June 9, 1897, at the home of her parents; Clara, born Jan. 12, 1872, who died May 3, 1872.

Mr. Rix is essentially a self-made man, and by hard work and unwearied industry has accumulated a very comfortable competence, and won for himself a most enviable standing in the world. He is one of the most successful and prosperous farmers in Tolland, and as a man and a neighbor is greatly liked by the people of his own community.

JAMES MADISON LORD, whose life has been a part of his native community, was born in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., June 18, 1837, and is a son of John Knight Lord, who was born in Limington, Me., Nov. 8, 1809, and died there March 23, 1891.

John Knight Lord was married Nov. 29, 1832, to Sarah Spellman, a daughter of Apollos and Myra (Clark) Spellman, who was born May 10, 1811, and died in Stafford, July 20, 1896. To them were born the following children that lived to grow up: Myra Clark, born April 13, 1835, who married Julius Converse; James Madison, whose name appears at the beginning of this article; Jane Adaline, born Oct. 6, 1839, who married Henry C. McLoughlin, Gloucester, Mass., where she is still living; Lewis Kossuth, born Dec. 31, 1851, who married a daughter of Orrin Converse.

John Knight Lord was a contractor and builder, perhaps the most prominent of his day. The old Congregational Church which was carried away by the flood was built by him, as were also several of the mills and old school houses. In politics he took strong Republican ground and was active in local affairs. In religion he was a pronounced Spiritualist, and was deeply interested in all the phenomena of the faith.

James Lord, the grandfather of James Madison, was born in 1774, and died Dec. 3, 1848. Hannah Durrell, his wife, was born Sept. 29, 1780, and was a daughter of David and Mary Durrell. To them were born: George S., born Nov. 21, 1800, who died Dec. 19, 1869; David B., born Nov. 24, 1802, who died July 26, 1884; Olive K., born Nov. 21, 1806, who died July 30, 1857; John K., born Nov. 8, 1809, who died March 23, 1891; James F., born Jan. 12, 1816, who died March 7, 1888; Isaac M., born Oct. 28, 1818, who died Dec. 28, 1858; Friend D., a successful physician, born March 3, 1822, died Dec. 8, 1883; Simon L., also a successful physician, born March 8, 1826, who died Feb. 17, 1893. James Lord was the son of James Lord, and the grandson of Adam Lord. The history of the Lord family is lacking in details of residence and occupation of the earlier generations of the family.

James Madison Lord was born in Stafford, and there he began his education, which was continued in the Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., for three terms. When he was seventeen, young Lord went into the freight office of the Hartford, Fishkill and Providence Street Railway, where he remained but a short time, taking a place in the finishing room of the Mineral Springs Manufacturing Company, where after a year of faithful work he displayed such readiness that he was made foreman of the finishing department, serving in that capacity two years. After this Mr. Lord went west to Lane's Station, now Rochelle, Ill., and was engaged in a wholesale grain business, running a large warehouse, as a member of the firm of C. P. Spaulding & Co. For four years he was in this business at Rochelle, and there the outbreak of the Civil war found him, and in response to the need of the Republic he enlisted Sept. 3, 1862, for three years in Co. A, 2d Ill. Vol. Cavalry, serving in the commissary and ordnance department. His command was ordered into Tennessee, and from there to Vicksburg, and Port Hudson. Mr. Lord was in much hard service, and saw the brunt of the fighting in the West, being mustered out June 11, 1865.

At the expiration of hostilities Mr. Warren carried on business as a member of the firm of Ellis, Warren & Co. for ten years at Stafford Springs, and then in company with Col. Warren bought out Mr. Ellis, and still later Mr. Lord bought out Col. Warren, when he formed a partnership with A. C. Eaton, with whom he continued in business for three years. At the end of that time Mr. Eaton bought out Mr. Lord, who felt obliged to retire on account of ill-health, and who has not since that time been actively engaged in any business.

Mr. Lord was one of the active incorporators of the Stafford Agricultural Society, serving as one of its directors for many years. He is a Republican, and has served as assessor several years, having also been on the board of relief and one of the burgesses of the borough. Mr. Lord attends the Methodist Church, of which his wife is a member and a worker in the Ladies' Aid Society. He belongs to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., and Orient Chapter, No. 42, R. A. M.

Mr. Lord was married Oct. 22, 1866, in Norwich, N. Y., to Imogene Sibley, a daughter of John Sibley. She died Jan. 19, 1869, leaving no children. Mr. Lord was again married Oct. 19, 1871, in Norwich, Conn., to Hannah Whiton, a daughter of Lucius H. Whiton and Almada Converse. To this marriage was born one child, Kate Imogene, a graduate of Wellesley College, class of 1903. Mr. Lord belongs to the Business Men's Club, of Stafford, and is one of the leading citizens of the community.

GEORGE A. JAMM, one of the oldest and most respected German citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, is a public-spirited and energetic man whose interest has always been for the advancement of this section. He was born March 22, 1828, in the village of Hellmingheim, Bavaria, Germany, a son of Martin and Mary (Pfluger) Jamm, the former of whom was a brewer by trade and also a farmer, being in very comfortable circumstances, but his death occurred when our subject was only six years old. The mother of our subject married again, but misfortune attended the family later, and at the time of his stepfather's death the estate was considerably reduced.

Mr. Jamm was his mother's only son, and she did the best she could for him, attending to his wants and sending him to the common schools. At an early age he learned many of the details of the brewing business, and in 1845, with his sister, Margaret, decided that he could make a living in America, so they set sail from Havre, in the vessel "Prince Albert," and landed in New York after a passage of thirty-five days. In this city the sister later married and died, and in the same city, the aged mother also died, having followed her children some years after. Our subject found his uncle, Peter Jamm, in New York, and being energetic and willing to work at anything, he found almost immediate employment where excavations were going on for a factory, and soon after found the opening he wanted, in his own trade, on what was the "Bloomingdale Road," which is now Broadway and 44th street. After working there for some time, another opening was presented at No. 42 Chatham street, in the original tobacco factory of Pierre Lorillard, and later he secured employment on a canal boat on the Delaware & Hudson canal, being a driver for two seasons. He also engaged in other kinds of business, some of them not always a preference, but honest and necessary for his support. While waiting for something to occur in his line, he learned the cigarmaking trade, and worked at it in New York, and also in New Jersey, and at one time served as clerk in a store on 3rd avenue and 10th street, New York. While working in New Jersey he was attacked by fever and ague, which became so serious that a physician advised him to seek a higher altitude, and that advice took him to Rockville, where he arrived in August, 1866. In the shop of Daniel Ans, on Market street, he found his first work in this city as a cigarmaker, and when Lawrence Young succeeded to the business and added a grocery store, he continued to remain with this house making cigars and also assisting in the grocery.

In 1880, in association with John Winters, Mr. Jamm opened up a grocery business on West Main street, the partnership continuing for one and one-half years when Mr. Jamm succeeded the firm, and on June 1, 1891, removed his store to the present location No. 40 Ward street, where it has been conducted ever since, the building occupied being expressly built for our subject. While our esteemed subject is a staunch Republican, and casts his vote regularly, he takes no deep interest in political questions, and has never desired any office at the hands of the party. For many years he has been a member of Sick Society No. 1, one of its oldest and most valued members and for many years was connected with the Turner Society. As a business man Mr. Jamm has been successful, and is well known to be of a generous and kind nature, and during his thirty-five years of business life in Rockville has adopted only honorable methods, which cause him to enjoy the respect and esteem of all.

George H. Jassin

HORATIO KIBBE is a retired farmer, and has his home in Ellington, Tolland Co., Conn., where his useful life has been spent, and where his industry and integrity have commanded and retained the confidence of the community to a marked degree.

The Kibbe family, which is the most numerous in the northern part of Tolland county, traces its history back to Edward Kibbe, a resident of Exeter, England, in 1611. (I) Edward Kibbe, his son, who was born in 1611, came to New England, and was located at Brookline, Mass., in 1640, where he had a saw mill. In 1639 he was married to Mary Partridge.

(II) Elisha Kibbe, son of Edward, was born in Boston in 1643, and came to Enfield in 1682 from Brookline with his wife, who was Rachel Cook, and there he died in 1735. According to the authority, his two sons, Edward and James, came to what is now Somers in 1713, and from these two the Somers and Ellington Kibbes descend.

(III) James Kibbe had a family as follows: Jane; Stephen; Daniel; Jacob; Israel; Moses; Aaron; Rachel; Miriam.

(IV) Daniel Kibbe was born in North Somers, where he owned much land, and carried on a saw and grist mill on a branch of the Scantic river, on the site of the present North Somers batting mill. Successful in farming, he became one of the most prominent men of the town, reaching the age of some ninety years. From Tolland county he went into the Revolutionary army, and served in Capt. Wills' company of Col. Spencer's regiment, and was engaged eight months, participating, among other severe engagements, in the battle of Bunker Hill.

Daniel Kibbe married Mary Pratt in 1741, was a landowner and a farmer in North Somers, and became the sire of the following family: Amariah; Daniel; Abner; Lemuel; Frederick; Molly; Sarah; Jerusha.

(V) Amariah Kibbe, the grandfather of Horatio, was born in 1747 in Somers, and became a wheelwright and joiner in his early manhood, having much landed property in Somers street and vicinity, the site of his home, and the scene of many improvements effected by him, as well as new constructions. Among these buildings which he erected was the "Somers hotel," a fine building, and a commendable enterprise. A grist mill was among his industries, and he became wealthy and influential. In his politics he was a Democrat, and held many town offices, living to an advanced age, and well known for his character and integrity. Mr. Kibbe died in 1829, and was buried in North Cemetery, Somers.

Amariah Kibbe and Hannah Kibbe were married in 1778. She was born in 1760, a daughter of Zerah Kibbe, and a granddaughter of Elisha Kibbe, whose brother James is mentioned elsewhere. To this union were born ten children. (1) Amariah, born in 1780, married Charlotte McKinney, and died in 1840; a fuller sketch of him appears in another place. (2) Walter R., born in 1783, married a Miss Paine, and on her death, Mrs. Sabina Norton; Mrs. Hannah (Warner) Brown was his third wife, and Flenda Reed, his fourth. Mr. Kibbe was a graduate of Yale, became a lawyer, and lived in Somers, where he died April 22, 1864. (3) Rudolphus, born in 1783, married Sybil Pease, and was a farmer in North Somers, where he died in 1810. (4) Peggy, born June 24, 1785, married Daniel Grover, a farmer and wheelwright, and lived in Tolland, where she died in 1834. (5) Horatio, born June 22, 1787, married Content Gowdy, and was a farmer in Somers, where he died in 1827. (6) Valirus, born June 2, 1789, was the father of Horatio. (7) Sophia, born in 1791, married Stedman Nash, and died in Ellington, where he was a stone mason. (8) Harriet, born in 1793, married Emory Pease, a merchant in Somers, where both died. (9) Hannah, born in 1795, married Jonah Griswold, and lived in Sturbridge, Mass.; she died at Springfield, Mass., and Mr. Griswold at Sturbridge. (10) Jairus, born in 1798, married Clarissa Billings, was a merchant at Somers, and in his later years removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he died. Hannah Kibbe, the mother of these children, died Jan. 24, 1823; and Mr. Kibbe was married May 4, 1825, to Maria Grover, of Tolland, who is also deceased. Their children were: (11) Julia, born in 1826, who married Loren Percival, and died in Somers; (12) James P., born in 1828, who married a Mrs. Brown, a widow, and died in New York City.

(VI) Valirus Kibbe was born at the Center in Somers, secured his education at the district school, and while still a boy was employed in his father's grist mill. His residence was at home until his marriage, when he assumed the support and care of his wife's parents for some years, taking charge of her paternal estate after the death of her parents. In 1835 this place was sold, and another farm bought in Ellington, known locally as the Ellis Wallace farm, containing over 200 acres. There

Mr. Kibbe was engaged in farming and stock raising, and there he lived until his death, Nov. 30, 1866. As a breeder of fine horses he had a reputation, and his stock was always in demand. In his politics he was a Democrat, and in his business very successful.

Mr. Kibbe was married to Eunice Cushman, a native of Ellington, and a daughter of Allerton and Anna (Clark) Cushman, her parents being farming people of Ellington and Somers, where he and his wife died. Mrs. Kibbe was born in 1791, and died March 30, 1885, lacking but little of being ninety-five years old, at the home of her son, Horatio. To this union were born: (1) Eunice Leonora, who married John Payne, a miller, and died in Vernon; (2) Ethalinda Lidora, who married Newman Allen, a farmer, and died in East Windsor; (3) Valirus; (4) Carlos E., born Nov. 30, 1815, who married Elizabeth Jennings, and on her death, Louisa Collins, and who was a successful farmer, now leading a retired life at Ellington; (5) Hancy Ann, the widow of Roland Sellew, residing in Long Meadow, Mass.; (6) Adolphus, who died when a young man; (7) Matilda, who married William Brainerd, and lives in Windsor, Conn., where he is a retired farmer; (8) Julius A.; (9) Daniel, who married Hester Hall, and was a farmer, dying in Wapping, Conn.; (10) Horatio; (11) Marcus, who married Jane Bradley, and died in Somers, where he was a farmer; (12) Helen, who married Nelson Warner, and died in Ellington, where he had followed farming; (13) Jairus, who married Ida Endicott, and on her death, Abigail Pease, and is a farmer living in Long Meadow, Massachusetts.

(VII) Horatio Kibbe was born Nov. 16, 1826, in Somers, Conn., and came to Ellington with his parents when he was about ten years old; he attended the district school, and the Ellington high school under Professors Pillsbury and Rusk. For a time he assisted on the home farm, and afterwards was employed on a farm in East Hartford, which was owned by Henry Olmstead. For two years he clerked in the Somers store of Francis Kibbe and L. E. Pease. After this he returned home, where he assisted his father, and on the death of that gentleman, bought out the interests of the other heirs in the estate, which has been greatly increased and improved under his able management. Until 1900 he was actively engaged in general and tobacco farming and stock raising. That year he gave over the active management and hard work to his son, Allerton C., intending to spend his last years in a well earned rest and leisure.

Mr. Kibbe was married Dec. 4, 1872, to Alice C. Phelps, a native of Somers, and a daughter of Julius C. and Adelia T. (Kibbe) Phelps. Her father died Nov. 2, 1859, at the age of forty-seven years, and her mother died May 26, 1891, at the age of sixty-seven years. To Mr. and Mrs. Kibbe were born: (1) Allerton C., born Jan. 12, 1874, who married Winifred Dimock, and lives on the home farm; (2) Ida T., born Nov. 4, 1875, the wife of Robert E. Hyde, of Ellington; (3) H. Raymond, born June 18, 1877, who is a graduate of Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and lives in New York, where he is in business; (4) Cassius B., born Feb. 15, 1880, who died Aug. 26, of the same year; (5) Eunice C., born Sept. 26, 1882, at home.

Mr. Kibbe is a Democrat. Mrs. Kibbe and her children belong to the Congregational Church. They are well-to-do people, and stand high in the community.

WILLIAM D. HEALD, one of the enterprising business men and progressive citizens of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, is descended from one of the early English emigrants, who endured the hardships and privations of those troublesome times to found a new home and a new family on the western shore of the Atlantic.

(I) John Heald, the emigrant, was born in Berwick, England, and in 1635 came to America on the good ship "Tweed." He settled in Concord, Mass., and June 2, 1641, was admitted as a freeman. His death occurred May 24, 1662, and his remains were laid to rest in "Sleepy Hollow" cemetery, Concord. He and his wife Dorothy became the parents of fourteen children, as follows: John; Timothy, who in 1663 married Sarah Barber; Hannah, who married John Spaulding in 1658; Amos; Ebenezer; Dorcas, born June 22, 1645, who died June 1, 1650; Gershom, born March 23, 1647, who died May 13, 1717, married May 6, 1763, to Ann Vinton; Dorothy, born Oct. 16, 1649; Thomas, born Jan. 7, 1651, who married Dec. 30, 1714, Mary Miller, and died in 1725; Isaac, born in 1655, who died in 1717; Israel, born July 30, 1660, who died Sept. 7, 1738; Samuel; Ephraim; and Benjamin.

(II) John Heald (2) was born in England and accompanied his parents to America in 1635. He married June 10, 1661, Sarah Dean, who died July 22, 1689, and by their union they became the parents of seven children, of whom the following is the record: Elizabeth, born April 15, 1664, who married John Abbott, and died March 25, 1724; John (3); Gershom, born March 1, 1668, who died May 13, 1717; Sarah, Dec. 18, 1670; Eunice, March 16, 1673; Hannah, Oct. 10, 1676; and Dorothy, July 10, 1679, who died Aug. 20, 1770. John Heald (2) died June 17, 1689.

(III) John Heald (3), son of John (2), was born Sept. 19, 1666, and died March 25, 1721. He was married Dec. 18, 1690, to Mary Chandler, who was born March 3, 1672, and died Aug. 14, 1759. Their union was blessed with ten children: Mary John, Timothy, Josiah, Elizabeth, Samuel, Amos Ephraim, Dorcas and Eunice.

(IV) Amos Heald, son of John (3), was born May 23, 1708, and died Jan. 4, 1775. In 1731 he married Elizabeth Billings, who passed away in March, 1799. Of their eight children, the following is recorded: Anna, born in 1732, died in 1778; Elizabeth, 1735, died in 1810; Mary, 1737, died in 1807; Daniel, 1739, died in 1833; Lucy, 1742; Persis, 1743; Amos, 1745; and Asa, 1750.

(V) Asa Heald, son of Amos, and grandfather of William D. Heald, was the youngest in his father's family. He was twice married. His first wife, whom he wedded Dec. 20, 1774, was Rebecca Merrill, who died Nov. 26, 1788. The children born of this union were: Lucy, born Dec. 25, 1775, who died Oct. 1, 1777; Levi, Sept. 24, 1778; Stephen, April 23, 1781; Hannah, Oct. 4, 1783; and Amos, March 4, 1786. For his second wife Asa Heald married April 17, 1789, Jerusha Carter, who bore him children as follows: Sarah, born Jan. 4, 1790; James, March 17, 1791; Lucy, Jan. 24, 1793; Asa, Dec. 26, 1794; Lucinda, Sept. 4, 1796; David, Aug. 1, 1801; and Noah Farrar, July 29, 1803.

(VI) Amos Heald, son of Asa and Rebecca (Merrill) Heald, was born March 4, 1786, and died May 22, 1866. April 8, 1833, he married Sarah Cushman, who was born April 1, 1797, and died Jan. 12, 1877. She was a lineal descendant in the seventh generation from Robert Cushman, who arrived in Plymouth with his son, Thomas Cushman, on the "Fortune" in November, 1621. On Jan. 1, 1633, Thomas Cushman was admitted a freeman. In 1649 Thomas Cushman was appointed a ruling elder of the church of Plymouth, Elder Brewster having died, and he was ordained April 6, 1649. A spoon is now in the possession of the Pilgrim Society Museum at Plymouth, which once belonged to Elder Cushman. Two children were born to Amos and Sarah (Cushman) Heald, namely: Sarah Ann, born June 1, 1835, who died Sept. 2, 1851; and William D., our subject.

(VII) William D. Heald was born Oct. 24, 1836, in the same house where he now makes his home in Stafford Springs. The common schools of his native town afforded him his earlier education, and he afterward attended Monson Academy. Leaving the school room at the age of nineteen, he entered the employ of Lyman W. Crane, as clerk, remaining four years. In 1856 he became associated with John Sibley, but at the end of a year bought him out, and for several years was in partnership with Gilbert H. Baker, when Henry Thrall assumed Mr. Baker's responsibility and for two years was Mr. Heald's partner. Mr. Heald then purchased the entire stock and conducted it alone until he became the owner of the Ira Stockwell jewelry store, which he conducted for about a year, and then sold out to Henry Dennis, brother of E. C. Dennis. In 1865 Mr. Heald purchased the interest of H. T. Small in the drug store, and thus became the partner of Robert Small under the firm name of Heald & Small. This continued with much success for a number of years, when Mr. Heald again purchased his partner's interest and continued as sole proprietor until he sold an interest to his former partner, Mr. Small, the firm again becoming Heald & Small. The drug trade was for many years an indefinite one in Stafford Springs, as the doctors to a very large extent replenished their stock from the larger cities, and the general stores carried a limited supply of the various compounds needed by the public at large. In 1877 the drug store of Heald & Small was swept away by a flood. The firm had also conducted a merchant tailoring establishment, and Mr. Heald lost directly and indirectly between $25,000 and $30,000. His next location was in the Foster Block on Main street, where he remained for a year or two, and then in the Baker Block, later returning to the Foster Block, where he is now located. He has been very successful in his business ventures, in spite of losses by flood, fire and burglars, and now has a large store, fully equipped with a complete stock of pure drugs and patent medicines.

Mr. Heald was one of the prime movers in the consolidation of the schools of Stafford, and although there was considerable objection to it, the large central school building in place of several small ones is the result, and even the opponents now point to it with pride. Mr. Heald was one of its active promoters, and was the one on whom the responsibility rests for having called the meeting, and also for having secured the borough charter. He is one of the incorporators and directors of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, of which he has been secretary for many years. In politics he is a worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and for several terms he has been warden, and was also a member of the board of burgeses, and has served on the board of selectmen. Other enterprises in which he has been an active and fostering agent are the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs, of which he was an incorporator; the Stafford Grange, of which he is a charter member; and the Stafford Library Association, of which he was also one of the incorporators.

On May 29, 1859, Mr. Heald was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Ruby Howard, daughter of Nathan and Amanda (Ruby) Howard, of Palmer, Mass., and four children have come to bless their union: Anna, born April 1, 1860, at home; Charles Henry, born March 17, 1862, who became associated with his father in the drug business, and died Dec. 20, 1884, at the age of twenty-two; William Howard, born Aug. 7, 1871; and Bertha Louise, born Aug. 31, 1875. Mr. Heald is a member of the Congregational Ecclesiastical Society. He and his wife are highly respected in the community in which they have passed so many years of their lives, and have many friends who have a high regard for their many noble qualities of head and heart.

WILLIAM HOWARD HEALD, the only surviving son in the family of William D. Heald, was educated in the Stafford high school, from which he was graduated in June, 1888, and that year accepted a clerkship with Mr. Alvarado Howard in the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs. In 1895 he was elected clerk and treasurer of the borough of Stafford Springs, and still holds that office. In 1899 he was appointed deputy judge of the borough court of Stafford Springs, and re-appointed in 1901 and 1903. He is one of the incorporators of the Stafford Public Library, and is, taken all together, one of the most progressive young men to be found in the county. When the high school Alumni Association was organized in 1896, he was chosen for its first president. In politics he is a Republican; in religious belief he is a Congregationalist, and from 1895 to 1899 he was clerk and treasurer of the Congregational Church. He is a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M. In February, 1898, Mr. Heald was appointed correspondent of the Springfield Republican, and continues to act in that capacity.

FRANCIS NICHOLS ELLIOTT, one of the old and much respected citizen farmers of the Grosvenordale District, was born on the farm which has since been his home, July 14, 1828. His life has been practically uneventful, and the success which has come from his untiring industry, thrift and enterprise, is a matter of pride with those who have been his neighbors and friends.

From his father, Dyer Nichols Elliott, he inherits not only energy, but uprightness in all his actions, and these traits have won him an abiding place among the substantial agriculturists of the town. The elder Elliott was born in Thompson, Dec. 8, 1797, a son of John and Mary (Nichols) Elliott, the ancestry of the former being given in full in the sketch of John Elliott, of North Grosvenordale, in another part of this work. When five years of age Dyer Nichols Elliott removed with his parents to the farm upon which he spent the rest of his life, and where he died in 1892, at an advanced age. His farm consisted of one hundred and twenty-five acres, upon which he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and where he maintained a condition of order, neatness and thrift. He was a Democrat in political affiliation, but led a quiet, retired life, remote from office seeking and annoying perplexities. In 1825 he married Eliza Green, who died in 1884 at the age of eighty-three years, and after fifty-nine years of peaceful married life. She was a devoted mother and wife, and after her death, was buried by her husband in the Nichols cemetery, at West Thompson. Six children were born to this worthy couple: Ophelia, the first, became the wife of Albert Prince; Francis is the second; Mary is the widow of Jabez Arnold; Phoebe and Harriet died unmarried; Lucy married Albert Farrons.

Francis Nichols Elliott was reared on the home farm, and though obliged to work hard during the busy season, he managed to acquire a fair education in the district schools. Under his capable management the one hundred and twenty-five acre farm has steadily improved its yielding capacity, and the genial owner thereof is regarded as one of the practical agriculturists of the town. He is independent in politics, but like his father finds his chief interests centered in his home surroundings. He has never married.

CHAUNCEY ORCUTT is a representative of an old Connecticut family, whose men and women were among the prominent and leading character of their various generations. In honor of the name appears the village of Orcuttville, Conn. Mr. Orcutt is himself most modest and unassuming, but he takes a justifiable pride in his forefathers, as well he may.

Harvey Orcutt, the father of Chauncey, was born Dec. 12, 1810, in Orcuttville, Conn., where he died in September, 1878. He was married March 31, 1833, to Mary Ann, a daughter of Elisha and Mehitable (Keith) Billings, of Belchertown, Mass. Mr. Orcutt was a molder in the furnaces at Stafford Hollow, and later in life operated a saw and shingle mill, which was formerly owned by his father and his uncle, Stephen. He was also engaged in farming. In 1852 he built the box factory which is now owned and operated by his son Chauncey, in Orcuttville. Still later he put up a building which he used as a box factory, and which is now used by T. F. Mullen & Co. as a woole mill at Forestville. His box factory at Orcuttville he sold before the war to Ellis, Converse & Co. In 1852, he erected the building now the property of J. J. Ellis, a stock company running it as a satin mill, for which he was agent for several years. This enterprise was also sold before the war to Josiah Converse. At the time of his death he was running the Forestville box factory. Mr. Orcutt was a kind-hearted, jovial and witty man, and was thoroughly informed on the leading questions and issues of his day. In politics he was a Democrat and a staunch supporter of the Hartford Time but when he read President Buchanan's inaugural address he became a Republican. Various positions in the town were held by him, and he was a representative in the General Assembly. He was selected many several terms.

To Harvey Orcutt were born three children: (1) Julia, born March 22, 1836, married Alford W. Converse, a son of Hamilton Alden Converse May 18, 1856. A. W. Converse was a machinist; he was born Aug. 1, 1835, and was father to the following children: Ida Gracella, born Feb. 2, 1858; Joseph Harvey, born March 16, 1866, who died Aug. 13, 1867; Myrtle Billings, born Dec. 2, 1868, who married Alfred Elson, and is living in Woburn, Mass.; Joseph Alfred, born Sept. 8, 1870 who died June 22, 1883. (2) Chauncey, whose name appears at the opening of this article, was born Dec. 12, 1839. (3) Jerome, born Dec. 1

1844, was married May 19, 1875, to Emilie Ann Pinney, a daughter of Daniel and Azubah (Carpenter) Pinney. Mr. Orcutt is superintendent of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, of Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Horace Orcutt, the grandfather of Chauncey, was born May 14, 1785, in Hartford, and died Feb. 20, 1861, in Stafford. He was married May 14, 1808, to Polly Howe, a daughter of Israel and Hannah (Washburn) Howe, of Stafford. Farming operations were carried on by him on an extensive scale, and he was partner with his brother Stephen in the saw mill and linseed oil business. In this last line they were extensive operators. Mr. Orcutt was a quiet man, and of confirmed domestic habits. It is said that he was never away from his own home over night but on one occasion. In politics he was a Hartford Times Democrat. In his religion he was a devoted Universalist. He had nine children: (1) Philura died Aug. 17, 1830, at the age of twenty-two, and was unmarried. (2) Harvey was born Dec. 12, 1810. (3) Marilda, born March 2, 1813, died March 1, 1885; she married Samuel B. Warren, July 16, 1834, and had her home in Stafford. (4) Chauncey, who died Oct. 24, 1838, was twenty-three years of age, and unmarried. (5) Emily died unmarried Oct. 26, 1845, at the age of twenty-seven years. (6) Cordelia, born March 4, 1821, was married June 15, 1846, to Hiram Vinton, of Stafford. He was born in Marcellas, N. Y.; she died March 21, 1882. (7) Almeda, born Nov. 2, 1823, died Oct. 29, 1876; she was married March 4, 1854, to Homer L. Belden, of Granville, Conn., who died in Springfield, Mass., Jan. 15, 1888, at the age of sixty-seven years. (8) Aseline, who died Feb. 25, 1857, at the age of thirty years, never married. (9) Miranda, born Feb. 15, 1832, is still living in Springfield, Mass.; she was married Jan. 17, 1860, to James S. Greenleaf, of Templeton, Massachusetts.

Stephen Orcutt, the great-grandfather of Chauncey, was born May 19, 1757, and died in Stafford, where his entire life had been spent, March 27, 1841. During the war of the American Revolution, he bore arms for the colonies, and in later years became a pensioner for his gallant behavior in "the times that tried men's souls."

Stephen Orcutt was married May 2, 1782, to Molly, a daughter of Solomon and Mary (Warner) Washburn, of Stafford. She was born Jan. 26, 1762, and died April 15, 1860. After the death of her husband she received his Revolutionary pension. To them were born: (1) James, born April 28, 1783, who married Jan. 13, 1805, Polly Hitchcock, and died Feb. 20, 1861; (2) Horace, born May 14, 1785; (3) Stephen, born Aug. 14, 1787, who married Charlotte Keith, a daughter of Alexander and Hannah (Lothrop) Keith, who was born Aug. 5, 1847, and died Nov. 14, 1838; (4) Philip, born Jan. 22, 1790, deceased Oct. 8, 1844, who was married Nov. 25, 1813, to Persis Talmadge, born Nov.

9, 1790, and deceased Sept. 20, 1849; (5) Warren, born Oct. 6, 1792, who married Nov. 10, 1816, Celinda, a daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Edson) Johnson, and died May 27, 1866 (Warren and Philip Orcutt were in the woolen business together in Orcuttville, where now stands Prebles' wheel shop; there they were engaged in finishing home-made woolen cloth. Celinda Johnson was born Dec. 29, 1798, and died Feb. 22, 1885, and to her and Warren Orcutt were born nine children, all girls); (6) John born Oct. 16, 1795, who died May 27, 1883, and who married Dec. 11, 1821, Minerva Bradley, a daughter of John and Martha (Johnson) Bradley; (7) Julia, born March 12, 1798, who died April 15, 1880, and who was married March 6, 1817, to William Rogers, a son of Robert and Huldah (Orcutt) Rogers; (8) Laura, born Sept. 23, 1801, deceased Oct. 25, 1892, who was married Aug. 28, 1823, to Abram Francis, of Stafford, a son of John and Anna Francis; (9) Polly, born March 12, 1804, who died May 8, 1877, unmarried.

Chauncey Orcutt's great-great-grandfather, Daniel Orcutt, was probably born in Bridgewater, Mass., in 1734, and died about 1802. His first wife, the mother of his children, was Lydia Cushman, a daughter of John Cushman. She was born in Stafford. The second Mrs. Daniel Orcutt was Mary Hurlbut, and she lived with her son, Daniel, Jr., after she had become a widow. When he sold his place, and removed to Norwich, she lived with Philip Orcutt. The children of Daniel Orcutt were: Lydia, born April 15, 1756, who married Ichabod Bixby, and died June 14, 1820, having removed to Vermont; Stephen, born May 19, 1757; Mary, born in 1759, who married Uriah Clough, and died in Ludlow, Mass., in 1837; Susie, who married Timothy Clough; Betsy, married to Pember Howard; Sallie, married to John Clough; Daniel, Jr., who married Betsy Wood, and removed to Norwich, N. Y.; Joseph, born Jan. 30, 1772, who married (first) Polly Clough, and (second) Ruth Gerald, who died in July, 1835; Abigail, married to Jesse Cushman.

Capt. David Orcutt, the grandfather three times removed of Chauncey Orcutt, was one of the early settlers of Stafford, and there are old deeds still in existence, that show his ownership of land as early as 1735. One account says he came about 1730. However, he could not have had his permanent home there until about 1741, as his marriage and the birth of three children are recorded in Bridgewater records. His oldest son Daniel was born in 1734, Stephen in 1736, and David in 1739; two other children, Hannah, who married Jonathan Johnson, and Job, were probably born in Stafford. The date of his removal to Stafford is farther fixed at 1741, by reference to the published diary of John Adams, who visited Stafford Springs in 1771. In speaking of that visit he gives a long account of his talks with David Orcutt, an old acquaintance, who had moved from Bridgewater, Mass., thirty years before. He held a commission as a captain under King George II. in 1758, which is still in existence, and which is an heirloom in the possession of Miss Ida G. Converse, of Windsor Locks, Conn. Trumbull's Colonial Record says: "In the General Assembly of his Majesty, King George the II. and the III., holden at Hartford, Conn., Mr. David Orcutt was representative or deputy from Stafford, in the years 1757 and 1758; and in 1762 under George the III." In the Assembly of 1759 it was voted that "Mr. David Orcutt be captain of the 7th Company or Train-Band in the 5th Regiment."

David Orcutt owned and ran a grain mill just below where now stands the Central Company's mill dam, which was formerly the Granite Mill. He built the small house which the Granite Mill Company moved back from Furnace avenue in 1884. In 1734 he was married to Susannah Packard, a daughter of Daniel Packard.

Chauncey Orcutt, whose name introduces this article, was born Dec. 12, 1839, in the house in which he is now living in Orcuttville, town of Stafford, where he attended the local schools until he was seventeen years of age. For several years he has been engaged in the manufacture of wooden boxes of all kinds and sizes, a business which his father established and successfully carried on through many years.

Mr. Orcutt was married Feb. 19, 1873, to Arabell Needham, who was born in Stafford, Oct. 9, 1848, a daughter of Abner and Mary (Warthington) Needham, of Stafford, and to this union came one child, Gertrude Mary, born May 3, 1881, who is residing at home. Mr. Orcutt and his family attend the Universalist Church, of Stafford. In his politics he is a Democrat; he has always declined office, having no taste for public affairs. Mr. Orcutt is a man who keeps well posted on current events and topics, reading being a favorite and frequently indulged-in pastime of his. He enjoys an acquaintance with prominent men in different localities, and in his home town few men are any better or more favorably known.

HON. IRA D. BATES. An honorable and successful business career of twenty-two years in the village of New Boston, Windham Co., Conn., has served to make Ira Bates one of the best known men in the county. The esteem in which he is held is surpassed only by the genuine merit of the object on which it is bestowed. Mr. Bates unites with a successful private career an honorable service in several of the different local offices of his town, together with a creditable legislative experience in both branches of the Connecticut Assembly. He is a factor in every enterprise which has for its object the advancement of society in his community, whether in educational, religious or social lines.

Laban Bates, great-grandfather of Ira D., was one of the most prominent men of Bellingham, Norfolk Co., Mass. He represented the town for twenty-seven consecutive years in the Legislature of Massachusetts. He was also for his time a man of considerable wealth.

Peter Bates, father of Ira D., son of Peter and grandson of Laban, was a native of Bellingham, Norfolk Co., Mass., from which point he removed to Blackstone, in the same State. There he grew to manhood in the pursuit of agriculture, which honorable occupation he followed for some time after attaining his majority. An opportunity offering to enter the manufacturing business with his brother Albert at New Ipswich, N. H., he removed to that State, and for some years was engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods. He gave this up late in life, and after a period of residence spent in Uxbridge, Mass., went to Milford, where he died, and his remains lie buried in the Pine Hill cemetery of Mendon, Mass. He was a man of correct and quiet habits, a Universalist in religious belief, and in political faith a Republican. His marriage occurred in New Ipswich, Hillsborough Co., N. H., the lady's maiden name having been Mary Lamson, daughter of Joseph and Mary Lamson; she still survives at the ripe age of eighty-one years in her home in Milford, Mass. She is the mother of children as follows: Ira D.; Elliott, of Seekonk, Bristol Co., Mass.; Josephine, the wife of J. H. Scott, a prominent citizen of Milford, Mass., and a member of the State Police and a fire marshal; Mary J., who married Eugene E. Wood, of Mulberry, Mass. Genera and Geneva, twins, who died young; Edwin Burnside, of Milford, Massachusetts.

Hon. Ira D. Bates was early given lessons in old New England industry and economy, acquiring a fair education during his attendance in the public schools of Mendon and later at Uxbridge Academy. As a boy he watched with keen interest the gathering war cloud and listened with intelligent comprehension to the political discussions of the day, many of which breathed the spirit of war as the fifties mounted upward. The memorable campaign of 1860 thrilled his young heart with enthusiasm, and as the summer of '61 approached he chafed at the fact that he was not of "army" age. He, however, succeeded in August in enlisting in the 25th Mass. as a musician of Company B, and went to the front in that capacity. After nine months of service he was promoted to the position of principal musician, and serving the entire four years with his regiment, was mustered out at Charlotte, N. C. This regiment experienced as much hard fighting and had as large a percentage of loss as any regiment in the service. It was with Burnside's expedition, and passed through the battle of Roanoke Island and Newbern, Kingston Whitehall, Goldsborough, Cold Harbor, and was at Petersburg from June 15th to July 30th.

Prior to the war Mr. Bates had served a short apprenticeship at the shoe trade, which he resumed at Blackstone, Mass. After two years he came to North Grosvenordale and entered the employ of Edward F. Thompson, general merchant, as a clerk. He was then with Williams & Arnold at Grosvenordale for a period of three years. The year 1871 marks his first coming to New Boston, where he managed the store of G. T. Murdock & Son for three years. Another three-year period followed in Holden, Mass., where he engaged in general store business; thence he went to Millbury, where he was in the same line of business for two years. These experiences prepared him for successful settlement in New Boston in 1880, where he has since continued to conduct a general merchandise business. Mr. Bates is also Assistant Postmaster at New Boston. Since coming to the place Mr. Bates has done much to advance its interests. He has never shirked his duty to the community, giving largely of his time and means to the development of its social, educational and religious life. He has served on the board of selectmen, as town tax collector, as assessor for several years successively, and as justice of the peace for twenty years. In 1887 his Republican friends sent him to the lower branch of the State Legislature, and the following year sent him back with a certificate to the Senate. In these bodies he was active in promulgating party harmony and gave his influence and vote to every measure which meant the betterment of his State. In the Senate he was honored with the chairmanship of the committee on Labor and Forfeited Rights, an honor not usually accorded new members.

In the social life of the community Mr. Bates takes a very active and helpful part. He is a leading member of the G. A. R., having his membership in the A. G. Warner Post, Putnam. He is prominent in Masonic circles, having been one of the charter members of Cornerstone Lodge, at North Grosvenordale. In this connection, and in order to recognize and give proper tribute to an accomplishment not heretofore mentioned, space is given for one of Mr. Bates's literary productions, a glance at which will convince all that the muse may dwell in the mind of the business man, as well as of one from the professions. This poem was read by request at the centennial of Putnam Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Woodstock, in December, 1901, and is only one of many which Mr. Bates has composed on different subjects. The impression created by its delivery at the Centennial gathering was so favorable that the following was unanimously carried:

"SOUTH WOODSTOCK, CONN., DEC. 11, 1901.

"Voted, That the Lodge Secretary be instructed to request of Brother Ira D. Bates to present the Lodge with a copy of the poem he composed and read at the Centennial celebration of this Lodge, the same to be placed within the Lodge's archives, and to be printed in the coming Lodge's history."

The poem breathes intense religious sentiment and is of a high order of literary merit. It runs as follows:

Grand Master of Heaven, we bow low before Thee,
Great ruler of earth, the sea and the land,
We thank Thee and praise Thee, as we bend to adore Thee,
And acknowledge all mercies that come from Thy hand,
Thou rulest in secret, but thy justice is given Impartial and equal, Grand Master of Heaven.

Grand Master of Heaven, supreme and eternal,
Thy chastening hand is softened with love,
Waft us a blessing from regions supernal,
Thy guidance bestowing as onward we move.
May the boon of thy grace in our hearts be the leaven,
That shall bind us together, Grand Master of Heaven.

Grand Master of Heaven, be Thine all the glory,
Our guide and our shield is Thine all-seeing eye,
Thy word is the light that revealeth the story,
The seal and the sign of the clan's mystery.
Help us to keep them to eternity, even,
Help us to keep them, Grand Master of Heaven.

Grand Master of Heaven, be our compass and level,
Spread the mortar of love with the trowel of peace,
Make us act on the square, and keep us from evil,
And bid all our inward dissensions to cease;
Though we err yet again, may we still be forgiven,
For mercy is Thine, Grand Master of Heaven.

Grand Master of Heaven! Oh, help us to cherish
The memory of those who have passed on before,
That the work of the faithful never shall perish,
But like the Rock of the Ages endure evermore;
Thou knowest the goal for which they have striven!
And justice is thine, Grand Master of Heaven!

On Jan. 9, 1865, Mr. Bates was joined in marriage to Abbie M. Whittemore, of Uxbridge, Mass. She died July 25, 1892, leaving two children, two others having died in infancy. The two living are: Gertrude M., wife of Eugene D. Ide, of Webster, Mass.; Irma Kendall, who married Burton Murdock, of Webster, Mass. Mr. Bates married the lady who now presides over his home, Jan. 4, 1897, her maiden name having been Lydia A. Chaffee. Mrs. Bates is a lady whose genial womanliness makes her universally beloved. She is much devoted to her home and husband, and in the social life of the community also takes a helpful part.

The life of Ira D. Bates has been such as to commend him to the esteem of his fellow townsmen. It has been helpful along many lines. His public career has been but the reflection of a chaste private character and he stands in the full prime of his manhood the peer of any citizen in his county.

CALVIN PITKIN PEASE is a well known citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, and a prominent representative of an old family, which descends from Robert Pease, the common ancestor of those of that name in Enfield and Somers.

(I) Robert Pease is thought to have been the son of Robert and Margaret Pease, of Baddow, Essex, England. In 1634 he came to New England on the ship "Francis," sailing from Ipswich to Boston, and was accompanied by his brother, John, and his oldest son, Robert. His wife, Maria, with the other members of the family, came over in a later ship. Robert Pease settled in Salem, Mass., where he died in 1644, at the age of thirty-seven years.

(II) John Pease, the second son of Robert and Maria Pease, was born in England about 1630, and was brought to this country by his parents when but a young lad. In 1668 he was made a freeman by the General Court, having united with the Salem Church, to which his father had belonged, the previous year. In 1681 with his family and numerous neighbors, Robert Pease removed to Fresh Water Brook, then a part of Springfield, where he and his two sons had land granted them that year. The husband and wife united with the First Congregational Church of Springfield, Mass., and were very active in its affairs until his death in 1689.

John Pease was married to Mary Goodell, who died in 1669, having become the mother of the following children: John, born in 1654, an ancestor of W. C. Pease, of whom mention is made in another place; Robert, born in 1656; Mary; Abraham; Jonathan, born in 1669. John Pease was again married, in 1669, to Anna Cummings, who died at Enfield in 1689, having become the mother of the following children: James; Isaac, born in 1672, an ancestor of S. F. Pease, of whom a sketch is published elsewhere; Abigail, born in 1675, who died in 1689.

(III) Robert Pease, who was born in Salem, married Abigail Randall in 1678, and made his first settlement in the "North Fields" at Salem, soon sharing with his brother John the enterprise of leaving the sea coast, and penetrating into the Connecticut valley to find new homes for himself and relatives. This removal was effected in 1681. Robert Pease was one of the first constables chosen by vote of the town of Enfield. His death occurred in 1744, after he had become the father of the following family: William, born in 1679, who died in boyhood; Mary, married to Israel Phelps; Abigail, married to Nathan Hayward; Robert; Samuel; Ephraim, who died in infancy; Daniel; Hannah, who had two husbands, Daniel Miller and Gersham Sexton; Margaret; Ebenezer.

(IV) Robert Pease, the fourth member of the above family, was born in Enfield in 1684, and in 1711, married Hannah Sexton, his first wife, who died the same year, leaving one child; the given name of his second wife was Rachel, and his third wife was Elizabeth Emory. For a time he lived in Andover, Mass.; afterwards he settled in Enfield, finally locating in what is now Somers. Miriam was the daughter of his first wife, and Jemima of his second. To his third marriage were born: Elizabeth, Hannah, Abigail, Robert, Emery, Jane, Ann, Bathsheba, Mary, Abial, and Noah.

(V) Lieut. Noah Pease, the youngest son of the above Robert Pease, was born in Somers in 1739, where he became a respected farmer. He married Mary Wood in 1762, and after her death he married Mrs. Dorcas Arnold, of Somers, a daughter of Deacon John H. Hubbard, of Ellington. Mr. Pease died in 1818, having had the following children: Giles, grandfather of Calvin P.; Noah, who died young; Hannah, who married Calvin Pitkin, of Somers.

(VI) Giles Pease was born in Somers, and became an extensive merchant, owning in company with his son, Theodore, stores in Somers, Ellington, Hartford, Colchester, Stafford and Barkhamsted, all in the name of Giles Pease & Sons. Prior to the war of 1812 he was very prosperous, but in the financial reverses that followed that war the firm lost heavily, and the business was abandoned. His death occurred in 1823. In the Somers Congregational Church he was an active and devoted worker and member.

Giles Pease and Jerusha Pitkin were married in 1786. She was a native of Bolton and a daughter of Thomas Pitkin. To this union were born eleven children: (1) Theodore married Sarah Russell, and became a merchant at Hartford, where he died. (2) Noah, father of Calvin P., was born July 1, 1792. (3) Augustus, born in 1793, married Elizabeth McKinstrey, and lived for a time in Somers, removing to Utica, N. Y., and still later to Iron-ton, Mo., where he died, a merchant. (4) Jerusha, born July 20, 1796, married Israel Kellogg, and lived in West Springfield, Mass., where he was engaged in farming, but died in Rockville. (5) Rebecca, born Jan. 22, 1798, married Cyrus Russell, and moved to Iron-ton, Mo., where she died. (6) Henry, born April 12, 1800, married Mary Warburton, and removed to Thornton, Mo., where he was interested in iron, being in a way to become wealthy, until overtaken by reverses, when he left that section and made his home at Albany, Ill., where he died. (7) Martin, born June 1, 1802, married Flavia Billings, of Somers; he was a merchant, and died in Iron-ton, Mo. (8) Giles, born Dec. 28, 1804, died in infancy. (9) Giles (2), born Dec. 2, 1806, married Mabel Mosely, and was a Congregational clergyman, having graduated from Yale, but on account of failing health became a homeopathic physician in Boston, where he died. (10) Mary, born April 5, 1808, married Edwin Collins, a merchant at Rochester, N. Y., and died in Ellington at an advanced age. (11) Sanford married Elizabeth Hitchcock, and after her death, Charlotte Gillette; he was a painter, and died in Greenville, Ill., while on his way to Iron-ton, Missouri.

(VII) Deacon Noah Pease, the father of Calvin P., was born July 1, 1792, in Somers, where he had the district school educational opportunities, and early became a clerk in his father's store, where he was employed until his marriage. Mr. Pease, however, had a decided preference for a farming life, and located on a farm which belonged to his father at Somers Center. It was a large place, and there he was a farmer until 1883, when he removed to Ellington and he bought a much larger place, about a mile north of the Center, where he engaged in general farming for many years. At a later period he disposed of this to buy the "Hall farm," which was located opposite the Ellington high school. This was a tract of land a half mile square, and there his active life was spent in farming. After his retirement from labor, he spent his last days on a neighboring farm. Mr. and Mrs. Pease died Feb. 22, 1876, at the same moment.

Mr. Pease was a very industrious and highly successful man, liberal in his spirit, and kind to all. In his politics he was a Whig, and then a Republican, and held some minor positions in the town. For over forty years he was a deacon of the Ellington Congregational Church. His remains with those of his wife were interred in Ellington. Deacon Pease was married to Lucinda Russell, of Somers, a daughter of John and Louisa (Cooley) Russell. To them were born: (1) Lucinda, born March 5, 1814, who died a maiden lady; (2) William R., born Sept. 23, 1816, who married Esther Lyman, and on her death, Ann Clarkson, of New Jersey, and who died near Princeton, N. J., where he was engaged in farming; (3) Noah E., born Oct. 17, 1818, who married (first) Jane Topliff, and (second) Amorette Edgerton, and who was a successful farmer in Somers, where he died; (4) Philander P., a merchant, born Feb. 18, 1821, who married Emma Powell, and had his home in Atlanta, Ga., later removing to Chicago, where he was killed by a cable car; (5) Calvin P.; (6) Orpha H., born Feb. 4, 1827, who had two husbands, Elisha Smith and Deacon Edwin Talcott, and is a widow in Hartford; (7) Theodore, born Oct. 10, 1829, who died unmarried in Ellington, Oct. 8, 1856; (8) Henry M., born in 1832, who died unmarried in Darien, Ga., in October, 1854.

(VIII) Calvin P. Pease was born Aug. 19, 1823, in Somers, and removed when a young man to Ellington. His education was acquired in the district school, and in the Ellington high school, when it was drawing pupils from all over the country, among his school mates being Donald B. Mitchell, the author of the "Reveries of a Bachelor," and Judge Taft, the father of the Commissioner to the Philippines. Prof. Chester Lyman was one of Mr. Pease's instructors.

Mr. Pease taught school four years after he had terminated his own attendance at school, and then went to Darien, Ga., where a cousin had preceded him, and become established in business. Mr. Pease was a clerk in his store eight years; and then removed to Fulton, Ill., where he bought a store which he managed for eight years. From Fulton he removed to Chicago, and was associated with several others in a hardware store on Lake street. They had a stock of $50,000, which was entirely swept away by the great fire of 1871. They could only collect insurance to the amount of $15,000.

After that disaster Mr. Pease came back to Ellington with the expectation of soon resuming business in Darien, Ga. Circumstances changed his plans, and he is still living in the home which he bought after coming back from the West. Here he farms and looks after his extended investments, owning property in Chicago and elsewhere.

Mr. Pease was married Oct. 10, 1859, to Sarah E. Chapin, who was born in Somers, Jan. 26, 1833, a daughter of Samuel D. and Sarah (Phelps) Chapin. Mrs. Pease is a lady of much intelligence, and was a school teacher in her younger days. To this marriage were born (1) William, who died in infancy; (2) Cladius T., at home; (3) Arthur C., who graduated from Yale, and is living in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., a civil engineer; he married Harriet Noble, by whom he had two sons, Herbert and William.

Mr. Pease is a Republican; with his family he belongs to the Congregational Church, and all are much respected in the community.

KINGSBURY. The family bearing this name in Tolland and Hartford counties—the children and their posterity of the late William Kingsbury, of Andover, among whom were the late Horace Parsons Kingsbury, of Glastonbury, and Henry M. Kingsbury, of Coventry, and William B. and Ruth Sophia Kingsbury, now of Andover—has long been one of the most substantial and respected families of Connecticut, and one of the old Colonial families of New England.

The American ancestor of this branch of the Kingsbury family was Henry Kingsbury, of Ipswich, whose birth occurred in 1615, and who died Oct. 1, 1687. His wife, Susannah, he married in 1663. From 1658 to 1660 Mr. Kingsbury was a resident of Ipswich, soon after removing to Rowley, where he lived from 1662 to 1667, and probably later, and finally settled in Haverhill, where his death occurred. His wife Susannah died there Feb. 21, 1678-90.

There has been some speculation among the early writers as to the relationship between several of the immigrants to this country by the name of Kingsbury. This Henry Kingsbury was a kinsman of John Kingsbury, of Watertown 1635-6, and of Dedham, and may have been a son of Henry, who, with his wife Margaret and two or more children, came in the ship "Talbot," one of the fleet of Winthrop, 1630, and was of Ipswich in 1638.

Henry Kingsbury and wife Susannah's children were: John, Ephraim (killed by the Indians at Haverhill May 2, 1676), and likely Susannah, James, Samuel and others. From this immigrant settler the children of the late William Kingsbury of Andover, Conn., are descendants in the seventh generation, their lineage being through Joseph, Nathaniel, Jabez, Joseph and William Kingsbury.

(II) Joseph Kingsbury, born about 1656, married April 2, 1679, Love Ayers. He was bookkeeper to Capt. Simon Wainwright, a merchant of Haverhill, who in 1708 was killed by the Indians, and his house burned, at which time Mr. Kingsbury left Haverhill, removing to Norwich, Conn., where he died in 1741, at eighty-five years of age. His children, all of record at Haverhill, were: Joseph, born June 22, 1682; Nathaniel, born Aug. 23, 1684; Elizabeth, born May 10, 1686; Mary, born Oct. 19, 1687; Elizabeth (2), born Oct. 16, 1693; and Susannah, born Sept. 24, 1695.

(III) Nathaniel Kingsbury, born Aug. 23, 1684, left Haverhill with his father, in June, 1708, removing to Norwich, Conn. He married Hannah Denison, of Ipswich, daughter of John Denison. Mr. Kingsbury later removed to what is now Hampton, Conn., where he lived until 1731 or 1732, then removed to what is now Andover, in the same State, which has since been the home of many of his descendants. To this couple were born fifteen children, seven of then sons.

(IV) Jabez Kingsbury, born June 21, 1717, in Hampton, married Mary, born Nov. 29, 1719, in Windsor, Conn., daughter of Joseph Phelps. Mr. Kingsbury located in what is now Andover, Conn., where he died in October, 1769. Mrs. Kingsbury died April 10 (or 19), 1809. Their children were: Nathaniel, born Oct. 4, 1751; Ruth, born May 27, 1753; Joseph, born Feb. 23, 1755; Jeremiah, born March 5, 1757; Jabez, born May 20, 1758; May, born Oct. 29, 1760; Amelia, born Jan. 16, 1764; and Anna, born April 20, 1766.

(V) Joseph Kingsbury (2), born Feb. 23, 1755, married in 1783, Ruth Benton, and their children were: (1) Sophia married Hon. Willard Hutchinson, of Coventry, a prominent citizen who served as selectman and also representative. He was a farmer and school teacher. (2) Mary married Daniel Burnap, a farmer and jeweler in Andover. (3) William. (4) Joseph married Amelia Reynolds, and was a farmer in Andover. (5) Harvey married Polly Wright, and settled on a farm. (6) Royal who married Emily Foote, was a physician, and lived and died in Marlboro. The father of this family died Sept. 7, 1835, and the mother passed away Oct. 10, 1813.

(VI) William Kingsbury, a son of Joseph and Ruth (Benton) Kingsbury, was born and reared in the town of Andover, Conn., where he received his elementary education, attending the common schools. By thrift and industry he became a well-to-do farmer, held the confidence and respect of his fellowmen and the esteem of the community. He died in Andover in 1853, his death being the result of an accident, at the raising of a building. Mr. Kingsbury was married to Susanna Reynolds, a native of East Hartford, and daughter of Charles and Hannah (Bidwell) Reynolds, the former a well-known man of East Hartford, a blacksmith by trade and occupation, who did work for the army through the Revolutionary war. The eight children of William and Susanna Kingsbury were:

(1) WILLIAM B. KINGSBURY, born on the farm where he now resides in the town of Andover, Conn., Oct. 24, 1817, was educated in the Andover public schools, and at the Suffield Institute, of which latter he is now one of the few survivors of the Class of 1841. He taught school in East Hartford, South Windsor, and Burlington, Conn. In 1864 he represented Andover in the Legislature, serving on the committee on Fisheries. Most of his life he has engaged in farming in Andover. He has never married.

(2) Charles R. Kingsbury, whose death occurred June 12, 1895, was a farmer in the town of Andover, and a citizen of worth in his community.

(3) HORACE P. KINGSBURY was born Sept. 29, 1820, in Andover, and in a district school of the town and at a select school in Coventry he received the rudiments of his education. After this he taught school one winter, then for some three years he was employed in a shop in which were made "Yankee Notions" in Coventry. Following this experience he returned home and worked out as a farm hand, receiving for his services from ten to twelve dollars per month, which at that time was considered good wages. He later worked for a time in a mill at Rockville and in a repair shop in Collinsville, and also at Holyoke, Mass. In February, 1852, he located in Glastonbury, Conn., working as a teamster and general farm hand for J. B. Williams. Along in 1855 Mr. Kingsbury went West, and after an absence of some five months in sightseeing returned to Glastonbury, taking a position in the shop of Mr. Williams, his former employer. There he assisted in making shoe-blackening, ink, soap, etc. While there he, on Aug. 25, 1862, enlisted in Co. G, 25th Conn. V. I., with the late Capt. Charles Talcott and Col. Bissell, was in Louisiana under Gen. Banks, and took part in the engagements at Irish Bend and Port Hudson, being present at the surrender of the latter place in July, 1863. Mr. Kingsbury returned to Hartford, Conn., with his regiment, and was mustered out Aug. 26, 1863, one year and one day from the date of his enlistment, which had been for nine months only. He resumed his work for Mr. Williams, remaining two years, and for one summer was employed in a gristmill in Bristol. In 1866 failing health compelled him to return to Glastonbury, and from that time on until his death he was employed by Mr. Williams. Mr. Kingsbury visited California in 1886, and after that time attended almost every G. A. R. Encampment up to the time of his death, July 28, 1902. Mr. Kingsbury was a member of Robert O. Tyler Post, No. 50, of Hartford, and was as unwavering in his loyalty to his comrades in peace as in battle. Learning that three soldiers were buried in the potter's field in Glastonbury, he quietly bought a lot and had their bodies removed to it; as he never told of it the occurrence would have passed unknown to the world had it not been found out and revealed by others.

Kingsbury Brothers
Twins
Horace P. & Henry M.

(4) HENRY M. KINGSBURY, whose death occurred Nov. 20, 1901, was twin brother to Horace P. He was a resident of Coventry, where he had always been occupied in agricultural pursuits. He bore such reputation as has always characterized the family. He married Emily Watrous, and their eight children are as follows: Nathaniel is married and a resident of the State of Michigan; Mary E.; William H.; Annie A.; Charles S.; Jennie W.; Horace L.; and Joseph H. Henry M. Kingsbury was a Republican in politics, held various minor offices, and was a member of the Congregational Church.

(5) Ann Eliza Kingsbury was an invalid, and died Aug. 6, 1850.

(6) Emily M. Kingsbury died, unmarried, in Andover, Sept. 21, 1867.

(7) Ruth Sophia Kingsbury, who resides on the homestead with her brother William B., in earlier life was occupied in the noble calling of school teaching.

(8) Mary Jane Kingsbury married Frederick Root, and died in West Meriden, Conn., July 27, 1874. One son, William Kingsbury, born to them, died in infancy.

OSCAR WALLACE SANFORD. In business, social and political circles the name of Oscar Wallace Sanford, and that of his son, Frederick G. Sanford, call forth the esteem and respect of the citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn. The former was born Oct. 20, 1827, in Fall River, Mass., a son of Isaac Lawton and Elizabeth (Stephens) Sanford, the former of whom was born in 1806, in Rhode Island, and died in Paris, Ky. In 1826 he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Stephens. In his youth he served an apprenticeship to the carding trade, in Providence, R. I., and later worked in that city as a journeyman, working also in his native city of Fall River.

In 1837 Mr. Sanford located in Stafford, Conn., that busy manufacturing center attracting many skilled workmen, and for six years he continued to act as superintendent of the Staffordville Woolen mills, going thence to Glastonbury, Conn., where he spent two years in the same position with the Hale Woolen mills. His next change was to Berlin, Conn., and there he purchased a water privilege and erected an establishment of his own, which he successfully conducted for three years, selling then and locating at Catskill, N. Y., where for the two following years he was again employed as mill superintendent.

This enterprise, however, was not sufficient to satisfy the energy and business capacity of Mr. Sanford, and at the close of his two-years' engagement, he purchased a flour and grist mill in Erie, Pa., and was engaged in a very prosperous business, when the outbreak of the Civil war so disarranged commercial affairs and likewise offered other avenues, that Mr. Sanford closed out his mill business and went South, locating in Paris, Ky., where he purchased a plant and embarked in the manufacturing of Kentucky jeans, the business being a successful one all through the war. There he died, his wife dying in Cromwell, Conn. Their children were: Oscar W., of this sketch; Cornelius, a painter and paper-hanger, by trade, who never married, and died in Monson, Mass.; Orson, also a painter and paper-hanger, who died in Bridgeport, Conn.; Augustine, who is a merchant tailor, residing in Housatonic, Mass.; Isaac, by trade a blacksmith, who resides in San Francisco, Cal., although he has followed the sea for many years. The second marriage of Mr. Sanford was to Eliza Winchell, of Rockville, and she died in Paris, Ky. Three children were born to this union.

Oscar W. Sanford received his education in the schools in his vicinity, and since 1837 has been a resident of Stafford. At the age of fifteen years he entered the Staffordville Woolen mills under his father, and remained employed there for five years. When his father moved to Glastonbury, Conn., he accompanied him there and also to Berlin, working in all of the mills in these places. In 1857 he returned to Stafford, where he had learned his trade of carpenter and joiner under Capt. Johnson, and for thirty years has followed the same in that city, becoming not only one of the most capable and reliable of mechanics, but also one of its most respected citizens.

On Aug. 26, 1862, Mr. Sanford enlisted for service in the Civil war, in Co. D, 25th C. V. I., and was elected to be 1st lieutenant before having seen any service. Mr. Sanford participated in the battles of Irish Bend, I. a., the siege of Port Hudson, and many other engagements in which his regiment figured, and he was honorably discharged from the service Aug. 26, 1863, having been much of the time with Gen. Banks.

The first marriage of Mr. Sanford occurred Nov. 24, 1854, to Orpha Jane Johnson, who was born May 20, 1834, a daughter of Cyril and Clarissa (McKinney) Johnson, of Stafford, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. Mrs. Sanford died May 19, 1870, her children having been: Idella, born April 14, 1857, who died March 27, 1864; Frederick Goodwin; and William Oscar, born Sept. 17, 1864, who was married June 26, 1889, to Miranda E. Pomeroy, of Stafford, a daughter of Henry Root and Henrietta (Eddy) Pomeroy. They had one son, Roy Junius, born May 10, 1890. William O. Sanford early interested himself in the manufacturing business and is at present the assistant superintendent of the Warren Woolen Company.

The second marriage of Mr. Sanford took place Oct. 25, 1871, to Emily O. Burnham, who was the daughter of Jason and Amanda (Ladd) Burnham, of East Hartford, Conn. Mr. Sanford is a consistent member of the Congregational Church of Stafford Springs, in which he has long been one of the liberal supporters.

In his political views Mr. Sanford has been ever one of the most ardent and enthusiastic Republicans, in his earlier years served as constable, and in 1890 was made a representative to the General Assembly and served on the committee on the Sale of Lands. Fraternally he is a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. and A. M., of Stafford, in which for two years he was master, and now is past master, and he was also a charter member of Winter Post, No. 44, G. A. R., of Stafford, of which he served as commander, and he also belongs to the Stafford Grange.

Frederick G. Sanford, a son of Oscar Wallace Sanford, was born April 19, 1863, in Stafford Springs, and obtained his education in the common schools of the place, leaving his books at the age of fifteen years to become a clerk in the Stafford National Bank. Later he was promoted to the position of bookkeeper and efficiently filled that responsible position until 1887.

In 1870, Mr. Sanford first entered the bank and remained with it until its failure in 1887, and after that event was employed as assistant to the receiver of the bank, and remained with him until the affairs of the institution were closed. In 1888, when the present National Bank was organized, Mr. Sanford was chosen teller, becoming assistant cashier Jan. 25, 1890, and April 7, 1894, was made cashier, which position he has most efficiently held ever since.

Well known as a careful and conservative man in financial circles, the treasurership of the Central Woolen Company was pressed upon Mr. Sanford in 1897 and for two years he filled both positions, thus impairing his health to such a degree that he resigned the treasurership of the Central Woolen Company and has since given his full attention to the duties connected with the bank.

Mr. Sanford was married Nov. 19, 1890, to Laura A. Dudley, of Norwich, Conn., who was a daughter of Edwin A. and Elizabeth (Howard) Dudley.

ALBERT HARTSON, a retired machinist of North Windham, Windham county, belongs to an old and honored family, whose ancestral history is closely intertwined with the stirring scenes and incidents of Colonial and Revolutionary days.

The ancestral history of the Hartson family in this country antedates 1700, and begins with Thomas Hartson (or "Hartshorn" to follow its early spelling), who was connected with mill work. His wife was Sarah, and they early moved to Windham, Conn. In 1729 he sold a grist and saw-mill to Joseph Martin of Lebanon. Thomas Hartson had a son Ebenezer, who remained in Charlestown, and was unable to come to Windham in 1728 to care for his parents, and thus quit his right in the mill. A daughter of Thomas Hartson married Luzanes Manley, of Columbia.

Daniel Hartson, grandfather of Albert, lived in Mansfield, where he had a farm, and made horn inkstands and combs. He died at a very advanced age, in Vermont, where he had gone to spend his last days with a son. On June 6, 1772, he married Hannah Dexter, and their children were: Reuben, a successful farmer living in Vermont; and Nathan, the father of Albert.

Nathan Hartson was born in Mansfield and was there reared. Farming became his occupation, although for a short time he made ink stands. His death occurred in Massachusetts at an advanced age. On Dec. 23, 1800, he married Sally Lincoln, daughter of David Lincoln, and they had the following children: (1) Alfred, born April 17, 1802, lived in Oneida county, New York, where he was married and had a family; (2) Reuben, born Nov. 14, 1804, died young in Nauvoo, Ill., shortly after his marriage to Miss Barrows; (3) Olive, born Aug. 21, 1806, was deaf and dumb, and died at the age of fifty years; (4) Harriet, born May 5, 1809, married Mr. Salisbury, and died in Wisconsin; (5) John, born June 28, 1808, died in Massachusetts, at the age of sixty-nine; and (6) Albert.

Albert Hartson, our subject, was born in Mansfield July 25, 1820. He was married Oct. 23, 1842, to Mary Jane Flint, who was born March 22, 1826, a daughter of Nathaniel and Sophronia (Martin) Flint, the former of whom was born in Hampton, Conn., April 19, 1800, a son of Nathaniel and Eunice (Moulton) Flint, and died April 26, 1881. Mrs. Sophronia (Martin) Flint was born June 17, 1801, and died Aug. 11, 1885. Nathaniel Flint, Jr., was a shoemaker by trade, and also followed farming in Hampton, but both he and his wife died in Chaplin. Besides Mrs. Albert Hartson, their children were as follows: George Albert, deceased, lived in Chaplin; Emeline died young; Emily married Welcome Arnold, and died in Providence, R. I.; Dwight lives in East Hampton, Conn.; Cecilia married Zenas Chapman, of Eastford, Conn.; and Delia, married E. Rumwell, and died in Florence, Mass., in 1902. To Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hartson were born two children: (1) Elizabeth Sophia, born April 19, 1844, married Hezekiah Utley, a farmer of North Windham, and has one child, Mary A., born July 20, 1866, who married Everett P. Flint, and is the mother of Burton, Harry, and Gladys. (2) Lester Monroe, born Nov. 10, 1845, died June 25, 1895; he married Delia Fuller, by whom he had two sons; Leslie Fuller, born Oct. 7, 1875, married Bertha Burnham, Sept. 10, 1899, and is living at North Windham; and Howard A., born May 3, 1879, is now of North Windham, and with his brother operates a machine shop.

Albert Hartson received his education in the common schools, attending in Willimantic a short time. His mother died when he was about eight years old, and he began to learn a trade in the Willimantic machine shops at a very early age. After two years there he went to Hampton, where he assisted Stewart Curtis in starting a business, and made tools for the use of manufacturers. After two or three years the shop burned, and Mr. Hartson went to Ashford, where he was engaged in machine work for about a year and a half, and then he returned to Mansfield and made spectacles one winter. After coming to North Windham, he was proprietor of a spectacle shop and had a number of apprentices.

In 1856 he came to North Windham, and learned to weave cotton cloth, receiving fifty cents a day, and, before long, a dollar a day. After he had learned his trade, the mill burned and he went to Florence, Mass., but soon returned to North Windham, and helped start the new mill, where he continued a number of years, doing machine work, and gradually getting into business for himself as a mill supply dealer. He has been retired since 1882. Mr. Hartson is a man of inventive turn of mind, and has originated a number of labor-saving devices, and has been in a variety of mechanical employments. He is not only a machinist, but owns a farm, to which he has given much attention for a number of years. For over fifty years, he has lived in his present residence, which he erected in 1850.

In politics Mr. Hartson has been a Republican, and has served on the school committee. Both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church in Windham while that society was in existence.

GEORGE MORSE. This retired gentleman, who now has his residence in North Woodstock, was born in East Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., March 29, 1825, but before entering upon a record of his personal career it may be well to introduce a few remarks touching his antecedents.

Nathan Morse, father of George, was born Oct. 14, 1785, in Woodstock and there died in 1853. He was first married, Jan. 28, 1822, to Rebecca Child, who was born in 1790, also in Woodstock, a daughter of Abel and Rebecca (Allard) Child; to them were born children, viz: Abel, Aug. 20, 1823, who married Mary Elliott, of Thompson, Conn., and died in 1858; George, whose name opens this sketch; and Nathan E., Nov. 12, 1829. For his second wife, Nathan Morse married Mary Mills, but by this union there was no issue.

Nathan Morse was a farmer, and was over six feet tall, as well as extraordinarily strong in his younger years. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion he and his wife were Congregationalists and members of the church of that denomination at East Woodstock. Much valuable information in relation to the Morse family may be gleaned from the life of Nathaniel G. Williams, of Brooklyn, which will be found on another page and to which it will compensate the reader to refer.

George Morse received his preparatory education in the district schools of his native town, in what was known as the Paine District, after leaving which he attended the Nichols Academy at Dudley, Mass., for two terms. At the age of seventeen years he withdrew from school and for a few years worked out as a farm-hand and then leased the Jonathan Carpenter farm of 140 acres in North Woodstock for three years, and was next employed on the farm of Trench May, in North Woodstock, for one summer.

In the fall, after leaving Mr. May, Mr. Morse went to Illinois and other States on a prospecting tour, but after an absence of a few weeks decided that Connecticut could afford him as good a home as he could desire and therefore returned. In 1876 Mr. Morse purchased the Ezra Child place in North Woodstock village, where he has since lived, but still keeps an oversight on his 100-acre farm adjacent.

Among his other successful business ventures, Mr. Morse was for over twenty-five years a dealer in cattle and made frequent trips to Albany, N. Y., and Chicago, Ill., where he bought stock for the New England markets. In 1884, however, his health began to fail, and since then he has been living in retirement, in the enjoyment of his well earned competence.

The first marriage of George Morse took place April 5, 1852, to Sylvia Child May, daughter of Trench and Cynthia (Child) May, the latter a daughter of Capt. Willard and Sylvia (Child) Child. Mrs. Sylvia Morse was called away Sept. 8, 1888, but left no children, and on June 13, 1890, for his second helpmate Mr. Morse chose Matilda Jane May, sister of his first wife. This union has also been without issue.

Trench May, the father-in-law of Mr. Morse, was born in Woodstock, Oct. 19, 1800, a son of Nehemiah and Nancy (Morse) May, and there died, April 27, 1876. He married Dec. 16, 1828, Cynthia Child, who was born in Woodstock, April 2, 1804, and was a daughter of Capt. Willard and Sylvia (Child) Child. Trench May was an extensive cattle dealer as well as successful farmer, and for his cattle found his principal markets in Worcester, Mass., and Providence, R. I., buying in Albany, New York.

Mrs. Cynthia (Child) May was greatly beloved by all who knew her for her affectionate disposition, and kind and gentle manners and personal attraction, as well as for her unaffected piety. She bore her husband seven children, all born in Woodstock, in the following order: Henry, born Oct. 13, 1829, who married Ellen D. Child; Sylvia Child, Nov. 25, 1831, who was married to George Morse, the subject of this sketch; Willard Child, who died aged six years; Ellen, Oct. 4, 1836, who was married to Rev. Henry Francis Hyde; Willard, who lived on the homestead and never married; Matilda Jane, born Jan. 21, 1843, who became the second Mrs. George Morse, and Anna Cynthia, April 15, 1847, who was married to Darius Mathewson Adams, of Pomfret, Connecticut.

Nehemiah May, father of Trench May was born in 1774, and in 1798 married Nancy Morse, who was born in 1778. This couple removed to Otsego county, N. Y., where all their children were born.

Eliakim May, father of Nehemiah, was born in 1742, and married Martha Lyon in 1770; all his children, with one exception, settled in Otsego county.

Nehemiah May, father of Eliakim, was born June 28, 1701, in Suffield, became a resident of Woodstock, and married Nov. 30, 1726, Mehitable Holbrook, a daughter of John Holbrook, an early settler of Pomfret.

John May (3), father of Nehemiah, was born in Roxbury, Mass., May 19, 1663, and there died Feb. 24, 1730. He married June 2, 1684, Prudence Bridge, who was born Jan. 11, 1664, and died Sept. 26, 1723. She was a daughter of John and Prudence (Robinson) Bridge, of Roxbury.

John May (2) was born in 1631 and died Sept. 11, 1671. He married Sarah (Bremer) Bruce, a daughter of Daniel and Joanna Bremer.

John May (1) was born in England in 1590, in Mayfield, county of Sussex, and came to Massachusetts about 1636 with two sons: John, mentioned in the foregoing paragraph; and Samuel, who died July 17, 1677. John May (1) was twice married, but the name of his first wife has been lost in the lapse of time; his second wife was named Sarah, and died May 4, 1670, in Roxbury, Mass., while his own death took place April 28, of the same year and in the same town.

Mr. Morse possesses a quiet, unassuming nature, and is a man who much prefers the sanctity of his hospitable home to the less steady life of a political career, hence he has given little time to the latter, other than that which is the duty of every good citizen. Mr. Morse is a man who enjoys the highest esteem and respect of the entire community. He and his estimable wife are charitable, self-sacrificing people, whose home is a hospitable rendezvous of the time-honored town of Woodstock. He, however, served as county commissioner from 1888 to 1894, six years. He represented Woodstock in the Legislature in 1881. He has also served his town in the minor offices. They attend North Congregational Church, and are liberal supporters of it.

JAMES MONROE KIBBE (deceased) was a prominent and substantial citizen of North Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., and came of a family long and creditably known in the State.

Gen. Amariah Kibbe, Jr., the father of James Monroe, was a son of Amariah and Hannah (Kibbe) Kibbe, who are mentioned more fully elsewhere. Gen. Kibbe was born on Somers street, in the town of Somers, Feb. 14, 1780, where his early life was spent. After his marriage he lived in a house in North Somers which was built for him by his father. As a farmer he was successful and in the hotel business, in which he was engaged many years, he was equally fortunate; he was also a merchant, and had a general store. Six commissions which he received in the old State militia are now prized heirlooms in the family, as are his military coat and sword. His first commission bears date of Oct. 18, 1802, and names him a captain in the 5th company of the 31st regiment of the National Guard, and is signed by Jonathan Trumbull, who also made him a major in 1808. In 1812 he was made lieutenant colonel of the 31st regiment by Gov. Roger Griswold. In 1816 Gov. John C. Smith made him colonel of the 19th regiment, and Oliver Wolcott, who made him a brigadier general in 1819, made him major general in 1822.

General Kibbe died June 23, 1840, and was buried at Center cemetery in Somers. April 29, 1799, he was married to Charlotte McKinney, who was born Oct. 22, 1783, and died Nov. 13, 1860. She was a member of the Congregational Church. Their children were as follows: Charlotte, who died when three years old; Amariah, Jr., born in 1803; Sophronia, born in 1805; Charlotte (2), born in 1807, who died in 1824; Ursula, born in 1809, who married Dr. E. E. Hamilton, died in Springfield, Mass., and is buried in Somers; Saloma A., born in 1812, who married John Pease, and died in Hartford in 1895; Sophia A., a twin of Saloma, who married Myron Billings, a farmer in Somers, where she died in 1838; Margaret, born in 1814, the widow of William Moore, residing in Springfield, Mass.; Harriet, born in 1816, who married William Prentice, and died in Norwich, Conn.; James Monroe, born May 1, 1818; Francina P., born in 1822, the widow of John Burt, living in Waltham, Mass.; Augusta M., born in 1826, who married Charles Woodman, and resides in Springfield, Massachusetts.

James Monroe Kibbe was born in the house mentioned above, and secured his education from the district schools. After the death of his father he assisted his mother and family in the care of the hotel and farm, his brother Amariah taking charge of the store. In later years he discontinued the hotel, and cared for his mother as long as she lived. His entire life was spent in the home where he was born, and there he died July 30, 1899, after having endured poor health for several years; he was buried in the North cemetery in Somers.

Mr. Kibbe was a Democrat in his earlier years, but became a Republican at the time of the great Civil war. Several terms were spent by him on the board of selectmen, and from time to time he filled various town offices, representing the town in the General Assembly of 1868-69. A contributor to the Congregational Church, of which he was a member, he took an active interest in everything that related to the morals and the progress of the community in which he lived.

Mr. Kibbe was married Dec. 21, 1847, to Hannah B. Carpenter, a native of Wilbraham, Mass., and a daughter of John and Fanny (King) Carpenter.

Mrs. Kibbe died May 13, 1894. Fanny King was the daughter of Asaph King, who was born in Enfield in 1747. In 1778 he enlisted as a "forager" in the Revolutionary army, serving under Capt. Abel King. Later he was appointed "assistant forage master" at Wilbraham, Mass., by Col. Smith, and served at Springfield, also taking part in Gen. Sullivan's campaign in Rhode Island. Some time after 1832 this gallant and patriotic gentleman passed away in Wilbraham.

CARPENTER. The Carpenter family, from which Mrs. Kibbe sprang, runs back to (I) William Carpenter, who was born in England in 1605, and came to New England in the ship "Bevis" in 1638. His wife's christian name was Abigail. In 1641 and again in 1643 he was a deputy to the General Court from Weymouth; in 1645 he moved to Rehoboth. He was a farmer and died in 1659, his widow surviving until 1687.

(II) Joseph Carpenter, son of William the emigrant, was born in England about 1633, and was brought to New England by his parents. In 1656 he was married to Margaret Sutton, daughter of John Sutton. In 1663 he assisted in the organization of the Baptist Church in Swansea, Mass., having removed thither the previous year, where he died in 1675.

(III) Benjamin Carpenter, son of the foregoing Joseph, was born in Rehoboth in 1658, and was married in 1680 to Renew Weeks, who was born in Dorchester, the daughter of William Weeks. She died in 1703, and her husband in 1727.

(IV) Benjamin Carpenter (2), born in Swansea, Mass., in 1680, married Mary Barry in 1706, and was engaged in farming. About 1735 he removed to Ashford, Connecticut.

(V) William Carpenter, son of the foregoing, was born in Swansea, Mass., in 1721, married Hannah Needham, of Brimfield, and moved to Ashford, Conn., later becoming a resident of Stafford. Farming was his occupation throughout his life, and he died about 1809. During the Revolution he was a gallant defender of the cause of liberty, and enlisted at the time of the alarm at Lexington in Capt. Needham's Company in Col. Danielson's regiment, and was in Col. Nixon's regiment still later. He also served in Capt. Toogood's company, and in Capt. Browning's company in Col. Murray's regiment. There was but little time in the Revolution that he was not in the army.

(VI) John Carpenter, son of William of the last paragraph, was born in East Greenwich in 1751, married Lovina Chappelle about 1777, and located in Wilbraham, Mass., going from there to East Haddam, where his children were born. In 1818 his death occurred, and that of his widow the following year.

(VII) John Carpenter (2), son of the above, was born in 1785; in 1808 he was married to his first wife, Hannah Brown, of Monson, who died in 1822. The following year Mr. Carpenter married Fanny King, and followed farming in Wilbraham.

(VIII) Hannah B. Carpenter, daughter of the John Carpenter of the last paragraph, was born Feb. 3, 1825, and in 1847 married James M. Kibbe.

To the union of James M. Kibbe and Hannah B. Carpenter were born the following children: James M., born Oct. 18, 1853, who died the same day; an infant son, Jan. 20, 1855; Anna C., July 22, 1857; Emma F., Nov. 19, 1864, who died at the age of sixteen months; Carrie Louise, Aug. 30, 1868, who died, unmarried, March 7, 1891.

The only surviving member of the above family, Anna C., lives on the old homestead, and was married March 12, 1878, to Harry G. Kibbe, who was born Nov. 4, 1855, and is a son of Henry R. and Mabel C. (Gager) Kibbe. From 1872 until 1892 Mr. Kibbe was on the road as a traveling salesman for Kibbe, Chaffee & Co., of Philadelphia. The latter year he connected himself with Kibbe, Chaffee, Shreve & Co., of New York, with whom he remained until 1896, when he retired, and is now living at North Somers. They have one child, Mabel C., born Sept. 23, 1881.

WESLEY POTTER BIDWELL, one of the best known merchants and business men of Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born June 6, 1829, in Eastford, Conn., and is a son of Harvey Bidwell, who was born in East Hartford in January, 1801. The Bidwell family is one of the oldest families in Connecticut, their location in the state dating back to the first settlement at Hartford, in 1635. The ground where now stands the capitol building in Hartford was at one time owned by a Bidwell, and thereon he conducted the first tannery in Connecticut. One branch of the family early settled in what is now East Hartford, and from this branch W. P. Bidwell, of Stafford Springs, is descended.

Harvey Bidwell left home when he was ten years of age, and making his way to Willington, Conn., found employment with David Potter, for whom he worked at farming until he was twenty-one years old. After that time he found work in a cotton mill in Eastford, learning the spinner's trade, and remained in this mill for ten years, having had charge of its spinning department for several years. After the termination of his work in the mill, Mr. Bidwell came back to Willington, where he bought a farm, which was his home for more than fifty years, though he died at Monson, Mass., in August, 1888, making his home at that time with his daughter. In his politics he was an active Republican, having been a Free-Soiler in his earlier life. Willington was represented by him in the General Assembly in 1857, and he was a justice of the peace for many years. In his religion he was a Methodist, and a worker in the Church, having been one of the committee on the building of the Moose Meadow Church, and there, as in everything else with which he was concerned, he was earnest and industrious to the last degree. He was one of the foremost men in the town during his active life, and none was more respected.

Harvey Bidwell was married April 6, 1824, to Martha Potter, who was born Nov. 27, 1803, and died April 9, 1893, in Stafford. Willington was her native town, and she was a daughter of Bartholomew and Keziah (Glazier) Potter. To their union were born four children: (1) Osborn, born in 1825, was a merchant in Rockville, where he died in 1889; he married Frances Brown, of Monson, Mass., and, on her death, Sarah Watson; Hannah Dimmick was his third wife. (2) Wesley P. was the second son. (3) Ira Glazier, born in February, 1834, became a Methodist minister, and died in Syracuse, N. Y.; Mary Bontacue was his wife. (4) Martha C., born in August, 1840, married John Brockbank, and is now a widow in Sacramento, Cal., her husband having died in Stafford, in 1891. He was a carpenter and contractor in his lifetime. Samuel Bidwell was the father of Harvey Bidwell.

Wesley Potter Bidwell was born in Eastford, and he attended the local schools there until he was ten years old, when his parents removed to Willington, where his education was completed at the age of eighteen. For a time he remained on the farm at home, and then learned the shoemaker's trade with Irving Potter, and when he had fairly mastered it, he set up a shop for himself, contributing his help at home as it might be needed. In 1860 Mr. Bidwell removed to Monson, Mass., where he was employed in the various departments of a woolen mill for about a year, his brother Osborn being his employer. Then he removed to Oil City, Pa., to engage in oil prospecting, his first venture being on the famous Tarr farm in company with Theodore Carey and Irving Potter. For five years Mr. Bidwell was engaged in buying and selling oil, mostly on his own account, buying at the wells and shipping by water down the Allegheny river, to Pittsburg. In 1865 he returned to Connecticut and soon after he purchased the David Potter farm where his father was reared. It contained about 125 acres; he later bought 100 acres adjoining, making 225 acres, and there he remained until 1874. That year he removed to Stafford Springs, and formed a partnership with A. D. Wakefield, to engage in the meat business, under the firm name of Wakefield & Bidwell. This firm was discontinued at the end of a year and a half, Mr. Wakefield being replaced by Mark Smith. Bidwell & Smith continued for about two years, and then Mr. Bidwell retired in favor of his partner, and bought out Dimock Brothers, taking William H. Webster as a partner in January, 1882, under the name of Bidwell & Co., which is continued to this time.

Mr. Bidwell belongs to the Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., with which he has been connected for thirty years. Mrs. Bidwell is a member of the Methodist Church, which her husband attends and supports after a liberal fashion. Mr. Bidwell is a Republican, and has been a member of the board of selectman, assessor, collector and held other town offices. In 1870 he was a member of the General Assembly, where he had a place on the Agricultural committee.

The first marriage of Mr. Bidwell took place in 1860, when he was united to Harriet Fuller, who was born in 1840, and died in 1862, a daughter of Willard and Minerva (Walker) Fuller. Mr. Bidwell was married Dec. 1, 1865, to Susan B. (Braman) Webster, the widow of Edgar Webster, of Belchertown, Mass., a daughter of Francis and Thankful (Hyde) Braman. To this union were born: Susan May, born March 5, 1869, who married Frank W. Morey, of Westford; Charles Wesley, born Sept. 19, 1871, who died at the age of ten years. Mrs. Frank Morey has one child, Eva Candace, born March 16, 1893. Mr. Morey represented the town of Ashford in the Connecticut Legislature in 1901. He is a farmer.

The firm of Bidwell & Co. are the leading dealers in their line of business in Stafford Springs, and for reliability and straightforwardness no firm in the town surpasses them. Mr. Bidwell has been a successful business man and from his own efforts principally, has been able to amass a very comfortable competency. In business matters he is regarded as one of the substantial men of the city, one whose integrity is never questioned.

FRANK TURNER NEWCOMB, who is a man of prominence and influence in both financial and political circles, was born Nov. 21, 1861, in Tolland, Conn., where the family had lived for several generations.

Cordial Newcomb, the great-grandfather of Frank T., was born in Tolland, and was a life-long farmer. His reputation as a man of an exacting conscience survives in the tradition that under no consideration would he accept more than twelve cents a dozen for his eggs. In 1824, 1826, and in 1835 he was a member of the General Assembly, and for many years was a selectman in the town. He married Mary Deming, and by her had the following family: William C., Eliza, Albert, Charles, Laura, Ralph, Samuel, and Henry.

William Crocker Newcomb, son of Cordial, was born in Tolland, Conn., Oct. 24, 1806, and he died there Feb. 4, 1864. In his younger days he was a school teacher, and he lived on the Willimantic river until 1838, when he removed to the Lord farm. An active and enthusiastic Democrat, he represented the town in the General Assembly in 1842 and 1843, and was senator from the old 20th district in 1859. For many years he was first selectman, and from time to time held various town offices. In 1807 he married Maria Trumbull Merrick, a daughter of Samuel and Olive (Greenslit) Merrick, of Willington. They had the following children: (1) William Burt, who became a prominent lumber and brick merchant in St. Paul, Minn., where he was associated with the firm of Griggs, Newcomb & Hills, married Emily Brown, and died in St. Paul in 1872; (2) John Mortimer died in infancy; (3) Trumbull, born Nov. 4, 1833, died in Rockville, Sept. 5, 1881, where he was in business as a hardware merchant: he married Jane E. Keeney, a native of Rockville; (4) Loren is mentioned below.

Loren Newcomb, son of William Crocker and father of Frank Turner, was born June 5, 1836. He acquired his education in the district school, and remained on the homestead farm until the spring of 1865, when he settled on the old Paulk homestead, located about a mile and a half south of the Centre, and there he lived until the spring of 1901. The farm contained 144 acres, and Mr. Newcomb carried on in connection with his general farming, a dairy establishment, selling his milk during that time to the Vernon Creamery. Mr. Newcomb is a Democrat and cast his first vote for Stephen A. Douglas in 1860, but he is not a silver Democrat. He has served on the board of selectmen three years, and was assessor several terms. For one term he was on the board of relief, for two years held the office of constable, and he has also been justice of the peace and collector of taxes. In 1868 and again in 1883 he was a representative in the General Assembly, serving on the Prison committee in both terms. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1902. On March 5, 1857, Mr. Newcomb was married to Anna Turner, who was born Aug. 7, 1838, a daughter of Orrin and Lydia (Edgerton) Turner, of North Coventry. They were parents of three children: Frank Burt, born Aug. 18, 1858, died Feb. 7, 1860; Frank Turner and Anna T., born Sept. 10, 1867. Mr. Newcomb and his family attend the Congregational Church.

Frank Turner Newcomb was born in Tolland and received his education in the district school and in the Brookdale Academy, finishing in the Rockville high school. At the age of seventeen he began teaching in the 7th and 9th Districts, which were combined, where he was employed during the winter term of 1878. Then having opportunity to enter the Tolland County National Bank, he left the schoolroom to become the teller of the Bank. This was in 1878, and in 1884 he was made cashier of the Tolland County National Bank, and treasurer of the Savings Bank of Tolland, the two banks being conducted in the same building. Two years later the Tolland County National Bank suspended business, and since that time Mr. Newcomb has continued to be the treasurer of the Savings Bank of Tolland, which was given by the Legislature the privilege of doing a checking business, and is the only one in the State doing business on that basis. Mr. Newcomb has been an official of the bank for twenty-four years, acting first as teller and then as treasurer.

In 1887 Mr. Newcomb purchased the old Elijah

Stearns homestead on Tolland street, and here he has since made his home. The farm buildings and the family residence have been greatly improved, and the acreage increased by purchase, until now Mr. Newcomb owns 293 acres, having at his first purchase only thirty acres, but in 1902 he purchased all the real estate in Tolland formerly owned by Charles Underwood. He started a creamery in the fall of 1898, in connection with his farm, keeping about forty cows and shipping his produce to the Vernon creamery. On his farm is transacted a general farming business of considerable magnitude, and it is said that he raises more corn than any two other men in Tolland; he has the largest herd in this section of the county, having in addition to the cows above mentioned about thirty-five head of other stock. With his family he attends the Congregational Church in Tolland.

Politically Mr. Newcomb is a Democrat, and devoted to Jeffersonian principles as enunciated by that great leader. In 1884 he was appointed a notary public by Thomas M. Waller, Governor of the State. He was appointed county treasurer in 1887 by a board of Republican commissioners and has been re-appointed each time by a like board, with an exception of the year 1895, when the board was Democratic, and he is still holding that position. The same year he was appointed town clerk and treasurer to fill an unexpired term, and he has been elected to that position continuously since that time. He has also acted as school visitor and has been treasurer of the school deposit fund since 1888. He was appointed postmaster of Tolland by President Cleveland, but resigned after a three years' term on account of pressure of private business. In 1886 and 1887 he represented the town in the State Legislature, where he served on the committee on Banking. Mr. Newcomb has been chairman of the Democratic town committee since he was twenty-two years of age, or since 1883.

On Jan. 27, 1886, Mr. Newcomb was married to Addie L. Millard, a daughter of Milo and Lucy A. (Chapman) Millard, of Mansfield, Conn. They are the parents of the following children: Harry Arthur, born Dec. 8, 1886; Philip Trumbull, born July 3, 1888; Pauline Louise, born May 3, 1891; and Lilla Adelaide, born Nov. 1, 1897.

Mr. Newcomb has been one of the most successful men of Tolland of later years, and he is in every sense self-made.

NATHANIEL SELBY CHILD. One of the prominent residents of Windham county, Conn., is Nathaniel S. Child, who was born March 5, 1833, in East Woodstock, near which place he still makes his home.

Deacon William Child, father of Nathaniel S., was born in Woodstock, Sept. 24, 1786, and there died April 10, 1872. He was thrice married; first Jan. 23, 1812, to Sally Lyon; she was born July 19, 1787, and died April 4, 1816, the mother of one child

Samuel Moore, who was born Aug. 1, 1815, in Woodstock, was a farmer by calling, married Jan. 29, 1840, Sally Ann Perry, and died June 9, 1868; his widow is now a resident of Woodstock.

The second marriage of Deacon William Child, solemnized Oct. 21, 1818, was to Sally Moore, who was born Dec. 15, 1793, and died June 2, 1821, without issue. The third marriage of the Deacon was to Sophia Selby, Jan. 28, 1829. This lady was born Dec. 22, 1790, in Hartland, Conn., and died in Woodstock, May 10, 1874, the mother of three children, namely: Sarah Moore, who was born March 23, 1853, and married Carlo May, son of Major Asa May, whose biography will be found in the sketch of the May family, on another page; Nathaniel S., whose name heads this article; and William Lyon, who was born in Woodstock, Aug. 15, 1835, served in the war of the Rebellion in Co. F, 18th C. V. I., and resides, unmarried, with his brother Nathaniel S.

Deacon Child followed farming all his life in East Woodstock, near Muddy Brook, and was very successful. In politics he was a Whig, later a Free-Soiler, and finally a Republican. He was elected to the office of selectman, served a term and was then elected to the State Legislature, but, as there was no session of that body that year, he did not serve.

The Deacon was of medium stature, was very sedate and reflective, but of a genial and kindly disposition, was deeply imbued with a sense of his religious obligations and served as a deacon of the East Woodstock Congregational Church for many years.

Nehemiah Child, father of Deacon William Child, and grandfather of Nathaniel S., and of the fifth generation of the American family, was born Feb. 3, 1751, in Woodstock, and died Jan. 2, 1838, in the same town. He first married Elizabeth Shipman, May 24, 1774, to which union was born one child, Charity, in 1775, who married Eleazer Clark, of Belchertown, Mass. The second marriage of Nehemiah took place in 1785 to Mary McClellan, of Woodstock, and this union was crowned with six children, namely: William; Faith, who was born March 10, 1790, and died unmarried Aug. 12, 1824; Lucretia, born April 2, 1791, who married Oct. 1, 1813, Henry Child, son of Capt. Willard Child, of Woodstock, and who died April 3, 1816, leaving one daughter, Eleanor Lucretia, married to Ralph Perry; Mary, born Aug. 8, 1793, who died, unmarried, March 5, 1859; Nathaniel, born Feb. 15, 1796, who died, unmarried, in 1824; Betsey, born in 1800, who also died unmarried in 1848. Nehemiah Child was a farmer all his life and a very successful one, owning large tracts of land; he was also a justice of the peace and a surveyor, and was popularly known as Squire Child.

Nathaniel Child, father of Nehemiah, was born April 13, 1717, and first married, May 28, 1747, Jemima Bugbee, who was born in 1726, and died Oct. 29, 1769. The second marriage of Nathaniel took place Sept. 19, 1776, to Mrs. Eleanor Fox. Nathaniel died June 19, 1791, at the age of seventy-four years, but his widow survived until November, 1822, when she was called away at the advanced age of ninety-four years. Seven children graced the union of Nathaniel and his wife, namely: Darius, who died at the age of eleven years; Nehemiah, grandfather of Nathaniel Selby Child; Alpha, who married Mary May; Spencer, who served in the Revolutionary war and died unmarried in 1784, when twenty-eight years old; Jemima, who was first married to Samuel Jones, and, secondly, to a Mr. Bacon; Charity, who died in infancy; and Cyril, who was born in 1771.

Capt. Benjamin Child, great-great-grandfather of Nathaniel S. Child, was born in Roxbury, Mass., July 19, 1685, and in September, 1712, married Patience Thayer, of Mendon, Mass.; soon afterward he removed to Woodstock, Conn., at that time called New Roxbury. Both joined the church in Woodstock in 1740. Mrs. Child died March 15, 1764, the mother of seven children, viz.: Benjamin, Grace, Nathaniel, Elijah, Patience, Sarah and Moses. [More of this interesting family may be found in the sketch of Deacon Abel Child, on another page.]

Nathaniel S. Child was educated in the district schools of East Woodstock, which he attended until he was eighteen years of age, when he went to work for his father on the home farm and remained with him until he had reached his majority. He then went to Fork Union, Fluvanna Co., Va., and was employed six months in getting out barrel timber, after which he returned to East Woodstock, where he owns 110 acres and keeps from twenty to twenty-five cows, finding a market for his dairy products in Boston. In the same town and in the same vicinity the ancestors of Mr. Child at one time owned about 300 acres.

Mr. Child is a member of the Second Advent Church at East Woodstock, of which his wife is also a devout adherent. In politics he is a Republican and a strong temperance advocate, but has never sought for office.

The first marriage of Mr. Child took place March 20, 1856, to Georgiana Sholes, of Brooklyn, Conn. She was born June 13, 1837, and died in March, 1857, leaving one child, Wilhelmina, who was born Oct. 5, 1857, in East Woodstock, and was married Sept. 1, 1874, to George A. Paine, a farmer and a son of John Paine; Mrs. Wilhelmina Paine was called away Aug. 4, 1875.

The second marriage of Nathaniel S. Child was solemnized Oct. 27, 1858, with Nancy May, who was born March 18, 1823, a daughter of Chester May, of Woodstock. Two sons were born to this union, but both died in infancy. Mr. Child has a very pleasant home in East Woodstock, and is one of the most respected residents of the town, his own merits and time-honored descent fully entitling him to the high regard in which he is held.

HARDIN WILLIAMS. Among the many honored deceased citizens of Woodstock, Windham county, who by an exemplary life contributed to the high state of moral and intellectual excellence obtaining in that community, was the gentleman here mentioned, who departed this life, Feb. 21, 1897.

Mr. Williams was a native of Rhode Island, in which State he was born July 14, 1822. He came to Woodstock when a mere lad with his parents and was all his life engaged in agricultural pursuits, except for a period in early manhood when he worked for some years at the shoemaker's trade. Energetic, full of pluck, of excellent business judgment, he became well-to-do in this world's goods, and was a man whose life left its impress on society for good. Mr. Williams began his family life June 3, 1851, at which time he was joined in marriage to Sarah, daughter of Leonard Cockings, of South Woodstock. The date of her birth was April 22, 1829, that of her death Dec. 27, 1896. Leonard Cockings, with a family of ten children, came from England to America in the late twenties of the Nineteenth century, Mrs. Williams being the only child born in this country. The family settled in South Woodstock, where the father started a small mill for the making of cotton warp. He had learned the weaver's trade in England, and was a skilled workman. The old mill still stands in the village of Sprucedale, which grew up about it. His wife, Mary, died May 27, 1867, he having preceded her Dec. 13, of the previous year.

Politically, Mr. Williams was a supporter of the Republican party; he was in sympathy with the creed of the Universalist Church, with which he affiliated. His children were as follows: Arthur, further spoken of below; John, also treated below; William Roger, born Nov. 7, 1857, a horse dealer in Thompson, Conn., formerly engaged in the manufacture of cotton yarns in South Woodstock, who married Carrie L. Jencks, of Rehoboth; Mary Jessie, born Dec. 3, 1865, who married Nov. 24, 1886, Charles F. McComber, a farmer in South Woodstock, born Dec. 14, 1856, son of Napoleon Bonaparte and Cynthia McComber, and whose children were Mary Bertha, born June 23, 1889, and Charles Elmer, Dec. 21, 1894.

ARTHUR WILLIAMS, the eldest son of the above, is a worthy representative of the family, and is regarded as one of the substantial men of the community. He was born July 19, 1852. He passed the period of childhood and youth engaged in attendance on the district school and in helping his parents at the farm work. At seventeen his father allowed him to leave home and engage for himself, a time in his life which he looks back upon as being the most important. He grew more in the few months following than any previous period. After an experience of several months, he went to the town of New Boston, Conn., where he became employed in the satinet mill. There he mastered the machinery employed in the weaving department and became such an expert that he was made overseer of it during the last of his three years' experience there. A short experience in a cotton mill in Arkwright, R. I., followed, when he was recalled by his former employers and for the succeeding five years held his old position. His health failing him on account of the confinement, he returned to the home farm at Woodstock, where he recuperated for the next two years. His former experience in the cotton mill had given him confidence in his ability to operate a mill of his own, and in April, 1880, in conjunction with his cousin, Hiram Jencks, and his father and brothers, erected a mill, the firm name being Williams, Jencks & Co. The mill was fitted with machinery for the manufacture of cotton yarns and was started in December of 1880. This farm continued the business successfully for a year, when Mr. Williams and his brother William R. purchased the stock, and until 1884 operated the mill under the firm name of A. Williams & Co. In that year the brother sold his interest and since that time Mr. Arthur Williams has continued the business alone. He employs from ten to twelve hands in the manufacture of cotton hosiery yarns. He uses both steam and water power and ships his product to the markets of Pawtucket, Providence, New York and Philadelphia. Mr. Williams runs a grist mill also.

Mr. Williams has the push and energy of his father and is succeeding well in his business. In social and religious life he is very active and helpful. Both he and his wife are active members of the Baptist Church, of which he has been a deacon for a number of years, clerk of the church, superintendent of the Sunday-school, and a member of the different committees and societies. Mr. Williams is a supporter of the principles of the party of Lincoln, but satisfies himself with the deposit of his vote, not caring for political preferment.

Ruth Eliza Olney linked her fortunes to those of Mr. Williams Dec. 1, 1876. She is a daughter of Albert and Ruth (Smith) Olney, of Scituate, R. I., her father being a contracting painter. To her have been born Arthur Olney, July 26, 1878, in Arkwright, now engaged at farming with his father; Albert Henry, May 23, 1880, manager of the mill; John Howard, Oct. 29, 1883, an apprentice in Brown & Sharpe's machine shop, Providence; Edith Evelyn, Nov. 2, 1889, a school girl.

JOHN WILLIAMS. This gentleman, the second son of Hardin Williams, a worthy descendant of a worthy sire, first saw the light Nov. 7, 1854. He grew up on the farm, experiencing the pains and pleasures that come to the average farmer's lad, developing that sturdiness of character which has been his distinguishing characteristic, and applying himself diligently to the acquirement of an education in the district school. He early began operations for himself, and soon took rank as one of the most successful agriculturists in the county. Until 1902 he farmed the homestead and in the spring of that year purchased the Henry K. Saffold farm of over 300 acres in West Woodstock. Other lands in the vicinity give him a holding of about 450 acres, making him one of the most extensive farmers in the county. He himself resides on a highly cultivated farm at South Woodstock, leaving the cultivation of his last purchase to his two sons, Charles H. and Clarence N.

John Williams is a man who commands the respect of his community by reason of his integrity and uprightness of character. He supports the policies of the Republican party and is a member of the Baptist Church. He married Nellie Maria Davis, who is the mother of Charles H., born June 4, 1878, a farmer; J. Everett, July 17, 1879, a farmer; Clarence N., Feb. 5, 1884, a farmer; Frederick W., April 3, 1886, a farmer; and Eleanor Lottie, Aug. 11, 1898.

A brief glance at the early history will serve to round out this sketch of a family whose record is altogether honorable and worthy. The grandfather of the older members of the present family was Arthur Williams, born 1779 in Rhode Island. He settled on a farm in South Woodstock and married Diedamia Hawkins, a native of Woodstock, born 1778. She died in 1864, and was the mother of Christopher H., who was born 1816, and died a bachelor in August, 1851; Robert, March 9, 1818, married to Almira Weaver, of Woodstock, who died May 14, 1875, her husband, Feb. 25, 1897; Hardin, father of our subject, a twin with Sarah, who married Samuel Walls of Woodstock, now a merchant of Norwich, Conn.; Jane, the youngest, who married Albert Pollard, of Mystic, Connecticut.

WILLIAM BENTON MARTIN. The Martin family is an old and prominent one in New England, and being allied by marriage with other honorable families, many of its descendants, direct and indirect, have been distinguished persons through many States of the Union, one of the number being no less a personage than Martin Van Buren, who became President of the United States.

From the early records of the Martin family we find that they settled in Massachusetts, but later removed to Connecticut. Another branch were the earliest settlers in Great Barrington, Mass. The Connecticut Martins located near Hampton, in which vicinity this branch of the family lived until 1815, when Elisha Martin, grandfather of William B., moved to the town of Tolland. His great-grandfather, Ebenezer Martin, born in 1696, died July 13, 1775. On Oct. 4, 1721, he married (first) Mary Millband, by whom he had two children: John, born May 24, 1725; and Mary, born July 11, 1726. After the mother's death the father married, on April 1, 1729, Jerusha Durkee. The children of this union were: Joseph, born March 29, 1730, is mentioned below. Ebenezer, born March 31, 1732, was a clergyman. Jerusha, born Jan. 9, 1734, married Joseph Utley. William, born March 11, 1736, married Naomi Upham, and died April 19, 1811. Elizabeth, born Aug. 1, 1738, married Ebenezer Griffin. Amasa was born Oct. 7, 1740. George, born March 14, 1742, married Dorothy Brown, and died July 6, 1806; he was a cooper, and removed to Vermont. Benjamin, born July 28, 1745, married Lucy Clark; Lucy, born May 3, 1747, married Nathaniel Flint.

The Durkee family, to which Mrs. Jerusha (Durkee) Martin belonged, were among the first settlers of Windham (now Hampton), Conn., locating there in 1708-09. The branch under consideration are descended from William, John and Jemima Durkee, who were among the seventeen incorporators of the Church in that town June 5, 1723. William Durkee and his wife, Rebecca (Gould), came from Ipswich, Mass., where they were married Jan. 13, 1704. Their family comprised ten children: Martha, Jerusha (wife of Ebenezer Martin), William, Huldah, Sarah, Henry, Hannah, Jonathan, Rebecca and Lucy. Rebecca (Gould) Durkee came from England to America when but twelve years old.

Joseph Martin, born March 29, 1730, died July 18, 1808. On Oct. 17, 1751, he married Elizabeth Ford, and they had the following children: Joseph, born July 24, 1752, died Dec. 22, 1752; Joseph (2) is mentioned below; Eunice, born Dec. 26, 1756, married Ebenezer Clark, and died May 20, 1833; Nathaniel F., born Oct. 27, 1759, married Jerusha Lincoln; Elizabeth, born Dec. 25, 1761, married Daniel Flint; Amasa, born July 31, 1764, married Ursula Utley; Joshua married Betsey Loomis; and Ebenezer married Susan Scott. The second marriage of Joseph Martin was to Zerviah Daily, a widow, who bore him four children: John, who married Sally Davis; Sybil, married to Elijah Randall; Cynthia; and Orson.

Joseph Martin (2), born May 6, 1754, in 1775 married Abigail Butler, who was born Nov. 12, 1755. Their family of eight children were as follows: Elisha is mentioned below. Elizabeth, born March 28, 1779, lived a life filled with good deeds and died in Chaplin unmarried. Daniel, born April 20, 1781, married Elizabeth Adams, and lived and died in Chaplin, where his sons were shoe manufacturers for a time, later moving to Massachusetts, on Mill river. Asaph, born April 10, 1783, was a farmer, and died in Chaplin, unmarried, his sister "Betsey" keeping house for him. Thomas, born July 15, 1785, married Hannah Moulton; he lived and died in Chaplin, where he at one time ran a mill, though his principal work was farming; he held many offices and served in the Legislature several times; his son became a Superior Court judge. Nabby, born Oct. 23, 1789, first married N. Butts, later Craft Smith, and died in Chaplin. Arabella, born April 30, 1795, married Harry Neff, and died in Norwich, where she had long resided.

W B Martin

Joseph, born Nov. 30, 1800, married Sarah Smith, and died in Chaplin; he was a builder, and at one time lived in New York City. Joseph Martin (2) died Aug. 29, 1828, and his wife died Aug. 21, 1833. He was buried in Chaplin. He was an influential man, a most worthy citizen and a prominent member of the Congregational Church. He served in the Revolutionary army, his son Elisha being born during his absence.

Elisha Martin was born Sept. 17, 1776, and in 1806 married, in Chaplin, Almira Robbins, a native of Hampton, born in September, 1786, daughter of John Robbins, who came to Tolland in his later years. His first wife was Elizabeth Hutchinson, his second Alice Williams. The Hutchinson family came from Scotland and settled in the Wyoming Valley, in Pennsylvania. At the time of the famous Indian massacre, the mother of Elizabeth Hutchinson fled with her children at the approach of the savages. One brother was lame, and an older brother undertook to carry him, but the load was too heavy, and the unfortunate child, being left behind, was tomahawked. The others escaped by crossing the Susquehanna river. This family never returned to the desolated Wyoming Valley, from which the savages have so long been absent, but came East and endeavored to forget the fertile farms from which they had been driven by settling in the peaceful meadows of northeastern Connecticut, where Elizabeth was married to John Robbins, and removed to Lebanon, later to Hampton. Others of the Hutchinson family removed to New Hampshire, and the celebrated musical family of that State came from that branch. One brother of Mrs. Martin graduated from Yale, was a minister, and settled in Vermont.

After marriage Elisha Martin lived in Chaplin until 1815, when he came to Tolland and settled on a farm, a mile west of "the street," bought from "Squire" Fuller. Subsequently he removed to the western part of the town, where he died July, 1860, his wife surviving until Nov. 20, 1882, and reaching the great age of ninety-six. She was a very well-preserved old lady, and well known in the community. Elisha Martin was a man of fine presence, one of the sturdy type of farmers who so well represent the best class of an agricultural section. He was originally a Whig in politics, and later a staunch supporter of the Republican principles, and he was long a member of the Congregational Church. The family reared by this worthy man was as follows: Elisha H. is mentioned below. Betsey Almira, born Dec. 31, 1808, married Charles Chapman, of Tolland, and died in Rockville, May 16, 1889. Lucien W., born April 13, 1811, married Mary E. Champlin, of Lebanon, daughter of John Champlin (whose wife was a sister of Dr. Charles Sweet, the noted bone-setter, of Lebanon), and died in 1901, in Tolland. John Harman, born Dec. 23, 1812, was a wagon-maker; he married Louissa Porter, and he died in Rockville, Dec. 15, 1848, leaving one daughter, Louissa, who married Frederick Smith, and lives in Elyria, Ohio. Daniel, born Feb. 19, 1815, married Harriet Jane Bidwell, of East Hartford, who died Jan. 11, 1900, in Rockville, where he died June 30, 1902. Nancy Robbins married Jesse Willis, and died in Tolland. A twin of Nancy R. died in infancy. Abigail Butler, born Sept. 23, 1820, resides in Rockville. Emily Maria, born April 10, 1827, died unmarried Jan. 27, 1856.

Elisha Hutchinson Martin, father of our subject, was born March 11, 1807, in Chaplin, Conn., and came thence to Tolland when but a boy of eight years, his parents locating on a farm west of Tolland street; later the family removed to a place near the sand hill, in the vicinity of Rockville, and there Elisha H. Martin grew to maturity. On Jan. 15, 1832, in Tolland, he was married to Lydia Minerva Ladd, of Tolland, who was born March 14, 1809, near the head of Snipsic, in the northwestern part of the town of Tolland, a daughter of Jonathan Ladd.

The Ladd family is one of the oldest in Tolland. Jonathan Ladd, the first one to locate there, came from Norwich to Tolland, and on April 6, 1720, he was admitted as an inhabitant. He settled on what is known as Grant's Hill, and later removed to the northwestern part of the town, where he continued to live ever afterward. On Dec. 23, 1713, in Norwich, he married Susannah Kingsbury, and they reared a family of ten children—five sons and five daughters. The third child and second son, Jonathan, was born in 1718, and married Anna Tyler, who died Aug. 19, 1803, aged seventy-seven years. She was a daughter of John Tyler, who came from Boxford, Mass., to Tolland, and on Jan. 27, 1719, was admitted as a citizen there; he settled near the Willimantic river in Tolland. Jonathan Ladd died Aug. 27, 1810, in his ninety-third year. His family numbered eight children, five sons and three daughters, and the second child and youngest son, Jonathan, born in 1764, was the grandfather of Lydia Minerva Ladd.

To Elisha H. and Lydia M. (Ladd) Martin came children as follows: Amanda Almira, born July 30, 1834, died Oct. 25, 1875, in East Long Meadow, Mass., unmarried. Sarah Ladd, born Dec. 7, 1839, died Aug. 18, 1841. Maria Celia, born April 20, 1843, was married Dec. 19, 1870, to Henry A. Eaton, now deceased, and she makes her home in Rockville. Elisha Johnson, mentioned elsewhere, was born Oct. 12, 1845. Sarah Jane, born Aug. 7, 1847, was married Aug. 24, 1872, to Rufus A. Russell, of Springfield, where she lives. William Benton, born Aug. 25, 1853, is mentioned below. Elisha H. Martin went to housekeeping on what was later known as the Lovett farm, in Tolland, owning it at one time, and later selling it to his father. He then built a home on the shore of Snipsic lake in Tolland, where he lived until 1870, with the exception of three years from 1858 to 1861, when he did teaming (oxen being used almost exclusively for such labor) in Rockville, and made his home there. During the period mentioned he carried on the farm in addition to his other business. In the spring of 1870 he sold the farm and removed to his father's homestead, near Sand Hill, where he died Oct. 3, 1870, and he is buried in Grove Hill cemetery, Rockville. His wife survived until Aug. 2, 1885, when her death occurred in Tolland, on an adjoining farm, and she was buried by her husband. Both were consistent members of the second Congregational church of Rockville. During the slavery troubles Mr. Martin was an Abolitionist, and later became a staunch Republican.

William Benton Martin was born Aug. 25, 1853. He commenced attending school at the "White school house" in Tolland, his first teacher being Miss Abi Brown. During the three years the family resided in Rockville, he went to school in that place and also after their return to Tolland. In the fall of 1870 he entered the New Britain Normal school, but his father's death in that year caused his withdrawal, as family duties pressed upon him. During that winter he worked as a farm hand, and in the spring of 1871 having decided to learn the carpenter's trade, came to Rockville. After a short term, however, he gave it up, and engaged with R. S. Lewis in the business of laying concrete sidewalks, later doing the same work in Manchester, Conn., and Syracuse, N. Y. In the fall of 1871 he returned to Rockville, and again worked for Mr. Lewis in East Hartford, Wethersfield and other places. During the following winter he was employed in the freight house at Rockville, and in 1872 went to New Jersey with his brother Elisha J., laying concrete walks. Fever and ague attacked him and compelled his return to Connecticut, and when he recovered he engaged in work on a farm at Long Meadow, Mass., in company with R. A. Russell. On first going there he received but $12 per month, but by the time he left his wages had been increased to $26—extraordinary at that time. Nelson Lombard then employed our subject as a teamster, and in time Mr. Martin became the owner of a team of horses and wagon, and worked on his own account, this being his first real business venture.

In the spring of 1876 Mr. Martin left Long Meadow, as business in the stone quarry for which he had hauled stone was very dull, and he found employment in teaming on the railroad then building between Melrose and Rockville. In the fall of 1876 he began a general teaming business in Rockville, which was the beginning of his successful career there. Buying a tract of timber in Tolland, he hauled wood from it when other business was dull, and sawed it by hand with a buck-saw. Some years later from this beginning was developed a large business, and our subject bought out Harvey King. At this time his equipment for sawing was horse power; later steam was introduced and in 1883 Mr. Martin added coal to his other lines, at first delivering direct from the cars, and later hiring the Ryan coal yard on Spring street. In 1888, in order to combine his business, which was increasing, he bought the lot on Vernon avenue, where his present establishment is located. It was pasture land at that time, and it took much planning and expense to carry out all his designs. In 1890 his wood yard, which from the beginning had been located at Ellington avenue and Prospect street, was removed thither, all the business being now carried on at the one point. In January, 1899, he bought out the coal business of W. E. Payne and combined it with his own, retaining the Payne yards for storage. Instead of the one team of horses, which sufficed in 1876, he now requires about twenty. For fifteen years he has added fertilizers to his other lines. For over ten years he has handled agricultural implements. About 1887 Mr. Martin began the business of laying and quarrying stone, which he has carried on extensively ever since, having a quarry at Ellington; he has made a specialty of building heavy stone walls, though he does all kinds of general stone work, commanding the greater part of the business in his line around Rockville. Mr. Martin has the best facilities in that city for the moving of furniture and all kinds of trucking work. He is an extensive owner of real estate.

Mr. Martin was married April 12, 1882, in Tolland, to Miss Emma N. Willis, a native of Tolland, daughter of Jesse and Nancy (Martin) Willis; she died July 22, 1883, and was buried in Grove Hill cemetery. On Sept. 30, 1885, Mr. Martin married, in Rockville, Miss Theodora Wilcox, a native of Coventry, Conn., born July 10, 1866, daughter of Calvin G. and Phoebe (Brown) Wilcox. The parents of Mrs. Martin came from Rhode Island, and are now residents of Merrow, Conn. Before marriage Mrs. Martin taught school in Andover and Tolland, Conn., a term at each place. Her family is an old one, and by marriage is connected with many other prominent families of New England. Phoebe Brown, her mother, was a school teacher of considerable experience, and taught in Rhode Island. Mrs. Martin is a lady of prominence in Rockville, and is eligible to membership in the D. A. R. She is very active in the work of the Union Congregational Church and its Ladies' Aid Society, and belongs to the Daughters of Rebekah and the Golden Cross, of Rockville. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin: Maud Ethel, July 14, 1886; Gertrude Esther, Sept. 27, 1888; and Lester Wilcox, June 13, 1892. Formerly Mr. Martin was a Republican, but since 1886 he has declared for the Prohibition party, in which he is conscientiously interested. Socially he is connected with Rising Star Lodge, No. 49, I. O. O. F., of Rockville, with the Daughters of Rebekah and the Golden Cross. Commercially he is one of the sound and substantial men of the city. It is enough to say of his remarkable business ability that he has been the leader in every line he has taken up, and is a man of no little general information and natural intelligence. He has been one of the progressive men of the city, and is regarded as among its best representatives.

SILAS B. COOLEY. Among the prominent farmers residing in the northeast part of the town of Somers, Tolland county, near the Massachusetts State line, is Silas B. Cooley, who can trace his ancestry back to (I) Earl Cooley, who came to America from Denmark, whither he had gone from England because of the persecution that he and others were compelled to undergo on account of their religious belief. An earl in England, by title, he was known by that name in America. The "Blue Book" of England states that the Cooley family was very old and influential.

(II) Benjamin Cooley appears to have been one of the first settlers in that part of Springfield called Long Meadow, and there he married his wife, Sarah, and both died about 1684.

(III) Eliakim Cooley, the third child of Benjamin, was born in 1648, married Hannah Tibbals in 1679, had three children, and both died in 1711.

(IV) Eliakim Cooley (2), son of Eliakim, was born in 1681, married Griswold Beckwith, of Lyme, Conn., in 1706; she died in 1754, and he in 1758; they had eleven children.

(V) Capt. Luke Cooley, son of the above, was born in 1718, and in 1739 married Elizabeth Colton, a daughter of Thomas Colton, of Long Meadow, Mass. Capt. Cooley died Jan. 1, 1777, and his wife Aug. 8 of the same year. The house erected by Capt. Luke Cooley stood about forty rods east of the old Cooley homestead, now standing in North Somers. The children of these worthy ancestors were: Solomon; Lois, who married Nathan Sikes, of Monson; Eunice, who married John Billings, of Somers; Joanna, who married Levi Brace; Nathan, who lived in Somers; Elizabeth, who died young; Lovice, who married Ensign John Russell, of Somers; Lucy, who married Stephen Jones; Luke; and Dinah, who married Aaron Howard.

(VI) Luke Cooley, son of Capt. Luke, was born about 1753, in the house erected by his father. When a young man, in 1772, he built the old Cooley homestead, now standing in North Somers, very near the Massachusetts State line, and was a large land owner and prominent man. He died Aug. 16, 1801. His first wife was named Phebe; she died April 27, 1783, the mother of three children, Lula, Luke and Weston. He married Margaret Marsh, a daughter of Rev. Jonathan Marsh, of New Hartford, Conn., for his second wife. She died Dec. 26, 1819, aged sixty-seven, and is buried in Greenwich, Mass. Two children were born to the second marriage: Jonathan Marsh, the grandfather of our subject; and Harriet, who married John Warren, and lived in Boston, where she died, leaving two children, Franklin, who married his cousin, Margaret M. Cooley, and Marietta Belle.

(VII) Jonathan Marsh Cooley was born Aug. 9, 1789, in the family homestead, and remained on the home farm all his life, becoming a man of ample means and large landed possessions. His death occurred Oct. 11, 1857. July 24, 1808, he married Naomi Hills, who was born Sept. 3, 1792, a daughter of Jacob and Naomi Hills, the former of whom was born Dec. 25, 1765, and died Sept. 12, 1848, while his wife was born in 1770 and died April 11, 1848. Jonathan M. Cooley was "five major" in the local militia for many years. Since his death the old five has been preserved by the family and is owned and cherished by his grandson, Silas B. Cooley. The children born to Jonathan M. Cooley and his wife were: Jonathan Luke, born Jan. 22, 1809; Caius Marius, born Sept. 25, 1811, who married Louise Bodfish, June 6, 1838, was a farmer by occupation, and lived near Springfield, Mass., where he died Aug. 7, 1846, leaving three sons; Naomi Elvira, born Oct. 27, 1812, who married Frederick Kibbe, and became the mother of A. F. Kibbe, of Somers; Harriet Semina, born March 23, 1815, who married Benjamin F. Parsons, a carpenter, and died in Chicopee, Mass., April 30, 1848, leaving two children; Erasmus, born Oct. 15, 1817, who married (first) Rachel Bartlett, and (second) Abbie C. Hitchcock, and by the latter union had one daughter; Lucien U., born Oct. 14, 1819, who married (first) Aug. 22, 1850, Jemima Hubbard, who bore him two children, second, Marilla Church, and third, April 29, 1868, Margaret Weppert, and who died March 24, 1886; Margaret M., born Jan. 21, 1822, who married Franklin C. Warren, of Boston, and had four children; Louisa Maria, born June 14, 1824, who married Henry S. Herrick, and died in Chicopee, Mass., June 14, 1851; Mary Almena, born Oct. 7, 1826, who married James A. Orcutt, and died in Defiance, Ohio, July 12, 1876, the mother of one daughter; Jane Sabin, born Jan. 4, 1829, who married first Ashman R. Pease, and had three children, and second, Dennis Pease, and lives in Enfield, Conn.; Eliza Sophia, born Feb. 14, 1831, married to Hosea Record, who died in Hampden, Mass., May 14, 1855, leaving one child; and Eunice Ursula, born June 19, 1834, who married Warren Hubbard, and died in Ludlow, Mass., Dec. 14, 1857, leaving one child.

(VIII) Jonathan Luke Cooley was born in North Somers, where his early life was spent. For several years when a young man he worked on the home farm and later bought a farm near (now inside) the city limits of Springfield, Mass.; there he continued farming for some six years, when he disposed of it and removed to Ludlow, Mass. There he bought another farm which he continued to operate for about nine years, and later lived on rented farms in Wilbraham and Hampden. In 1855 he bought of Deacon David Cady a farm in the northeast part of Somers, the one now occupied by our subject, where he followed farming for the rest of his life, dying there Nov. 25, 1862; he was buried in Center cemetery at Somers. His death was caused by an accident, his team running away and throwing him to the ground. He was an upright and honorable man, and his untimely death was a great loss to his community. His principles in politics coincided with those of the Democratic party, but he never sought office.

On Jan. 29, 1835, Mr. Cooley was married by Rev. R. R. Dennis, to Sarah S. Kibbe, who was born Sept. 18, 1815, and died Feb. 26, 1887. She was a native of Somers, a daughter of Silas and Sally (Watrous) Kibbe, and a granddaughter of Daniel Kibbe, the Revolutionary soldier. The children of this marriage were: Silas B., born March 1, 1836; Irene S., born Jan. 17, 1838, who was married March 12, 1874, to John Watson Prentice, a carpenter residing in Somers, and who died March 30, 1894; Loretta N., born July 21, 1839, who married March 25, 1864, to Merrick Langdon, a carpenter, lived in Springfield, Mass., and died April 18, 1890; Redelia A., born Sept. 1, 1841, the wife of Merritt A. Davis, of Somers; Luvann E., born July 30, 1844, who was married April 28, 1864, to Cyrus Kibbe, a carpenter, and resided in Springfield, until her death, Oct. 10, 1885; Rocelia A., born July 3, 1846, who was married Aug. 19, 1869, to Frank Pease, a farmer, and who died in Stafford, Conn., March 20, 1883; and Dallas L., born July 7, 1849, who died Oct. 1, 1864.

(IX) Silas B. Cooley was born in Springfield, Mass., and attended the common schools of Ludlow, North Wilbraham and Hampden, Mass. He was nineteen years old when his parents moved to Somers, and he there engaged in farm work, a part of the time for the community of Enfield Shakers, and he also worked in a brick yard. At the age of twenty-four, he went to Pennsylvania as agent for the Hovey Silk Company, of Mansfield, Conn., and with a team, he peddled sewing silk, traveling through the coal regions, for two years following this business very successfully. After his return to his home he was employed for a few months at the U. S. Armory at Springfield, when his father died and he returned home. In the course of time Mr. Cooley bought the interests of the other heirs in the estate, has improved and added to the property and now has a farm of 125 acres, where he is prospering in general farming and dairying.

On Dec. 15, 1864, Mr. Cooley was married to Jane P. Hunt, of Somers, who was born in Monson, Mass., March 24, 1842, a daughter of Simon S. and Persis (Chaffee) Hunt and a sister of Deacon Comfort C. Hunt. Mrs. Cooley died Aug. 13, 1882. Three children were born of this union: (1) Mattie J., born Feb. 26, 1866, attended the district schools and the Somers high school, and taught school for several years in Stafford and Somers; she married Everett Fletcher, a farmer in Stafford, and their children are Edna, Eunice, Helen, Celia, Eva and Marjorie. (2) Burtie D., born Jan. 28, 1868, was educated in the district schools and the Somers high school and chose farming for his life work; he is associated with his brother-in-law, Everett Fletcher, and they together own the farm known as the "Alden Davis" homestead, of about 110 acres, where they carry on general farming. They have also bought additional timber land. Mr. Cooley politically is a Republican. (3) Benton S., born Nov. 20, 1876, was also educated in the district schools and the Somers high school; he is a Republican politically and is an active member of the Somers Grange. On Sept. 11, 1884, Silas B. Cooley married Elizabeth Luella Jones, of Ludlow, who was born Oct. 24, 1850, a daughter of Stephen Cooley and Mary (Hubbard) Jones. Mr. Cooley is very liberal in politics, and votes as his judgment dictates but takes a great interest in local affairs, and has held the office of selectman of Somers for two years; he is also a member of the board of relief, and is assessor. He belongs to Somers Grange. Mr. Cooley was one of the organizers and has been director since the second year of its existence of the Somers creamery. Religiously he is an attendant and liberal supporter of the Somers Congregational Church. His success in life is the result of honest, persistent effort in the line of honorable and manly dealing.

Stephen Cooley Jones, father of Mrs. Cooley, was born in Ludlow, a son of Stephen and Cathrin (Bliss) Jones, farming people of that town. He passed his life there, and died in July, 1896, in his seventy-seventh year, on the farm where he was born. His wife, Mary Hubbard, was the daughter of Warren Hubbard of Ludlow, who was a farmer who passed his life in his native town. She died April 5, 1902, in her eighty-first year. Both were members of the Methodist Church in Ludlow. They had five children born to them: (1) Amanda married Danford Sikes, of Ludlow. (2) Albert E., lives in St. Paul, Minn., where he is in the meat business. He married (first) Ida Meeder, of Springfield, Mass., and had two children, Albert and Grace Lilian. He married (second) Miss E. Lillian Gove, of St. Paul, Minn., and by this marriage he has three children: Frederick Harold, Myrtie and Ruth. (3) Elizabeth Luella is Mrs. Silas B. Cooley. (4) Ida married Frank Pease, of Monson, a farmer of that town, and they have one child, Lillian. (5) William M., youngest child of Stephen C. Jones, Jr., resides in Springfield, Mass., where he is in the meat business. He married Flora Alden, of Ludlow, Mass., and has two children, Bessie and Harry.

MOSES BUTLER BULL, whose death from pneumonia occurred in Rockville, Tolland county, Jan. 8, 1872, at the age of seventy-six, was extensively and favorably known in that region, having been a resident of Vernon for about twenty years, and of Tolland county for more than fifty years. He was born in Hartford, and was a son of Thomas Bull, Esq., of that city. Thomas Bull was one of a family of ten brothers residing in Hartford for many years in the latter part of the eighteenth and the first part of the nineteenth century, the family name being remembered by many old people now in Hartford, as a synonym of respectability and high culture. Moses Bull removed to Ellington in 1819, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and remained there until he went to Rockville, soon after 1850. Soon after becoming a citizen of that town he was unanimously elected to the office of town clerk, treasurer and registrar, which positions he held up to the time of his death, his name always being, by common consent, upon the ballots of all parties. The duties of these offices he performed always with marked promptness, fidelity and accuracy, with the entire approbation of his fellow townsmen.

Mr. Bull literally died "in the harness," being engaged in the duties of his position up to the very moment of attack by the disease which terminated his life. For the last two years Mr. Bull had been mostly confined to his home and office by the infirmities of age, but under all circumstances he was always found cheerful and accommodating. Indeed, his fidelity, accuracy and politeness were household words with all who intimately knew him, and it was conceded that in his death the town lost an esteemed citizen and a faithful servant, whose place could not easily be filled. His remains were interred at Ellington.

On Feb. 28, 1819, Moses B. Bull was married to Sarah Symonds, of Manchester, Conn., and their children were: Sarah B., who died aged eighteen; Rebecca Lyman, who died May 30, 1872, aged fifty-one, the wife of John A. Hughes; Elizabeth, who married Chester Chapman, and died Nov. 22, 1888, at the age of sixty-four; Clarissa Symonds, who died May 2, 1857, aged thirty-seven, the wife of Frederick W. Carpenter; Mary Frances, wife of Ambrose Clark, deceased Feb. 17, 1872, aged forty-five years; Henry S. Mrs. Bull died Jan. 8, 1870, but a few hours less than two years before her husband's death.

GILBERT FAMILY. Samuel Gilbert came from Massachusetts to Hebron in the early settlement of Hebron, and lived and died in a house near Bliss's sawmill. He is named among the proprietors to whom patents were issued on the organization of the town of Colchester in 1698 and 1703. Samuel Gilbert, Jr., his son, built the house which stands one mile east of Gilead, where the road strikes the Bolton road. There his family were born and reared, and the place long bore the name of the Gilbert homestead. Samuel Gilbert, Jr., who was born in 1711 and died in 1774, had two wives, Elizabeth, the mother of Samuel and Elizabeth; and Abigail (the daughter of Samuel Rowley), whose children were: Thomas; Anna; John; Abigail; Sylvester, who was a distinguished member of the legal profession, and a member of the early judiciary of the State; and Gardner.

Samuel Gilbert, the eldest son of Samuel, Jr., born June 3, 1734, was better known as Col. Samuel Gilbert. His children by his first wife, Lydia Post, were: Lydia, who married Ralph Mack; Samuel Augustus, who died young; George Oliver, who died in Wisconsin. Col. Samuel Gilbert was married the second time, Sept. 3, 1775, to Deborah Champion, of Colchester, a sister of Gen. Henry Champion. Their children were: Samuel Augustus (2); Elizabeth; Sarah, who died young; Payton Randolph; John Henry; Sarah (2); Abby Maria; and Charles Champion.

Col. Samuel Gilbert was the first chief justice of the Tolland county court. In stature he was a man of majestic proportions, standing over six feet in height, and carrying his weight with much dignity and self-possession. His manners were polished and courtly, and he bore himself with the ease and grace of the old school gentleman. For many years he was connected with the militia service, and was colonel of a regiment when military titles were regarded as some evidence of the worth and character of a man. As a lawyer he had little preparation for a legal career, but he studied and prepared himself by wide reading and close observation for a very successful career. Without the advantage of college training, his style of address was singularly lucid and intelligent, and his well known integrity, honesty and devotion to the right, gave weight and force to his appeals. With candid appearance and inspiring fairness he could reduce every proposition to its primal elements, and if there was wrong in it, he could make the jury see it so clearly that no sophistry could blind them to the full force of what he was putting before them. For twenty-one years Col. Gilbert was retained on the bench of Tolland county. For twenty sessions he represented the town of Hebron in the General Assembly.

The veneration and respect that Judge Gilbert and his wife always showed each other was remarkable, and worthy of universal imitation. It is a tradition that Judge Gilbert never permitted himself to wear his hat in the house; and that she always rose when he entered the room, and recognized him by a modest courtesy, thus preserving to the last the same dignified bearing that marked their first acquaintance. In private and personal life Mr. Gilbert was very much beloved by his family and friends, and was most esteemed by those who knew him best. He died in that part of Hebron which was called Gilead Society, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. He left a large estate, which was distributed among four sons and three daughters. One of his sons, George O., was a sheriff of Tolland county.

Payton Randolph Gilbert, a son of Col. Gilbert, was born in Hebron, Sept. 12, 1784, and was married Sept. 12, 1806, to Anna Porter. Their children were: Edwin Randolph, who died in Wallingford, Conn., where he was pastor of a Congregational Church for forty-two years; Josiah Champion, a resident of Hebron, who was sent to the General Assembly in 1849 and 1853; Melissa Ann, widow of John M. Hall, living in Hartford; Abby Maria, who died at the age of eighteen years; Charles Augustus, who died at Mobile, Ala.; Ralph Porter; Samuel E., who located at Evansville, Ind.; and Sarah T., who died at the age of twenty years.

Ralph Porter Gilbert was born in Hebron, Aug. 30, 1819, and was married Sept. 14, 1842, to Mary L. Hutchinson, a daughter of John Bissell Hutchinson. Mrs. Mary L. Gilbert was born Sept. 23, 1819, and died Dec. 18, 1861. Mr. Gilbert died May 16, 1891. For thirty years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school at Gilead. Mr. Gilbert was a member of the House in 1880, and a Senator in 1882 and 1883; in 1884 he was a delegate to the national Republican convention, and was for years an influential and leading citizen of the community. Owning a large and fertile farm, he cultivated it thoroughly, and was known as a successful farmer.

Ralph Porter Gilbert and his wife were the parents of the following family: Anna Lauretta, born May 11, 1844, the widow of Emerson W. Moore; John Randolph, born June 13, 1849, who resides in Gilead, Conn.; Mary Hutchinson, born Dec. 18, 1855, who died, unmarried, June 22, 1877.

EMERSON W. MOORE was a son of William and Florilla Maria (Talcott) Moore, and had one brother and two sisters who grew up; Charles D., who is a resident of Westfield, Mass.; Flora, who died young; Nellie, wife of William F. Risley, of Manchester, Conn. Mr. Moore was born at Rainbow, Conn., Aug. 9, 1844, where he received his early education, which was supplemented by study at Wilbraham Academy and at the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, Conn. His early years were marked by the development of unusual business ability, and by the possession of a personal character that commanded the confidence of his neighbors. Engaging in a mercantile career at Vernon, in 1868, when only twenty-four years old, he represented his town in the General Assembly, where he served on the committee on Finance. Three years later he was appointed a clerk in the office of the comptroller. In 1877 he rose to the position of chief clerk, and served in that capacity until his death, Dec. 24, 1897. His first appointment was secured very largely through the instrumentality of Judge Cowell, of Hartford, but his own character and ability retained him in the office, and pushed him forward until he came into charge of the department. His information on all matters relating to his work was of wide range, and gave his work vast value.

Mr. Moore was married June 5, 1873, to Ellen

Frances, a daughter of Walter M. and Almera (Kennedy) McKee, by whom he had the following children: Florence Almera, born May 25, 1875; William Emerson, born Aug. 25, 1877, who died June 4, 1892; Anne Maria, born Nov. 14, 1883. Mrs. Moore, who was born May 3, 1843, died Dec. 4, 1883. Mr. Moore was married Jan. 13, 1886, to Anna Lauretta Gilbert, who was born in Gilead Society, town of Hebron.

Mr. Moore joined the Talcottville Congregational Church soon after its organization, and took an active part in its work, his fine character and lofty nature giving him much influence in the society. At different times he served as assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school, worked on various church committees, and taught a class in the Sunday-school for many years. He was a man of marked Christian character and delightful personal traits, much respected by all who knew him. At his funeral many tokens of esteem and love were offered, among them being a large floral offering, representing the coat of arms of Connecticut, bearing the letters, "From the State of Ct., 1871-1897." Another was a broken column of roses bearing the words, "From the Departments of the State of Ct." One cross was from the employees of the comptroller. The State Capitol was closed on the day of his funeral. He was buried at Mt. Hope cemetery at Talcottville.

ALEXANDER MCKINSTRY is a well known and substantial farmer, who resides in the town of Ellington, Tolland county, where the name has long been a familiar one to the people of that region. The last representatives of the name in the town, he and his family have led quiet and industrious lives, honorable and upright in their character, and command the fullest respect of the community in which their years have passed.

Rodger McKinstry left Scotland, where he was born in the vicinity of Edinburgh, and immigrated to Ireland about 1669. The coast of Scotland is within twenty miles of County Antrim, Ireland, and across this narrow passage for many years flowed a tide of Scotch brains, character and industry, which quite changed the population of the North of Ireland, making what is called the Scotch-Irish type, of which the McKinstry family is a notable representative. The name McKinstry is a composite, Mc means "son of," Kin, the "head or chief man," and strea, or straeth, "the valley," the whole being "the son of the chief man of the valley."

John McKinstry, the first of the name who came to America, was born in Brode Parish, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1677, and was the son of Rodger McKinstry, noted above, who was married to Mary Wilson. He was graduated as a Master of Arts from the University of Edinburgh in 1712, and joined a company of emigrants from the north of Ireland in the summer of 1718, who were bound for Boston, where they arrived Aug. 4, 1718. John Mc

Kinstry located in Worcester, and his services were very soon sought by the settlers of the new town of Sutton as the pastor of the church just organized. He was to serve three months, for which he was to receive a salary of fifteen pounds. After the expiration of that period he was settled for a year, and in 1720 he was duly installed according to the Congregational usage of the times. For eight years Mr. McKinstry was the pastor of this church, and during this time 44 members were added to the organization. Leaving Sutton with the intention of joining his denominational brethren in New York, his journey was broken at East Windsor, Conn., by the illness of his wife. The parish in what is now Ellington was without a pastor, and Mr. McKinstry was requested to supply the pulpit. Doing so, the impression was so pleasant that he became the permanent minister of that organization in 1730. Purchasing a small tract of land, he subsequently added to it an additional thirty acres, and remained in charge of the church until his death, which occurred on Sunday, Jan. 20, 1754. Tradition speaks of him as a gentleman of ability, high character and unwavering integrity, qualities which have largely descended to his descendants. His ashes rest in the cemetery of Ellington, with those of his wife and several of his children, and over their graves a handsome granite monument was erected in 1859 by a grandson, William McKinstry, of Middletown, Connecticut.

John McKinstry, the minister, and Elizabeth Fairfield, of Wenham, Mass., were married in Sutton. She was born in 1701, and died Oct. 25, 1782, having become the mother of seven children. (1) John, born in Sutton, Mass., in 1723, was a graduate of Yale in 1746, where he was a classmate and an intimate associate with Ezra Stiles, afterwards president of Yale. John McKinstry followed in his father's steps, was installed pastor of the Second Church at Springfield, Mass., where he died in 1813. (2) Mary, born in 1726, married David Ellsworth, and died in 1801. Her husband died in 1803. (3) Alexander, born May 16, 1729, was the great-grandfather of Alexander McKinstry. (4) William, born in 1732, was married to Priscilla, the daughter of Rev. Nathaniel Leonard, and after her death, to Priscilla Rogers. He was a successful physician of Taunton. (5) Paul was born in 1734. (6) Elizabeth, born in 1736, was murdered by an ignorant slave who was very fond of her, but had been led to believe he could secure his freedom by killing some person. (7) Abigail, born in 1739, died in 1814, unmarried.

Alexander McKinstry, the great-grandfather of Alexander, of Ellington, was born in what is now Ellington, and followed farming all his life. He resided on the farm now occupied by his great-grandson, where he died in 1759. Sarah Lee, his wife, died in 1758. Their two oldest children died in infancy, and their third child, Ezekiel, was the grandfather of Alexander McKinstry. Born in 1753 in the town of Ellington he remained on the family homestead until his death in 1803. He was a successful farmer, and a highly respected man. Rosanna Chapman, his wife, was born in 1758, and died in 1839. Their children were: Sarah, born in 1777, who married James Ross, and died in 1813; Elizabeth, born in 1779, who died in 1794; Anna, born in 1781, who died in 1798; Rosanna, born in 1783, who married Leonard Dunton, and died in 1838; Alexander, born in 1785, a merchant at Augusta, Ga., where he was married to Elizabeth Thompson (he died at Charleston, S. C., in 1832. Their son, Alexander, became prominent in the South. For years he was judge of the city court in Mobile, and made a good record as an officer of the Confederate service. After the war he became lieutenant-governor of Alabama and died in 1880; and John.

The youngest child of this family, John McKinstry, the father of Alexander McKinstry, of Ellington, was born June 16, 1787, in the town of Ellington, where he followed farming all his life. He purchased the interest of the other heirs after the death of his father, and remained on the family homestead, where his son now resides. Under his able management the farm became an extensive and valuable one, comprising about 300 acres, and at his death, which occurred April 25, 1839, it was regarded as one of the most desirable in the town. Jerusha M. McCray, who became his wife Dec. 1, 1814, was born April 8, 1789, and was a daughter of Lieut. John and Charlotte (Wells) McCray. Her father was born in 1758 and died in 1813, and her mother, who was born in 1761, died in 1812. Mrs. McKinstry died March 12, 1871. To Mr. McKinstry and his wife were born: Charlotte, born Nov. 28, 1816, who married Edward Reese, and resides in Eutaw, Green Co., Ala.; Lee, born April 6, 1819, who made the voyage to California in 1849, around the Horn, being half a year en route, and who married in Placerville, Cal., and made that State his home, dying Oct. 10, 1881; Rosina, born March 16, 1821, who married George Parnell, and is now living a widow in Washington, D. C.; Fidelia, born March 22, 1823, now living in McMinnville, Tenn., the widow of W. S. Massie; Jerusha, born April 7, 1825, who married Israel P. Holton, and is a resident of Washington, D. C.; Alexander.

Alexander McKinstry, born Nov. 24, 1827, on the farm where he is found today, gained his education in the schools of his native town and for a short time attended Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass. His father died when he was twelve years old, and the estate was sold save the one-third interest of the mother in the farm; this interest was rented to other parties until Alexander was fifteen, when his mother moved back to it, and with his help engaged in its cultivation very successfully. Remaining with his mother till her death, he then bought the interest of the other heirs, and built the present residence in 1878. His long and active life has been devoted to the cultivation of his fine place. In recent years the expected infirmities of age have compelled his practical retirement from that hard labor to which his years have been devoted. They have been fruitful years, and show a good accumulation, so that he is well provided with this world's goods.

Mr. McKinstry was married March 17, 1869, to Lucy Allen, who was born at Tariffville, Conn., Aug. 30, 1849, and is a daughter of John and Eunice (Bancroft) Allen. Two children were born of this union. (1) John, who was born Oct. 6, 1874, attended the public schools and the high school at Rockville and was graduated from the Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford. He is engaged in the insurance business, being connected with the Scottish Union Insurance Company at Hartford, in which he holds a responsible position. In 1899 he was married to Lila Waite, daughter of Edwin and Eliza Waite, of Rockville, Conn. They have one child, Ruth, born Sept. 7, 1901. (2) George P., the second son, who was born Feb. 21, 1878, was educated in the public and high schools of Rockville, Conn., attended Wilbraham Academy one year, and was graduated from Huntsinger's Business College at Hartford. Becoming interested in photography, he engaged one year with Bolton, a photographer in Rockville. He took a special course of study with Mr. Guros, the noted photographer of St. Louis, and after remaining with him a few months, returned home and opened a photograph studio in Collinsville, Conn., followed later by one in South Manchester, Conn., both fully equipped for the best work, and in both of which he is meeting with merited success. Mr. McKinstry was married Oct. 22, 1902, to Lena Brown Richardson, daughter of Oleno M. and Harriet Eunice (Brown) Richardson, of Ellington. The latter was a native of Tolland. Mrs. McKinstry was educated at the Broadway grammar school in Norwich, having graduated as the valedictorian of her class, and also graduating from the Norwich Academy, class of 1900.

HERBERT S. MORSE. Perhaps the name of Morse is most deeply associated in the average American mind with the distinguished Samuel F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraphic system, which was the precursor of the many wonderful inventions in the same line which imitators have brought to notice, but many other representatives of that name have been prominently identified with achievements in other lines.

Far back in the history of our own country we find the record that in the ship "Increase," which sailed from London in 1635, came one Samuel Morse, aged fifty years, with his wife Elizabeth, aged forty-eight years, and a son Joseph. That there were other children was proved by his will, in which he mentions John, Daniel and Mary, wife of Samuel Bullen, and also his son Joseph's widow

Ann. It is probable that he died June 20, 1654, and that Elizabeth, his wife, died on the same date one year later. This Samuel was born in England in 1585, and he was the founder of the family whose branches have been honorably perpetuated through New England, particularly in Union, Ashford, Woodstock and Sturbridge, Conn. Each generation has shown the same admirable attributes and many of its members have become noted, the shining names being those connected with almost every one of the higher walks of life.

John Morse, son of Samuel (1), was born in England in 1611, and by his wife Annis had eleven children.

Ezra Morse, sixth child of John Morse, was born Feb. 5, 1644. His business was probably milling, as he owned large mills. His wife was Joanna Hoar.

David Morse, the great-great-grandfather of Herbert S. Morse, was born in 1709, and moved to Sturbridge, then called New Medfield, and was one of its earliest settlers.

Nathan Morse, son of David, was born in 1734, in Sturbridge, Mass., and removed to Ashford, Conn., and there, on May 8, 1777, married Widow Mary Bugbee, of Union. Their children were as follows: Rebecca, Nathan, Jedediah, and David and Jonathan, twins. Nathan never saw his twin sons, as his death occurred in Sturbridge prior to their birth, in 1784.

Jedediah Morse, the second son of Nathan, was born Feb. 19, 1783, in Ashford, Conn., and died Sept. 3, 1867, in Union, Conn. On Nov. 25, 1803, he married Percy Chapman, born Sept. 27, 1784, who died Sept. 27, 1863, daughter of Thomas Chapman, of Ashford, Conn. Jedediah followed an agricultural life and was one of the esteemed residents of Union, Conn. His children were the following: Otis, born Feb. 25, 1805, died in the far West; Maria, born Jan. 9, 1807, married Ira Walker, of Union, where she died; Lucius, born Jan. 14, 1812, married Dicey Scarbrough, and died in Hartford; Luke, born Jan. 24, 1820, married Huldah Scarbrough, and died in Hartford; Orrin is mentioned below; and Ira, born Sept. 9, 1826, still resides in North Ashford. He first married Harriet Curtis, and second Harriet (Ringe) Mosley.

ORRIN MORSE was born Jan. 27, 1822, in Union, Tolland Co., Conn., and died May 16, 1898, in Putnam, Windham Co., Conn. On Dec. 1, 1842, he married Hellen Horton, born Aug. 3, 1823, in Hartford, Conn., daughter of Ezra and Lucy (Shepherd) Horton, of Union, and she now resides at Putnam. Their children were: Sanford O., born April 29, 1845, in Stafford, Conn., died there June 15, 1845; Helen Janette, born June 9, 1848, in Stafford, was married June 11, 1871, to Arthur C. Stetson, of Putnam; Herbert Seth; and Delphy Adell, born July 23, 1864, in North Ashford, married George R. Tibbetts, of Putnam. In his early life Orrin Morse followed the shoemaking trade in Union, but after he removed to North Ashford he engaged in farming and milling, purchasing desirable property there and building a sawmill. Still later he removed to Putnam and built the home on Providence street, where his widow still resides. After locating in Putnam he engaged in a meat business with great success, and accumulated a competency. Mr. Morse was a man of retiring disposition, although when occasion demanded he took a prominent part in public affairs, efficiently served in the town offices, and for several years was one of the selectmen in both Eastford and Putnam. While residing in Eastford he not only served in the town offices and as selectman but he also represented the town in the State Legislature, performing his duties with the same regard for efficiency that he gave to even the smallest detail of office entrusted to him. His religious belief made him feel more at peace within the Universalist Church, to which he was most liberal in his benefactions. Orrin Morse was one of the original stockholders of the Union Block Co., and served as president for a number of years, and upon his death the same honor was conferred upon his son, Herbert S. This block is the largest and most complete block ever erected in Putnam, and it brings in a large revenue.

Herbert S. Morse was born May 14, 1852, in Union, Conn., and removed with his parents to North Ashford, being at this time one year old. His boyhood was passed in the schools of the latter town and in Union, where he was a pupil of Miss Sarah, a daughter of Capt. Chauncy Paul. Subsequently he entered the West Woodstock High School, and later enjoyed two years at Woodstock Academy, continuing at his studies until he was twenty years old. About this time his parents removed to Putnam, and he engaged for one term as a teacher in Pomfret, becoming then the bookkeeper for B. Longden & Co., of which firm his father was a member. Two years later he took a wagon meat route for his father, and continued to operate this for about four years. In 1878 Mr. Longden died, and the business was continued by the admission of R. H. Bradley and A. C. Stetson, the firm name changing to O. Morse & Co., continuing thus for two years. When Orrin Morse withdrew from the firm on account of failing health the other members continued the business under the style of Morse, Stetson & Co., and this remained until the dissolution of the firm, five years later. In reorganizing this business, Herbert S. Morse conducted it under his own name, for one year having F. L. Darling associated with him. In 1889 he erected his present most convenient place of business on North School street, and has met with public approbation, the business now being conducted as a meat market and provision store, and also including the sale of fish, being, in fact, one of the best establishments of its kind in Windham county, complete, up-to-date, with all modern conveniences.

Mr. Morse is a member of Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, of Putnam, and is socially connected with the Heptasophs of this city. Although a very ardent and zealous Republican, he will not consent to hold any office, which is just so much loss to his city, as Mr. Morse is eminently qualified for almost any of the positions of responsibility. Both he and wife belong to the Universalist Church.

On Dec. 27, 1874, Mr. Morse was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Helena Fox, born Aug. 10, 1851, in West Woodstock, daughter of Abiel and Lucy (Ingalls) Fox, the former of whom operated a general store and was postmaster at West Woodstock for over thirty years. Both he and his wife died at their home there. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert S. Morse were: (1) Harry Ellsworth, born Nov. 7, 1876, in Putnam, is associated in business with his father; on Feb. 15, 1899, he married Millie E. Flagg, of Abington, Conn., and they have two children—Ellsworth Lawton, born March 29, 1900, and Ruby Evelyn, born Nov. 15, 1902. (2) Elsie Lucy, born March 24, 1879, in Putnam, married, Oct. 21, 1897, George D. Clark, of Eastford, who is bookkeeper in his father-in-law's business. (3) Herbert Orrin, born Nov. 21, 1888, died in Putnam, Sept. 6, 1889. (4) Raymond Elton, born May 27, 1891, lives at home in Putnam.

JAMES McLAUGHLIN, for many years owner and publisher of The Press, at Stafford Springs, Tolland county, was born in 1838 in New Windsor, N. Y. His boyhood was spent in Fallsburg, that State, and he attended Walkill Academy, at Middletown. In 1857 he removed to Palmer, Mass., where he served an apprenticeship at the business which was to be his life work, in the office of the Journal, published by Fisk & Goff. In 1858 they began issuing an edition of their paper for circulation in Stafford, Conn., under the name of the Stafford News Letter. In 1862 Mr. McLaughlin bought out the interest of Mr. Goff in the establishment at Palmer, and four years later, in 1866, removed to Stafford Springs, having become sole owner of The News Letter. He took his brother, H. C. McLaughlin, into partnership, and an office was fitted up for the publication of the paper and for general job work. They also purchased, and incorporated with that establishment, a small printing office at Hydeville. The name of the paper, which for a time was the only one published in Tolland county, was changed to The Tolland County Press, and in 1880 the present title, The Press, was adopted. James McLaughlin was sole proprietor from 1872 to 1885, in which latter year the firm became McLaughlin & Son, Mr. McLaughlin admitting to partnership his son Lewis, who took charge of the job and business departments. From an article on The Press in the Stafford Illustrated some years ago we take the following:

"The Press has always been characterized by a policy at once conservative and liberal—conservative, in that it has shunned sensationalism, persistently declining to attract readers by lurid appeals to morbid tastes, or the unnecessary treatment of unhealthful subjects; liberal, in that it has dealt with all public questions, alike reportorially and editorially, in a spirit of justice and fairness. Its devotion to local interests has, from the first, been marked; and its record of local happenings full and accurate."

From the time of his removal to Stafford Springs Mr. McLaughlin took an active and public-spirited interest in the affairs of that place, and he was honored with numerous positions of trust, in all of which he served acceptably. In 1880 he represented Stafford in the Legislature; he was one of the committee appointed by the State Board of Agriculture to secure the establishment of a State agricultural experiment station—the first of the kind in the United States. In 1890 he was census supervisor, for the five eastern counties of Connecticut. He was a director of the Stafford Savings Bank, director of the Agricultural Society and at the time of his death, which occurred Aug. 2, 1895, was a member of the board of directors of the State prison. In June, 1863, Mr. McLaughlin married Ellen J. Atwood, of Belchertown, Massachusetts.

LEWIS McLAUGHLIN, present publisher of The Press, was born in 1864 in Palmer, Mass., and received his education in the schools of Stafford and at Monson (Mass.) Academy. In early youth he began acquainting himself, practically, with the printing business, in his father's office, and at the age of twenty took it up seriously. He became owner of The Press in 1895. On Oct. 7, 1891, Mr. McLaughlin married Miss Carrie M. Bishop, of Holyoke, Massachusetts.

GEORGE R. DAVIS. From earnest, industrious and God-fearing ancestors George R. Davis inherits the application, thrift, and unquestioned integrity which have fashioned his life according to the best tenets of New England citizenship. Though practically retired from the various occupations which engaged his time for more than half a century, his past services and personal characteristics are such as to keep him in the public eye of Killingly as long as he shall come and go in the old familiar haunts. He was the sixth of the nine children in the family of Randall and Phila (Kies) Davis, and was born Jan. 24, 1831, in the Mashentuck District of Killingly, Windham county.

Gaius Davis, the grandfather of George R., was distinguished by his loyalty to the British, a trait inherited from his father, William Davis, the high sheriff of Providence Plantation (or county), who died about 1755, leaving two sons, Gaius and Barnabas. These sons were very young at the time of their father's death; Gaius was brought up in the family of Jonathan Pike, and Barnabas in that of Eliphalet Wright, of South Killingly. Barnabas married Hannah Wright, daughter of Eliphalet, and had a number of children, among them, John, Samuel, Eliphalet and Ludovica. Gaius was born in Kingston, R. I., and lived in Providence until about 1800, when he moved to Killingly with his wife and four sons, and he died on his farm in the Mashentuck District, Sept. 23, 1815, at the age of sixty-six years. Like his brother, he married a daughter of his protector, and his wife, Hannah Pike, bore him four sons, William, Jonathan, Randall and Joseph, of whom Joseph was a carpenter and lived in Killingly, while Jonathan, a blacksmith, lived in Connecticut near the Rhode Island line. Hannah (Pike) Davis died Aug. 5, 1828, at the age of seventy-seven years. She and her husband were originally buried in Mashentuck, but were later removed to the Westfield cemetery. William Davis, the high sheriff, had a brother John, an Episcopalian clergyman of Providence, who either went or returned to England before the Revolution.

Randall Davis, the father of George R., was born in Killingly, April 11, 1789, and was reared to the hard and exacting childhood necessitated by his father's moderate circumstances. When a young man he managed to learn the carpenter's trade, but after his marriage left the home farm and bought land on the east side of the main road, about a mile and a quarter north of Danielson. On the east side of the road he purchased property from Jonathan Cutler, and added to his possessions by the purchase from Horace Davis of more land on the west side of the road. The house now standing was put up by himself, and the farm remained in the family possession until disposed of in 1902. Mr. Davis was successful as a carpenter and farmer, although his later years were devoted solely to the management of his farm. He was a Democrat politically, and, although he made no attempt to secure official recognition, held a few offices in the town, being a selectman for a few years. He was a very hard working, economical man, and his life was such as to command the confidence and respect of the community in which he lived. Thus his death, Dec. 10, 1861, removed a valued member of the Killingly District, and one in whose interests he was ever ready to give a helping hand. His success was partially, if not largely, due to the influence and assistance of an admirable wife, who was formerly Phila Kies, who was born in Killingly, May 28, 1796, a daughter of Wilson Kies, and who died Nov. 12, 1882. This couple found a last resting place in Westfield cemetery. They were the parents of the following children: Eliza, who died in Killingly, whither she had removed after the death of her husband, Philetas Kingsley, a farmer of Brooklyn; Joseph, a banker of Avoca, Iowa, who married Sarah Chamberlain, and has two children, Edwin and Walter; Elvira, who died when young; Maria A., who became the wife of James Darling, deceased, a mechanic, and who died in Danielson, July 13, 1898; Marietta, who became the wife of Edward Davis, and the mother of John R. Davis, of Danielson; George R.; Frances, the deceased wife of Charles Dorrance, a farmer of Brooklyn, also deceased; Ellen L., who married George Lloyd, and died in Danielson, May 26, 1886; and Edwin W., a successful and popular banker of Harlan, Iowa, who gave "Davis Park" to the borough of Danielson. Edwin W. Davis married May Benham, by whom he has three children: Vinnie D., the wife of Thomas Duke, in the wholesale grocery business at Pueblo, Colo.; Joseph V., and Adah E.

When about five years of age, George R. Davis accompanied the rest of his family to the homestead near the District of Mashentuck. He attended the district school and the West Killingly Academy, although he was reared to the hardest kind of farm work, and found little leisure in which to enjoy life. Nevertheless, in addition to his education and farming accomplishments, he found time to learn the trade of stone masonry, although his knowledge was self acquired, and the result of close application and observation. His father died before his son was married, and this threw the responsibility of managing the farm upon himself and his brother Joseph, the boys in time becoming the owners thereof; George R. eventually succeeded to the property, having bought off the other heirs in 1866. Independently he made many improvements on the old place and while engaged in general farming and stock-raising, also found time to interest himself in many other means of livelihood; he was a successful contractor, dug wells and put in foundation work. At a later day, when his son was old enough to help him, they engaged in building as well as stone masonry, and this proved a fruitful source of income. The farm consisted of two hundred acres and was successfully managed and operated by Mr. Davis until its sale in 1902. March 4, 1901, Mr. Davis moved to Danielson into a fine home which was just completed, and which promised all of the comfort and peace earned by so many years of strenuous activity. He also is the possessor of valuable property in the town, owning among other desirable holdings a number of tenements erected by himself. He is a Democrat in politics, and for several years served on the board of selectmen, being first selectman for one year. At this election he received the highest vote of anyone on the ticket, though the town had 200 Republican majority.

Through his marriage, Nov. 22, 1864, to Betsey S. Warren, Mr. Davis not only became allied with one of the very old and substantial families of New England, but won a splendid wife, embodying all of those fine traits of character which are the pride of the long settled States of the East. Strong, reliable and a fine business woman, Mrs. Davis has proved a true helpmate to her husband, and an ideal guide to the children who look to her for counsel and advice. She was born Jan. 17, 1836, and was educated at West Killingly Academy, thereafter engaging in educational work for a number of years. She is the mother of three children. (1) George Warren was born Jan. 7, 1866, and was drowned at a school picnic at Alexander's Lake, June 12, 1880. (2) Frank Anthony, born Nov. 17, 1867, is a general contractor at Danielson, and married, Oct. 21, 1891, Alice C. Newbury, of Brooklyn, who has borne him the following children: George Warren, born Oct. 6, 1892; Frank Clifford, born April 30, 1894; and Mildred Allen, born July 4, 1898. (3) Minnie Maria was born Dec. 7, 1874, graduated from the Danielson high school in 1892, and taught school in Killingly for a number of years. She was married, June 27, 1900, to Dr. Milton S. Warren, of Killingly, son of William and Isabelle (Young) Warren. Dr. Warren finished his school work in the Danielson high school in 1893, was an educator for two years, and in 1896 entered the Philadelphia Dental College, from which he was graduated in 1900. He subsequently took a post-graduate course of a year in the same institution, and in July, 1901, opened an office in Danielson, where the prospects are bright for a continuation of his present increasing patronage. Mrs. Warren is a member of the Sarah William Danielson Chapter, D. A. R., of Danielson.

GARDNER L. GRANT, the subject of this biography, was a highly respected citizen of the city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., and had the distinction of being the oldest representative of the oldest family in the town of Vernon.

Elisha Grant, the father of Gardner L., was born Dec. 10, 1777, in the homestead, located at the corner of Union and West streets, Rockville, where the first settlement was made by Ozias Grant. Elisha Grant had but limited school opportunities, and while still a youth began to learn the trade of carpenter and joiner, under the tutelage of his brother Augustus, following this occupation through life, and many of the residences now standing in this city testify to his excellent workmanship. Mr. Grant became the possessor of much land in his vicinity, through both Rockville and Ellington, and owned all the tract along the stream, between the New England mill and the Saxony mill. Several years prior to his death he discontinued work at his trade: his decease occurred Jan. 13, 1845, and he was buried at Vernon Center. By his first marriage, Elisha Grant was united May 29, 1799, to Electa Fuller, who was born Jan. 30, 1780, in East Haddam, Conn., although residing in Rockville, a daughter of Capt. Jehial and Sarah (Day) Fuller. The death of Mrs. Grant took place July 17, 1817, her children being: Gerdon, who married Lucy Cunningham, and resided in Rockville, a miller by trade; Electa, who married Warren McKinney, and first resided in Rockville, later in Little Falls, N. Y., then Rushford, N. Y., where they both died; Statura F., who married Alden Talcott, and died in Vernon; and Lois B., who married William P. Holman, removed to Putney, Vt., later to Rockville, thence to Vernon Center and finally to Sargent's Bluff, Iowa, where they were pioneers.

The second marriage of Elisha Grant occurred Oct. 13, 1824, to Roxanna Wyman, who was born in West Suffield, Conn., May 12, 1788, and died in Rockville, May 31, 1866, a daughter of Ebenezer and Sarah (Bridgen) Wyman, one son, Gardner L., being born of this union.

Gardner L. Grant was born Jan. 24, 1827, on West street, in Rockville, and in that city received his education in a school held in a house that is now used as a tenement house on East street, but which then stood on the site of the present Henry block. After leaving school Mr. Grant became interested in the machinist's trade and entered the machine shop of Slate & Brown, at Windsor Locks, Conn., for the purpose of learning it thoroughly, hiring as an apprentice for a period of three years, with compensation of $50.00 the first year, $60.00 the second and $100 the third, advancing as he became more skilled.

Remaining for the full term at this place, Mr. Grant finished his tuition with credit to himself and to the establishment where he was employed, leaving there to enter upon a lucrative engagement with the Springfield, Mass., locomotive works, where he remained two years. At this period, the overseer of the department in which Mr. Grant worked was engaged to take charge of the iron work in the car factory of Tracy & Fales, the firm later becoming Fales & Gray, in Hartford, Conn., and was given permission to select his own skilled mechanics, and from 150 applicants, he selected two men, one of whom was Gardner L. Grant.

Some time later Mr. Grant came to Rockville and obtained employment in a machine shop, owned and operated by a Mr. Burdick, and while there employed received a call from Fales & Gray to return to Hartford to take charge of the machine shop in their factory. In 1858 he returned to Rockville to accept the position of chief machinist in the Rock woolen mill, being put in charge of the repair department and there he remained until 1891, when he retired from active life to enjoy the competence which he had earned by his untiring industry and economy. During his long connection with the Rock mill, he had but two vacations, one of which was most enjoyable. In 1889, in company with two companions, he visited Europe, going into England, Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, Switzerland and Holland, the trip lasting over three months. A previous one, in 1879, had been in the West, and was equally enjoyable.

Mr. Grant was married May 6, 1851, in Bennington, N. Y., to Abigail Rebecca Rowley, who was born in that town Nov. 6, 1829, a daughter of Roger and Hannah S. (Osgood) Rowley, her lamented death occurring Sept. 6, 1897, when a devoted wife and Christian woman passed away. She was buried in the family lot at Vernon Center, by the side of her two babes, Emma L., and Eddie G. Mr. Grant's death occurred June 5, 1901, at the age of seventy-four years. He left a large share of his property by will for charitable purposes.

At the age of thirty years Mr. Grant united with the Congregational Church and for nearly a quarter of a century was a deacon in that body, had been Sunday-school superintendent and ever one of the most active promoters of benevolent enterprises in the church. In politics Mr. Grant was a Republican. His residence was on Village street, in Rockville, and he was one of the most useful and intelligent citizens of Vernon, and a fine representative of a family whose name is familiar over the world.

E. H. PRESTON, one of the leading business men of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., whose mercantile enterprise has been successfully carried to its present large proportions through his own energy and ability, became a resident of that city in 1881.

Mr. Preston is a native of Connecticut, born June 5, 1851, at Tolland Center, son of Dr. G. H. and Sarah (Cogswell) Preston, and has descended through a long line of honorable ancestors who have done their part in substantiating its name for "steady habits."

(I) Zephaniah Preston, the great-grandfather of E. H. Preston, of Rockville, was born in Ashford, Conn., followed farming in that vicinity and married Mary Bishop, of the same place. Zephaniah Preston was a son of Medina Preston and both seem to have been men of reliability and of ample means. The children born to Zephaniah and his wife were: Nathan, Reuben, Tabitha, Polly and Rhoda.

(II) Reuben Preston, son of Zephaniah, was born Oct. 26, 1792, in Ashford, and there became an extensive and successful farmer as well as a leading and influential man. A staunch Democrat, he held a number of the minor town offices and in many ways was a person of prominence. He was a member of the Baptist Church. On Dec. 16, 1818, a Union, Conn., he married Lucy Howard, also of Union, born Oct. 14, 1795, who died Oct. 15, 1878. Mr. Preston died June 24, 1884. His children, to whom his attachment was a matter of note, were Gilbert H.; and Newton Work, born July 23, 1825. The latter was long a physician in Stafford and Eastford, and then became engaged in the insurance business in East Douglas, Mass., in later life. He married March 7, 1848, Alvira Chapman, of Eastford. His death was caused by an accident while he was inspecting a house in the line of his insurance business.

(III) Dr. Gilbert Howard Preston, the father of E. H. Preston, was born Nov. 14, 1820, in Eastford, Conn., and acquired his early education in the common schools, later taking an academic course in Woodstock and going from there to Bowdo-

College, Maine, for a course of lectures. In 1842 he graduated in medicine from Castleton College, Vt. For three years after this he practiced his profession in Westford, a village situated within six miles of Eastford, but in 1845 he removed to Tolland and entered upon a practice which continued for nearly forty years, ending only with the death of Dr. Preston on May 8, 1883. His work extended through Tolland and the surrounding country and few practitioners have been more missed in any community than he when his labors ended. He had purchased what was known as the Solomon Griggs home and there Mrs. Preston still resides. Although absorbed in the duties of his profession, Dr. Preston was too intelligent and public-spirited a man to not take a deep interest in public matters, and whenever he could feel justified, he accepted the offices tendered him by his Democratic friends and admirers. In 1880 he served in the State Legislature, most efficiently filling the demands of that position.

Dr. Preston also held numerous positions of trust and responsibility; for over thirty-five years he acted as secretary of the County Medical Society; was vice-president and director of the Stafford Savings Bank; was trustee of the State Reform School, at Meriden; was registrar of vital statistics for many years; treasurer of the town deposit fund, and in addition for a number of years served as a justice of the peace. When his professional duties permitted he was a regular attendant of the services of the Congregational Church, although not a member.

On April 10, 1848, Dr. Preston was married to Sarah Eliza Cogswell, born July 18, 1820, a native of Tolland, Conn., daughter of Harry and Levina (Dimock) Cogswell. Mr. Cogswell was a carpenter and joiner by trade and built many of the buildings in Tolland and the neighborhood, one of these being the present Tolland county court house. To this marriage four children were born. (1) Charles Henry, born Dec. 13, 1849, married April 11, 1883, Addie Mook, of New York, and conducts a hardware business in Norwich, Conn. (2) Edward Howard is the subject of this sketch. (3) Sarah Cornelia, born Nov. 30, 1854, married May 8, 1877, Joseph Lathrop, a bookkeeper in Tolland; their only child, Edith Lucy, born Nov. 21, 1879, married Edward Meacham, of Tolland, and her little daughter, Florence Meacham, was born June 3, 1900; Mrs. Lathrop was married (second) April 21, 1896, to Henry Young. (4) George Cogswell, who was born May 1, 1856, was married Nov. 19, 1885, to Antoinette Reed, a native of New York. Mr. Preston conducts a hardware business in association with his brother in Norwich, Conn., the firm name being Preston Bros. The children born to George Preston and his wife are as follows: Muriel, born Oct. 23, 1886; Harold Reed, Sept. 15, 1888; Robert Earl, June 2, 1891; and Gladys, March 10, 1894.

(IV) Edward Howard Preston attended the district schools at Tolland Center and one of his first teachers was Mrs. Dwight Morey. After passing through a preparatory select school, he was sent to Monson Academy and still later to the Connecticut Literary Institute at Suffield, where he completed his studies. His boyhood was spent around his father's home where he was called upon to attend to the horses and to saw the wood and perform such "chores" as usually fall to the small boy in the family, and as he was bright and companionable he was often permitted to accompany his father on his long drives through the country to visit patients. Aside from the pleasure, these trips with his intelligent father did him a world of good and were no small part of his education at that time.

Mr. Preston remained in Tolland until the fall of 1868, when he went to Hartford and secured employment as a general utility boy in the store of Talcott & Post. At this time a part of his duty was to deliver goods in a wheelbarrow, as at that time the firm had no other transportation facilities at their command. Such work, combined with sweeping out the store and sleeping on the counter at night, made up the sum of his life for three years, during which time he was paid yearly $25, $50 and $75, respectively. His kind and tender-hearted mother was not pleased to know that her son should have such poor accommodations and desired him to leave the position, but his father was made of more stern nature and judged that a little hardship would not hurt the young man. Hence Mr. Preston remained with the firm, only severing his connection in 1880 when he removed to South Coventry. With his brother-in-law he embarked in a business of manufacturing bed-quilts, but as the enterprise did not prove successful, it was given up in less than a year. From the ruins of this business Mr. Preston had saved $350, and with this sum he came to Rockville in September, 1881, and bought out the furniture and undertaking business of Peter Wendhiser. In order to do this Mr. Preston was obliged to borrow money to the extent of several thousand dollars, his father going his security. Dr. Preston made it a part of the bargain that his son should clear off $500 of the indebtedness every six months. Dr. Preston was a wise man and thoroughly understood the self-denial and close attention to business which this would require, but he knew the discipline would be best in the end. It is sufficient to say that every note was met when due.

Mr. Preston's first location for his business in Rockville was the site just north of his present store, adjoining the Henry block on the north. Business prospered from the start and in 1884 the young man was able to purchase the carpet business of Henry & Grant and, combining it with his other lines, moved into the store where he has since been located. He has undoubtedly the leading business of that kind in the county.

On April 11, 1883, Mr. Preston was married, in Rockville, to Miss Belle E. Pinney, a native of Ellington, daughter of Edwin and Harriet (Moody) Pinney. No children have been born to this union. Mrs. Preston traces her ancestry to Humphrey Pinney, who came from England in 1630, and located at Dorchester, Mass. Her line is through Humphrey, Samuel, Capt. Benjamin, Eleazer and Edward V. C.

Eleazer Pinney, grandfather of Mrs. Preston, was born about 1785 in Ellington, and died in 1851. He was a farmer by occupation, and he married Demaris Chapman, of Ellington, who died in 1852. Their four sons were: Eleazer, Jr., who married a Miss Grover; Nelson, a soldier in the Civil war, who died while on his way home, and who married a Miss Hibbard; John; and Edward V. C. The latter was a resident of Ellington, Conn., where he followed the trade of brickmason. Mrs. Preston was the only child of her parents. She is a member of the order of Daughters of Rebekah and also belongs to the D. A. R., of Rockville, Sabra Trumbull Chapter.

Mr. Preston is well-known in financial circles, is a director in the Peoples' Saving Bank at Rockville and is a director and stockholder in the Tolland County Agricultural Society. His fraternal connections are large and give him much pleasure as well as prominence. He holds Masonic relationship with Fayette Lodge and Adoniram Chapter, in Rockville; Washington Commandery, at Hartford; and Norwich Consistory, at Norwich. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias in Rockville, and was a charter member of the organization; belongs to the Odd Fellows in Rockville; also the A. O. U. W., the Foresters, and the O. U. A. M. Mr. Preston is a veteran of Company K, 1st Regt., C. N. G., also a member of Putnam Phalanx, of Hartford, and with his wife has accompanied this latter organization on its many enjoyable trips. Mr. Preston is no politician, voting for the men he judges will best carry out the principles of government. He is a public-spirited citizen, and is ever ready to assist and encourage all enterprises which promise to benefit his town.

Personally Mr. Preston is well fitted to win both private and business friends. Endowed with overflowing good-nature, his hand is extended in hearty friendship wherever it is deserved. That he has succeeded so well in his business must be attributed to this pleasing manner as well as to great natural ability.

WILLIAM GRAY CLARK. From the south-east corner of New Hampshire, bordering on the Massachusetts line, comes the venerable and highly respected gentleman whose name stands at the head of this biographical notice. He was born in New Durham, Strafford county, in the State first named, June 13, 1820, a son of Capt. Jacob and Jane (Gray) Clark, the former of whom was a native of Barrington, N. H., but who died in Brome, Canada.

Jacob Clark, father of William G., was a farmer by vocation, and was quite young when he went from Barrington to New Durham, and thence to Brome, where he purchased 200 acres of land; being a healthy, robust man of nearly six feet in height, but not at all corpulent, he was well adapted to his calling of farmer, at which he earned a competence. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and aided materially with his means to erect the church edifice at New Durham. In politics he was a Democrat. He served in the war of 1812, and held the rank of captain in a New Durham company of militia, in which he achieved quite a reputation for personal bravery.

To the marriage of Jacob Clark with Jane Gray, who was born in Barrington, N. H., but who died in Brome, Canada, in 1855, and who was a daughter of William Gray, there were born eight children, namely: Abigail, married to Hiram Berry, a farmer of Brome, who later conducted a saw-mill, and both of whom are now deceased; Sallie, who became the wife of Levi Gray, of Barrington, N. H., where he was engaged in farming, and where both died on the old Gray homestead, which had been in the family over 175 years; Hannah, who was married to Oliver Beard, a farmer of Brome, where they both died; Mary Ann, who was married to Israel Wentworth, of Barrington, N. H., where they passed the remainder of their lives; Jacob, a farmer, who married Minerva Stone, of Stanbridge, and who died at the early age of twenty-eight years; Martha Jane, who was married to Simon Beard, a farmer of Brome, where both died; William G., whose name opens this sketch, and Harriet, who was married to Horatio Gladden, of Shefford, Canada, where both are now living. Mr. Gladden was a shoemaker and also a Baptist preacher.

Jacob Clark, grandfather of William G., was born in Barrington, N. H., was a farmer all his life and about 1725 settled on a farm which is still in the possession of his descendants. He was a good natured and very healthy gentleman, who lived to be eighty-nine years old, and who had born to him twelve children, the names of ten of whom were as follows: Peter, James, Jacob, Hezekiah, Aaron, Fannie, Mollie, Susan, Harriet and Sallie; the remaining two were also girls.

William Gray Clark was but five years of age when he was taken from New Durham by his parents to Newport, Vt., and a year later to Brome, Canada, where he attended school until fifteen. He assisted his father on the farm until his marriage, at the age of twenty, when he engaged in farming on his own account on a farm of 100 acres in Brome, presented to him by his father, and there he lived six years. William G. then exchanged this farm for one at East Farnham, Canada, on which he also lived six years and then removed to Stanbridge, near by, and erected a store building and started general merchandising, which he successfully continued about nine years, in the meantime holding the postmastership seven years. On selling this store, he removed to Waterloo, Canada, and purchased a number of building-lots, erected a number of business blocks, embarked in the real estate business generally, and also opened a general store of large dimensions, which he successfully conducted about eighteen years, when he sold out to his son, re-engaged in real estate and erected several business blocks, a hotel and a number of residences.

Mr. Clark now passed a year in travel through the western States of the Union, including New Mexico, and then returned to the East. In Boston, Mass., he purchased a Yankee-notion store on Cosway street, conducted it one year, and then exchanged it for the Lieut. Gov. Stoddard place in West Woodstock, where he has since conducted one of the most popular hotels in the State, in conjunction with which he also conducts a fertile farm of sixty-five acres in Woodstock.

In early life Mr. Clark was a Democrat in his political predilections, but of late years his interest in party matters has cooled, and he has not exercised his franchise since coming to Woodstock. While in Waterloo, Canada, however, he held several local offices, such as member of the town council for several years, was on the street committee and poor committee, and for several years was also a member of the board of school commissioners; he likewise served as chairman of commissioners of the court for a number of years. Mr. Clark also deserves more credit than any man living in Waterloo for erecting a greater number of buildings and otherwise improving the town.

William Gray Clark was united in marriage for the first time March 25, 1840, to Miss Emily Stone, a daughter of George and Hannah (Welch) Stone, of Stanbridge, Canada, where she died March 14, 1859, at the age of thirty-eight years, the mother of three children, viz.: Cynthia, Jacob and Alice Jane. Of these, Cynthia was born May 3, 1844, in Brome, Canada, and died in Stanbridge, April 17, 1857. Jacob was born July 8, 1846, in Brome, married Minnie Clark, of Waterloo, Canada, and died in that town Jan. 2, 1879; two children resulted from this marriage, viz.: Merrill J., born Aug. 12, 1874, who married Oct. 19, 1898, Miss Eva B. Scoville, of Burlington, Conn., and has one son three years old, Merrill N.; Frances Winnifred, born in 1876 in Waterloo, Canada, who married June 5, 1901, Lorne M. Arkley, a teacher in the McGill College in Montreal. Alice Jane, the third child, was born March 13, 1854, in Stanbridge, is married to Daniel L. Allen, of the firm of Allen, Taylor & Co., foundrymen, who also conduct iron works and a general store, and is living in Waterloo; she has no children.

The second marriage of Mr. Clark took place Jan. 2, 1860, to Sarah A. Benham, of East Farnham, a daughter of Ira and Maria (Wells) Benham, and to this union there has been no issue. Both Mr. and Mrs. Benham were born in Vermont, but went to Canada with their parents when children. They were married Oct. 7, 1817, and to them were born eight children, Eli, Enos, Samuel W., Almeda, Sarah A., Mary Matilda, Gratia and Rebecca, all born in Farnham, Canada, on the same farm where the parents had settled on the marriage. Mr. Benham and his wife both died on that same farm, the former at the age of eighty-two, his wife aged ninety. Maternally Mrs. Sarah A. (Benham) Clark is a descendant of the Wells family who were among the earliest settlers of the Eastern townships of Canada. Col. Samuel Wells, a maternal ancestor, was a very prominent and influential personage in his day; and upon the erection of Cumberland county, Vt., was appointed by the Governor of New York State a judge, or justice of the peace, and in 1773 was one of the two delegates to the General Assembly of the State. He died Aug. 6, 1786, in the fifty-fifth year of his age, honored by all who knew him. Mrs. Clark's grandfather, Richard Wells, was also very conspicuous in his day, and was a son of Col. Samuel Wells, of Revolutionary fame.

GREENWOOD DEARDEN, an old and experienced citizen of Tolland, Tolland county, was born in Yorkshire, England, March 18, 1838, and is a son of John Dearden, who was born in Yorkshire, England, Nov. 5, 1815, and died in Lancashire, England, at the age of fifty-six years.

John Dearden lived nearly all his life in Yorkshire, where he followed the trade of a weaver, and for many years was an independent operator. In his later years he was employed in the cotton mills. Anna Greenwood, his wife, was born in 1814, and died in Yorkshire in 1896, close to her birthplace. They were prominent people in the Methodist Church, and were the parents of two children: Greenwood; and Sarah, who married Richard Carter, and is now living in Lancashire.

Greenwood Dearden received his education in his native community, and attended school more or less regularly up to the time of his coming of age. In his older youth he worked in the card room of the Banksfoot mill, and attended night school. At the age of eighteen years he had become overseer in the establishment, and at twenty general manager and salesman, a position which he held four years for the Banksfoot Mill Company. At this time he left the mill, and worked in the ship yards, building blockade runners, to get cotton out from the blockaded ports of the Southern States during the Civil war. For nearly three years he was employed in this work and then resumed mill work as overseer with John Maden & Sons, a position he held for two years. He was two years general manager of the Calphy Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Dearden was a capable and efficient workman, and was in much demand by the mill managers, and the outlook for his future was flattering in his home country. He felt, however, that far better chances might be found in the New World. Accordingly he sailed from Liverpool on the "Tripoli," a Cunarder, and arrived at Boston, July 5, 1869, after a voyage of fourteen days. The ensuing few months were spent at Widder, Canada, engaged in farming, and in the fall of the same year he went to Utica, N. Y., where he was overseer of the card rooms of the Utica Steam Cotton Mills, a position he held for a year, and then became general manager of the Bemis-Marriott Co. Mill at St. Louis, where he remained for four and a half years. Following this he was a part owner of the Rehoboth Cotton Mill at Providence, continuing in this connection for some three and a half years, when he sold out to his partners.

After Mr. Dearden had retired from his connection with the mill at Providence, he came to Tolland and purchased about 1880 the Gammage farm of 116 acres, to which he added the Walbridge farm, making a fine farm of 156 acres, which is used for general agricultural purposes and fruit culture, having about 2000 peach and plum trees, as well as considerable other fruit. He keeps seven cows, and sends the milk to the Vernon creamery.

Mr. Dearden is a member of the Masonic fraternity, with which he became connected in 1885. A conservative Democrat, he is a broad-minded and patriotic citizen. He has been grand juror, but has never sought or desired official position.

Mr. Dearden was married March 29, 1861, to Alice Heap, in Rawlston, England, who died Nov. 22, 1888, in Tolland, at the age of forty-nine years. She was the mother of two children, who died young; Ada and Jesse are at home. Jesse was married to Netta Pierson, who died, and he is now living with his father.

Mr. Dearden was married Dec. 2, 1889, to Rose Donnelly, a daughter of Peter Donnelly, a resident of Troy, N. Y. To this union were born: John Greenwood, Nov. 21, 1890; Thomas Edison, Aug. 20, 1892; James, Oct. 5, 1895; Francis Nelson, Jan. 21, 1898.

Since Mr. Dearden has lived in Tolland he has been foreman of the Montmorency Cotton Mill, situated near Quebec, where he was engaged for three and a half years. At another time he was also foreman of the Riverside Mill, owned by the same company, and giving employment to 300 people. He was also overseer for the Dwight Manufacturing Company in Alabama, where he had some 300 people under his direction. Mr. Dearden later worked for the Cornwall and York Cotton Mill Company of St. John, N. B., Canada, until May 1, 1903.

Mr. Dearden has been an exceedingly active and industrious man, and well deserves the ease and comfort which attend the closing scenes of his life. He has played a man's part in the great struggle of life, and has reared a family, the older members of which indicate a disposition to follow in his steps, and be like him honorable and useful members of the social community.

FENELON McCOLLUM, owner of the Mansfield Organ Pipe Works, at Mansfield Depot, is one of the successful and leading manufacturers of Tolland county. His great-grandfather came to America from Scotland, and his grandfather was captain of a vessel and was drowned while engaged in the discharge of his duties.

Erastus McCollum, the father of Fenelon, was born in Manchester, Conn., where he spent his early life and learned the trade of carpenter. He removed from Manchester to Vernon, where he followed farming, and later located in Rockville, at a time when that city contained but a few houses. Mr. McCollum erected the first house on Brooklyn street, and also a barn in the rear of what is now the Rock mill. It was in this barn that the first church organ was set up by Selden McCollum and his two brothers, Julius and Henry. Erastus worked in the mill as a millwright, and lived many years in that city, following the same occupation. His death occurred in advanced age, and he is buried in the cemetery at Vernon Center. Early in life he was a Whig, and later became a Republican. For many years he was a most consistent member of the Congregational Church at Rockville. His first marriage was to Lydia Corning, by whom he had the following named children: Erastus S., who married Miss Putnam, was one of the first to learn the trade of organ builder in this country; he resided first in Rockville, and later removed to Middletown, where he died. Maria, who married Hart Keeney, a stationary engineer, died in New Haven. Electia R. died young. Henry F., who married Emily Webster, was an organ builder, and resided in Boston, in Westfield, Mass., and later in Mansfield, where he was engaged in the business with our subject until 1890, dying soon after retiring; he had a son Henry, who served in the Civil war. Julius S., also an organ builder, died in Boston. Electia R. (2) is the widow of S. K. Childs, and resides in Duxbury, Mass. Sarah Ann, who married Luther Talcott, died in Rockville; he was a railroad man. Martha, Mrs. Bilson, died in Rockville.

The second marriage of Erastus McCollum was to Harriet Bosworth, of Rockville, who survived him several years, and died in Westfield, Mass.; she was buried at Vernon Center, Conn. The children of this marriage were Fenelon (our subject) and Harriet. The daughter married S. B. Carpenter, and they had two sons: Orlando B., living in Mansfield; and Albion B., living in Brockton, Mass. Mrs. Carpenter married for her second husband S. B. Carr, of Brockton, where they now live.

Fenelon McCollum was born in Rockville, Oct. 5, 1841, and received his education in the Rockville high school, soon after leaving which he was employed for several years as assistant postmaster, during the administration of President Lincoln, when Andrew W. Tracy was postmaster at Rockville. Within a short time he became engaged in the furniture business with H. L. James, at Rockville, under the firm name of James & McCollum, but after several years they disposed of the business to J. L. G. Carpenter, and Mr. McCollum went to Westfield, Mass., where his half-brothers were engaged at organ building. Until 1868 Henry and Julius were employed by Johnson & Son, at Westfield, and there Fenelon also secured employment, beginning on case work; later he was engaged on the making of the pipes. After a fire destroyed this factory in 1871 Julius and Henry returned to Boston. Fenelon had conceived the idea of making the manufacture of the pipes a separate industry, and in 1871 started this independent business. Hard times came on, and, desiring a location where expenses were less, he removed to Merrow, in the town of Mansfield, and rented a room, where he employed several hands and was joined by his brother Henry. They remained at Merrow until 1876, when they removed to Mansfield, to the "ell" of the Brigham mill, at Mansfield Depot, and the style of "The Mansfield Organ Pipe Works" was adopted. The business soon demanded more room, and the whole mill was leased. Later, in 1889, the whole mill property, tenement house as well as mill, became the property of Mr. McCollum, and in 1892-93 a new four-story factory was erected to accommodate the rapidly growing business. In 1890 Henry McCollum was obliged to retire from business, and died soon after. In 1896 fire destroyed the mills, but with characteristic energy Mr. McCollum erected new ones, and equipped the establishment with the latest improvements in machinery.

Fenelon McCollum is an inventor and patentee himself, and has made special machinery for some of the work. Among his inventions is an improved pipe foot for organs, on which he holds the patent, and it is considered an important invention in first-class organ construction. These factories have the best equipment of any in the country for the manufacture of organ pipes, and constitute the largest manufactory for wood pipes in the world. About 400,000 feet of the best Michigan pine is used annually, and the skill and care with which each part is fitted place the work of this establishment at the head of the output in that line.

Fenelon McCollum has always been active in religious and moral affairs, and the result of his labors is very apparent in the section of the town occupied by his industry. Socially he is a member of South Coventry Lodge, No. 10, A. O. U. W. In politics he descended from old Whig stock, and has always been identified with the Republican party, and greatly interested in political issues, even as a boy taking an active part in the Fremont campaign, but he has always refrained from holding office. In public-spirited enterprises of all kinds, however, he is very prominent. He is a member of the Union Chapel Society at Mansfield, and was one of the organizers and builders of the chapel there.

Mr. McCollum was married Dec. 15, 1870, to Mary E. Carpenter, of New Britain, Conn., who died in 1890, and they had two children: Herbert O., who died in infancy; and Odell F., who died at the age of two and one-half years. The second marriage of our subject, on March 18, 1896, was to Minnie L. Bowers, of Mansfield, and they have had three children: Ruth B., Ella Louise and Fenelon, Jr., the last named born March 11, 1902. In 1896 Mr. McCollum erected his handsome residence, from which is dispensed a charming hospitality.

WILLIAM DANIELSON CHAPMAN, a prominent agriculturist of the town of Pomfret, Windham county, whose sterling traits of character have evinced themselves in a life of steady and unflinching toil, comes of an old and sturdy stock.

(I) John Chapman, the progenitor of the Chapman family of the region about Stonington, was of English origin, the son of John Chapman and his wife, Joanna Sumner, who resided about fifty miles from London. Tradition has it that Mr. Chapman was forced into the British navy by a press-gang and after a while, when the ship visited Boston, New England, he availed himself of the opportunity to assume the liberty of which he had been deprived. He fled and found succor in the abode of Samuel Allen in what is now called Wakefield, in Rhode Island. He was a weaver, having become proficient therein by several years' service. He came to that part of Stonington, Conn., which is now North Stonington; where he worked at his trade the remainder of his life. He married Sarah Brown, Feb. 16, 1710, and died in 1760.

(II) Sumner Chapman, son of John, the immigrant settler, born about 1723, married Feb. 23, 1756, Elizabeth Herrick and resided in Westerly, Rhode Island.

(III) Joseph Chapman, son of Sumner, was born in Westerly, R. I., July 29, 1767, and there grew to manhood. Farming was his chosen occupation, which he pursued in Westerly for a number of years. Dec. 21, 1791, he married Elizabeth Kenyon, and, after her death, he took a second wife, Eunice Clark, Jan. 7, 1826. He had children by both marriages, Joseph, mentioned below, being the son of Elizabeth (Kenyon). Sometime after his first marriage, he moved to a farm in North Stonington, in which town, industriously following agriculture, he spent the rest of his life.

(IV) Joseph Chapman (2) was a well-known agriculturist in the town of Griswold, New London Co., Conn. Born in Westerly, R. I., Sept. 13, 1789, and when quite young taken by his parents to North Stonington, Conn., he received his education and training for his life-work mainly in the last named place. In early manhood he married a Miss Tift, and after her death he formed a second union with Ruth Main, a descendant of Ezekiel Main, who settled in North Stonington in 1670, her lineage being through Jeremiah, Deacon Thomas, Timothy, and her father, Rufus Main. Her mother was Sarah York. By his first marriage Mr. Chapman had six children. Prudence married Eames Benjamin, a farmer, and they resided in Griswold; Joseph, a farmer of North Stonington, married, his wife's given name being Rebecca; Jonathan, also a farmer, married Ruby Main, and died in Brooklyn, Conn.; Abby lived in the vicinity of Norwich, Conn., and died there; Lydia married Russel Kenyon, and after his death Deacon Steadman; she died in Putnam; Sybil was the wife of Lyman Champlin, a farmer in Voluntown. By his second marriage Mr. Chapman had five children, all of whom became farmers. George, who resided on the homestead in Griswold, was married three times; Sandford married Laura Miller, and they resided in Brooklyn, Conn., where he died; Henry married Susan Burdick, and they resided at North Stonington; Rufus chose as his first wife, Esther Eggleston, and after her death married again; William D. is mentioned below. It was shortly after his first marriage that Mr. Chapman purchased his farm in the southern part of the town of Griswold, and there he resided the rest of his exceptionally long life. Intelligent and persistent work enabled him to make a thorough success of his farming, and near the close of his life he could look back upon his career with a peaceful satisfaction. He died in 1871, at the age of eighty-two, and is buried in the Rixtown cemetery at Griswold.

To his public and private duties as he saw them, Mr. Chapman was never recreant. Religiously he was long identified with the Baptists and was a respected member of the Pendleton Hill Church of that denomination at North Stonington. In political sentiment a Democrat, he was an ardent supporter of the principles of his party. What he accomplished in business was due to centering his forces upon one vocation, and following that conscientiously.

(V) William D. Chapman was born Sept. 17, 1827, in Griswold, Conn., where he was reared to farm work and educated in the district school. At the early age of fifteen he started out as a farm hand, and for eight years worked at different places in his neighborhood, learning in that time a great deal about the different methods of agriculture. Feb. 20, 1850, he married in North Stonington, Lois Ann Chapman, a third cousin, who was born in North Stonington, Sept. 6, 1833, daughter of Jesse and Ursula M. (Park) Chapman, who are mentioned below. William D. and Lois Ann Chapman had seven children, born as follows: William J., Jan. 9, 1851, who died April 23, 1873; Charles Henry, April 10, 1855, who lives at home; Mary Ann, June 10, 1859, who married George W. Miner, a farmer of North Stonington, and has four children, G. Frank, Maurice C., Palmer William and Herbert; John D., Dec. 18, 1863, a farmer, living at home; Frank W., June 11, 1868, who died young; Grace Estella, March 31, 1872, who married, Feb. 20, 1900, Charles A. Harrington, a farmer in Woodstock, and has two children, Helen Lois, born Dec. 8, 1900, and Frank Chapman, July 28, 1902; Waldo Tillinghast, Jan. 14, 1874, who lives at home.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Chapman rented a farm in North Stonington, where he lived ten years. Then he moved to another rented farm in Plainfield and lived there fifteen years. Finally, in 1875, with the aid of his wife, he was enabled to purchase a farm of his own, and as the splendid 175 acre tract, owned by Lucien Fitts and located in the northeastern part of the town of Pomfret was for sale, he bought it. There he has since resided, making improvements in the property and buying and raising stock until he now has sixteen cows. One important branch of his farming has long been dairying, and for many years he and his wife made a great deal of butter and cheese. At present they find it more profitable to ship their milk to Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman are people who have throughout life conscientiously bent their energies to the performance of their work as it has been revealed to them. It has left its trace upon them, and they are now crippled with rheumatism, but their characters have, no doubt, been strengthened. Mrs. Chapman is a respected member of the South Woodstock Baptist Church. Mr. Chapman is a man of strong political convictions; he was first a Democrat, later a Republican, and he now votes independently. That he possesses great persistence and a strong disinclination to rove is evident from his agricultural career.

Jesse Chapman, father of Mrs. Chapman and son of Andrew, who was a brother of William D.'s grandfather Joseph, was born in North Stonington, where he was for many years a successful farmer, dying there Sept. 3, 1875, in his eighty-second year. He was a highly respected citizen, and was a member of the Pendleton Hill Baptist Church. In political sentiment he was a Democrat. He was married three times: first, to Lois Park, who was born Sept. 12, 1794, daughter of Israel C. and Abigail (Sterry) Park; after her death, which occurred July 21, 1821, to Abbie Brown; and later, Dec. 29, 1832, to Ursula McCurdy Park, who was born Nov. 12, 1807. By the first marriage there were three children, born as follows: Franklin Sterry, May 22, 1816, who died in September, 1835; Russell Horace, Sept. 26, 1818, who married Maria Ingraham and settled in Steele county, Minn.; Israel Clark, now a farmer in North Stonington, Feb. 10, 1821, who married Cordelia Tanner, and, after her death, Mary Kenyon. By the second marriage there were no children; by the third there were two: Lois Ann, the wife of William D., is mentioned above; Ursula Maria, born March 5, 1835, married, Oct. 20, 1850, Lewis L. Main and they had a large family of children. For a number of years they resided in California, where he died. She now lives on the homestead, in North Stonington.

FENNER BURLINGAME is a highly respected citizen and resident of the Mashentuck District, in the town of Killingly, Windham county, where he has carried on farming these many years, and won a creditable standing in the community in which his useful career is passing. He is a worthy representative of an old New England family.

(I) Roger Burlingame, the remote ancestor of the Burlingames and the Burlinghams of Eastern Connecticut, came from England in 1657, locating in Providence plantation, where he died in 1718. To him and his wife, Mary, were born: Peter, Roger, John, Thomas and several daughters.

(II) John Burlingame had several daughters, and sons, John, Ballingstone and Roger.

(III) Ballingstone Burlingame was born June 25, 1698, and died Dec. 12, 1767. Among his children was a son Stephen, born March 13, 1742.

(IV) Stephen Burlingame was an ensign in the war of the Revolution. He had a family as follows: Benedict, born Aug. 30, 1761, a Revolutionary soldier, who died Jan. 22, 1787, leaving two children, Ruth and Silence; David; Ebenezer; Ruben; Benjamin.

(V) Ebenezer Burlingame, the grandfather of Fenner, was born June 13, 1767, became a farmer, and died in Scituate, R. I., in December, 1843. In politics he was a Whig, and held several town offices at Scituate. Elizabeth Burlingame became his wife, bore him the following children, and passed away shortly before his demise: Stephen, born Oct. 2, 1789, a farmer, who married Cynthia Wilbur, and after her death Cecila Fisk, and died in Rhode Island; Abraham, born July 21, 1791, the father of Fenner; Harris, born Nov. 28, 1793, who died Oct. 5, 1797; Wayne, born Oct. 22, 1795, who died Oct. 12, 1797; Ebenezer, born July 6, 1798, who died Sept. 30, 1815; Marcy, born April 8, 1800, who married Stephen Fisk, and died in Scituate, R. I., July 19, 1857; Dilly, born April 25, 1803, who died young; Hannah, born May 6, 1805, who married Joseph Westcott, and died in Blackstone, Mass.; David, born Dec. 26, 1807, who died a young man.

(VI) Capt. Abraham Burlingame was born in Coventry, R. I., and was reared to farm work. Remaining in his native town until several years after his marriage, March 4, 1818, he came to Killingly, and bought a farm now owned by his son Fenner. On this farm he made many improvements, and there he spent his life, dying March 20, 1865, his remains being buried at Westfield. Able to give each of his sons a farm, and to each daughter $500, when she started out in life, he had met with substantial success. Known as a rugged, hard-working man, he displayed much endurance, and it is related that once when he was sent to Hartford on town business he reached the city, and came back thirty miles on his homeward way the same day, covering eighty miles on foot between rising in the morning and going to bed the next night. In politics he was a Whig, and later became a Republican. While residing in Coventry he commanded a company of local militia, and thus received the title of "captain." Sukey Fenner, his wife, was a daughter of Ezekiel and Martha Fenner, and a native of Rhode Island, where she was born May 27, 1793. She was a descendant of one of the old families of that State. She died at the home of her son, Fenner, Aug. 26, 1893, being a little over one hundred years old. Her ashes repose in Westfield. Maria, the oldest child of this union, born in Coventry, R. I., had two husbands, William Kies, who died in Killingly, and Dr. Asa W. Brown, who lives in Providence, R. I. Ebenezer, born in Coventry, married Sophia Warren, was a farmer, and resided in Charlton, Mass. Harris married Avis Warren, was a farmer and carpenter, and enlisted in the 1st Conn. Cavalry, while living in Killingly. His death occurred while in the service at Cumberland, Md. Ruth is the widow of Danziel Fisk, a farmer, and now resides at North Brookfield, Mass. Fenner is the subject of this article. Elizabeth died young. Celia died at the age of twenty-one years. Deacon Ezekiel R. was the youngest son.

(VII) Deacon Ezekiel R. Burlingame was born Feb. 6, 1831, and lived at home until his marriage, when he removed to Charlton, Mass., where he bought a farm, on which he made his home for less than a year. This farm he traded for a water privilege at Attawaugan, whither he removed, and erected a saw mill. A little later he added a grist mill. Here he carried on business for fourteen years, and became quite prosperous. His health compelled a change at the end of that period, and he removed to Dayville, where he bought a grocery store. For a time he was in partnership with Benjamin N. Thomas under the firm name of Thomas & Burlingame. When he came to Danielson he disposed of his interest in the Dayville grocery, and in company with his brother Fenner erected the Exchange Block at Danielson, where a grocery store was established by him under the firm name of E. R. Burlingame & Co. Later in his life he went into a shoe store, and was there engaged at the time of his death, Dec. 27, 1887, having suffered from poor health for several years. In politics he was a Republican, served as selectman for twelve years, and was a trustee of the Windham County Savings Bank. In the Dayville Congregational Church he was chosen deacon, and after moving to Danielson he was called to act as deacon in the Westfield Congregational Church. He was popular and friendly, of a humorous disposition, and full of quaint sayings and charming wit.

Deacon Burlingame was married April 22, 1849, to Sarah A. Burgess, who was born Nov. 19, 1829, in Foster, R. I., a daughter of Jacob and Esther (Williams) Burgess, her mother being a direct descendant of Roger Williams. Her grandfather, "Squire Williams, was in the war of the Revolution. Mrs. Burlingame died at Danielson, Dec. 13, 1901. The children of this union numbered six: Olney, born Sept. 14, 1850, married Sarah E. Gage, and resides in Chicago. They have six children, Ralph, Clair A., Byron A., Ella, Belle and Edna. Ezekiel E., born Jan. 1, 1853, died Sept. 26, of the same year. John A., born Nov. 29, 1856, resides in Chicago. Esther Alice, born Feb. 14, 1860, is the widow of W. O. Jacobs; their children were: Oliver B., born Jan. 23, 1889; and Agnes, born May 25, 1892. Mrs. Jacobs is an active worker in the Westfield Congregational Church, which she serves as clerk. Sukey Ann, born Jan. 29, 1863, died May 19, 1868. Sarah Maud, born March 30, 1868, is unmarried.

(VII) Fenner Burlingame was born Nov. 26, 1822, in the house he now occupies. Reared to hard work on the farm, he secured his education in the district school, which he attended for a short period each winter until he was eighteen years old, devoting the greater part of each year to work on the farm. Remaining on the home farm, he assisted his father, and was given a third interest in the place when he was twenty-one years old. Later in life, when Ezekiel, his younger brother, desired to leave home, Fenner bought his third interest, and devoted his life to the care of his parents during their declining years. On their death he came into full possession of the farm. This farm contains 280 acres, being only two acres smaller than it was when his father secured it. In 1868 Mr. Burlingame remodeled and built an addition to the house, and he has built a fine barn. By hard work and close economy he has attained a very creditable standing among the substantial men of the town. Mr. Burlingame holds the largest amount of stock in the Exchange Block. He is a Republican, and represented his party in 1868 in the State Legislature at New Haven, where he served on the committee on Roads and Bridges. In Killingly he has served as selectman and as justice of the peace. For several years he was a director in the First National Bank, in the days when that institution was in existence. For his years he is a man, of remarkable activity and strength, is busy out of doors at some work every day, and although the farm is in the hands of his son, James W., yet he works hard as a pleasure. Pleasant in his greeting, and courteous in his manner, he commands the respect of all who know him, and is very popular in the town.

Fenner Burlingame was married Dec. 31, 1843, to Susan, a daughter of James and Zerviah (Randall) Walker, and a native of Foster, R. I., where she was born March 30, 1815. She is still living. To this union were born four children: (1) Alma, born Oct. 15, 1846, attended Lapham Institute, at North Scituate, R. I., was a telegrapher, married Charles G. Tanner, and lives in Westerly, R. I. He is agent for the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. (2) Celia, born Aug. 30, 1850, was a milliner, working at her trade in Worcester, Mass. As her health failed she returned to her home in Killingly, where she died Oct. 31, 1889, after a long illness. (3) Ruth, born Aug. 14, 1852, is at home, ministering to her parents. (4) James W., born Aug. 2, 1858, attended the district school and the Danielson high school, and has resided on the home farm with the exception of 1877 and the year following, when he was carrying on a harness shop at Danielson. He now manages his father's farm, and is an agent for farm implements and fertilizers. In politics he is a Republican, and was a member of the board of selectmen from 1894 to 1899. Mr. Burlingame belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M.; Quinebaug Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F.; Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W., and Killingly Grange, No. 112. His wife was Ella J. Young, and they have the following children: Fenner E., a graduate of the Danielson high school, and at Pratt Institute, in New York, in 1902, an electrical engineer; Ada M., graduated from the Danielson high school in 1901, a school teacher; Raymond C., graduated from the Danielson high school in 1903; and Doris Z.

HORATIO L. PALMER, whose death occurred on Jan. 25, 1897, in his home in Rockville, Conn., was an example of one of the highest types of citizenship, having lived uprightly before the world, attaining a position of wealth and influence and retaining to the end of life the high ideals that ever animated him.

Mr. Palmer was born in Vernon, Tolland county, May 10, 1823, of sturdy American stock, his parents being Elliott and Anna (Loomis) Palmer, the former of whom was a joiner by trade, which business he followed in Vernon, being employed on many of the factory buildings, and so continuing until his death at the age of eighty-nine. After his decease his wife went to Columbia, Conn., to live with her daughter, Harriet, where she died at the age of ninety-four, both parents being laid to rest in Vernon. Elliott Palmer was a highly respected citizen, who reared a family which was esteemed by the whole community, these being: Elliott, who became a minister in the Congregational Church and died in Portland, Conn.; Anna, who married Zenas Skinner and died in Coventry, Conn.; Uriah, who was a farmer and joiner and died in Columbia; Mary, who married William McLean and lives in Winsted, Conn.; Harriet, who married William Little, of Columbia, Conn.; and Horatio L.

The educational advantages of Horatio L.

Mr Le Palmer

Palmer were but those obtainable in the common schools of the time and location, but an active mind and love of knowledge did much to supply all deficiencies. His parents were people of limited means, and his employment on the neighboring farms early became a necessity, but he thus early formed habits of industry which were of value to him in later life, and it also taught him the principles of agriculture, which he learned in a practical way. His home continued with his parents, and for them he worked as a dutiful son, in the highest way deserving their parental affection.

On April 30, 1849, in West Stafford, Conn., Mr. Palmer was united in marriage with Miss Lucy A. Charter, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Elliott Palmer, a brother of our subject. Mrs. Palmer was born in Tolland, Conn., March 17, 1831, a daughter of Samuel and Ruth (Webster) Charter. The death of Samuel Charter was caused by drowning in 1838, and his widow later married his brother, Sanford Charter, and a short time later removed to near Crystal Lake. At this time Mrs. Elliott was but a girl of ten years, and was sent to the Ellington High School, and as soon as competent engaged in industry that enabled her to support herself independently. Ruth Webster, the mother of Mrs. Charter, was a daughter of Simeon A. Webster, a Revolutionary soldier who often took his granddaughter on his knee and related incidents of the struggle for freedom. This makes Mrs. Palmer eligible in a very direct way to the D. A. R.

After his marriage our subject located in Vernon with his parents, and followed farming, remaining on this place for some twelve years. In the meantime he had accumulated some capital, which he invested in a tract of land in East Windsor, and it was there that his energy and perseverance were put to the test. This tract of land was practically unimproved, and he erected the first building upon it, in time making of it one of the finest and most productive farms in the Connecticut Valley. During his ten years of residence upon this farm, engaged in the raising of tobacco, stock and dairying, Mr. Palmer was exceedingly successful, and when he left it to engage in hotel keeping in Thompsonville he left a very different farm from the one he had taken charge of. After one year in the village he decided to return to agricultural pursuits, and removed to Somers, Conn., buying a farm there, where he was equally as successful as on the previous occasion. Mr. Palmer resided on this place until November, 1888, when he removed to Rockville and located on West street, failing health requiring his retirement from active labor, and he remained there until his death. The days following were doubly sad for the family, as a severe blizzard prevented interment from taking place for a whole week, when he was buried in the West cemetery at Somers.

Politically Mr. Palmer was a Republican, and he felt a good citizen's interest in getting the best men into office, but would never permit the use of his name in any such connection. Perhaps the chief characteristic of our subject was his veracity, his friends and business associates all knowing that he spoke only the words of truth. Quiet and unassuming in manner, his influence was felt in the community, and his generosity and benevolence well known. The ample provision he was able to make for a most devoted wife was the result of honest industry, and was gained at no loss of respect from the community. Although no children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Palmer, two young men found with them a pleasant home and parental care; one of these, John Hanley, now of Somers, where he is a substantial farmer, resided a number of years in this home, and the other, Joseph Scheible, who came to them when but seven years old, remained until manhood, and now is a resident of Hartford. Since the death of our subject his esteemed widow has resided on West street, and is an example of vigorous and well-preserved womanhood, keeping abreast of the times, takes enjoyment in her bicycle, is a fine woman of business, and at the same time is noted for her charities both in and outside the Methodist Church, of which she is a prominent member.

THOMAS WHEELER WILLIAMS (deceased), one of the most highly esteemed of the citizens of Pomfret, Windham county, died at his home there June 8, 1897, leaving behind a memorial of a life filled with good deeds, and based on high ideals and lofty purpose. He was a native of the town, born in 1837, a son of Thomas Wheeler and Lydia (Fairchild) Williams, farming people and respected citizens of the town.

Reared on the farm, with his educational advantages confined to the district school, Mr. Williams was largely self-educated. He was ever a great reader, and his choice of books covered so wide a range so that his mind became stored with a vast fund of information, and, too, so thoroughly assimilated as to be available for practical use when needed. Until his young manhood he remained on the farm and then went to Norwich, Conn., where he worked in a dry goods store. He had a strong desire to see the West, and as to him to will was to do, he accordingly went to Minnesota, and, locating at St. Paul, was engaged in Hubbe's large dry goods store, where he remained several years. The attractions of the East proved stronger than of the West, and he returned to his native State; and in Pomfret he entered the mercantile world, and so continued for several years, during which time he also efficiently discharged the duties of postmaster. After his marriage he settled down to farming, buying the farm owned by Eleazer Robinson, and the remainder of his life was passed in the tilling of the soil and general business of State.

In every sense of the word, Mr. Williams was a self-made man. His high moral principles, so faithfully followed in his personal life, won for him the substantial and unwavering respect of the entire community. His strict integrity and his conscientious performance of duty made him a man in whom other men repose confidence, and he became a logical recipient of public office. In politics he was a Republican. For twenty years he held the office of selectman, and for a long time was chairman of the board. During his term of office he kept the town out of debt, and although when he assumed his duties there was an indebtedness of $1,500, when he laid down the sceptre it was with $2,500 in the treasury. Mr. Williams always took a keen interest in educational affairs, and for years was a member of the school board. For two terms he represented the town of Pomfret in the State Legislature. In his religious belief he was a Congregationalist, and he was active in all work of Christian Endeavor. Socially he belonged to the Pilgrim Society of Plymouth, Massachusetts.

In Pomfret, Conn., Thomas W. Williams was united in marriage with Sarah Dart, who was born in Plainfield, Conn., a daughter of Ebenezer Robinson. No children came to bless their union, but they gave a home to a nephew, William Whitaker, and his sister May, the former a baby of only a few months and the latter a child of two years. They were the children of Mr. Williams's sister, and as they grew older gave all possible love and care to their uncle and aunt. May died at the age of fourteen. William grew up and married Margaret Heath, of Utica, N. Y., by whom he has a daughter, Harriet Virginia, born in May, 1902, and they now reside on the old Williams homestead. Mrs. Williams is a charming woman who proved to her husband a worthy helpmeet and congenial companion. The death of Mr. Williams was a sad blow to the community, and those who realized his true worth knew that the place of the honorable, upright and patriotic citizen would indeed be hard to fill, while those who knew his genial disposition, his kind heart and charitable impulses, felt that a true friend of mankind had gone home.

JOHN A. BROWN. The family of which John A. Brown is a typical representative is one of the oldest and most honored in Windham county. For the most part earnest tillers of the soil, there has developed from their orderly and well directed ranks not only brawn but brain, and some of their members are known through the medium of their literary attainments and many sided culture. The latter day descendant of whom special mention is here made was formerly one of the largest dairy and stock farmers in Ashford, his farm of 225 acres being specially adapted to this means of livelihood. A teacher in his youth, a courageous soldier during the Civil war, a merchant for many years, and one of the staunchest upholders of the Republican party in the county, he has embellished his various avenues of activity with practical and lasting results, and maintained the ancestral reputation for fair dealing and wise conservatism.

John A. Brown is of the eighth generation from John Brown the "Assistant," who was acquainted with the Pilgrims at Leyden before 1620 and came to Plymouth colony before 1636. [Morton's N. E. Memorial, pp. 295, 296, 297.]

(I) Capt. John Brown, of Swansea, Mass., was among the very early settlers of Windham county, Conn. Nov. 8, 1672, he married Ann Mason, daughter of Major John Mason, of Norwich, Conn., and his death occurred before June 11, 1711. Between 1675 and 1690 the following children were born to him and his wife: Daniel, Ebenezer, Daniel, Stephen, and Joseph. Captain Samuel Mason in 1677 conveyed a 1000-acre right to Capt. John Brown, which land was located on the present site of Willimantic.

(II) Stephen Brown, born Jan. 29, 1687-88, married in June, 1729, Mary Risley, who died in 1730. During that same year he married Abigail Rugg, daughter of Thomas Rugg, of Mansfield Conn., who died in November, 1731. Stephen Brown married for a third wife, in 1734, Mary Jacobs. His children were called, Abigail, Mary John and Stephen.

(III) John Brown, born June 18, 1742, married, Dec. 22, 1763, Sybil Barrows, and tradition says that he had been formerly married, and that his third wife was formerly a Miss Fitch, his first having been a Miss Palmer. His marriage to Sybil Barrows is recorded in Weaver's notes, and are also the following named children: Lydia John, Eunice, Clarissa, Asenath, Sybil, Jabez, and Lucinda. John Brown was a large land owner in the town of Windham, his home being located on the Coventry road. During the war he is said to have been engaged in the making of saltpetre for the powder used by the colonial army.

(IV) John Brown (3) was born Nov. 16, 1764, married, Oct. 10, 1793, Olive Martin, and had the following children: Julia, Roswell, Olive, Nathaniel and Eliphalet; by his second wife, Elisabeth Palmer he had Albert Banks, Maria Arnold, Elias Palmer, Wealthy, Sarah, John, Dwight and Ralph William. Mr. Brown was a farmer and never removed from the property owned by his ancestors. He is buried in a family yard on the Coventry road between Willimantic and Coventry.

(V) Eliphalet Brown, the father of John A. Brown, was born in Windham, Oct. 18, 1801, and was reared as were the other lads of his time. Although a hard worker on the home farm he managed to acquire a fair education, and was subsequently engaged in teaching for several terms. After his marriage he located on a rented farm in Ashford, owned by his father-in-law, and at the end of ten years removed to Willimantic, where he conducted a boarding house up to the time of his death. (1)

6, 1834. He is buried in a cemetery on the Coventry road near Willimantic. March 27, 1829, he married Ermina Preston, born Aug. 16, 1801, a native of Ashford, and daughter of Solomon and Susannah (Hawes) Preston. Two children were born of this union: John Albert, born July 13, 1830; and Theron, born April 29, 1832. Theron Brown is a well known literary man of Boston, Mass., and was educated at the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, and Yale College, later graduating from the East Windsor Hill Theological Seminary. He also attended Newton Theological Seminary, and is a man of broad culture and many attainments. For several years he preached in the Baptist churches of Framingham and South Canton, Mass., but his voice failing he was obliged to abandon his chosen calling and live a less strenuous life. He is a poet and general writer, and is one of the editors of the Youth's Companion. His son, Bennett Albert, was drowned at the age of thirteen years; and his daughter, Helen Preston, deceased, was the wife of Walter B. Allen, of Boston, Mass. The mother of John A. Brown married for her second husband, Lucius Horton, and she died in Ashford, July 2, 1886.

(VI) John A. Brown lived on the maternal farm in the northwestern part of Ashford, and attended the district schools and the East Hartford Academy, in which latter institution he fitted himself for college. His plans for a higher education were seriously interfered with on account of impaired sight, and he was forced to return to the home farm, where he remained until 1852. He then purchased the interest of John Dunham in the store of Dunham & Spalding, at Ashford Village, the firm thereafter becoming Brown & Spalding. A couple of years later he bought out the interest of Mr. Spalding, and soon after took in James G. Gaylord, the firm name then being J. A. Brown & Co. This association continued until the disposal of the entire business to Mr. Gaylord, after which Mr. Brown repaired to the farm of his step-father, Mr. Horton, in which he had a half interest. The breaking out of the Civil war found him busily engaged in improving his share of the farm, and in August, 1862, he left his wife and three small children, and enlisted in Co. D, 1st C. V. I., for a three years' service. The regiment was under command of Colonel Arthur H. Dutton, and after two or three months in the field, Mr. Brown was detailed after the battle of Fredericksburg as brigade hospital steward, in which capacity he served for about a year. He was later transferred to the custom house in Norfolk City, and there engaged in clerical work until his discharge from the service in June, 1865. During the war he was given two furloughs home, and when peace was restored he again joined his family in Ashford, and soon after purchased his present farm, known as the Cady Place. He has since resided on that finely improved property, but for some years has been retired from his extensive dairying operations. He has devoted large sums of money to perfecting the details of his home surroundings.

On Jan. 3, 1854, Mr. Brown married Sarah B. Simmons, born in Ashford, Dec. 23, 1829, a daughter of Benjamin C. and Mariette (Byles) Simmons. The oldest of the children of this union is Fred E. Brown, born Feb. 17, 1857, who married Abigail R. Byles, of Ashford. Mr. Brown is engaged in the insurance business in Bridgeport, Conn., and is a skillful musician, being especially expert as a cornetist. To him and his wife have been born two children, Ruth M. and Richard H. Anna P. Brown was born Oct. 8, 1859, and is at present engaged in teaching. Miss Brown has a superior education acquired at the Westfield (Mass.) Normal School, and she was for several years principal of writing in the West Springfield and Chicopee high schools. Herbert S. Brown was born March 12, 1862; on attaining his majority he went to Bismarck, N. D., and for about sixteen years resided west of the Mississippi. During the Spanish war he joined a regiment of the regular army in Texas, and went to Manila, from which place after more than a year's service, he returned home with impaired health. He has since regained his strength, and is now living at home with his parents. Robert H., the youngest child in the family, was born July 1, 1870, and was educated at the Willimantic high school and at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, at Providence, R. I. He is now chief clerk in the office of the superintendent of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., at Providence.

As a Republican John A. Brown has been one of the most active promoters of his party in Windham county, and although Ashford is Democratic he has held many important offices of a local nature. He has served on the board of relief, as grand juror, town auditor, registrar of voters, school visitor and justice of the peace. In 1858 he represented the town at the session held at New Haven, and was an officer of internal revenue under Com. Washburn. He is a charter member of the Ashford Grange, of which he has served as lecturer, and he is a member of the T. G. Brown Post, No. 79, of Chaplin, of which he has served as quartermaster. When a young man he united with the Westford Congregational Church, and was afterward transferred to Ashford, of which latter church he has been a deacon for the past twenty years. He is now church clerk and treasurer. His wife and daughter are also members and active workers in the Ashford church.

ABEL SIMMONS, the grandfather of Mrs. Brown, was a farmer during his active life in Ashford. He married Hannah Holmes, a relative of Oliver Wendell Holmes, who bore him six children as follows: John, a lawyer, and graduate of Middlebury College, who married a Miss Bell; Alva, who married Tryphena Burnham, and died in Ashford; Abel, who married and died in Windsor, Conn.; Benjamin C., the father of Mrs. Brown; Tabatha, who was the third wife of Dr. Joseph Palmer, and died in Ashford; and Percy, the first wife of Gen. Stephen Palmer, who died at Warrenville.

Benjamin C. Simmons was born in Ashford and previous to his marriage conducted a store in that town. He later located in the eastern part of the town for about fourteen years, removing eventually to Ashford Village, where he died, March 29, 1866, at the age of seventy-five years. He was a Democrat in politics, and held numerous offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen. He was an excellent penman, and this accomplishment made him the undisputed choice of both parties for the office of town clerk, a position maintained for thirty-one years. He was also probate clerk for one term, and he represented the town in the Legislature for a term. He was a prominent man withal, and popular. He married Mariette Byles, daughter of Ebenezer and Betsey (Marcy) Byles, who survived him, and died in Springfield, Mass., Jan. 30, 1884, at the age of seventy-seven. This couple are buried in Ashford Village cemetery. To them were born five children, viz.: Laura A., unmarried and living in Springfield, Mass.; Harriett, also unmarried and living in Springfield; Mrs. Brown; Edwin C., deceased when young; Ellen P., first wife of Clark Fenton, and afterward married to Henry L. Goodrich, with whom she is now living in Springfield, Mass. By her first marriage there was one daughter, Marion E., at present attending Wellesley College.

CHAUNCEY EVERETT BROWN, a very successful farmer and one of the representative citizens of Columbia, Tolland Co., Conn., was born in Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1825, and in the course of his long and useful life has developed those manly qualities and that upright character which make him so respected and esteemed. His first schooling was received in the old brick school house in Hebron, and after his ninth year in the north district in Columbia. While he was still a young boy he was thrown on his own resources, and supported himself by working on the farm during the summer, attending school in the winter. As a young man he still followed farming in Columbia and Norwich, being employed for a short time in a butcher shop in Hartford.

Mr. Brown was married April 2, 1851, to Mary A. Downer, a daughter of Simeon P. and Lucy (Lee) Downer. Mrs. Brown died Oct. 24, 1868, in Norwich, Conn., having become the mother of five children: (1) Isabella S., born Oct. 28, 1852, married Frank W. Woodward, of Melrose, Mass., and is the mother of the following children: Walter E., who is married, and has a family, Madison, who is also married, and has a family; Alice; Carrie; and Mary. (2) Horace Brown was born March 6, 1855, married Belle Kelly, of Talcottville, Conn., and has been engaged in the paper manufacturing interests at that point, where he has lately had a meat market. (3) Mary Louise, born March 23, 1858, is the wife of Edward P. Lyman, of Columbia, where he holds the office of town clerk. (4) Jane Adelaide, born April 24, 1860, died July 17, 1863. (5) Julia Annie, born March 1, 1863, married Abbott Little, of Columbia, and has one son, Horace.

The second marriage of C. E. Brown occurred March 14, 1869, when he was wedded to Fanny W. Bascom, by whom he had one son, Frank A., born March 25, 1870, and for the last ten years a telegrapher, being in the employ of the Western Union at New London, Conn., since 1899.

The Bascom family is an old one in their part of the State, and its original representative there was named Bille Bascom, who was born June 30, 1776, dying May 14, 1841. His wife, Mary Abel was born May 15, 1775, and died Sept. 3, 1831. They had two children: Gerard, the father of Mrs. Brown, who was born Sept. 26, 1804, and died Nov. 30, 1858; Almira. Bille Bascom was probably born in Lebanon, Conn.; he purchased the farm on the north side of the reservoir, which for many years was known as the Bascom homestead, and where Mr. Brown now resides. Mr. Bascom engaged in both farming and coopering, his cooper shop being located by the pond on a spot well known to the family. He died while plowing.

Gerard Bascom married Eunice Brown, a daughter of Ephraim and Hannah (Holmes) Brown, a native of Stonington, Conn., where she was born June 23, 1808. Her death occurred Nov. 11, 1890. A life-time resident on the farm where he was born Gerard Bascom carried on coopering in comparison with his father in earlier days, but in his later years gave his entire attention to his farm work. Like his father he dropped dead while employed in the open air. To Gerard Bascom and his wife were born: Mary E., born Sept. 28, 1831, the wife of Levi C. Grant, of Vernon; an infant; Fanny Wood, the wife of C. E. Brown, born June 10, 1834.

C. E. Brown has been an active farmer for twenty-eight years, occupying what is now the Buell farm, near his present home. For some five years he was quite extensively engaged in lumbering, doing contract work, getting out railroad supplies and ship timber. In his early life Mr. Brown voted the Democratic ticket, for a number of years was independent in his political relations, and for many years has been a staunch Republican. In 1881 he represented his town in the General Assembly and served on the committee on the Sale of Land. Again in 1881 he was sent to the Assembly, where he was made a member of the committee on Military Affairs. For nine years he was a selectman of the town, being chairman of the board for a part this time. As assessor, constable, on the school committee and on the board of relief he has served his town well, and his appointment by Gov. Bulkeley in 1882 as a county commissioner was regarded as a creditable selection of a good citizen to an important position.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown are both members of the Congregational Church, his connection dating from 1870, that of his wife from 1859. He has served on various church committees, and at different times has acted as collector. In 1857 he united with the I. O. O. F. at Hebron, and continued his membership until the local lodge was dissolved. At the present time he is a member of the Columbia Grange.

Stephen Brown, the grandfather of Chauncey E., was born in Buckley Hill in Colchester, and spent his life on the farm where he was born. He was an extensive farmer and was father to the following children: Russell, the father of Chauncey E. Brown; Chauncey, who removed to Harpersfield, N. Y.; Jerusha, who never married, and lived in New York; Julia, the wife of Roswell Hotchkiss, who lived in New York, and afterward married Miles Hotchkiss.

Russell Brown was born on Buckley Hill, in Colchester, Conn., Jan. 3, 1789, and was married to Wealthy Strong, Oct. 18, 1814. Mrs. Brown was a daughter of Benjamin Strong, and was born May 1, 1790. To this union came the following children: Harriet, born Sept. 24, 1815, who married Aaron Youmans, lived in Columbia, and had a daughter, Mona; Bassett, who died in childhood; Abbetta, who died in childhood; Wealthy, born June 26, 1821, who married William Foote, and lived in Colchester; Egbert, born Sept. 12, 1823, married to Jane Elizabeth Wright, who died long since, leaving no living children; Chauncey E., born Oct. 17, 1825, who had two wives, as noted above; Albert, born March 12, 1830, who married Isabelle Little, and after her death, Susan E. Wright, a daughter of Elihu and Laura (Phelps) Wright. She was born Jan. 19, 1829, and has one son, Albert Everett.

Russell Brown was a carpenter and a joiner, and lived in Hebron the most of his life, where his family was born. In 1854 he moved into Columbia, locating in the west part of the town, and there he died.

ANTHONY. The great-grandfather of Jonathan Anthony, of Windham county, Conn., Gould Anthony, was a native of South Portsmouth, R. I., where he died about 1840 at an advanced age, and one of his descendants, William G. Anthony, remembers the old man clad in the Colonial dress, knee breeches and cut-away coat.

His son, Jonathan, the grandfather, was also born in Portsmouth, where he grew up and married Rachel Church, a granddaughter of Capt. Caleb Church, who was distinguished for gallantry in fighting the Indians, and was quite an extensive farmer, at South Portsmouth, where he died at the age of eighty-two. His first wife died when but thirty, and he married again, but his children were all born of his first marriage. To Jonathan and Rachel Anthony were born: Reuben and Peter, who both died at South Portsmouth, Mass.; Martha, who married Edmund Albrough and lives at Fall River, Mass.; Caleb; Gould, living at West Portsmouth; Abby, who died in middle life; Joseph, deceased, who lived on the old homestead at South Portsmouth, Rhode Island.

The father, Caleb Anthony, was born April 8, 1812, in South Portsmouth, R. I., and died at Scotland, Conn., Nov. 2, 1884. Growing up in South Portsmouth, R. I., he engaged in farming, but when a young man removed to Fair Haven, Mass., where he married Asenath Gammans, who was born July 16, 1809, and died Sept. 19, 1887. After marriage he engaged in farming in Fair Haven, and eventually located in Scotland, Conn., where he purchased a farm and operated it. As his health was not good, the greater portion of the farm work fell upon the shoulders of his boys as soon as they grew old enough. In politics he was a Whig and later a Republican and took an active interest in town affairs, as well as those of national import. Both he and his excellent wife were members of the Christian Church of Howard Valley, town of Hampton, and for many years the father was a deacon in the same.

To Caleb and Asenath Anthony was born a family of eight children. Abbie X., born Oct. 31, 1834, married March 13, 1853, Daniel K. Haskins, of California; William Gammans, born April 22, 1836, is an ex-blacksmith and farmer on Pudding Hill in the northeast part of the town of Scotland, and was a representative in 1873 (he married Harriet M. Kimball and has a family as follows,—Lewis, of Springfield, Mass.; Millisa J., wife of David Wilson, Jr., of Scotland; Charles E., farmer of Scotland; Henry E., of Willimantic; Edwin L., farmer of Scotland; Grace E. married Walter Butler); the third child of Caleb and Asenath Anthony was Jonathan, born June 11, 1839; Gould, born Nov. 29, 1840, died at New Orleans, La., June 24, 1864; Eliza, born June 16, 1843, unmarried, resides in Canterbury, Conn.; Mary E., born Jan. 1, 1844, married Rufus T. Haskins, an ex-sea captain who now resides in Scotland and is a farmer (their children are Rufus C., Leander O., Jessie A., Flora M. and Edith A.); Caleb was born June 15, 1851; Asenath, born June 25, 1854, married May 1, 1873, Oscar Allen, of Hanover, Connecticut.

JONATHAN ANTHONY was born in Fair Haven, Mass., and there attended the local schools. When the family removed to Scotland, about the time he was fifteen, he had the opportunity of attending the Pudding Hill District schools for several terms. After finishing his education, he learned the trade of carpenter and mason, and has followed them the greater portion of his life, although he has also operated a fine farm. In 1880 he built his present modern home, which is fitted with conveniences and is a very comfortable residence.

Mr. Anthony was married to Fannie M. Burnham, Jan. 10, 1861, and to them were born: Minnie, born Aug. 24, 1863, who married first a Mr. Whitford and second Ed. Cramer and lives in Willimantic, Conn.; Albert B., born Aug. 3, 1868, who died Aug. 27, 1868; Nellie B., born March 29, 1870, wife of John Marshall Gager, of Willimantic; Albert E., born May 15, 1872, a machinist, residing in Marshfield, Conn., who married Orrie Potter; Fannie M., born Jan. 23, 1875, who died March 26, 1898, the wife of John Hillhouse, of Willimantic, Conn.; Andrew M., born Nov. 5, 1876, at home; Frank W., born Dec. 7, 1879, in the employ of John M. Gager, of Willimantic.

Mr. Anthony is a Republican in politics and has served most acceptably in various town offices, having been assessor three years, and for a number of years chairman of the board of relief. In 1889 and 1890 he represented the town in the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, and served upon the important committee on Claims, in which capacity he rendered efficient service. The family are members of the Christian Church, but as that denomination has held no regular service for several years in that vicinity Mr. Anthony and his people attend the Congregational Church of Scotland and are highly esteemed therein. Mr. Anthony is a charter member of Shetucker Grange, which was organized with twenty-four charter members, June 10, 1887, and he was its first treasurer. He is also a member of Quinebaug Pomona, No. 2, of which he was master in 1890, and he was master of the local Grange in 1895, 1896 and 1900, besides holding other Grange offices.

Caleb Anthony, Jr., is a stone mason, and farmer on Pudding Hill, and was a representative in 1887. He was married May 1, 1873, to Miss Nellie Sullivan and has the following family: Mabel W., who married Charles Kenyon, and lives in Canterbury, Conn.; Gould Roy, now studying for the ministry; Mary M., and Mattie E., both school teachers.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BURNHAM is one of the most venerable citizens of Willimantic, Windham Co., Conn., where he is respected for both his long and useful life and his high character. The Burnham family, of which he is the best known representative in Willimantic, came from England in Colonial times.

Deacon John Burnham, Sr., of Ipswich, Mass., was born in England in 1618, and died in 1694. He located at Chebasco, which afterward was known as Ipswich, about 1635, and two years later joined the Pequot expedition, receiving for his services at that time a grant of land. He was a deacon in the church, and the owner of a considerable tract of land.

Ebenezer Burnham, grandson of Deacon John, was born in 1691, and removed to Hampton, Conn., where he died in 1746. Dorathy was the christian name of his wife, and they were ancestors of George W. Burnham. The Burnham family has had an honorable history in Windham.

George W. Burnham was born Dec. 7, 1818, in Milford, Union Co., Ohio, a son of William and Sally (Kazar) Burnham. His father was born in Windham, Conn., and his mother in Canterbury. The father was a son of William Burnham, and the mother a daughter of Samuel Kazar. Shortly after their marriage the parents removed to Ohio, which was then the "Far West." The journey, which was made entirely by team, required six weeks' time, and was made by a company from the same neighborhood. William Burnham located at what is now Milford, Ohio, and it was while he was living there that he became united with the "Shakers." Fever and ague, then widely prevalent, drove the family back to Connecticut in 1824. At that time there were two children in the family, George W. and Eliza, who afterward became the wife of Rev. Dr. Frederick Coe, both a clergyman and a physician, and at one time practicing his profession of the healing art in Willimantic. He was a clergyman in the Christian Church. The homeward journey was made by wagon, and lay through Wheeling, Va., Harrisburg, Lancaster and Philadelphia, Penn., and New York, and six weeks intervened between their starting and their arrival in their native State. On account of his connection with the Shaker movement Mr. Burnham settled in Enfield, where there was a settlement of that persuasion, and there he became prominent in its work. He conducted meetings, and was probably the best informed man in the settlement. However his faith weakened, and in 1834 he left the Shaker settlement and customs, and removed to Windham, where he died in August, 1835, at the age of thirty-nine years. His widow passed away the following year at Sterling, Conn., at the age of thirty-six. Both were buried in Scotland, Connecticut.

George Washington Burnham spent the first six years of his life in the frontier regions of Ohio where he had his first schooling in a school taught by his father, and where he laid the foundation of that rugged frame and iron constitution that have been marked factors of his success in life. Many incidents and experiences of the long journey back to Connecticut made by his parents when he was but six years of age are still remembered by him. Until he was fifteen years old his time was spent among the Shakers at Enfield, where about all his schooling was received. His intellectual vigor was marked, and had he enjoyed such opportunities as professional men need in early life, he would have filled a much larger and more important field.

When George W. Burnham was a lad of fifteen years of age, he came to Windham, to make his home with an uncle, Lucius Burnham, a farmer, and with his coming to this home the school days of the young lad came to an end. Yet with such limited chances, he was competent to teach school, and did teach when only seventeen years of age. In Sterling, Conn., he taught at a salary of eight dollars a month, and was "boarded round" the district. In the Christian District, in the town of Windham, he taught for ten dollars a month, and was "boarded round." His father wished him to go on with this work, but the son knew that the finances of the family would not permit it, and that his help at home was more needed. He spent one winter cutting cordwood at forty-two cents a cord, and in this way rendered substantial assistance to his parents at a time when they needed it. After the death of his father, his mother lived in Sterling, and made a heroic fight against consumption; hearing of some medicine made in Providence, said to be good for her trouble, she wanted it, and George W. went after it, walking the entire distance to Providence, some twenty-six miles, between nine o'clock in the morning and two in the afternoon. He found the medicine, returning the next day in about the same time. His endurance was remarkable, and his athletic build and giant frame rendered such a task easy.

Mr. Burnham remained in Windham county until about 1837, when he entered the employ of Chester Hibbard, a truckman and expressman at Hartford, for whom he worked about two years; and then in company with a Mr. Fox started in that business for himself. Their first considerable contract was the hauling of the old strap rail that was used on the railroad from Hartford to New Haven. While in Hartford Mr. Burnham did tasks that but one other man in the city could equal. On one occasion he up-ended a giant hogshead of sugar, that weighed between 1200 and 1400 pounds, a task he afterward repeated many times. On another occasion he lifted a two-year old steer entirely from the ground; and again, standing five steps back from a string on a level with his chin, he leaped over it. His height is two inches over six feet, and he was widely known for his great strength. In the spring of 1840 he located at Springfield, where he was engaged in trucking and teaming some two years in company with George Ensworth. Two years later he returned to Windham, where he bought a farm, in the cultivation of which he was engaged until 1852, when he moved to Windham Center, renting his farm for a time and then selling it. In Windham Center he was engaged, in partnership with his cousin, Edwin E. Burnham, in conducting a country store. In 1856 he bought the general store of George Lathrop, on Main street in Willimantic, Rufus Huntington being his partner for a year or more. After that time Mr. Burnham conducted his business alone. At a later period Mr. Burnham bought the property of the Universalist Church, and converting it into a business block, conducted a grocery store in it for a number of years. For about a year he was in the wholesale flour and grocery business in Norwich, and then returning to Willimantic, established a real estate and fire insurance business, which he successfully conducted until about 1873. In that year he became interested in Hartford, becoming a member of the firm of Burnham & Kellogg, furniture dealers, on Asylum street, near Trumbull street. This arrangement continued a year and a half, when he sold out. He continued to reside in Willimantic, where his active business career was concluded with the settling up of the estate of his son, at one time a prominent merchant in that city. At the present time his extensive real estate and other investments require close attention, and notwithstanding his advanced years he attends to all his interests personally.

About 1867 Mr. Burnham built his home on Pleasant street, and in 1876 the house west of it. In 1874 he built a tenement house on Church street, and at different times has put up other buildings. At the present time he is an extensive owner of real estate in Willimantic.

Up to 1860 Mr. Burnham was a Democrat, but the controversies of the time caused him to become a Republican that year, and he voted for Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he represented Windham in the General Assembly, his patriotism being at that time at "highest mark." For a number of years he was a burgess in Willimantic, and took strong ground for needed improvements, his most vigorous effort being exerted in behalf of the excellent water works system that now marks the city. For four years he was water commissioner, and no more efficient official ever served the city in that capacity. On the organization of the "Venerable Club" of Windham, July 5, 1902, Mr. Burnham was made its president.

Mr. Burnham was married Jan. 1, 1840, in the home of Elder Bullard, the officiating minister in Hampton, to Miss Miranda Smith, who was born in Scotland, Conn., Nov. 16, 1818, the daughter of Palmer and Mary (Avery) Smith. To this union have come: (1) Sarah M., born in Springfield, Mass., April 3, 1841, who died when less than five years old; (2) Delia, born in Scotland, Conn., May 28, 1843, living at home; (3) George A., born in Scotland, July 18, 1845, who married Nancy Babcock, became a prominent merchant in Willimantic, and died there Oct. 4, 1879, leaving two daughters, Estella, now the wife of Lewis Valden, and Agnes, now Mrs. Charles Stewart; (4) Evvie, born Jan. 23, 1848, in Scotland, who married Henry Edgerton, May 20, 1871, and is the mother of one son, John B.; (5) Sarah A., born in Scotland, Oct. 18, 1851, who married M. E. Lincoln, and died Jan. 10, 1877, leaving one son, Louis B. Mrs. Burnham died April 18, 1899, and was buried in Willimantic, after a wedded life of a few months less than sixty years in duration.

Mr. Burnham has been for several years a trustee of the Co-operative Savings Society, of which he is now a director and one of the vice-presidents.

Mr. Burnham possesses the happy faculty of growing old gracefully, and presents no external evidence of his age. His step is elastic, his eye is bright, and his natural force but little abated. His boyhood spent among the Shakers fitted him for a moral and helpful life. When about sixty years old he wrote two dramas to illustrate the faith, belief and works of the Shakers, one being "A Family Leaving the Shakers" and the other "A Darkey who Desired to Join the Shakers." These plays combined wit, pathos and ludicrous situations, and showed a literary ability on the part of Mr. Burnham of more than ordinary strength. They were produced on three different occasions, with much satisfaction and profit. The cast demanded fifteen young men and twenty-five young ladies. Mr. Burnham took the leading part, the staging and the entire supervision being under his direction, and he was the coach and prompter, directing the singing and dancing himself. The real double shuffle was done by him, "a feat which he can still accomplish, in his eighty-fourth year."

Mr. Burnham was always fond of his children and grandchildren, and in 1893 his four grandchildren accompanied him on a two-weeks' visit to the World's Fair at Chicago, going by way of the national Capital, and returning by way of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Burnham has a deep religious nature, and when he left the Shakers, inducements were held out for him to return. At the age of eighteen, having been instructed that the Bible was the Word of God, and possessing much intelligence he became a Universalist on Bible grounds. In 1856, having read Spiritualistic papers, through the instruction and guidance of Mrs. Tuttle, a Spiritualistic lecturer, he embraced that faith. In 1857 a State Association of Spiritualists was formed and Mr. Burnham made president, a position he presently resigned, but to which he was again elected in 1869, for the purpose of effecting an organization for camp meeting purposes at Niantic. Of this organization he was president until 1881. For several years prior to 1881 he was very prominent in the meetings at Lake Pleasant, taking charge of a choir of about twenty. As the Niantic association did not meet all the requirements of the State, a second organization was made by him in 1886, of which he was president until 1898. At the national convention of Spiritualists, at Washington, D. C., the Times of that city, named him the "Gladstone of the Convention," perhaps partly because of his towering frame, and partly for his venerable appearance. Mr. Burnham has been called the "father of Spiritualism in Connecticut," and his zeal and devotion to the cause have been marked. Time and money have been spent by him for its sake without limit. From a boy he has led an exemplary life, above suspicion and with a modest dignity above reproach. He is younger at his age than many men twenty years his junior.

A. B. PARKER, cashier of the Co-Operative Savings Society of Connecticut, at Rockville, Tolland county, is one of the most highly respected citizens of that place, who has seen the growth and development of the city from its infancy. He was born at Amherst, Mass., in 1827, a son of Augustin and Olive (Sparks) Parker, who removed to Vernon when our subject was but a child.

Augustin Parker was a native of Mansfield, Conn., where he was born in 1800, a son of Ephraim and Lucy (Pryor) Parker, the former of whom came from Mansfield, Conn., to Vernon about 1818. He was a mechanical genius, and could do almost any kind of work. For a number of years he conducted the hotel at Dobsonville, and his death occurred there late in the thirties. Ephraim and Lucy (Pryor) Parker were the parents of the following children: Augustin, Lucius, Ephraim, Joseph, William, Jerusha, Lucy, Almena and Emeline.

Augustin Parker was a machinist by trade, mechanical skill being also exhibited by all of his brothers. In 1846 he moved to Rockville, where he found material for his genius to work upon, entering what was then known as the Stone Mill, and through life he continued to follow the trade of machinist in the different mills of this city, making many improvements and inventions. At one time in his business career he was master mechanic for the Holt Thread Co. For some years he lived at Amherst, Mass., and also at Rainbow, Conn., being employed in a mill at the latter place when Charles Denslow was the proprietor. He married Olive Sparks, a daughter of Jonas Sparks, a well digger by trade, who lost his life while engaged in that work. The children of this union who lived to adult age were: Jonas, who lived until 1898, dying in Willimantic, Conn.; A. B.; Walter M., of Columbia, Conn.; Sarah M., now Mrs. Francis Crane, of Stafford Springs; and Victoria L., who married James Lasbury, and died in Rockville. Augustin Parker was a Whig, later becoming a Republican, and was an efficient office holder locally. His death occurred in Rockville in 1867, and he was laid to rest in Grove Hill cemetery, where his wife also rests, she having lived to the age of eighty, and both were worthy members of the Congregational Church. After removing to Rockville he connected himself with the Odd Fellow order.

When our subject was of an age to begin his pursuit of an education he was placed in the Vernon district school, under the firm administration of Ira Thrall, and with various interruptions continued his studies until he reached the age of sixteen, when an opportunity offered, which was eagerly taken advantage of, for a short time in the Connecticut Literary Institute, then a noted school located at Suffield. At the age of thirteen he entered the mill of Peter Dobson, in Vernon, earning $1 per week, working in the mill through the summer and going to school in winter; and when he was fifteen years old he was earning $5 per month and board, working for N. O. Kellogg. About this time his father was operating a small shop near the present site of the Alvord Paper Mill, where he was making wooden bobbins for jack spinning, and in this little shop A. B. Parker began his career as a machinist. When his parents removed to Rockville he entered what was then the Stone Mill, then under the superintendency of Halsey Fuller, and began "tending cards." By working hard he could earn only $14.50 per month, and with his father and two brothers working, the combined wages amounted to but $3.50 per day. The father then started a small shop adjoining the old foundry, on East Main street, and in that shop his son completed the training in which he was interested and in which line he has been so eminently successful. Until his father sold his business to Cyrus White, Mr. Parker continued to work with him, and remained a short time with Mr. White, and then accompanied his father to Waterville, Maine, where they remained for some years engaged in the manufacture of pumps, our subject becoming a salesman for the same, and also engaged in the wholesale handling of tubing.

In 1853 Mr. Parker went to Hartford, where he was employed by the Woodruff & Beach Co. as a machinist, but the winter of 1855-6 was spent in Beloit, Wis., where he was engaged in making reaping and mowing machines, remaining there until 1859, when he returned to the old company in Hartford, where he was engaged at the outbreak of the war. In August, 1862, he enlisted as a wagoner in Co. B, 22nd Conn. V. I., but a week later became a private, and was mustered out of the service July 7, 1863, and again returned to the firm of Woodruff & Beach, in Hartford. Until 1866 he continued in Hartford, when he, with his brothers Jonas and Walter, went to West Stafford, Conn., and engaged in the business of spooling thread, removing the business the next year to Willington, and abandoned it a year later, as it was not a success. Our subject then came to Rockville and took charge of the spooling room in Clark Holt's Thread Mill, one year later becoming master mechanic at the Florence Mill, in Rockville, in which capacity he remained for twelve years and four months, or, until the mill was sold. He then went to Glenville, town of Greenwich, Conn., and the following year was made master mechanic in the Glenwood Woolen Mill, later was for three years master mechanic in a woolen mill at Stamford, Conn., when he returned to Rockville and engaged in the hardware business with R. I. Barber, buying out William M. Corbin, and successfully conducted this enterprise until 1895, when he sold out to R. I. Barber.

In the fall of 1895 Mr. Parker became the cashier of the Co-operative Savings Society of Connecticut, at Rockville, which, with an insurance business, he has followed ever since, conducting the affairs with correctness and ability. Socially he is a member of Burpee Post, G. A. R., of Rockville, and of Fayette Lodge, A. F. & A. M. In politics he is now a Republican, but was a Whig in former days. Two years of service were given in the city council, and he has also served as assessor.

On Dec. 23, 1851, A. B. Parker was married to Miss Ann Adams Hooper, a native of England, who was born near Stonehouse, a daughter of William Hooper. One daughter blessed this union, Ida L., born in Waterville, Maine, who married Dr. F. J. Brown, of Waterbury, Conn., and has two children, Leslie Parker and Bernice. In September, 1892, Mr. and Mrs. Parker began a tour of the world. Going by way of San Francisco, they visited the Sandwich Islands, the principal countries in Australia, Ceylon, going thence via the Suez Canal and Port Said to Italy, France and England, visiting the chief points of interest and in some places staying several weeks. After an absence of eight months they returned to the United States.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Parker are valued members of the Methodist Church, in which he is a member of the board of trustees, has been a class leader, and both are well known and respected in the city. Both physically and mentally Mr. Parker displays a remarkable activity, and is one of the citizens of whom Rockville may be proud.

SAMUEL WIBBERLEY, one of the highly successful and public-spirited farmers of Canterbury, Windham Co., Conn., is a son of William Wibberley, a native of Hinchcliff Mills, Yorkshire, England, who was born Sept. 23, 1823. William Wibberley grew to maturity in his native country, where he learned the trade of weaver. At the age of twenty-four years, he came to America and located at Holderness, N. H., where for two or three years he was employed as a weaver and spinner. At the expiration of that time he removed to Oxford, Mass., and later to Webster, Mass. Finally he came to Canterbury, where he purchased a farm, and died on it at the age of fifty-two years.

While residing in North Oxford, William Wibberley was united in marriage to Eliza Jackson, a native of County Kerry, Ireland, who died in 1853, aged thirty years. To them were born the following children: Samuel, born Nov. 11, 1853; Hannah Jane, in March, 1856, wife of James Battey, of Nutley, New Jersey.

Samuel Wibberley was born in Webster, Mass., and as his father was a mill operator, his boyhood was spent in various places, including Millville, Moosup, Conn., Sterling, Conn., and Broad Brook, Conn. His opportunities for receiving an education were necessarily limited, but he made the most of them, and has since added to his store of learning by reading and close observation. When only thirteen years of age, he entered a mill at Broad Brook, Conn., and for a period of twelve years followed the business of weaver, working in Caroline Mills, R. I., and at South Coventry and Versailles, in Connecticut. In 1875 he located in Canterbury upon his father's farm, and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits. Being a man of energy, he is meeting with well deserved success. The farm property consists of 140 acres of excellent land, on which Mr. Wibberley engages in general farming, and devotes eight acres to a dairy. Part of his land is in timber, which he is felling and disposing of at a good figure.

On Oct. 23, 1881, Mr. Wibberley was united in marriage with Miss Ann Janette Exley, a daughter of Nathan and Janette (Riddell) Exley, an extensive sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. To Mr. and Mrs. Wibberley were born children as follows: Eva Maude, born Sept. 25, 1882; Edna Louise, June 15, 1884; Walter Henry, Nov. 11, 1887; Malcolm Riddell, Sept. 26, 1891; Lois Maxwell, Nov. 13, 1893; Florence Irene, Jan. 6, 1898. In political matters Mr. Wibberley is a staunch Republican, and has served as selectman one year with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the general public. He has also served as constable and on the school committee. Mrs. Wibberley is a consistent member of the Lisbon Congregational Church, and the entire family are very highly respected and esteemed in the community in which they make their home.

CYRUS LEE, a very highly respected citizen who is now living retired, after an active and useful career, resides at Somers, Tolland county.

Jesse Lee, the grandfather of Cyrus, was born in Killingly, Conn., and was a son of John Lee, and a grandson of Samuel Lee, of Watertown, Mass. The Lees have long been settled in this country, one branch of the family moving to the South, and furnishing the Lees, of Virginia; another branch located in Massachusetts, and from them is derived the family of which Cyrus Lee is a worthy representative. In 1874 Mr. Lee moved to the vicinity of Vernon, Vt., where he purchased timber land. His cabin was in the woods, and he lived a life of hardship and vicissitudes in his endeavor to clear up his land and convert it into a productive farm. His wife spun the cloth for their clothing, and the table was supplied with game from the forests. Mr. Lee married Eunice Morgan, and died in 1828, at an advanced age. To them were born: John, who married Polly Peeler, and resided in Vernon, Vt., where he was a farmer; Jesse, who married Content Thayer, was a farmer near Vernon, and was killed by falling from a wagon; Eli, who married Rebecca Stebbins, and was a farmer at Vernon; Caleb, the father of Cyrus Lee; Lucy, who married a Mr. Streeter, and died in Vernon.

Caleb Lee was born in Vernon, Vt., and followed farming. A fifer in the local militia, he was a well known musician, and also had a reputation as an athlete. In the days when wrestling bouts were a matter of public interest, and a feature of public gatherings, it is said he never found the man who could lay him on his back. Caleb Lee married Eunice Pelton, of Tolland, Conn., and died at the age of forty years. To them were born seven children: Orilla married Aaron Ellis, and died in South Wilbraham, Mass. Sophronia, widow of Lester Davis, resides in Somers. Juliana married Urbane Bartlett, and died in Somers. Charles married Harriet Beckwith, and died in Somers, where he was a farmer and carpenter; Charles and his wife died the same day, and were buried in one grave. Cyrus is mentioned below. Caleb married Ann Topliff, and is a farmer in Somers. Chandler was employed as a railroad brakeman, and was killed by a train near Dayton, Ohio. Mrs. Eunice Lee married for her second husband Loren Wallace, of Somers, and died in that place at the age of sixty-nine years.

Cyrus Lee was born Feb. 10, 1820, in Vernon, Vt., and after the death of his father, which occurred when he was a small boy, he was taken to Somers, Conn., before he was eight years of age. The mother was left with a farm and a number of children, who were obliged to commence earning their living at a very early age. When eight years of age young Cyrus was taken into the home of William Patten, father of the late N. Patten, of Somers, and remained with him until he reached the age of fourteen years, working on the farm for his board and clothes and a few short months attendance at the district school in midwinter. From his fourteenth year Cyrus was employed as a farm hand, at the age of eighteen years being judged capable of doing a man's work, and receiving ten dollars a month and board, full wages for the times. When he was twenty-three years of age he married and at the time had but little capital save his strong arm and stout heart. For six years he worked a small farm on shares, and with his savings bought a little place in the eastern part of Somers, going deeply in debt for it. Doing well, he bought a second farm, which he cultivated for thirteen years when he sold it and bought a farm of 240 acres in South Wilbraham, Mass., incurring a debt of $1500, which he paid off in a year and a half. Then he was a successful farmer for fifteen years, at the end of which time he sold the place and purchased a smaller farm on which he followed farming until November, 1898, when he left the place in charge of his son, Homer W., and came back to Somers where he had bought a home. Here his wife and himself after a long and busy life, are spending the last years in a well deserved release from active work. Mr. Lee is a self-made man in every sense of the word, and has reared a large family in comfort. His success in life has been largely insured by his industrious and devoted wife, who has been a true helpmeet to him.

Cyrus Lee and Sarah C. Cady were married March 9, 1843, by the Rev. James P. Terry, Somers, Conn. Mrs. Sarah (Cady) Lee was born March 9, 1821, daughter of Jesse and Abigail (Williams) Cady, and a lineal descendant of Rev.

John Williams, of Deerfield, Mass., who was taken by the Indians to Canada. The Williamses furnished more ministers than any other family who ever came to this country. Sixty of the descendants of Rev. John were in college at one time. Mrs. Lee is also descended from Rev. John Davenport, the founder of New Haven, Connecticut.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee celebrated their Golden Wedding in 1893, all the children and grandchildren being present, and March 9, 1903, with their family again around them and still in good health they celebrated their sixtieth anniversary. Of their children, (1) Sarah E., born May 16, 1844, married Walter Pease Nov. 2, 1871, and resides at Hampden, Mass. They have two children, Robert and Lina. (2) Warren F., born Nov. 5, 1845, died Jan. 20, 1851. (3) Anna S., born Aug. 1, 1848, was married Nov. 19, 1882, to Rev. Edward French, a minister of the Christian Church, at Ketchum, N. Y. (4) Frances Delia, born March 11, 1851, was married May 2, 1872, to John Q. Adams, of Hampden, Mass., where he is a wheelwright and is town clerk. Their children are Edward, Herbert, and Emory. (5) John M., born Jan. 31, 1853, married Alice Payne, Dec. 25, 1877, was a druggist, and died Sept. 20, 1881, at Pueblo, Colo. (6) Albert W., born Dec. 3, 1855, married Elizabeth Parsons, March 9, 1880, and is a farmer in Hampden. They have one child, Florence. (7) Alice H., born Nov. 22, 1858, is unmarried. (8) Homer W., born Oct. 22, 1862, married Nellie Griswold, and is a farmer now living on his father's farm in Hampden. They have one child, Edna. (9) Josephine L., born Feb. 24, 1865, married Henry H. Palmer Jan. 3, 1888, and resides at Warehouse Point, Conn., where her husband works as an architect and builder. They have two children, Bertha and Ruby.

Cyrus Lee is a Republican, but has never given much attention to practical politics as he has no desire for official honors, and is willing to attend strictly to his own affairs. Mr. Lee became a member of the Congregational Church at Somers, Jan. 1, 1842, and his wife joined in September, 1838. Mr. Lee is a public-spirited man, one of liberal heart, and he and his wife hold a high position in the community.

EGBERT BASS, a successful farmer and lifetime resident of the town of Scotland, Windham Co., Conn., descends from one of the old and representative families of Scotland town, his grandfather Ebenezer Bass having married Ruth Waldo, and lived and died in that locality.

The father, John Bass, was born on the Bass homestead, in the west central part of the present town of Scotland, and followed farming successfully, and the greater part of his active life was spent upon the farm he purchased north of Scotland Centre, on the road known as Pinch street. In politics he was a Democrat, but for a short period voted the Abolition ticket. Three times was he married, his first wife being Eunice Tracy, by whom he had three daughters: Maria, deceased, who married first, Robert Robinson, and second, Darius Bacon; Lydia, married to Epaphras Safford; Susan, wife of Dwight Cary, of Scotland (see sketch elsewhere). The second wife was a widow, Mrs. Betsey Martin, nee Smith, a daughter of Elezur Smith, who died, aged forty-two, leaving: Eunice, who married Nathan Morse, lived in East Woodstock, and is now deceased; Nancy, who married David Hovey, and located at Urbana, Ohio; Cornelia, wife of George Hovey, of Scotland; Egbert; Ellen, a widow, a resident of Hartford, who first married William Burnham, and second, Rufus Huntington; John, who was scalded to death at the age of two; Edgar, a farmer of North Coventry, who married Sarah F. Andrews, of Scotland. The third marriage of the father was with Maria Tracy, nee Safford, by whom he had one daughter, Jane, the wife of Samuel Ashley, of Scotland.

Egbert Bass, the subject of this article, was born on Pinch street, Scotland, Jan. 29, 1828, where he grew to maturity and attended the brick school north of his home, which has since been torn away. Mr. Bass remained upon the old home farm, and after his father's death, purchased the interest of the other heirs, engaging actively in farming until 1890, when he rented his farm, and removed to the Centre. The farm at the death of his father contained 200 acres, but from time to time, small tracts have been sold so that it is not its original size, but still is a very fine property, well cultivated and improved, with good buildings.

On June 5, 1855, Mr. Bass was married to Cynthia Carter, a daughter of Lucius and Lucy (Sharp) Carter, and a granddaughter of Phineas and Cynthia (Butts) Carter, natives of Canterbury, Conn. Lucius Carter was born Feb. 2, 1800, and died aged seventy, while his wife died at the age of forty-nine. Their children were: Cynthia, born Dec. 15, 1833, Mrs. Bass; Mary Ann, born Sept. 22, 1835, who died in September, 1861, wife of Calvin C. Foster, of West Woodstock; Martha, born Jan. 24, 1842, who married Patrick H. Burnham of Hartford.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bass were born the following family: Wilton Carter, born Oct. 23, 1856, who married Genevieve Chesbro, lives in Omaha, Neb., and has two children, Egbert and Flossie; John Lucius, born Dec. 25, 1858, unmarried; Edgar Everett, born Aug. 30, 1861, cashier in the Windham National Bank, of Willimantic; Mary Gertrude, born Nov. 4, 1863, who married Harry L. Putnam, M. D., of Houlton, Maine, and has a son, Donald, and who prior to marriage graduated from New Britain Normal school, and then taught several years, her largest school being at Deep River, Conn.; Ellen Louise, born Jan. 5, 1867, who died June 26, 1896, wife of Elwyn B. Inman, and mother of two children, Jesse, deceased, and Egbert Bass; Chauncey Martin, born Sept. 4, 1869, residing at Windsor, Conn., who married Ellen B. Andrus;

Lucy Elizabeth, born Feb. 15, 1872, who died May 10, 1889; Harriet May, born Dec. 17, 1874, a graduate of the Willimantic high school, class of 1892, Willimantic Normal School, class of 1894, a teacher in the Natchaug school of Willimantic.

In political views Mr. Bass is strongly Democratic and has always been active in local affairs, having held almost all of the town offices, including selectman for several years, constable, collector, etc. Mr. Bass and his family are numbered among the most highly respected people of Scotland, and have many well deserved friends throughout the community.

HENRY F. PARKER is one of the leading citizens of South Coventry, Tolland county, where he is well and favorably known as a responsible and thoroughly trustworthy business man.

Asa Parker, the grandfather of Henry F., married Hannah Sprague, a daughter of Elisha Sprague, in 1806, and died Jan. 3, 1851, at the age of sixty-nine years. His wife died Dec. 1, 1877, aged ninety-four years. They had children as follows: Sherman J., born in 1807, who died March 15, 1877; Philo F., born March 26, 1809; Miranda, born in 1811, who died in 1837; Lucia, born June 6, 1813, became the mother of E. D. White, and is living in Andover; Elisha D., born in 1815, who died Feb. 27, 1859; Martha, born June 11, 1817; Mary, born Feb. 9, 1819; Nancy, born Feb. 14, 1824, who married A. J. Hutchinson in 1844; Edwin B., born in 1822, who died in 1868; Sarah E., born in 1825, who died in 1828.

Mr. Parker lived in Coventry, where he owned a farm and was a cooper by trade, making a very considerable success of his business, and holding a good position in the community. Both himself and his wife belonged to the Baptist Church.

Asa Parker was a son of Phineas and Martha Parker, who were married in 1741, and had children: Dennis, Phoebe, Phineas, Rachel, Samuel, Timothy, Martha, Asa, Esther and Mary.

James Parker and Tabitha Strong were married in 1728. They had one son, Elijah, who was born March 13, 1730, and Mrs. Parker died seven days after his birth. Mr. Parker was married to Elizabeth Skinner in 1732, by whom he had the following children: James, born in 1734, who died in 1740; Candee, born in 1736; Elizabeth, born in 1739; Tabitha, born in 1741, who died in childhood; Mary, born in 1743; Tabitha (2), born in 1747; Ann, born in 1749.

The father of Henry F. Parker, who was born in the town of Coventry, grew up in his native community, and at the age of eighteen years went to Manchester, Tolland county, where he learned the blacksmith trade under Capt. William Wilson. After he had completed his apprenticeship he went to Canada, where he worked at his trade for a few years, and then returned to Connecticut, to work for the Glass Factory Company at Willington.

Presently he started a shop in Coventry, and in 1845 removed to the village, buying a shop in which he continued his trade as long as he lived. When his son, Henry F., had grown up, he took him in as a partner. The father was strongly opposed to the Civil war, but he had a son who enlisted and died in Andersonville. The mother was a member of the Congregational Church. Her name was Fanny Dow, and she was born Oct. 19, 1806, married Mr. Parker Aug. 23, 1832, and died Dec. 25, 1876.

To this Dow family belonged Lorenzo Dow, very widely known as an eccentric Methodist preacher. He was born in Coventry in 1777, son of Humphrey Dow, attained a great name on the frontier, and died in 1834. Peletiah Dow, the brother of Humphrey, and grandfather of Mrs. Parker, died in 1829, at the age of eighty-six. His wife, Catherine Rose, died in 1827, at the age of eighty-nine. They had eight children, Mabel, Sanford, John, Elizabeth, Jane, Hannah, Margery, and Clarinda. John was the father of Mrs. Parker. John Dow was born in 1776, and died in 1851. His wife, Clarissa Guild, was born in 1778, and died in 1842. To John and Clarissa Dow were born five children: (1) Diantha, born in 1800, was first married to Mr. Woodworth, and second to Solomon P. Loomis. (2) Almira, born in 1802, died in 1877; she married Samuel Wilson, whose son, John D. Wilson, resides in South Coventry; they have two other children, Jane C., and Lorenzo D. (3) John N., born in 1805, died in 1880; he married Mary Porter, and had two children: Lorenzo F., born May 26, 1841; and Arthur P., born Feb. 19, 1845. (4) Fanny, the mother of Henry F. Parker, was born Oct. 19, 1806. (5) Silas N., was born in 1810. To the marriage of Mr. Parker and Fanny Dow were born: Lucia M., born July 13, 1834, who died Jan. 11, 1886, unmarried; Henry F., whose name appears above, born Jan. 20, 1836; Mandana, born Oct. 7, 1839, who died Dec. 28, 1851; Sanford Dow and Sarah Dewey, twins, born Feb. 12, 1842, of whom the brother died July 30, 1864, at Andersonville prison, having been taken prisoner at St. Augustine, Fla., and the sister is the wife of Mr. Tibbals, of Hartford; Mary Augusta, born March 21, 1845, who married Horatio F. Brainerd, of Springfield, Massachusetts.

Henry Franklin Parker was born in Willington Conn., and at the age of six months was taken by his family to Coventry, where he was reared to manhood. Until he reached the age of sixteen years he attended school, and at that time entered his father's shop, being admitted to a partnership in 1856, a connection that was sustained unbroken until the death of the father. Mr. Parker has continued the business alone since that time. Quite a business is thrown upon him in the way of caring for the property of other people, and for twenty-four years he has managed the estate of Mr. Reynolds. He does an extensive real estate business.

and handles a number of tenements for different parties.

Mr. Parker is a Republican, though his first presidential vote was cast for a Democratic candidate; he has served as constable, collector and grand juror, for several years past having been moderator of the town meetings.

Mr. Parker was married to Lizzie A. Bradbury, a daughter of David and Hannah Bradbury, July 19, 1858. Her father was a Methodist clergyman, and was stationed at Coventry at the time; her mother, who was born in England, died in 1884 at the age of fifty-eight years. (1) Frank Sanford, their eldest child, born July 25, 1863, is now an engineer on the Northeastern Railroad, and runs from Boston to Providence, R. I.; since he was eighteen years of age he has been in the employ of this road; in 1882 he married Mattie Shaw, and has one child, Fannie E., born Jan. 20, 1884. (2) Ralph Henry is unmarried.

Mr. Parker was married Sept. 2, 1885, to Caroline H. Howard, who died May 6, 1895; she was born in New York, March 17, 1843, and had been for fourteen years before her marriage a teacher in the Hartford schools.

Mr. Parker married for his third wife, Nov. 20, 1895, Elizabeth Risley. She was born May 23, 1864, was a daughter of Francis and Lois (Thayer) Risley, and is the mother of one child, Lois Marian Elizabeth, born Jan. 31, 1900.

Mr. Parker has been a Mason since 1859, and belongs to Trinity Chapter, No. 9, at Willimantic. A charter member of Wangumbaug Grange, he was secretary of the Grange for several years, serving two years as Master of the local lodge.

JULIUS HILLS, one of the representative and substantial men of the town of Hebron, Tolland county, who resides in the west part of Gilead near the Glastonbury town line, is serving upon the board of selectmen of the town of Hebron, and traces his ancestry back to the early fathers of New England.

The founder of the Hills family in America was William Hills, who emigrated from England in 1630, and was one of Rev. Thomas Hooker's party, which came overland from Boston, in 1634-35 to settle in Hartford.

Eppaphras Hills, the grandfather of our subject, was born in East Windsor, Conn., and as a young man learned the trade of ship carpenter, but later was sent as a sailor to the West Indies and on a trade and slave vessel. After he abandoned a sea-faring life, he resided in Hartford, where he was a building mover, operated in all parts of Connecticut, and became very well known in that line of business. The later years of his life were spent in Hartford, and there he died of pneumonia, in May, 1869, aged ninety-one. In spite of his advanced age, this remarkable old man retained all his faculties and was quite active until his last illness. His memory was unimpaired and many were the stirring tales he would tell of the deeds of by-gone days. Of fine physique, he was famed for his strength, and during his long life he was a hard worker, never sparing himself. In politics, he was a staunch Democrat, and in religion a Universalist. His wife was named Pamela Meacham, and he survived her, and both are now interred at East Windsor Hill. To them were born the following children: Amelia, who married Wareham Porter, a merchant of South Windsor, Conn., and died in Hartford, at the age of ninety-four; Horace M.; Laura, who married Mr. McLellan, and died in the Hartford hospital of paralysis; Alfred, who died young; Julius, who died young; Elizabeth, an excellent nurse, who died unmarried; Lucy, who married first Mr. Smith and second Mr. Perkins, and resided in Hartford, where she died.

Horace Meacham Hills, father of our subject, was born June 5, 1810, in East Windsor, Conn., and remained at home with his parents until he reached his majority, working at building, moving, teaming, etc. Later he was foreman of a seed farm in Wethersfield, Conn., for the Beldings (seed growers), and while employed in Wethersfield, he was married and started housekeeping. Later, he resided in North Glastonbury, where he was engaged in farming and working by the day; thence he went to Manchester and was similarly engaged for several years, when he settled in Marlborough, Conn., and rented a farm for a year. In 1844 he located in Hebron, renting a small farm for a year, when he purchased a small farm in the vicinity from Samuel Wrisley, and there he remained until his retirement from active business life, his declining years being spent with his children. In addition to farming, he was engaged in charcoal burning and lumbering. His death occurred at the home of his son, Julius, of apoplexy, Nov. 8, 1884, and he was buried at Gilead. Like his father, he was a man of large physique and great strength, and worked very hard at his various callings. In politics he was a Democrat, and represented Hebron in the State Legislature in 1856. His religious affiliations were with the Gilead Congregational Church. In 1833, he married Lucy F. Wrisley, born in 1813, in Marlborough, Conn., daughter of Samuel Wrisley, a farmer of that locality, and she died April 12, 1859, aged forty-five, being buried in Gilead. To her and her husband were born: George H., of Gilead, born Aug. 25, 1835; Ellen F., born Feb. 14, 1837, who was the widow of Charles Brown, a farmer in Gilead, and died in Alabama, leaving one child, Fred B. (he and his wife, Daisy, have one child, Marion); Julius, our subject; Annie, who died in childhood; Alice E., who died at the age of twelve.

Julius Hills was born on June 14, 1840, in Manchester, Conn., and was four years old when his parents removed to Hebron. During his boyhood days he attended the district school, and a select school at Manchester, taught by Rev. Gardner, a Congregational minister. During the summer he worked upon the farm, assisting his father, and working for the neighbors, until about a year after his marriage, when he rented a farm, owned by a Mrs. Root, and he there resided until 1867, when he purchased his present fine farm of George C. Hutchinson, known as the "Chester Horton Place," a tract of seventy acres. All the excellent buildings upon the place have been erected by Mr. Hills, with the exception of the house, which was already upon the property. Later, he purchased 100 acres in Glastonbury, Conn., and now owns 170 acres of very productive land. Upon this property he carries on general farming, lumbering and stone quarrying. In August, 1900, Mr. Hills met with a severe loss, his house and outbuildings and his entire hay crop being severely damaged by fire, supposed to be caused by spontaneous combustion, the loss amounting to $2,000. Since then, he has replaced the buildings with new and better ones, this being the second time he has placed these improvements upon his property.

On Aug. 20, 1863, he was married to Elizabeth P. Mitchell, born Oct. 10, 1845, a native of Hebron, daughter of Stephen and Sarah (Tilden) Mitchell. Stephen Mitchell was a tinner and successful business man, residing near Hebron. To Mr. and Mrs. Hills have been born: (1) Elva M., born May 12, 1864, who married first, John H. Wood, by whom she had one child,—Bertha, born Feb. 4, 1883, and second, Alfred Post, a merchant of Gilead, by whom she has had three children,—Myron J., born April 13, 1890, Doris E., born in December, 1896 and Alfred E. born March 11, 1901; (2) Albert J., born Oct. 8, 1866, married Emma Lee of Albany, N. Y., and is a boss teamster for Brown Bros. of Colchester, Conn.; (3) Alice Elizabeth, born Sept. 21, 1868, wife of Edward E. Foote, of Gilead; (4) Jennie E., born Nov. 14, 1870, wife of William Hibbard, a merchant of Manchester, Conn., who has one child, Walter H., born April 7, 1898; (5) Clayton A., born April 18, 1873, who married Annie Proctor and resides at Colchester, Conn., having one child, Ethel T., born Feb. 10, 1895; (6) Grace M., born March 31, 1875, who attended Willimantic Normal School, taught school in Colchester, Lebanon and Glastonbury, and died Oct. 22, 1896.

In politics Mr. Hills remains true to the examples of his grandfather and father and is a Democrat. To his personal popularity is due his having been honored with various offices, for his party is largely in the minority in his locality. Mr. Hills is now the third member of the board of selectmen and has served continuously on the board since 1893, with the exception of 1900. In addition, he has also been assessor for several terms and has been on the board of relief, in every office meeting the expectations of his constituents in a very satisfactory manner. His daughters are members of the Gilead Congregational Church and Mr. Hills and his wife are constant attendants upon the services and liberal contributors to this institution. Like his ancestors, Mr. Hills is a man of powerful build, excellent health and commanding bearing. His home life is perfect; as a public official his record is stainless, and as a citizen and hard-working man who has built up his present prosperity without any outside aid, he receives the respect and approbation of his many friends.

GARDNER B. ELLIS, a highly respected and substantial citizen of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn., belongs to an old and honorable family of New England. Arnold Ellis, his grandfather, was a respected farmer who resided in West Greenwich, R. I. Gideon Ellis, son of Arnold, and father of Gardner, was born in the old home in Rhode Island and resided there until after the birth of all his children, and then came to Connecticut, locating at Preston, in New London county. There he purchased a tract of land comprising 200 acres and continued to reside there until his life ended, at the age of eighty-four years. He was a successful farmer and reared a large family.

Gideon Arnold married Elizabeth Kenyon, of Exeter, R. I., whom he survived, and they had these children: Benedict, who resided in East Greenwich; Gardner, of Brooklyn; Robert, a farmer of Windham; Jacob, a laborer, in Providence; Mason, who died in young manhood; Caleb, a farmer on the home place in Preston; Clark, who died at the age of fifteen; and Rodman, who enlisted from Preston in the Civil war, and gave up his young life in Mississippi.

Gardner B. Ellis was born in West Greenwich, R. I., Oct. 13, 1827, and there his boyhood days were spent, growing up on the farm and attending the district school. At the age of eighteen years, as his services were not needed at home, he decided to start out in life for himself. When he was about twenty-four years old he went to Providence, R. I., where he engaged in teaming for a cotton factory, making daily trips to Providence and Scituate, doing the heavy hauling. For some twenty years, Mr. Ellis continued in the teaming business, for five of these being in the employ of one man, and during a part of the time driving four horses.

From Providence, Mr. Ellis moved to Dyerville, R. I., where he was employed as a teamster by Amos Beckwith, who is now living in Providence. There a four-horse team was used, and Mr. Ellis remained with this employer, at different times, for some four years. During this time he was engaged in construction work on the railroad which was being built between Willimantic and Putnam. While Mr. Ellis was engaged in work for the railroad at Goshen, he was sent for by Mr. Beckwith, and returned to Dyerville where he remained until he removed to Hampton, Conn. At this place he worked for a time as a laborer and then went to Putnam, Conn., where he again went into teaming, driving for Mr. Vaughn, of the Putnam Manufacturing Company, remaining in this connection for four years.

In the fall of 1879, Mr. Ellis came to Brooklyn and as usual soon found employment, his industrious habits never permitting him to be idle. For a short time he was employed at day labor and then purchased a small place. For six years he was overseer on the Apollos Richmond farm, then owned by James S. Atwood. In 1892, Mr. Ellis felt able to purchase his present farm of ninety-three acres and now, in the evening of life, he continues to operate his farm more for exercise and pastime than for profit.

The marriage of Mr. Ellis occurred in Chaplin, Conn., to Clarissa A. Coburn, who was born June 7, 1838 and was a daughter of Francis Coburn, a farmer in that vicinity. One child was born to this union,—Arnold, who lived only to the age of ten months and two days. Mr. Ellis is a Republican but he has never sought office, and in local affairs he votes for the best man. His life has been one of constant activity and it has resulted in the accumulation of a competency. Entirely self-made, what he possesses he has justly earned, his energy and economy in the past giving him ease and comfort now. His excellent health is perhaps due to his outdoor life, his appearance being that of one of much younger years. Mr. Ellis is much respected in his locality, and has many warm friends.

WILLIAM DAVIS ROUND was born Nov. 25, 1831, in Foster, R. I., and is a son of Alvah Round, who was born in the same place about 1800, and died in Scituate, R. I., about 1850.

The father was a thrifty farmer, and owned a place of sixty acres, which he cultivated on advanced and progressive lines. In 1842 he was a Doorite. He was always a deeply religious man, belonging to the Seven Day Baptist Church, where he took a very active part. The elder Round was married March 8, 1829, to Miss Mary Arnold, a daughter of Russel Arnold, of Scituate, R. I. She died in 1894, and was mother to the following children: William D.; Freelove, who married George W. Hawkins, and died at the age of fifty years; Warren, a stone mason, who died in Scituate, when about sixty years old; Cynthia, who died young; Joseph B., a machinist in Scituate, where he is now living; Cornelia A., living in Kent county, R. I., the wife of Elisha Watson; Richard B., who learned the tinner's trade, and is now a merchant in Scituate; Mary Josephine, who married Burrill Moon, and lives in Washington, Rhode Island.

Constant Round, the grandfather of William D., was born in Foster, R. I., and became a thrifty farmer, and his land is now being cultivated by his great-grandchildren. In politics he was a Whig, and was a good man and useful citizen. Constant Round married Mollie Davis, and both attained a great age. They were the parents of thirteen children. Simeon Round, his father, and the great-grandfather of William D., was probably born in England, whence he came to America at an early age. In the American Revolution he was a bold advocate of the people's rights, and became a soldier in the Continental forces, and it is known that he was present at the bombardment of Boston.

William Davis Round accompanied his parents on their removal from Foster to Scituate, R. I., when he was a mere child, and there he had his schooling. At the age of sixteen years he took up his life work, and for a time worked at farming, and then learned the carpenter trade, which was his business for some thirty years. In 1854 he established himself on a seven-acre farm near Coventry, where he remained until 1868, when he removed to Holmanville, N. J., to work at carpentering. For a few months he was at that point, and then spent a year at Rockville. In 1869 he purchased the Smith farm in Tolland, a place then consisting of thirty-three acres, to which he added an adjoining tract of seventy-five acres. For twenty years he conducted farming on his fertile farm, and at the end of that time sold it to his daughter, Mrs. J. M. Metcalf, purchasing for himself the old Harry Cogswell homestead on Grant's Hill, a farm of sixty-five acres, where he still carries on general farming.

Mr. Round was an active member of the Tolland Grange for a year. A staunch Democrat, he has served as assessor, and was elected justice of the peace, but refused to serve.

Mr. Round was married July 23, 1854, to Susan Jane Whitman, born Nov. 8, 1835, at North Coventry, a daughter of Reuben and Betsy (Eddy) Whitman, and a most worthy and estimable lady. To this marriage were born: Alvah William, born July 19, 1855, in Vernon, Conn., a farmer at home; Mary Jane, born May 27, 1858, who married Edwin J. Crandell, of Tolland; Frank Ella, born Jan. 5, 1861, who married D. H. Benton, a farmer of Tolland; Anna Louisa, born Sept. 27, 1864, who married Joseph M. Metcalf, of Tolland; John P., born Aug. 7, 1866, married to Martha (Chamblin) Wright, widow of Elijah Wright, of Coventry; Enoch A., born Aug. 13, 1871, married to Jennie Staples, of Tolland.

Although Mr. Round is, as they say, "getting along in years," he still keeps up his industrious habits, works every day, and takes delight in it. He is a successful farmer, and is much esteemed by his neighbors.

GEORGE LAW, one of the farmers of Windham county, a most highly esteemed citizen and a surviving and honored soldier of the Civil war, is a valued resident of Thompson and worthily represents an old colonial family.

The birth of Mr. Law occurred Aug. 12, 1843, in the town of Southbridge, Mass., a son of George H. and a grandson of Jeremiah and Hepzibah (Leach) Law, the former of whom was born Dec. 17, 1796, at Chestnut Hill, Killingly, Conn., a son of George and Nancy Law, and the latter of whom was born April 24, 1793. They had these children born to them: George H., born Sept. 23, 1816; Albert, born Oct. 1, 1818; Roxanna, born Oct. 22, 1821, who died Feb. 26, 1895, the wife of Alfred Edgerton, of Springfield, Mass.; Hepzibah, born June 4, 1825, married to Wheaton A. Bennett, of Killingly, who died at South Pasadena, Cal., where she still resides; Jeremiah Jr., resides at Providence, R. I.; and Edmund, born April 7, 1833, died April 23, 1863. Jeremiah Law was a farmer by occupation, was a Democrat in politics, became prominent in town and county affairs, was deputy-sheriff and later a member of the State Legislature. He died Aug. 14, 1876.

George Harrison Law, son of Jeremiah, and father of George Law, of Thompson, was born Sept. 23, 1816, at Chestnut Hill, East Killingly, his mother's native place, and died Jan. 1, 1894, in Killingly, Conn. From the age of twenty-six years he was employed in the cotton mill industry, first in the Law mills at Woonsocket, R. I., and later the Eagle mills. By trade he was a cotton dresser and long was superintendent of that department. In 1870 he retired from mill work and purchased what was known as the Bassett farm, in Killingly, where he lived the balance of his life. Mr. Law was a man of great intelligence and became a leading member of the Republican party and served as a representative from Killingly in the State Legislature in 1881 and 1883, serving also in the positions of selectman, assessor, on the school committee and in other local offices, his known integrity and capacity making him the general choice of his fellow citizens; a man whose record bears the closest scrutiny. Although not an avowed member of any religious body, all of his influence was given in the direction of morality, and he was a constant attendant upon religious services. In every relation of life, he performed each duty with the best of his ability, bearing his honors in a quiet, unassuming way, and setting an example both by action and timely precept.

On Sept. 2, 1839, Mr. Law was united in marriage with Clarinda Clark, in Thompson. She was born May 27, 1815, in Southbridge, Mass., a daughter of Joseph and Sally (Saunders) Clark, and died July 10, 1889, in Killingly. Their children were the following: Jane, who married Charles T. Westcott, of East Killingly, and resides at Sioux City, Iowa; George; Sarah Ellen, who married Charles D. Mowry, and now lives at Middletown, Conn.; Miss Clara L., who resides in Killingly; Albert, who died in infancy; Caroline, who married (first) Ebenezer K. Jancks, of Killingly, and (second) William H. Goodale, of Woonsocket, R. I., and now resides at Mansfield, Mass.; Emma, who resides in Killingly; Joseph C., who married Lucy Chase, of Killingly, and lives at Woonsocket; and Charles F., who married Kate Maney, of Middletown, and also resides at Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

George Law attended the public schools of Woonsocket, R. I., and later was employed in the mills there. On May 26, 1862, he enlisted with the three-months men, in Co. G, 9th R. I. V. I., under Captain Watson, for service in the Civil war, and after his discharge Aug. 26, 1862, re-enlisted Oct. 31, 1862, for three years, in the 2d R. I. Cav. under Col. Corliss and served with valor until the end of his term, when he was honorably discharged at New Orleans, Oct. 31, 1865. Mr. Law then returned to Woonsocket where he remained until 1870, working in the mills, moving then to Killingly, Conn., and beginning to farm, remaining in that locality until 1887, when he removed to the Brandy Hill District, Thompson, and bought the Corbin Mills farm, comprising 100 acres, where he has been engaged ever since in farming. Mr. Law has taken a great and justifiable pride in his fine estate and has spent much time and means on its improvement. His interests have long been centered in agriculture, and he has taken active part in the workings of the Grange and in all legislation looking to the betterment of agricultural conditions.

In October, 1882, Mr. Law was married in Killingly, to Josephine Alvira Ross, born in Thompson, a daughter of Lowell Nelson Ross, and one son, George E., was born to this union, Aug. 6, 1883, who is securing a good education in the Thompson schools. Mrs. Law was educated at Thompson and in the Woodstock Academy and has successfully taught in the public schools of both Massachusetts and Connecticut. With her husband she is a member of the Quinnetisset Grange, of Thompson, in which she has held the offices of secretary and lecturer two years each. Mr. Law was overseer. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, but is not active in party affairs. He lives up to what he deems his duty, irrespective of creed, and is most highly esteemed in every relation of life.

EDWARD LINCOLN SMITH, one of the prominent citizens of Gurleyville, Tolland county, well known as a silk manufacturer of long experience, is a careful, conservative business man, who well represents an old and honored family.

Isaac Smith, his great-grandfather, was a Revolutionary soldier, serving seven years in the Continental army. After his return he settled at West Boylston, Worcester Co., Mass. His son, Joel Smith, born at the ancestral home, married Abigail Divol, of Leominster, Mass., and they had the following named children: (1) Emory B. was the father of Edward L. (2) Isaac married Mary B. Hill, and lived at Leominster, Mass., where he was a farmer and a shoemaker. His two children were Henry R., who married Alice Wheelock, of Uxbridge, Mass., and has two sons, Rolfe W. and Leon H.; and Charlotte, wife of Walter J. Morse, of Leominster. (3) Joel, who married Eliza Taylor, of Willington, Conn., was a combmaker by trade, and died in Leominster. (4) George was a farmer in Leominster. He and his wife, Julia Ann, had two children—Albert, who died in infancy; and

E. L. Smith

Emory B. Smith, the father of Edward L., was born April 21, 1810, in Leominster, but while quite young went to reside with his grandfather Smith. His schooling was somewhat limited, but for a short time he enjoyed the tutorage of Dr. Smith, at West Boylston. When a young man he entered a comb factory and acquired a thorough knowledge of that business, remaining until 1835, in which year he came to Willington, Conn., where his brother Joel resided, there engaging in comb manufacturing. In 1840 he removed from Willington to Gurleyville, and was engaged in comb manufacturing until 1849, when he removed to Albany, N. Y., becoming an agent for his father-in-law, James Royce, who was a silk manufacturer in Gurleyville. Mr. Smith was also engaged at Albany in dealing in silk on his own account, and remained in that city until 1862, when he returned to Gurleyville, and, forming a copartnership with James Royce, became joint owner of the silk mill, which he purchased in 1870. He operated same successfully until 1886, when it was temporarily closed, on the death of his son-in-law, Deacon Edward P. Conant, the manager. Mr. Smith was also engaged to a limited extent in farming, and was long actively interested in public affairs, town and county; in 1870 he was elected by the Republican party to represent his district in the State Legislature. Mr. Smith also served as selectman of the town, and as justice of the peace. When a young man he joined the Baptist Church, and was always a liberal supporter of and devout worshiper in the churches of his neighborhood. Until his health began to fail Mr. Smith continued in the silk business. His death, which occurred September 24, 1891, after a decline of several years, was due to the infirmities of old age. Mr. Smith was a man of large physique, well proportioned, of a very pleasant disposition, although he held decided opinions concerning affairs. His piercing eye told him a man's character at a glance, but his natural feeling was that of kindness to all. His regret always was that his early educational advantages had not been better, for he possessed every other qualification for becoming a very prominent man.

Mr. Smith was married first, Nov. 19, 1840, to Arvilla T. Royce, born May 10, 1815, daughter of James and Clarissa (Topliff) Royce, the former of whom was a silk manufacturer in Gurleyville, where he resided until his death. Two children were born to Emory B. Smith and his wife: (1) Charles Emory, born Feb. 18, 1842, married, June 30, 1863, in Albany, N. Y., Ella Huntley. The life of this distinguished man is too well known to need repetition in the present limited space, but a brief outline will be interesting. Born in Gurleyville, he attended the district schools there until almost eight years old, and then accompanied his parents to Albany, N. Y. There he entered the Boys' Academy, from which he graduated, and he also graduated from Union College in 1861. For a time he studied for the law, but turned his attention later to newspaper work, and finally became editor of the Albany Express, and later acquired the Albany Journal, continuing as its able editor until 1880, when he took charge of the Philadelphia Press, which, under his management, has become a paper of National prominence. Mr. Smith was appointed by President Harrison minister to Russia, in 1890, and served nearly three years, when he resigned. He was appointed postmaster-general by President McKinley, in 1898, to succeed James Gary. He is no doubt the most distinguished native-born citizen Mansfield has produced. (2) Abbie Cornelia, born Feb. 6, 1845, was married June 16, 1870, to Deacon Edward Payson Conant, who was born in Mansfield, and served in Company D, Twenty-first Connecticut Volunteers, for three years, part of the time being a musician. After the close of the Civil war he returned to Mansfield, and was engaged in the silk manufacturing business until his death, which occurred Dec. 1, 1886. His widow resides in Gurleyville. The mother of these children died Feb. 15, 1851, and Mr. Smith for his second wife married, on Feb. 1, 1852, her sister, Julia E., who was born Feb. 24, 1828, and is now residing in Gurleyville. There were also two children by this union: Frank Clifton, born April 1, 1862, married Etta M. Swift, of Abington, Conn.; he graduated from Yale in 1888, was for a time engaged in newspaper work on the Philadelphia Press, later took a post-graduate course at Harvard, and is now studying at Leipsic, Germany. Edward Lincoln is the gentleman whose name opens this biography.

Edward Lincoln Smith was born Dec. 11, 1864, in Gurleyville. He first attended the district schools, and later a private school taught by a Miss Smith, in Mansfield. Then, under his father, he entered into the silk manufacturing business, to which he succeeded upon the death of the latter, and is now engaged as a "throwster" of machine twist, embroidery, floss and sewing silk, and has a growing and prosperous business.

Mr. Smith was married, Nov. 25, 1886, to Lucy A. Le Velly, a native of the State of New York. In politics he is a stanch Republican. He is a member of the Methodist Church and is one of its official board, and takes a prominent and important place in both the social and business life of Gurleyville.

EBENEZER SCARBOROUGH, a highly respected citizen of East Brooklyn, is the last male representative of one of the oldest families of the town of Brooklyn, Windham Co., Conn. He descends from John Scarborough, of Roxbury, Mass., who was the ancestor of the family in America. His grandfather, Capt. Ebenezer Scarborough, was a large landholder and resided in the northern part of Brooklyn. He was a successful farmer, which business he followed al his life. He was a Captain in the local militia, and attended the Congregational Church. He died at the age of seventy-one years, Oct. 12, 1813. He was the father of two sons: Joseph, also a captain of local militia, who married a Miss Thayer and resided in Pomfret near the Brooklyn town line; a namesake and the father of the subject of this article.

Ebenezer Scarborough, father of the present Ebenezer, was born in 1785 on the home farm, where he was taught to do farm work which was always the business of his life. He worked on the home farm during the whole lifetime of his parents, whom he cared for, and after he came into possession of it by their death. About 1852 he sold it and moved to the one occupied by his son, where he died in 1854, aged sixty-nine years.

As a member of the militia from Brooklyn, Mr. Scarborough assisted in the defense of New London in the war of 1812. Politically he was a Whig. He attended the Congregational Church, and his circumstances were comfortable. He married Mary, daughter of John Dabney of Brooklyn. She died at the home of her daughter in Providence, R. I., and is buried in Brooklyn. These were the issue of this marriage: (1) Harriet, who married George Shorp, a farmer and butcher, and resided in Pomfret and Woodstock, in which latter place she died; (2) Betsey, who married Lewis Weld, a farmer, and died in Worcester, Mass.; (3) Emily, who married John D. Bigelow, a shoemaker, lived at first in North Brookfield, Mass., and Providence, R. I., and died in Danielson, Conn.; (4) Edwin, who died when a young man; (5) Ebenezer, of whom more below; (6) Charles, who married Susan James and lived at first in Brooklyn, later went to the State of Illinois, later to Minnesota, still later to Texas, finally returning to East Brooklyn, Conn., where he died; (7) Fanny, who died aged five years.

Ebenezer Scarborough, now living in East Brooklyn, was born in Brooklyn, Dec. 20, 1828, on the farm mentioned above. There he was brought up to hard work and attended the district schools until he reached the age of sixteen. He left the farm at eighteen and apprenticed himself to Capt. Hovilah Taylor, who was a well-known mason of Brooklyn, for the purpose of learning his trade. Capt. Taylor employed many apprentices. Ebenezer was bound as one of these for three seasons of eight months each. He was to be paid for the first season $30 and board, for the second season $50, and for the third $75 and board. He proved an apt learner and an industrious, early-and-late worker. Long before the close of his apprenticeship he could do well the full day's work of a good journeyman mason; and Mr. Taylor, at the completion of the apprenticeship was glad to retain services so valuable, so that young Scarborough was continued in his employment for several years as a journeyman. About 1850 he was engaged by Mr. John Field of Norwich, Conn., and assisted in the building of the "Wauregan House" there.

The years 1851-1852 Mr. Scarborough spent in California, going via the isthmus of Panama and taking fifty-four days to make the journey. Many of these days were spent on a poor vessel between the isthmus and California. Arrived there, he spent nearly the whole of the two years named working at his trade and in the mines. Sacramento, Coloma, Marysville, Grass Valley and other places in the State were the scenes of his labors; but work becoming scarce he returned East by the Nicaragua route, this trip taking only twenty-two days.

It was to Brooklyn that he returned, but finding work at his trade slack, he rented a farm in Hampton, Conn. This was the Hezekiah Hammond farm, and Mr. Scarborough lived on it for several years. From it he removed to Danielson where he resumed the practice of his trade and continued in it for several years, until about 1881, when he removed to his present place. In 1882 he erected the comfortable home in which he still lives. He continued to practice his trade of mason and plasterer until an attack of "grip" a few years ago incapacitated him, and he has done no work at the trade since.

Mr. Scarborough was twice married. The first marriage was in 1850 with Anna M. Lester, the daughter of David Lester, a farmer. The following children were the issue of this marriage: Jennie, who died unmarried; Nellie S., who married Charles Andrews, a goldsmith, and died in Providence; Emily B., a teacher of physical culture in the State Normal school at New Britain; Katherine, living in Providence; Elizabeth, also living in Providence. Mr. Scarborough's second wife was Addie Barstow, a native of Canterbury, and the daughter of Calvin Barstow. She died without issue, Sept. 14, 1900, aged seventy-three years.

Mr. Scarborough is a Republican. He held the office of third member of the board of selectmen for two years, from October, 1899, to October, 1901. He attends the Congregational Church. His record is that of an industrious citizen who has worked hard all his life; and he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

JAMES HAWKINS, now retired from business, and a resident of Rockville, Tolland county, since 1874, is a man who can pass his declining years in comfort, sustained as he is by the accumulations and savings of industrious and honorable years of business.

Mr. Hawkins was born Dec. 12, 1822, in Trowbridge, England, and is a son of James and Mary (Blake) Hawkins. They were poor people and while not able to give their son that start in life their fond hearts desired, reared him in honesty and integrity, and these principles became a part of his daily life, a working force to the making of a good character. They were strict Baptists, and he was early inculcated with a love and devotion to that faith that have remained with him in after years. His schooling was of a fragmentary character, and when he was nine years of age, he began to earn his own living in the world. He went into the mills, became a "dresser," and followed that trade until his coming to this country in 1845. He had saved some money, and felt assured that he could do far better with it in the New World than in his native land. Accordingly he left from Liverpool in the sailing vessel, "The United Kingdom," and after a voyage of six weeks and two days reached the city of New York. There he was employed for domestic service for a short time, and tried carpenter work. This was in poor demand at the time, and he became a groom and then a coachman for Silas Holmes, who lived at No. 48 Bond street at that time an aristocratic section of the city, and who had his summer residence at East Greenwich, R. I. Mr. Hawkins entered the employ of Mr. Holmes and remained with him until 1860, when that gentleman died. On his death bed he asked Mr. Hawkins to remain with his widow. She died in 1865, and remembered him handsomely in her will as her husband had done in his. Both Mr. and Mrs. Holmes died in East Greenwich, and Mr. Hawkins brought their bodies to New York. While Mrs. Holmes lived a widow she made her home at East Greenwich, and it was the duty of Mr. Hawkins to take charge of her large estate. After her death, her relative, W. Henry Schieffelin, a member of a noted drug firm, engaged Mr. Hawkins as the overseer and manager of his country home at Ketona, in the town of Bedford, Westchester Co., N. Y., and in that gentleman's employ nearly the next ten years were spent. At the end of this time the farm was sold, and Mr. Schieffelin offered Mr. Hawkins any position in his store in the city. Mr. Hawkins, however, did not care to engage in active business at his time of life, but came to Rockville in 1874 and bought all the land on the east side of Webster street from Mountain street to the home of Lorenzo Webster, containing at that time but one small house. There he built three houses. He also bought a large lot on the west side of Webster street, which he still owns. With his home he built a fine barn, and for several years kept a number of the finest turnouts in Rockville. His horses and carriages were his pride and pleasure. These he kept for his own comfort, and their fine appearance betokened the kind heart of the owner.

In 1848 the parents of Mr. Hawkins and five of their children, Mary, Martha, Emma, Benjamin and Charles, came to the United States. A son, William, remained in England until 1854; John, another son, had come to the United States in 1844; Joseph, in 1846, with James making a family of nine children. The parents settled in the city of New York, where the mother died in 1852, at the age of fifty-six. The father died in Rockville, March 7, 1884, in the home of his son James. Of his children, William died in Hartford, whither he had removed after settling in Coventry in 1854; John is a retired tailor in Jersey City; Mary died in New York soon after her arrival in this country; Joseph died in Jersey City; Martha married George Webb, a surgeon in the police service in New York (he died in the service, and when her brother James removed to Rockville, Mrs. Webb, a widow, and her three daughters made their home with him. She is still living with him, and of her daughters, Emma, the oldest, married Frank Rogers and has one daughter, Bernice; Alice J. married Edward Badmington, and is the mother of three children, Gladys, Leslie J. and Rodney; Georgia died at the age of twenty-one years; Emma is living in New York, as the widow of Martin Kelly, at one time prominent in the City Hall; Benjamin is a retired hardware dealer in New York; Charles H., the youngest son of this family, served three years in the United States regular army before the Civil war, and when that came on he became a first lieutenant and later became a captain of the 2d N. Y. Vol. Cav. He was wounded while in action, his limb being shattered while on his horse, and as amputation became necessary, three operations were had, to no purpose, and he died in St. Luke's hospital in New York.

James Hawkins visited the home of his youth in 1882, and could hardly realize the vastness of the change from the old conditions, even in England, the land of conservatism. Today he is a remarkably well preserved and hearty old gentleman, small in stature, but possessed of much will and determination. He generally votes with the Republican party, but seeks the best men for local offices.

JOHN G. CAMERON, the subject of this sketch, is one of the highly respected citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., and was one of the most valued employes of the great firm of Belding Bros., where he held an important position for twenty-five years.

Mr. Cameron is a native of Paisley, Renfrewshire, Scotland, which town has long been celebrated on account of the well-known Paisley shawl, and in one of the great weaving establishments of that town his father was employed, following that occupation until his death, at the age of seventy-two. The elder Mr. Cameron married Jean Baird, the mother of John G., very many years ago, and twelve children resulted from this union and two from a later marriage, only two of the family coming to America. John G. and his sister Rachel were the members who crossed the ocean, the latter dying in Quincy, Mass., having resided both in Willimantic and Rockville.

John G. Cameron was born Dec. 14, 1829, and his early education was all he ever obtained in the schools, as at the tender age of eight he was put into the factory, to assist his father by attending to a loom. The family was large and the wages of eighteen pence a week was small, but it was needed, and as he grew older his salary increased. At the age of fifteen, Mr. Cameron chose the trade of dyer, learning it in a public dye house of his native city, where many men were employed, hiring there for four shillings a week with board, contracting to remain five years, this being the time required to master the business, but he remained nine years, or until he became a finished workman in his line.

The United States was the hoped-for goal for many of the ambitious young men of that locality, and as soon as Mr. Cameron had saved a sufficient amount, he bought a ticket for New York, sailed from Glasgow on the steamship "Clyde," of the Anchor line, was eleven days en route and reached the great city of his hopes with very little money, but with high hopes of future wealth, which have in a great measure been realized. The first work he obtained was in Providence, R. I., in a public dye house and there he remained for one and one-half years. Friends had settled in Lawrence, Mass., and he then went there and was employed in the Pemberton cotton mill, remaining for several years, being one of the fortunate ones to escape when this mill fell down and caught fire, an appalling loss of life resulting. The mill was rebuilt and he returned there and resumed work.

In 1864 Mr. Cameron went to Salmon Falls, N. H., where he was employed as a dyer in a cotton factory and there was again among the fortunate, as this mill caught fire and was burned to the ground. Going then to Willimantic, Conn., he entered a cotton and silk thread factory, and then to Mansfield, Conn., where he remained six years as the head of the dyeing department in the factory of the Paisley Silk & Thread Co. Resigning this position in September, 1873, he accepted the offer made by the Belding Bros., of Rockville, and entered into a connection as head of the dye works, which lasted many years, to the mutual benefit of both parties. Mr. Cameron resigned his position with Belding Bros. & Co., Jan. 1, 1903, after a period of thirty years, being desirous of taking a well earned rest after his labor of sixty-five years. Upon severing his connection with Belding Bros. & Co., he was the recipient of a handsome gold headed cane from the firm as a token of their regard and esteem.

On Nov. 22, 1860, John G. Cameron was married in Lowell, Mass., to Annie Craig, born June 17, 1827, also a native of Paisley. Mrs. Cameron had come to the United States in 1860, a bonny daughter of James and Elizabeth (Thompson) Craig, and these children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cameron: (1) Elizabeth, born Jan. 9, 1862, who died at the age of twenty-four; (2) Jeanie B., born March 9, 1864, who married John Russell, died in Quincy, Mass., March 20, 1896, and was buried in that city, leaving children—George C., Annie A., Marion E., and Jeanie C.; and (3) John P., born Nov. 3, 1867, who married Annie S. Thompson, of Rockville and has two children,—Beatrice M., and Audrey T.

Although Mr. Cameron is a Republican, he takes only a voting interest in politics, and is a quiet, hard-working citizen who succeeded in his business life because of his industry and thorough comprehension of what he was engaged to do. This thoroughness gained him the confidence of those by whom he was employed and his work has been of the utmost importance in the great business in which he was for so long a very necessary factor. For the past twenty-five years he has resided at No. 88 Union street, although he owns a desirable residence on Lawrence street. He, his wife and son are among the valued members of the Union Congregational Church, and in the community are respected by all.

ELI IVES SMITH (deceased) was in his lifetime one of the best-known citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, where for fifty-two years he was a resident, during which time he made for himself a name of which his posterity may well feel proud. When the summons came he was one of the town's most venerable citizens, and was in many ways a remarkable man. In its comments upon the departure of this valued old resident, the Rockville Journal takes occasion to remark, "It is rarely that it can be said of a man who has almost reached his ninetieth year, that his last illness was his first one, but this is true of Eli Ives Smith," and goes on to eulogize him in no slight terms.

The grandfather of our lamented subject was Moses Smith, who was born in 1735, and with his wife, Mary, lived in East Hartford, their third son and fourth child being Elijah, who became the father of Eli Ives Smith.

Elijah Smith was born June 16, 1767, in East Hartford, and married (first), Oct. 30, 1792, Miss Milliscent Willes, a daughter of Col. Solomon Willes; she died in 1810. On July 15, 1811, Mr. Smith married (second) Lydia Curtiss, who was born Feb. 5, 1785, and died March 7, 1864. Four children were born of this second union: Eli Ives and Elijah Willes, twins, born March 22, 1812; Lydia Milliscent, born in 1817, died in 1833; and Mary Mindwell, born in 1822, married George M. Ives, and died Dec. 25, 1900, in Stafford Springs. Elijah, the twin brother of our subject was known as Gen. Smith, and was quite prominent in military circles, where he received his title, and was instrumental in raising several companies during the Civil war. At one time he was connected in mercantile pursuits with his brother, in Rockville, and he died June 12, 1863. His daughter Milliscent married Alexander Hill, a successful paper manufacturer of Wabash, Ind., where the widow lives.

Col. Elijah Smith, the father of our subject, was by trade a hatter, and removed in the spring of 1788, to Tolland county, where he set up his business, the same year buying a house and tract of land from James Wells. Soon after his first marriage he commenced tavernkeeping in Tolland, which business he continued in for a period of almost fifty-five years, or until his death, and was one of the best known men in Tolland, his house being the stopping place of the stage line between New York and Boston. He was postmaster at Tolland from 1807 to 1812, being removed for political reasons. Both he and his excellent wife were most highly regarded by the traveling public, as their house was so excellently kept that it seemed a very haven of comfort and rest to the weary traveler. During the tour of Gen. LaFayette, in 1824, it was at this tavern that he met some of his old comrades of the Revolutionary war. As a citizen Col. Smith possessed many of those qualities that adorn human nature, and which make a man desirable in both public and private life as a companion and friend. At one time he was a member of the General Assembly, and as colonel of the 22d Reg. State militia was a popular military officer. He served in the war of 1812. Col. Smith was forward in all attempts to build up the town, active in works of charity, being ever ready to relieve the poor and distressed, taking also a deep interest in young men, and giving to them that substantial comfort which often did more good than tons of cold advice. The death of this worthy man occurred on May 24, 1847.

Eli Ives Smith was born in the village of Tolland, Conn., March 22, 1812, and was reared in that town, receiving the schooling that was provided at that time and in that place, the mere rudiments being considered sufficient for the demands of life. This small village did not fill all requirements of the ambitious lad, for he had listened to the traveler's wonderful tales on many occasions, and while but still a youth, he left the old tavern and went to Plainville, where he found an opening in a drug store, at first as a clerk, later going to Farmington, and still later to Somers, clerking and book-keeping until 1847, when he reached the little town of Rockville, then containing about 1,500 people.

At the time Mr. Smith located in Rockville, the American Mill was being built there, and he secured a position to keep the construction account for the company, later opening their first set of books, this career ending in 1886, after a connection of thirty-nine years, leaving his employers with regret on their part, as it was difficult to fill his place, although Mr. Smith did what he could in the way of training a successor. In 1875 he had been made secretary of the company, and filled the duties of that office for some time. Upon first locating in this place, he and his twin brother, Elijah, were engaged in a mercantile business but a short time later he disposed of his interest to a Mr. Gilbert.

Mr. Smith was married first in Newington, Conn., to a Miss Seymour, but her death occurred shortly after, and on Oct. 28, 1852, in the town of Tolland, he was united in marriage to Miss Harriet M. Griggs, who was born there Sept. 25, 1822, a daughter of Ralph and Marilda Griggs, the former of whom died Aug. 22, 1874, and the latter July 26, 1872. The Griggs family of Tolland descended from Ichabod Griggs, who in 1744 came to Tolland from Norwich, Conn., his death occurring in Tolland May 9, 1790, at the age of seventy-two. He was a prominent man in the Church, and a member of the Legislature for three consecutive sessions, and selectman for five years. The children born to Eli Ives Smith and wife were: (1) Minnie S., born in 1857, in 1881 married Clarence J. Bodfish, of Maynard, Mass., and has two children, Clarence Smith and Harriet Griggs. Mr. Bodfish is a native of Chicopee, Mass., and when a young man entered the office of the old Florence Mill, at Rockville; he has filled various advancing positions in the woolen manufacturing business, until at present he is the resident agent of the As-sabet Mills of Maynard, Mass., one of the largest plants of the American Woolen Co., which responsible position he has arrived at by the sheer force of his own merit. (2) Hattie G. is deceased. (3) George G., born April 1, 1867, is a worthy representative of his honorable father. The mother died on Aug. 18, 1894, and is buried in Grove Hill cemetery. The family residence was first on Mountain street, but a few years later removal was made to Elm street where our subject had bought what was known as the Selden property, and he resided there until his death.

Mr. Smith was a man of the strictest integrity and soundest judgment, and was of the type of man that a community never feels that it can spare. He occupied many responsible positions in the town, was a director in the Rockville National Bank, and in the Rockville Savings Bank, of which latter he was auditor. A most devout member of the Union Congregational Church, he had previously belonged to the old Second Church, and in the church choir he formerly played the flute, this instrument being now carefully cherished as an heirloom. In his younger days he was somewhat of an athlete, and seldom found an equal in wrestling, and even when the infirmities of age began to tell upon him, he delighted to attend upon athletic entertainments, when they were carried on with due respect to law and order.

Although the life of Mr. Smith was prolonged beyond the usual age, he retained his faculties and physical forces to the very last, and his firm step and erect figure were familiar to all the residents of the town which he had seen grow from almost a village into a thriving city, taking a deep interest in every progressive movement. The beautiful affection existing between him and his devoted son, George G., was one of the greatest comforts of his life, and the loss of a beloved father was not all. When death sealed the lips of the congenial companion, the interested friend and the wise counselor.

Mr. Smith left a very comfortable competence, all of which he had acquired by his own efforts. Socially he was connected with the order of Odd Fellows, joining it when it was first established in Rockville. His first vote was cast for Henry Clay, and he was a staunch member of the Republican party from the time of its organization. His death took place May 10, 1900, and his burial was in Grove Hill cemetery.

GEORGE G. SMITH was born in the old homestead on Elm street, and attended school in his native place, passing three years in the Rockville High School, and going from there to the Friends School in Providence, R. I. Upon his return he became secretary for the Samuel Fitch & Sons Co. when it was organized at Rockville, and occupied this position when the affairs of the concern were closed out here. Being an efficient bookkeeper he follows that occupation, and is one of the reliable young men of the community. With little assistance he settled the estates of both parents, and is highly regarded in business and financial circles as a young man of strict integrity and business acumen.

On June 11, 1890, George G. Smith was wedded to Miss Lizzie J. Winchell, a native of Rockville, and a daughter of Chauncey, Jr., and Almira J. (Phelps) Winchell.

CHARLES TAYLOR PRESTON. Among the well known citizens of Willington, Tolland Co., Conn., is Charles Taylor Preston, a lawyer of ability, and an author of repute. He was born in that town Aug. 7, 1834, and he was the oldest son of Hon. Sylvester T. and Fear (Glazier) Preston, the former being a son of Amos and Martha (Taylor) Preston, also of Willington, born Aug. 5, 1809; he was married to Fear Glazier Sept. 12, 1833, and passed out of life March 15, 1887. His wife was born in Willington, Nov. 12, 1813, and died March 28, 1891.

Perhaps no better estimate of the life of Hon. Sylvester T. Preston, could be given to the public than in the words of the Willington correspondent at the time of the lamented death of Mr. Preston, published in the columns of the Hartford Courant.

"Sylvester T. Preston died on the 15th inst., at 4 A. M., aged seventy-eight years. He was well known in business circles much beyond the locality of his birth and residence. The old Preston tannery, in Willington Hollow, was carried on by him for about thirty years, after which he went into partnership with E. C. Dennis and Marcus Howland, at Stafford Springs, where he continued until the firm dissolved. Mr. Preston was a man of strict integrity in his business affairs, and universally trusted and respected. The Preston "Oak-tanned" leather was long famous throughout the State and elsewhere, and the honest and excellent work in his market goods was characteristic of himself, the last manufacturer of the old brand.

"The same uprightness characterized him in public life, and made him honored and influential. Twice he represented his native town in the Legislature, and he served one term in the State Senate, during the war. He was selectman during a term of years, and 'war-time' town treasurer, probably handling and disbursing more money than had ever before passed through official hands for an equal time in the history of the town. Mr. Preston died in the membership of the Willington Baptist Church, which he joined early in life. He was also a member of Ionic Lodge of Free Masons, of Stafford."

The oldest child born to Sylvester T. Preston and his wife was Charles T., of this sketch. Helen Mar, who was born Nov. 30, 1838, married Rev. Theron Brown, who graduated from Yale in 1856, has written both prose and poetry for many publications, has published several notable books and is now an editor on the Youth's Companion, of Boston, the family residence being in Newtonville, Mass. They had two children: Bennett J., died at Ashford, Conn., at the age of eleven. Helen Preston, the daughter, married Walter B. Allen, of the firm of Allen, Hall & Co., No. 384 Boylston street, Boston, April 30, 1889; she died, greatly beloved and lamented, at the home of her uncle, Charles T. Preston, Aug. 17, 1895. Herbert Glazier, who was born May 17, 1843, married Miss Charlotte M. Marsh, of Williamstown, Mass., second daughter of Rev. W. H. Marsh, mentioned hereafter. He died in Newton, April 1, 1902, after carrying on a business in gentlemen's furnishings for thirty years. Herbert G. Preston and his wife had two children, Celia Maud and Frederick Marsh. The former was born in Stafford, Sept. 8, 1870, and is a graduate nurse of Johns Hopkins Hospital. She is engaged in the practice of her profession in Baltimore, Md., and the vicinity. Frederick M., born in Williamstown, Mass., in 1876, attended the public schools there and subsequently graduated from the high school in Glens Falls, N. Y. He is at present (1903) engaged in Lord & Taylor's establishment, Broadway and 20th street, New York City; on Dec. 25, 1900, he married Jennette Carter Higgins, eldest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Q. H. Higgins, of West Hartford, Conn., and they reside in Brooklyn, N. Y. Francis Wayland was born March 4, 1849. His first marriage occurred Aug. 2, 1871, to Clara Spellman, and his second union was Jan. 23, 1878, to Emma Dimock, of Stafford, who was a daughter of Deacon Orwell Dimock.

Charles T. Preston of this biography received his primary education in the Willington schools, but at the age of sixteen years, became a student in the Literary Institute at Suffield, Conn., and remained there until his graduation in 1854. A course in modern languages was then pursued under a private tutor, and this was followed by his entrance into the office of ex-Gov. Richard D. Hubbard, of Hartford, for the study of the law. Two years later Mr. Preston entered the law school at Albany, N.

Y., from which institution he was graduated in 1838, and was admitted to the Hartford county Bar, in May, 1858. After nine years of successful practice, during which period his superior legal knowledge and ability became very generally recognized, he removed to Stafford Springs, where he lived for the two following years, during which time he also engaged to some extent in the real estate business.

For a number of years Mr. Preston had been interested in literary work, and after his removal to Northfield, Mass., in 1874, he gave up his time to labors in this line connected with various magazines and periodicals. In 1881, after a residence of eight years, Mr. Preston left Northfield and returned to the old home in Willington in order to be near his aged parents. During his stay in the pleasant Massachusetts home, he took an active interest in educational matters and for several years served as the secretary of the board of school visitors.

Since his return to Willington, Mr. Preston has been occupied with the demands of his profession to a great extent, but he has also found leisure to be a valued contributor to many of the leading magazines and periodicals of the country. In his literary work he is most ably assisted by his talented wife, who is also an author well known to the readers of the following publications: Boston Advertiser, Boston Commercial Bulletin, Boston Evening Transcript, Boston Evening Traveler, Boston Journal of Education, Boston Congregationalist, Boston Watchman, Boston Christian Register, Boston Zion's Herald, Hartford Courant, Hartford Times, Golden Days, New York Churchman, New York Christian Intelligencer, New York Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York Evangelist, New York Graphic, New York Christian Advocate, New York Advocate and Guardian, New York Christian at Work, New York Christian Union, New York American Messenger, New York St. Nicholas, New York Young Catholic, New York Phrenological Journal, New York Demorest's Monthly, New York Domestic Monthly, Chicago Advance, Chicago Standard, Chicago Union Signal, Cincinnati Western Christian Advocate, and for the Religious Tract Society and other papers and magazines of London, England. Mrs. Preston wields a facile and graceful pen and one of her poems on the death of Queen Victoria, entitled "The Good Queen," was considered so beautiful, touching and appropriate, that it brought its talented authoress a letter of sincere thanks from King Edward the Seventh.

Mr. Preston has been prominent in public affairs almost since his youth. At the opening of his career he displayed his loyal spirit by becoming a member of Co. C., 12th C. V. I., Dec. 9, 1861, his gallantry gaining his promotion to the rank of corporal, July 20, 1862, and in August of the same year he was offered a captain's commission, which he refused. His service was in the department of the Gulf, in the campaign in Louisiana and ended

Nov. 9, 1864, by a special order from the war department. Mr. Preston is a pensioner. Since he was twenty-one years of age he has served as justice of the peace, for several years has been school visitor in Willington, and for a long period has been a notary public.

Mr. Preston married Jan. 15, 1869, Miss Mary E. Marsh, who was the eldest daughter of the late Rev. William H. Marsh, who for many years was the esteemed pastor of the Congregational Church of Woodstock, Conn., and later became rector of Holy Trinity Church in Brooklyn, N. Y. The death of Mrs. Preston occurred May 2, 1871. Their one child, Willie Marsh Preston, was born Aug. 22, 1870, and died Jan. 22, 1873. Mr. Preston was next married Oct. 8, 1874, to Achsah Annie Preston, who was a daughter of George Washington and Fannie (Bishop) Preston, of Northfield, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Preston is the ninth lineal descendant of Peregrine White, who was the first white child born in America after the landing of the Mayflower Pilgrims, and his mother later married Gov. Bradford of Massachusetts. The great-grandfather of Mrs. Preston, Lemuel Preston, was a Revolutionary soldier under Gen. Washington and was pensioned for his services. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Preston. Mrs. Preston is senior deaconess of the Baptist Church and Mr. Preston attends the same and contributes liberally to its various branches of Christian work. Mr. Preston is adjutant of Elisha Johnson Post, No. 86, G. A. R., of which he was a charter member, and has held the office ever since the organization of the post. Both Mr. and Mrs. Preston were charter members of the Willington Grange, of which she was lecturer, and he is past master. Mrs. Preston holds the commission of notary public. "Maple Corner," which is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Preston, is the old ancestral home of the Glazier family, and originally was the old stage tavern which was a noted place among early records. It is situated on the old highway between Norwich, Conn., and Worcester, Mass., and in slavery times often was used as a shelter to slaves who were escaping to the North. The old house was probably erected by Great-grandfather Silas Glazier, who was a Revolutionary soldier and a man of prominence in his day.

Mr. Preston has been so occupied with his professional and literary duties, that he has never cared for political honors, although he has always been an active Republican, and intelligently interested in public affairs.

Francis Wayland Preston, brother of Charles T., was born in Willington, Conn., and there his early days were passed. After completing the common school course in Willington, he went to the Canton, Mass., high school, and later spent three and one-half years in the Hartford high school, graduating from the Bryant & Stratton Commercial College in 1868. His father at that time was conducting the old Willington Hollow tannery, a business which had been established for one hundred and twenty-five years, but on account of better shipping facilities he removed it to Stafford. After finishing his school course, Mr. Preston came to Stafford and under his father learned the trade of tanner and currier, remaining in Stafford for two years. Mr. Preston then became salesman for R. H. White & Co., of Boston, for one year and then was employed by his brother Herbert as a clerk in the latter's gentlemen's furnishing establishment in Stafford Springs, for the following year.

In 1870, Mr. Preston became interested in the painting and paper hanging business and since 1880 he has been the Tolland county auctioneer, and also owns a farm of twenty acres, the Harry Gale place, located on the West Stafford road, where he resides.

The marriage of Mr. Preston has been given previously. The children of the first marriage were: Harry Amos, born Dec. 15, 1871, who married Anne Gertrude Hall, of Auburndale, Newton, Mass., by trade is a painter and paperhanger and is now a United States postal carrier in Newton, Mass. Frank Jasper, born April 6, 1874, is a bookkeeper. Clarence Spellman, born May 17, 1876, married to Sarah Crosby, of Boston, is a salesman for Allen, Hall & Co., interior decorators and house furnishers. Mrs. Preston died May 27, 1876, in Stafford Springs. The children of the second marriage are: Orwell Dimock, born Sept. 1, 1879, who has charge of Allen, Hall & Co's. work in New York; Francis Wayland, Jr., born Oct. 7, 1886; Gertrude Gladys, born March 28, 1889; and Helen Mildred, born Sept. 6, 1893.

In politics Mr. Preston is a Republican, but he has never sought political preferment, serving only on the district school committee. Mr. Preston was one of the organizers of the Grace Episcopal Church in Stafford Springs and has served both as vestryman and as junior warden, and has contributed much toward the usefulness of the church in his vicinity.

JAMES MONROE GILLMORE. The earlier members of the Gillmore family, not unlike many of their New England contemporaries, were a hardy, self-reliant and resolute people—these attributes being displayed in lives which made them conspicuous members of society, and prominent in the military affairs of their localities.

Capt. Nathaniel Gillmore, the grandfather of James M. Gillmore, of Putnam, Windham county, was born in Stafford, Conn., in the early days of that town, and became one of its leading and substantial citizens. He became particularly prominent in military affairs, a document in the hands of his descendants showing that he held a commission in the State militia as captain of a troop of cavalry signed by Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, the famous Revolutionary war governor of the State of Connecticut, and a tried and trusted friend of Gen. Washington, the said document also bearing the signature of Samuel Wyllis, secretary. This entitled Capt. Gillmore to be commander of the 4th troop, 1st Regiment of Cavalry, in the State. The children born to Nathaniel Gillmore were: Harry, who became a well-known and successful physician in Brookfield, Mass.; William, the father of James M.; and Nathaniel, who was long engaged in the iron business in Bellows Falls, Mass. All of these sons were given collegiate educations, and became prominent and successful business men.

William Gillmore was a man of strong character, and occupied positions of trust in both civil and military affairs. For many years he was connected with the old Stafford furnace, and in addition to his public services, managed successfully a large iron manufacturing business. He was made lieutenant of the 2nd light infantry, 19th Reg. of State militia, April 28, 1836, and captain of the same, Sept. 12, 1836, his commission bearing the signature of Gov. Henry Edwards, the same name being attached to his commission issued on Sept. 19, 1836, which promoted Mr. Gillmore to the position of lieutenant-colonel. On May 9, 1838, Gov. William A. Ellsworth recognized the worthy services of Mr. Gillmore in a higher degree, and he was promoted to be colonel of this regiment. That this successful military man should also have been successful in business life, shows the strong fibre of which he was made, and which he has in great measure transmitted to his son, James M. Gillmore, of Putnam.

William Gillmore was born in 1798, and died in 1868. His first marriage, in 1820, was to a Miss Converse, and the children of this union were: William; Evelina, who married Seneca Lincoln, an architect of Hartford, Conn., where she still resides; Jane E., who married John Rupley, one of the old time stage drivers; Phelps P., who is a retired iron manufacturer of Hartford; Henry, deceased, who conducted a picture frame manufactory; Mary, who married William Allen, a book-binder, in Worcester, Mass.; and Emily, who died young. In 1835 William Gillmore was married to Miss Elzina Stebbins, of Massachusetts, and the children of this union were: Albert, who died at the age of twenty years; Sarah, who married Peter Carpenter, a musician of Boston, Mass.; James M., a prominent citizen of Putnam, Conn.; George W., who married Josephine Gould, and is a photographer in Worcester, Mass.; and Seneca Allen, who died young.

James Monroe Gillmore was born at Gillmore's Hill, in Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., Dec. 31, 1838. His education was such as could be obtained in the common schools of this town at that period and was of the practical rather than the ornamental order. It proved to be sufficient, however, with the advantages of later life to enable him to occupy and adorn the many social and civil positions he has been called upon to fill. He was nurtured and trained in a sturdy line of moral, religious and business economies, his father demonstrating in his own strenuous life, the value of energy and untiring industry, combined with lofty patriotism and strict integrity.

Young Gillmore's first start in business was made at the age of eighteen years, when his father sent him to Hinsdale, Mass., to establish a foundry and iron works in that place. He executed the trust in a successful and satisfactory manner, but the work was not to his liking, his natural inclination being in an entirely different direction. Two years later he went to Springfield, Mass., and in that city made his entrance into the field in which he has been so successful. Turning his attention to art work, in 1860 he gradually drifted into the photographic business, since that time having conducted studios in New York and the New England States. In 1886, in association with A. D. McIntyre, Mr. Gillmore came to Putnam, Conn., purchasing the Wright studio, in the Fuller building. Later he disposed of his interest to his partner and then moved to Rockville, Conn., where he established a studio in the Fitch block, and remained until 1893. He had, however, become attached to Putnam, and when a good opening presented itself in the sale of the Sherman studio, in the Egan building, he once more settled among his former friends, and took up the thread of his business nearly where he had left it some years before, with the added advantage of the years of experience he had gained.

Since taking charge of this establishment, Mr. Gillmore has steadily expanded, adopting modern methods in every department and making his studio the chosen resort of the cultured and aesthetic. He has made a specialty of light and shadow, and artistic posing in relation to artistic photographic effect, and it is generally conceded that the results of his taste and study compare favorably with any work now on the market. His work is a labor of love, and he puts himself into it, not only his choice of subjects, his grouping, his management of the camera, but also his delicate, tasteful and true finishing, which produce artistic triumphs that reflect credit on his name and his city.

On July 3, 1873, Mr. Gillmore was united in marriage with Miss Abbie M., daughter of Silas and Elizabeth (Kimball) Batchelder, of Canterbury, N. H. Mrs. Gillmore is a direct descendant, on her father's side, from a branch of the Kimball family, which has long been distinguished in Central and Southern New England for its probity, sound sense and general thrift. To Mr. and Mrs. Gillmore have been born two daughters, Jennie and Josie, both being accomplished assistants to their father in the studio, inheriting his artistic tastes and love of beauty.

Mr. Gillmore takes not a little pride in his fraternal associations, having been a member of the Masonic fraternity for thirty-five years, being past high priest of Adoniram Chapter, No. 18, of Rockville; also of Putnam Chapter, No. 41, of Putnam, and is Past P. C. of W., of Rockville Council. He is also a charter member and past chancellor of Damon Lodge, K. P., of Rockville, and he also belongs to the American Mechanics. His predilection for lodge work has given him keen interest in it, and made him a valued member in the councils and ritualistic work of the various organizations. He was a member of the Rockville Republican club, with which political party he has been identified all his life, although he has sought for no political honors, serving his party consistently with his ideas of local and national prosperity. Mr. Gillmore has a wide circle of official and personal friends. His worth in the fraternal orders is recognized to such a degree that he is called upon constantly to serve in some capacity, thus continually extending his usefulness and acquaintance. His talents, work and pleasing personality bring him into accord with the best social elements of Putnam.

JONATHAN N. WOOD, a prominent and successful farmer and owner of a gristmill at Gilead in the town of Hebron, Tolland county, is a descendant of a line of ancestors prominent in the history of the country.

Thomas Wood, the great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Coventry, R. I., where he followed the occupation of farmer all his life, was a soldier of the Revolution and died when 102 years of age.

Caleb Wood, son of Thomas, was also born in Coventry, R. I., in which vicinity he followed farming, dying at West Greenwich at the age of ninety-six, of cancer; he served in the Revolutionary war. His wife, Huldah (Greene) Wood, survived him to about the same age. To these worthy people were born: James, who removed to Fort Plain, N. Y., where he died; Benjamin, who married Huldah Hutton, moved to Sardina, N. Y. and died; Squire G.; Kate, who married Mr. Brown, a farmer, and died at Buffalo, N. Y.; Oney, a carpenter, who married Betsey Johnson, and resided at Coventry, R. I.; Betsey, who married John Sweet and died in Coventry, R. I.; Gardner, a mechanic, who died in Providence, R. I., having been married twice, first to Elizabeth Maxon.

Squire Greene Wood, father of Jonathan N., was born in West Greenwich, R. I., in 1797, and was reared to farm life, but at the age of eighteen went to Coventry to learn the trade of carpenter under Mr. Jonathan Nichols, who later became his father-in-law. For a number of years he worked at his trade and also as a pattern maker for Mr. Thomas J. Hill, a prominent manufacturer of Providence. In addition, Mr. Wood owned and operated successfully a large farm lying in both Coventry and West Greenwich. After a long and useful life, he died at the age of ninety-three, of old age, and is buried at Coventry. In politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican and held a number of the town offices.

Religiously he was a member of the First Christian Church, of Rye City, R. I., and took an active part in all church work.

The maiden name of Squire Greene Wood's wife was Amy Nichols, of Coventry, R. I., and she was a daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Johnson) Nichols, Jonathan Nichols having been a major in the Revolutionary war, and by occupation a carpenter and surveyor. Mrs. Wood died Dec. 4, 1899, aged ninety-four years and one month. The children born of this marriage were: Jonathan N.; Caleb, who died young; a son who died young; Kate, who died unmarried; Caleb T., who was married twice, a school teacher and a fine mathematician, who located in the far West, where he was professor of schools for many years, at the time of his death serving as county clerk; Huldah, who married Gustavus Wilbur, a mechanic, and died in Coventry, R. I.; Elizabeth, who married James Potter and resides in Coventry.

Jonathan N. Wood was born July 15, 1822, in Coventry, R. I., where until the age of seventeen he attended district school and during the summer months, worked upon the farm. At this age, however, he began to learn the trade of machinist in the shop of Thomas J. Hill, a manufacturer at Providence, R. I., receiving $3.00 a week, out of which he had to pay board and for his clothes. For the next ten years, Mr. Wood continued working at his trade in the vicinity of home, but when twenty-seven entered the machine shop of Perres Pech in Coventry, and later the one owned by A. & W. Sprague, at Natick, R. I., where he remained for several years. The wages paid there were small, and he therefore removed to Crampton, R. I., and received employment in the shop of the factory of a Mr. Cousins, who later failed and Mr. Wood lost nearly $100 in wages. Not discouraged, he soon obtained employment in Coralina in the town of Richmond, R. I., being placed in charge of a machine shop. Here he remained one year, then removed to the Quinebaug mills at Danielsonville, Conn., where he was overseer, having several machines under him. In 1868 he purchased a small farm in Gilead, of Robert Brown, known as the "Root Place," where he was engaged in farming until he was sent for and employed by Franklin Glazier, owner of the Hopewell mills, at South Glastonbury, Conn., as overseer and repaired wood and iron work. Being so well satisfied with his employment, he later sold his farm, but finally removed to Coventry, R. I., and worked upon his father's farm until about 1881, when he purchased his present farm, consisting of forty-seven acres, and he also owns a farm of seventy-five acres in Marlborough, Conn. After his many changes and experiences, Mr. Wood is now employed in general farming and custom work at grist-milling.

Mr. Wood has been twice married. His first marriage occurred in West Greenwich, R. I., to Diana Young, of Sterling, Conn., who died seven months after the wedding. July 3, 1848, he was married to Caroline A. Greene, born Aug. 16, 1825, a native of West Greenwich, a daughter of John T. and Diana (Shelden) Greene. Mrs. Wood died on Feb. 18, 1901, and is buried at West Greenwich, R. I., being deeply mourned by her loving family. To Mr. and Mrs. Wood were born: Lydia Hane, born Aug. 28, 1849, who married first Daniel Capwell, second William H. Gooding, a real estate agent at Central Falls, R. I., and who had two children by her first marriage—Cortland G., a successful dentist at Boston, and Anna, deceased at the age of nineteen; John H., born May 17, 1851, a farmer and carpenter of Hebron, who married first Elva M. Hills, second Agnes Bingham, third Marguerite R. Ferguson, and has one child by his first marriage, Caroline, born Feb. 4, 1883; Caroline D., born May 5, 1858, who married Caleb B. Parker, resides in Salesville, R. I., and has three children, Lula, Mason M. and Carrie D.; Flora P., born Oct. 16, 1859, a graduate from the Providence high school and for several years past principal of a graded school at Central Falls, R. I., who married J. D. Hunt, of New York, June 18, 1902; Annie L., born April 16, 1860, who died Feb. 5, 1865; Zanna M., born March 28, 1863, who died Feb. 22, 1864.

Mr. Wood is a staunch Republican in politics, and represented Hebron in the State Legislature in 1882, and has held various town offices. While residing in West Greenwich, he served very acceptably in the town council. One accomplishment of Mr. Wood's of which his children are very proud, is his fine penmanship. To such skill did he attain in this line, that he was a teacher of it in several of the towns in which he resided during his younger years, and his children have highly treasured specimens of his work. Mr. Wood is an earnest member of the Christian Church of Westerly, R. I., as was his wife, and he is a man highly esteemed for his many excellent qualities.

ARNOLD WARREN (deceased), for many years one of the prosperous farmers of the town of Coventry, South Coventry, Tolland Co., Conn., and also a farm machine agent, traced his ancestry back to the early days of his locality.

Grandfather Ziba Warren was a resident of Coventry, where he died, aged seventy-nine. He married Thankful Baker, who died in New York State. His farming operations were upon an extensive scale, as he not only owned the farm where his grandson now resides, of 125 acres, in the southern part of the town, but considerable farm property besides, and probably was one of the largest farmers of the town in his day. In politics he was a Democrat, and was very highly respected throughout Tolland county. His family was as follows: Josiah, who died in Mansfield; Lewis, who went West; Elijah, who died in Coventry, young; Jonathan, who died young in Coventry; and Ziba, Jr. Of these, Josiah and two of his sons died within three weeks, and are buried near the lake in the Nathan Hale cemetery. His widow married George Howe, now also deceased, and she makes her home with her son Alfred, whose first wife died leaving him with four children, Josiah, Beatrice, Clair and Arthur. For his second wife Alfred married Mrs. Durea, and they live in Scotland. Herbert O. Warren, another son of Josiah, married Mary Hicks. Another, Luman Warren, married Carrie Watson, and they live in Broad Brook.

Ziba Warren, Jr., the father of Arnold, was a native of Coventry, who died in Mansfield, aged seventy-seven. Early in life he married in Willington Phebe Balch, a daughter of Sylvester Balch; she was a native of Willington, and lived to the age of seventy-nine. She had two brothers, Sylvester and Ira; Ira married Mary Risley, lived in Manchester, and died in 1889; he had one son, Charles, who lives in Manchester. Ziba Warren, Jr., was a farmer by occupation, and after his marriage lived in Willington for a short time, but soon returned to Coventry. Later he removed to Mansfield, Conn., purchased a farm of 200 acres, which he cultivated very successfully, and gave special attention to fruit raising. In politics he was a Republican, but not an office-seeker, and in religious matters was a Spiritualist, while his wife was a Baptist. Both of them are interred in the beautiful Storrs cemetery in Mansfield. The children born to these worthy people were as follows: Arnold; John, at Wethersfield; Elijah, who died when young; William, deceased, having been accidentally killed, who served in the Civil war, was married and had one child; Alonzo, living in Windham, Conn., a farmer and miller; Mary, deceased, who married Edgar Lockwood, and lived on South street, South Coventry; Joseph, living in Coventry, who married and has a family; Levi, a grocer of Willimantic, Conn., who married Elizabeth C. McCawley, and has one child, Laura J.; Sarah, who married Lyman Marsh, of Mansfield, Conn.; Joel, on the old homestead in Mansfield.

Arnold Warren was born May 7, 1837, in Willington, Conn., and attended the district schools in whatever locality he was living in. Being trained to farm work, at the age of twenty-one he began operations for himself, but early in the sixties, his grandfather having grown old and feeble, he removed to Coventry, and tenderly cared for him until his death. In time he purchased the grandfather's homestead, and engaged in general farming and dairying, disposing of his milk in Boston. For over thirty years prior to his decease he was agent for Walter A. Wood's farming machinery, covering a territory of ten towns, and he was also agent for an excellent fertilizer for many years. At different times when the opportunity offered, Mr. Warren engaged in other lines, always with success, and one year made a trip through the South as agent for a popular book.

On Nov. 10, 1868, Mr. Warren was married to Annette Porter, a native of North Coventry, and a daughter of Gurdon and Phoebe (Hoxie) Porter, one of the thrifty old families of that part of the town. Gurdon Porter was a farmer of North Coventry, where he lived, and died at the age of fifty-one, his wife surviving him to the age of sixty. Their family consisted of: Electa, who died young; Mary, who married Brigham Barrows, and is now on the homestead in North Coventry; Electa (2), deceased, who married Charles Porter, of Tolland, Conn.; Olive, who married Orrin Turner, of North Coventry; Isabella, deceased, who married James D. Willis, and lived in Willimantic, Conn.; Mrs. Warren, born Feb. 18, 1851; Julia, married to Fred Little, of Providence; and Thomas, of Broad Brook, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Warren came: Walter, born Aug. 10, 1874, a graduate from and assistant superintendent of Storrs College, class of 1894; Frederick Arthur, born Feb. 11, 1882, who has been attending high school at Willimantic for two years; Nettie Estelle, born Jan. 16, 1870, who died Aug. 19, 1875; Aurelia Elizabeth, born Aug. 20, 1873, who died Nov. 30, 1876; and Mary R., born Nov. 2, 1876, who died Oct. 2, 1896.

Politically Mr. Warren was a Republican, took an active interest in local affairs, and served most acceptably as grand juror, justice of the peace, constable for twenty years, deputy sheriff for one term under Sheriff Buell, and selectman for three or four years. He was a charter member, as is his wife, of the local Grange, of which he was the first treasurer, and was holding that office at the time of his death, although he had not filled it continuously from the establishment of the organization. The sons are also members of the Grange and the entire family take an active interest in the work. Mrs. Warren is a member of the South Coventry Congregational Church, which her husband also attended.

Having attained prosperity through his own efforts, and established himself firmly in the esteem of his fellow townsmen by years of probity as a public official as well as a private citizen, Mr. Warren might well have been proud of the result of his endeavors. He passed away Jan. 24, 1903, in his sixty-sixth year, and was buried in the Nathan Hale cemetery.

CRANDALL. The Crandall family is a prominent one in Tolland, Tolland county, where father and son have won and hold a leading position in the business and social world.

ALDEN BRADFORD CRANDALL, the father, was born in Monson, Mass., March 28, 1823, his parents removing to Wilbraham, Mass., when he was about six months old. They remained in that place about a year and then came to Stafford, Conn., making their home in that pleasant town until 1833, when Tolland became their abiding place. They located there on the Samuel Reed farm in the north part of the town, and soon attained a creditable place in the moral and business life of the community.

Mr. Crandall has always been a farmer. The most of his education was obtained in district No. 2, of Tolland. When he left school, he began work as a farmer, and in this occupation he has attained commendable success. With his wife he has lived in the same house since 1846, a house that was put up over 135 years ago.

Mr. Crandall was married Sept. 7, 1845, to Rachel Usher, who was born April 4, 1824, in Smithfield, R. I., a daughter of Daniel and Free-love (Inman) Usher. She was one of a family of eighteen children. To their union were born: Mary, the wife of Charles E. Usher, of Tolland; Ellen M., who married Charles Williams, and is living in Mount Baker, Washington; Alden B., who died unmarried at the age of twenty-five years; Edwin J.; Adda, who died in infancy; Alvin and Alvina, twins, who died young.

Mr. Crandall has been a lifelong Democrat, casting his first presidential vote in 1844. From the beginning he has taken an active part in the affairs of the town of Tolland, serving as assessor, grand juror, and on the board of relief. He has been on the Democratic town committee, of which he was chairman several terms. In 1874 he represented his town in the General Assembly, the last term of that body held in New Haven, and was chairman of the Finance committee. In his earlier life he was a member of the I. O. O. F. He served in the Civil war, being mustered in Sept. 20, 1862, in the 22d regiment, C. V. I., and was honorably discharged July 7, 1863.

Mr. Crandall's farm was long known as the Rial Loomis farm, and the house in which he lives is one of the oldest and best preserved in the town.

Amos Crandall, the father of Alden B., was born in Tolland, Aug. 30, 1801, and in 1822 was married to Eunice Day, born Dec. 6, 1794. She died Oct. 20, 1883, at the age of eighty-nine years. Mr. Crandall left Tolland when young, but returned in 1833 to spend the remaining years of his life in the cultivation of the Samuel Reed farm. He died July 25, 1862, at the age of sixty years. A Democrat, he was a good citizen and a man of worth. His children were: Alden B., noted above; Maria, the widow of Smith H. Brown, living in Rockville; Mary Ann, who died at the age of twenty-two years; Roxanna, the first wife of Smith H. Brown; Luranna, married to James Walker, of North Coventry, both of whom are dead.

Samuel Crandall, the grandfather of Alden B., was born April 13, 1774, in Tolland, Conn., and was married to Roxana Rawdon, Nov. 23, 1792. They had four children: Jarvis, born Dec. 10, 1799, who died June 28, 1854, long to be remembered as "one of the sweet singers of Israel;" Amos; Pamela, born Nov. 27, 1796; and Wealthy, born Nov. 28, 1798. Mr. Crandall left home, and from the moment of his departure was never heard of. Years after his widow married Samuel Reed, of Tolland, a Revolutionary soldier, and a pensioner of the General Government for his gallant services in that struggle.

Constant Crandall, the first known of the family, probably lost his life in the expedition to Cuba and the siege of Havana. Several members of the Eaton family perished at that time, and he was related to them. In the year 1750 this Crandall came to Tolland. The only records made of him are that he had a son, born July 25, 1757, and that he died at Havana, Aug. 27, 1762. Giles Crandall came to Tolland about the same time and married Bethiah Eaton in 1749. They had a family of thirteen children, and among them was Samuel Crandall, who is noted in a former paragraph as having been born in 1774.

EDWIN JARVIS CRANDALL was born Oct. 12, 1854, in Tolland, and had his education in the local school. When he was seventeen he began working for Loren Newcomb, who gave him employment on his farm for two years. The ensuing two years he was employed by Cassius Newberry, of Windsor. At the expiration of this period, Mr. Crandall returned to Tolland, where he leased the Jones Green farm for a year, and the Henry Young farm near Tolland Center for a second year. For years he rented the Lemuel B. Joslyn farm, until he had become sufficiently forehanded to purchase the 100-acre farm of Chauncey Kent. There he has remained to the present time, becoming quite prosperous and proving himself a skillful and industrious farmer. Mr. Crandall purchased the water privilege near Tolland Center, together with the Eli Benton grist mill, two years later putting in a cider mill, and doing the most of the grinding for Tolland and the vicinity.

Mr. Crandall is a staunch Democrat, and has served his town as assessor for a number of years, and has been constable, justice of the peace, and was selectman in 1896. In 1889 he was sent by his town to the General Assembly, serving in the session known as the "deadlock session." With his family he attends the Methodist Church.

Mr. Crandall was married in December, 1873, to Mary Jane Round, born in Tolland, a daughter of William Round, whose wife was a Miss Whitman. They have the following children: Harry Morgan; Harvey Edwin; Rose May; Lizzie Maria; Clayton Howard; Luella Maud; Cora Melissa; Ellen Rachel; Susan Jane; Herbert, who died young; Lillie Eunice; Henry Bradford; Carrie Emily. Rose, the oldest daughter, married Harry Smith, son of Chauncey and Susan Smith, and has three children, Ruth Helen, Olive Crandall and Dorcas Rachel. Harry M. married Emma Booth, daughter of Samuel and Angeline Booth. Lizzie M. is the wife of George Hughes, son of John and Sarah Ann Hughes, and has one child, Florence Gladis. Maud married Solva Estlin Clough, son of John and Sarah Elizabeth Clough. Harvey E. is married and has two children, Lila May, born in May, 1898, and Clayton Harvey, born in August, 1900.

Alfred C. Thrall

ALFRED OLCOTT THRALL, one of the prominent citizens and successful farmers of Vernon, Tolland county, comes from one of the oldest families in the State of Connecticut, his ancestor, William Thrall, being one of the first settlers at Windsor, and a member of the party of Rev. John Wareham, who settled there in 1635.

William Thrall was a native of England born in 1605, and his wife's name was Goode, and among their family of children were Timothy and David. Our subject is in the eighth generation of this old family. In 1637, the old records tell us, that Windsor was required to furnish thirty men for service in the Pequot war, and among fifteen names found of those who answered the demand, is that of William Thrall. The great battle which decided the struggle between the Colonists and the savages occurred May 26, 1637, and was so complete a victory in the early history of the State, and caused such universal relief and rejoicing all through New England, that a grant of land was given to each soldier, and to this day the memory of an ancestor who fought the wily Pequots is an honorable heirloom in every Connecticut family.

Timothy Thrall, the son of William, was born in Old Windsor in 1641, and in 1659 married Deborah Gunn, and they reared a family of nine children. Timothy was a prominent citizen, possessed of considerable property and influence. His name frequently appears on the Windsor records.

John Thrall, son of Timothy, born in 1671 or 1676, married Mindwell Moses, and reared a family of nine children. His son Moses was, no doubt, the first of the Thrall family to settle in Vernon.

Moses Thrall was born in Windsor in 1703, and was one of the pioneers in what is now Vernon Center, and owned a large tract of land, upon a part of which Alfred O. Thrall now lives in Vernon. Much of the land between Vernon and Phoenix Pond belonged to him. He bore the title of "Captain" and was one of the leading men of his section. His death occurred Aug. 24, 1770, and he was buried in the cemetery at Vernon. His son, James, was the great-grandfather of Alfred O. Thrall.

James Thrall was born in Vernon in 1746, and was reared and married there. He followed the occupation of a farmer and died in 1816 in his native town.

Daniel Thrall, son of James, was also born in Vernon. He inherited the farm of 200 acres at the death of his father, and followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He married (first) Susan Baker, who died in 1805, aged twenty-four years, who was a member of the old Baker family of Tolland. She left three children at her death. Warren, a physician who practiced at Stafford Springs, and later in Glastonbury where he died; Ira, the father of our subject; and Daniel, who lived to an old age and died in Colchester. Daniel Thrall married (second) Elizabeth Strickland, of Vermont, then a resident of Marlborough, and she became the mother of the following children: Betsey, who married Miner C. Preston; Nancy, who married Nelson Kingsbury, a manufacturer of Rockville and various other places, who died in Hartford; Harriet, who married David Bacon, a manufacturer; Lemuel, at one time a blacksmith in Rockville, who had two sons, one of whom died on his way home after the horrors of Andersonville prison; and Henry, youngest son of Daniel, who all his life was a manufacturer in Stafford Springs, and who married for his first wife, Emeline Converse, and upon her death, married her sister, Minerva, both daughters of Capt. Parley Converse, of Stafford Springs.

Ira Thrall was born at Vernon Center, Sept. 24, 1803, attended the local schools and became a successful teacher, following that profession for eighteen years in Vernon, Manchester and other sections, and acquired quite a reputation as an accomplished grammarian. During his younger life he remained at home, but when thirteen years old he went to Pennsylvania, with an uncle, Jerry Baker, but becoming homesick, the poor lad started on foot and walked the entire distance to his home. Ira Thrall was married, in Vernon, to Miss Larrissa Sparks, a native of what is now Vernon Depot, born April 14, 1802, daughter of Jonas and Olive (Smith) Sparks, the latter a native of East Had-dam. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Thrall were: Susan, died in infancy. Susan O., born in 1830, married Chauncey Smith, who is deceased; she resides in Rockville. Julius S., born Aug. 11, 1832, lives in Rockville, and has a sketch following. Lucia A., born in 1834, married Eldredge Tuttle, who is deceased; she resides in Rockville. Alfred Olcott, born in 1835, is the farmer on the old homestead. Nelson K. died in childhood. Wells G., born in 1841, married Julia Willes; he is a veteran of the Civil war and lives in New Britain, Conn. Mrs. Larrissa Thrall died Nov. 23, 1869, and Ira Thrall, July 12, 1878. Ira Thrall was a man who left his mark on his generation, was prominently identified with many public interests, represented Vernon in the Legislature and always stood steadfast for Jeffersonian Democracy. For several years he was a selectman, was tax collector, and in his younger days served in the office of constable. On April 1, 1848, he located on the old homestead, and there he met his death from a fall. He was buried by the side of his devoted wife, in the Elmwood cemetery at Vernon Center.

Alfred Olcott Thrall, son of Ira Thrall, was born Sept. 11, 1835, at Kelloggsville, now Talcottville, in the town of Vernon, and secured his education at the home schools. When he reached the age of eighteen years he came to Rockville and secured employment in the finishing room of the Rock Mill. In this establishment, and also in the American Mill, he was engaged for some five years, and then worked at Hartford for a time. At Stafford he was made a quarry foreman, and while in that city became acquainted with his future wife, Miss Julia E. West, to whom he was married March 11, 1856. Mrs. Thrall was born Aug. 23, 1836, a daughter of Asa D. and Mary (Converse) West, and a granddaughter of Alva West, a Revolutionary soldier, whose wife belonged to the Davis family.

Asa D. West, was born in Stafford, Conn., Dec. 15, 1795, was a blacksmith by trade, and died Sept. 20, 1864. Mary Converse, his wife, was born June 23, 1801, and died March 19, 1888. They were the parents of eleven children: (1) Melissa M., born in 1821; (2) Orin W. (deceased), born in 1823; (3) William D., born in 1825; (4) Emerson R. (deceased), born in 1827, went to California in 1849, reaching that country by the Isthmus route; (5) Francis G. (deceased), born in 1829; (6) Betsy C. (deceased), born in 1832; (7) Fidelia J. (deceased), born June 9, 1837; (8) Julia E., Mrs. Thrall; (9) Albert D., born in 1839, is a veteran of the Civil war, and resides in Marysville, Cal.; (10) Charles H., born in 1841, died Sept. 15, 1864, was a soldier in the Civil war, was captured by the Rebels, and died in Andersonville prison; and (11) Martha A., born Oct. 16, 1843.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred O. Thrall have had the following children: (1) Albert C., born Dec. 15, 1862, died July 12, 1864; (2) Nellie West, born April 16, 1867, died Jan. 21, 1875; (3) Eva M., born Dec. 15, 1871, married Oct. 16, 1895, Harry C. Smith, a bookkeeper in Hartford, Conn., now residing in Vernon.

In 1865 Mr. and Mrs. Thrall returned to Vernon and located on the old Thrall homestead, which he had inherited from his father. This land was originally purchased by his ancestors from the Indians, and has been in the possession of the family from that remote day. At one time this homestead was very extensive comprising many hundred acres, but, as it passed through the various generations, was much broken up and divided, so that only a fraction of the original body is in the hands of Mr. Thrall. Tradition has it that the Indian chief, Tankanhooson, is buried on this farm, and the stream that runs through it bears his name. Indians were undoubtedly numerous in this vicinity for many generations, as arrow heads and other evidences of their presence are frequently unearthed. Since their location in this neighborhood the Thralls have built four homes. The one now occupied by Mr. Thrall was built by his grandfather, and reconstructed by himself. The third house, which stood some two or three rods east of his present location is well remembered by Mr. Thrall. The other two were a little less than a quarter of a mile south from the present location, and they stood close together. The ruins of the old well can still be traced. A more charming spot particularly in summer can hardly be imagined than the place where Mr. Thrall has his home. The house is in a valley nearly surrounded by hills.

From a bay window at the south of the house, through a break in the hills, Talcott Mountain may be seen. Mr. Thrall owns a farm of a hundred acres, and engages in general farming quite extensively. Before 1890 he was much engaged in tobacco culture, but since that time has been giving his attention to dairying on a large scale. In 1888 he was one of the organizers of the Vernon creamery, of which corporation he has since 1896 been the president, and he has always been on the board of directors. This creamery is well managed, and has an enviable reputation for its butter, of which it produces about ten thousand pounds a month. The present directors are John Risley, E. B. Lathrop, H. P. Rick, Henry Burke, George Dart, George Fisk and A. O. Thrall. Probably to Mr. Thrall more than any other man, is due the credit for valuable services in the early start of this institution.

Mr. Thrall cast his first vote for James Buchanan, but since that time has supported the Republican party. He has always interested himself in local matters, and has held various positions of trust and honor, serving as assessor, justice of the peace, and at present as a member of the board of relief. At one time he allowed his name to be presented as a candidate for the Republican nomination to the General Assembly, but before the meeting of the convention withdrew in favor of Mr. Kuhnly, of Rockville.

Mr. and Mrs. Thrall united with the Vernon Centre Congregational Church in 1869, and from time to time have served in important places in that society. Mr. and Mrs. Thrall, and their daughter, Mrs. Smith, belong to the Vernon Grange. Mrs. Smith is lecturer of that grange, now serving her second term. Mr. Thrall has been treasurer of the Vernon Grange for years.

At the request of the committee having in their charge the preparation of sample Connecticut farm products, Mr. Thrall selected a few ears of corn from his crib, and sent them for exhibition at the Columbian World's Fair at Chicago. When the awards were made Mr. Thrall received a bronze medal for Yellow King Corn of the best quality. It was planted May 1st, in hills 3 x 3½ feet in soil well fertilized, and was harvested Sept. 5th. The yield was from forty to seventy bushels to the acre, and the weight fifty-six to sixty-four pounds to the bushel.

JULIUS S. THRALL, one of the prominent retired citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, comes from one of the oldest families in the State of Connecticut, and is in the eighth generation from William Thrall, one of the first settlers at Windsor and a member of the party of Rev. John Wareham who settled there in 1635. His ancestry is given in the sketch of his brother, which immediately precedes.

When Julius S. Thrall had reached an age ma ture enough to start to school, he was placed under the scholarly care of Dr. A. R. Goodrich, of what is now called Dobsonville, but which then bore the name of Centerville, and later he was given two terms in the Vernon Center select school, this ending his educational advantages. At this time he was a strong and hearty young man of seventeen, and he decided to learn the trade of finisher, entering the New England mill for this purpose, and later, when competent, went to Stafford Springs, there taking charge of the finishing room in a mill, and still later went on to Coventry where his uncle D. B. Bacon, had charge of the mill.

J. F. Thrall

On May 18, 1853, Mr. Thrall was married in West Stafford, Conn., to Miss Mary A. Holmes, who was born there Jan. 2, 1832, a daughter of John and Sabrina (Case) Holmes, the former of whom was a native of Stafford, a son of Deacon David Holmes, who had come there from Ashford, Conn., and the latter a daughter of Stephen Case, of Tolland.

Early in the fifties Julius S. Thrall came to Rockville and for a short time was overseer in the finishing room in the American mill, this being an unusual position for a boy of twenty, but a short time subsequently he held a like position at Windsor, Conn. In 1857 he entered in the shuttle business, getting out the square blocks of timber; and while engaged in this industry, his right arm came into contact with the saw, inflicting an injury which sadly crippled him and which has been a handicap to him ever since. After this accident in the spring of 1858, he went to his father's home in Vernon, and remained there until 1865, engaged in farming. At this time he endeavored to obtain admission into the army, but was debarred by his injured hand, and he then returned to his trade, working in Talcottville for two years, thence coming to the Rock mill at Rockville, where for six years he had charge of the finishing room.

In April, 1873, Mr. Thrall bought out the livery business of Jeremiah Page, in the rear of the "Rockville House," selling this in October, 1892, but during the first four years in that line he purchased the grounds on which the buildings stand, all of which he still owns, and he also owns the building occupied by White's warehouse. Since leaving the livery business he had charge of the bill-posting line of the town, which was previously conducted by his son Charles, but he later resigned this also to other hands, and in the spring of 1899 accepted the position of superintendent of Grove Hill cemetery. Mr. Thrall owns a fine farm in Vernon, upon which his son William resides. To Mr. and Mrs. Thrall came children as follows: Ella Jane, born in 1854, died in 1857; Mary Josephine, born in 1855, died in 1856; Carrie Louise, born Sept. 26, 1857, married Arthur Kingsbury, and lives in Des Moines, Iowa; William B., born in 1859, now a farmer of Vernon, married Florence Preston, of Wapping, and has three children, Robert, Wallace, and Frederick; Julius Dwight, born in 1864, married Lizzie Layer, of New York city, and they have two children, May and Chester; Wilbur F., born in 1866, died in 1867; Charles H., born in Aug., 1870, in October, 1895, married Ida McPherson, of Rockville, and has one child, Corinne; and Edna Mabel was born in 1874.

Charles H. Thrall is located in Havana, Cuba, dealing in electrical supplies and also engaged in a contracting business. He was a member of the Rockville High school graduating class of 1889, and then entered Yale College, but failing eyesight in the second year necessitated his giving up school and his physician recommended a warmer climate. Going to Havana he entered into business there, and at the time of the breaking out of the Spanish war he had a thrilling experience in his attempt to reach the insurgents camp, a full account of which was printed in the New York World of May 22, 1898. He was confined in the Cabanas Fortress as a Spanish prisoner. Haydon Jones, a newspaper correspondent, was captured with him, and they were exchanged for two Spanish officers and two servants, who had been captured on board the prize steamer, "Argonauta," by the U. S. fleet. Edna Mabel Thrall, youngest in the family of Julius S. Thrall, is a graduate of the Rockville High school, class of 1893. She then went to the Boston School of Oratory, and also attended Dr. S. S. Curry's School of Expression. At present this young lady is primary teacher in Rockville, having previously taught physical culture and elocution. In 1898 she had charge of the Elocution of the Midland Chautauqua, at Des Moines, Iowa. She has charge of the primary department of the Sunday school of the Union Congregational Church, of which both she and her mother are devoted members.

The first presidential vote cast by Julius S. Thrall was for John C. Fremont, in 1856, and since that time he has voted with the Republican party. He is a member of the city council, and socially is connected with the Golden Cross Society.

DEACON JAMES JACKSON SLATE (deceased), who was one of the most highly respected citizens of Mansfield, Tolland county, resided on Chestnut Hill on a farm that for many years has been in the possession of the family.

Ezekiel Slate, born in 1719, the great-grandfather of Deacon James, was a farmer of Mansfield, who married Mehitable Hall, a daughter of Lieut. James Hall. She died Dec. 7, 1803, aged eighty-two years, and he died Jan. 9, 1792. Their children were: Ezekiel, born Oct. 30, 1746, married to Mary Russ; Mehitable, born Feb. 19, 1749, who married Daniel Clark, of Hampton; James, born Dec. 11, 1751; Elizabeth, born July 22, 1754, who married Elias Chapman, of Ashford; Ann, born July 8, 1756, married to William Martin, of Hampton; Mary, born Aug. 15, 1758, who married Thomas Young, of Ashford; Zerviah, born June 7, 1761, who married Aaron Hall, of Mansfield; and Sarah, born Jan. 14, 1766, who married Samuel Barrows, of Mansfield.

Grandfather James Slate was born in Mansfield, became a farmer and built a part of the house where his grandson now lives. There he passed his entire life, a successful, highly esteemed citizen, and died May 5, 1836, aged eighty-four years. Feb. 1, 1781, he married Mary Needham, who was born in 1760 and died Aug. 7, 1839. The children of this marriage were: Clarissa, born Nov. 16, 1783, who married a Mr. Lull, and removed to Vermont, where she died; Mary, born Oct. 2, 1784, who married Alvin Bennett, and lived in Wilbraham, Mass., where she died; Sally, born March 5, 1787, who married Nicholas Spencer, and died in Mansfield; Mehitable, born Jan. 10, 1790, who married Charles Thompson, and died in Mansfield; Lora, born May 10, 1792, who married John Thompson, and died in Coventry; James, born April 10, 1794, who died young; Nancy, born May 11, 1796, who married Thomas Place, and died in Mansfield; Needham, born Aug. 6, 1798; Phila, born Jan. 7, 1801, who married Horace Hall, and moved to Pennsylvania, where she died; Armina, born Aug. 19, 1803, who married Eliphalet Martin, and died in Mansfield; and Sabrina, born Dec. 30, 1805, who married Charles Martin, and died in Mansfield.

Deacon Needham Slate, the father of James J., was born in the old home, and brought up to farm work. When a young man he taught school in Mansfield, remained on the homestead, cared for his parents through old age, and after their death came into possession of the land. Needham became a successful farmer and large land owner, and also for many years he was an agent for a Hartford firm who sent him cut cloth to be sewed together for clothing. It was his business to engage the women of the neighborhood to do this sewing, and as he kept a grocery store, it was convenient to pay the women in trade. During the most of his life his health was poor, and his death occurred in August, 1880, and his burial was at Spring Hill. In early life he was a Jeffersonian Democrat but later became a Republican, holding a number of town offices and during one term represented the town of Mansfield in the Legislature. For a number of years, Mr. Slate was a member of the Spring Hill Baptist Church, holding the office of deacon, but later, because of dissatisfaction, he withdrew to the Baptist Church of Willimantic.

On Jan. 21, 1825, Needham Slate was married to Fannie Burnham, born Jan. 29, 1798, in Hampton, Conn., a daughter of John Burnham, a farmer there. She died April 1, 1882. The children of this marriage were: Fannie Marilla, born Feb. 20, 1826, who married May 27, 1847, William Crane, a farmer, and died in Willimantic, Dec. 9, 1890;

Mary Jane, born June 3, 1827, who married Albert Barrows, June 20, 1848, and died in Mansfield, Sept. 3, 1849; James Jackson, born Feb. 3, 1829; Angeline Martha, born Oct. 10, 1830, who was the second wife of Albert Barrows, and died in Willimantic, June 2, 1882; Daniel Needham, born Nov. 14, 1834, who was married Sept. 9, 1856, to Mary Alexander, and who for many years was engaged in the wholesale grocery business in Hartford, but is now living retired in Springfield, Mass.; and Marcia Clarissa, born Sept. 8, 1839, a maiden lady living in Mansfield.

James Jackson Slate was born in his late home, and received the best available schooling in the district schools, where he continued to attend until the age of eighteen. At that time the father was beginning to feel the weight of years and he remained at home to assist him. Later, carefully looking after his parents as they grew more feeble, he took possession of the property. Many improvements were made by him, noticeable among which is a fine new barn. The property consists of 175 acres of well-cultivated land, where Mr. Slate carried on general farming and also successful dairying.

The marriage of Mr. Slate occurred Jan. 1, 1856, in Mansfield, to Sarah E. Humphrey, a native of Stamford, Dutchess Co., N. Y., a daughter of Alanson and Julia Ann (Clark) Humphrey, the former a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., and the latter a native of West Chester, N. Y. The eldest child of Deacon and Mrs. Slate was Julia Ann, born May 30, 1858, who was married Oct. 11, 1877, to Clarence A. Hawkins, a farmer and carpenter who resides in the same house with his father-in-law; they have these children: Louie May, born Oct. 19, 1878; Harold Clifford, May 19, 1881; Carroll Humphrey, April 28, 1884; Byron Slate, Oct. 19, 1887; Lillian Annie, June 30, 1890; Myrtle Edna, Aug. 11, 1894; and James Homer, Dec. 29, 1898. Allie Needham, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Slate, was born Feb. 3, 1860, and died Feb. 13, 1862. Addie Elizabeth, born Dec. 1, 1863, married Oct. 20, 1887, Henry S. Brown, a successful farmer of Mansfield, and died Nov. 7, 1900. Frank Needham, born Jan. 27, 1874, is a deacon in the Baptist Church, a farmer and an assistant to his father. Mabel Canfield, born Dec. 6, 1876, is now at home.

Mr. Slate's political sympathies made of him a Republican. He was for two terms on the board of selectmen, and during one term he served as its chairman; was town assessor for one term; served as justice of the peace for a number of years, and as clerk and treasurer of the school district for thirty-nine years in succession, his father having held the same office for thirty-one years before him. For sixty-one years he was a consistent member of the Baptist Church, uniting with the Spring Hill Church, in which he was long a deacon, until his resignation. He was clerk and treasurer of the church for a number of years until his resignation, and was superintendent of the Sunday-school for sixteen consecutive years. All his family are members of that church. Mr. Slate died May 9, 1903, after an illness of only two days, and his death was a great shock to all. The funeral was held in the Baptist Church, with which he had so long been connected.

The Humphrey family, from which Mrs. Slate descends, trace their ancestry to the time of William the Conqueror. Michael Humphrey, the head of the family in this country came from Lyme Regis, in England, in the ship "Mary and John." Later he became a merchant and trader in Windsor and in 1643, in connection with John Griffin, was engaged in the manufacture of pitch and tar at Massaco. Subsequently, he became a distinguished inhabitant in Massaco, now Simsbury. He married Priscilla Grant, a daughter of Mathew Grant, of Windsor. In times past this family has been a very numerous and prominent one in western Connecticut and in eastern New York.

OLIVER W. BOWEN, a resident of Danielson, Windham county, is one of the best known citizens of that village, and stands high in the community. He is a worthy representative of an old New England family, and well sustains the honor of the family name.

The BOWENS of Woodstock, Pomfret, Thompson and Killingly, are descendants of (I) Griffith Bowen, of Boston, who came from Slade, on the Gower, Glamorganshire, Wales. Mr. Bowen and his family must have returned to England soon after 1649, as nothing is known of him in New England after that year. His wife was Mary, daughter of Henry Flemming, and their children were: Margaret, Francis, William, Mary, Henry, Elizabeth, Esther, Abigail, and Peniel, all of whom were born in Wales. William came to Boston, became a sailor, and died in captivity among the Turks, leaving a son, William, who lived in Boston, and his wife was named Mary. Henry remained in New England, and Peniel returned to Great Britain with his parents.

(II) Henry Bowen, son of Griffith, born about 1634, married Dec. 20, 1658, Elizabeth, a daughter of Captain Isaac and Elizabeth (Porter) Johnson, of Roxbury, Mass. After 1677 they removed to Roxbury. His wife died Aug. 13, 1683, and the following year he married Susanna, widow of Peleg Heath, of Roxbury. Mr. Bowen filled several town offices. He or his son, Henry, was one of thirteen men who left Roxbury about April 1, 1686, to spy out New Roxbury, now Woodstock, Conn. Henry Bowen, Sr., died in Woodstock, March 13, 1723-24, in his ninetieth year. His children, all of whom were born to the first marriage, were: Henry, of whom all trace has been lost; Elizabeth; John, born in 1662, who went in 1686 to Woodstock, but came back to Roxbury, where he married Hannah, a daughter of Daniel Brown; an unnamed infant; Margaret; Marie; Margaret (2); Abigail; Peniel, born March 8, 1671; Hester; and Isaac, born April 20, 1676, in Roxbury.

(III) Isaac Bowen, son of Henry, married Hannah, a daughter of Josiah and Mary Winchester, of Muddy River, and removed to Framingham, Mass. Later they returned to Roxbury, and finally settled at Stoughton, where Mr. Bowen died in 1726. Henry, his eldest son, born in 1700, probably went to Woodstock after the death of his mother, and made his home with his grandfather, Henry Bowen. There he was married in 1721 to Margaret Davis, who was born in 1699, and removed to Pomfret, where he was prominent in public affairs. One of his sons, John, born May 17, 1742, married Dinah Sawyer, of Woodstock, June 2, 1763, and moved to Thompson parish, in the town of Killingly. His children were: Aaron, Lucretia, John, Lucy and Elizabeth (twins), Prudence and Melissa.

(IV) Isaac Bowen (2), son of (III) Isaac, grandson of Henry, and great-grandson of Griffith, was born in Roxbury, Mass., July 29, 1707, and married in 1733, Jerusha, a daughter of Capt. Thomas and Elizabeth (Jackson) Prentice, of Newton, Mass. For a time they lived in Roxbury, but later removed to Woodstock, Conn. In 1742 they came into Killingly, where they attended the church in Thompson, where several of their children were baptized. Their children were: Martha, Elizabeth, Prentice, a soldier in the Revolution, Abigail, Jerusha, Ann, Sarah and Celia. While no record has been found to make the connection there can be little doubt that Oliver W. Bowen is a descendant from one of the above.

Oliver Bowen, grandfather of Oliver W., was a resident of Killingly, married Keziah Cooper, and both lived to an old age. Their children were: Nelson Cooper, the father of Oliver W.; Willard Winter, a mechanic and later a photographer, who had his home in Southbridge, Mass., was twice married, and died in Killingly, while visiting there; Clarissa, who married George Dillaber, and lived in Southbridge, where he died; Eliza, who married Horace Bidwell, a farmer in Ashford, Conn., where she died; Betsy, who died young.

Nelson Cooper Bowen was born Nov. 30, 1810, in Killingly. When quite young he made his home with Capt. Clark, at Glocester, R. I., and there learned the building trade. Employed at his trade in western Rhode Island and in Killingly until his marriage, he made a good standing for himself very early in the business world. In Killingly he resided until 1843, during which time he erected three mills at East Killingly. That year he moved to Foster, R. I., where he was engaged in company with his brother-in-law, Rev. Daniel Green, a Baptist minister, in the operation of a saw mill and in contract building. In company with Alphæus Bowen, they erected the North Foster Baptist Church. He had charge of the fitting of the shafting in the Slater mill for Amos D. Lockwood, a very extensive and widely known manufacturer of that time. In 1853 Mr. Bowen returned to Windham county, and had charge of the wood work in an addition to the Quinebaug Mill at East Brooklyn. After this work was completed he went to Wauregan, where he had charge of the wood work in the erection of the Wauregan Mill, both of the latter contracts being given him by Mr. Lockwood. Mr. Bowen remained at Wauregan until 1863, when he located in Willimantic, where he had charge of the building of the No. 2 mill at that point, as well as the most of the Company houses. Three years later he went to Taftville, where he had charge of the wood work in the erection of the Ponemah mill. There he remained until the failure of the Company the following year, when he located on his farm at East Brooklyn, where he later superintended the remodeling of the Methodist Church at Danielson. In 1869 he established an undertaking business and a hardware establishment in company with his son, Oliver W., under the firm name of N. C. Bowen & Son. This business was disposed of in 1876, on account of the failing health of Mr. Bowen, and he henceforth lived retired until his death, which occurred July 31, 1878. His remains rest at Westfield. Mr. Bowen was a Republican. He belonged to the Free Will Baptist Church. In his line of work he was one of the best known men in Eastern Connecticut.

Nelson Cooper Bowen married Olive Green, who was born Sept. 18, 1811, in Foster, R. I., a descendant of prominent old families of that State. She died June 10, 1889, at the home of her son, Oliver W. To Nelson C. Bowen and his wife were born the following children: Mary Jane, born Feb. 21, 1836, who married James S. Brainard, in May, 1855, and died the following October, in East Killingly, where she was residing; Julia Eliza, born Aug. 1, 1840, who died Feb. 28, 1870; Oliver W.; Emma Frances, born Oct. 29, 1848, who resides in Hartford.

Oliver W. Bowen was born June 28, 1843, in Foster, R. I., and accompanied his parents to East Brooklyn and Wauregan. His education was secured in the public schools of East Brooklyn and Wauregan, and at Plainfield Academy, of which Rev. Lucian Burley was principal. After leaving school he was employed as clerk and assistant postmaster for H. A. Atkins for five years in what is now the Wauregan store. For one year he was in the office of the Wauregan Company. In August, 1863, he left Wauregan, to take a position as clerk in the general store of Samuel Fenner, at South Woodstock, where he remained but a few months, and then went to Willimantic to assist his father in the building of the No. 2 mill for the Willimantic Linen Company, where he remained three years. His next move was to Taftville, to work with his father in the erection of the Ponemah mill, and from there to Cranston, R. I., where he was engaged in the erection of the buildings of Narragansett Park (a race course), under the direction of S. S. Humes & Co., a Pawtucket firm. Later he was employed in the shops of the Company for nearly a year, when he returned to Killingly in the spring of 1869, to take a position as wood worker in a foundry which burned the night following his first day's work. In October of that year he engaged with his father in the undertaking and hardware business. For two years after retiring from this business in 1876, Mr. Bowen was engaged at his trade, and in 1882 he started a livery stable, in which he is still engaged. Mr. Bowen is a Republican, and in 1888 was chosen first selectman and clerk of the board, a position which he held for ten years, the longest time any one citizen ever held that office. He was appointed deputy sheriff by Sheriff Osgood, in June, 1878, and for twenty years filled that position, which he only resigned to enter the General Assembly in 1899, being appointed on the committee on Roads, Rivers and Bridges, being clerk of that committee. He was house chairman of the committee on Manual and Roll. Mr. Bowen has been Burgess of the borough several times, and has been a member of the board of relief of the town, filling from time to time several important committees. He was president of Windham County Agricultural Society in 1893 and the year following. One of the prime movers, he was the first president of the Riverside Driving Club, and has been president of the Bohemian Club. Mr. Bowen belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., and has filled every chair in the Lodge. He is a member of the Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M.; Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Columbian Commandery, K. T., of Norwich, and Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Hartford.

Oliver W. Bowen was married Jan. 18, 1866, to Addie E. Randall, a native of Willimantic, and a daughter of Josiah H. and Susan (Fiske) Randall. Mr. Randall was boss carder for many years in the mills at Willimantic. To this union has come one child, Walter Nelson, who was born Jan. 19, 1871, and died Aug. 24, 1879, from burns accidentally received. Mrs. Bowen was president, in 1899, 1900, 1901 and 1903, of the Ladies' Department of the Windham County Agricultural Society, and served as secretary of that department for the year 1902. She is a member of the Congregational Church, and is president of the Ladies' Society.

CHARLES H. BAILEY. The agricultural supremacy of Sterling, Windham county, has been maintained by members of the family of Bailey for nearly two centuries, and no citizens of the region have represented a higher type of manhood and womanhood. Charles H. Bailey, whose seventy years have been prolific of great and lasting good to the community, is still the possessor of the attributes which have brought about his success, and no venerable and honored farmer of the vicinity recalls with greater accuracy the traditions and happenings, of a local nature, during his busy life. He was born within sight of his present home, March 30, 1832, and every tree, and every landmark within a score of miles, is replete with interesting reminiscence of some one of his far off ancestors.

Thomas Bailey settled in New London as early as 1651. He had a lot on the Groton side of the river, north of Gov. Winthrop's. Jan. 10, 1655, he married Lydia Redfield. Thomas Bailey was killed at Bloody Brook, Sept. 18, 1675. (II) His son, Thomas (2), was born March 6, 1658, and was twice married, his son, James, being the child of the second wife Ruth. (III) James was born June 7, 1706, and married Mary Samson, Oct. 20, 1730. Afterwards he left Groton and settled at Bailey's Pond in Voluntown, now Sterling, where he bought two hundred acres of land on the railroad line in the southeastern part of the town of his adoption and thereon farmed, and eventually died, at the age of eighty-five years. He is buried in the Bailey Pond flats.

(IV) Captain Titus Bailey, son of James, born Oct. 2, 1733, came with his father to Voluntown, and eventually inherited the parental lands and worldly possessions. He was active in town affairs, and was captain of the local militia. Upon his death, at the age of forty-five, he also found a final resting place in the Bailey Pond flats. He married Mary Fisk, of Fiskdale, R. I., who lived to be ninety-two years of age, and who bore him the following children: James, the grandfather of Charles H.; Samuel, a captain of militia; Captain Daniel, a seafaring man; Captain Eli, also a mariner; Jerod; Ethan; and a daughter who became the wife of Anthony Brown, of Killingly.

(V) James Bailey (2), the paternal grandfather, was born in Voluntown in 1768, and died Dec. 30, 1843. He married Eunice Bailey, who was born in North Stonington in 1769, and died in Sterling, Sept. 8, 1843. James Bailey bought the old home place, to which he added more land, and he became one of the leading and most successful farmers of the county. In political affiliation a Whig, he held many town offices, and creditably upheld the best interests of those who had honored him with their trust. To him and his wife were born: James, the father of Charles H.; Ashel; Eunice, who became the wife of John Johnson; Sally, the wife of Benjamin Hall; and Nancy, who married John Bailey, of Wisconsin.

(VI) James Bailey (3) was born in Voluntown, Feb. 2, 1790, and was reared among the surroundings of his boyhood. Sept. 15, 1815, he married Sabra Swan, who was born in North Stonington in 1789 and died Nov. 17, 1881, at the age of ninety-two years. After this marriage Mr. Bailey came into possession of his father's farm, upon which he lived until his death, Feb. 16, 1873. He was accounted a successful and enterprising man, and in connection with general farming, built and operated a saw mill near his home. His son, Charles H., assisted him with the erection of a cider mill, portions of which still stand. Of the house in which he lived and reared his family, there remains but the chimney. He was a Whig, and later a Republican, although it is not recalled that he took particular interest in political affairs. Of his children, Asahel A. was born in 1816; Caroline A. was born in 1821, and became the wife of Arnold Austin, of Providence, R. I.; Eunice L. was born in 1824, and died at the age of twelve years; an infant, born in 1827, died soon after; Mary Ann, born in 1828, married Felix Sunderland, and lived in Providence; Charles Henry; and Susan J., born Feb. 27, 1834, married Dr. Arnold Austin, of Providence.

A few rods from his present home stands the chimney marking the site of the house in which Charles H. Bailey was reared to manhood, and just to the east are the ruins of the school house where he studied the rule of three and conjugation. Though the building was apparently small, it is the impression of Mr. Bailey that there was an average attendance of sixty pupils. At the age of sixteen he ceased to attend the rude little school, and thereafter devoted all his energies to assisting his father in the saw mill and upon the farm. In time the homestead became his personal property, and there he has always lived, and while farming, has conducted the saw mill, and manufactured cider during the season. Of late years, however, he has devoted most of his attention to farming, and he owns, in addition to the original farm of eighty acres, considerable other property. He is politically a Republican, but has never been induced to leave his peaceful and profitable home life for the strenuous activities of office seeking. He married, in 1885, Ida E. Gorton, who died in 1891, leaving one son, James H., born April 30, 1890. This son is a bright, interesting boy, in whom his father takes great pride, and of whom he expects much.

Mr. Bailey represented the Sterling branch of his family in the Civil war, during which memorable strife he fought for a year or more as a soldier in Co. F, 8th C. V. I., and participated in many important engagements. He was in the front ranks at Roanoke, Newbern and Fort Macon, in which latter contest he was disabled, and declared unfit for further duty. Mr. Bailey is one of the best known men in the town, and his many admirable qualities have won him the lasting regard of all with whom he has come in contact.

WILLIAM E. AUSTIN, an honored veteran of the Civil war and substantial farmer-citizen of Coventry, Tolland county, is a representative of a family that early settled in Rhode Island.

Jeremiah Austin, father of William E., was a native of Greenwich, R. I., and was of the fourth generation to bear the name Jeremiah. He learned the trade of machinist, which he followed in Rhode Island and later in Connecticut. In 1829 he first came to the latter State, and he was located in different places in Windham county, where he followed his trade. In 1842 he brought his family to South Coventry, Tolland county, where he bought a farm and devoted the remainder of his life to its cultivation. He died at the remarkable age of 101 years, and was buried in South Coventry. He married Esther Hudson, a native of Rhode Island, who died at the age of seventy-two, and was buried in South Coventry. Nine children blessed this home, all of whom are now deceased except our subject. They were: Lyman; Hannah, who married Harlin Thompson; Benoni; Julia, who married David Harrick, and died in Ohio; Esther; Mary Ann; Horace; Thomas; and William E.

William E. Austin was born at Warwick, R. I., Nov. 3, 1828, and came to Connecticut with his parents while still young. His educational advantages were limited to the district schools, and at a very early age he went to work in the mills at Putnam, later going to Plainfield, where he was employed as a spinner in the cotton mills. He then went to Willimantic, doing the same kind of work. The removal of his parents to South Coventry in 1842 caused him to go to that place, and he obtained employment in the mills there, continuing at that work until 1877, when he bought the Truesdale farm of seventy acres. Since then he has devoted his time to agricultural pursuits, and has met with the substantial success that comes of honest industry and good judgment. His business principles have ever been unquestioned, and he is passing the evening of his life serene in the consciousness of duty well done, and sustained by the respect and admiration of the people of the county, where his upright life is so well-known.

On Aug. 7, 1861, Mr. Austin enlisted at Hartford, Conn., in Co. B, 7th C. V. I., under Col. Tyler and Capt. D. Rodman. He bore his part in that greatest of all wars for three years, and participated in fourteen sharply contested battles. Although suffering great hardship, he was not in the hospital or off duty, but the ills that follow such exposures have left their impress on his constitution, and he suffers greatly at times. He was mustered out of service at New Haven, in September, 1864.

In 1868, at Webster, Mass., Mr. Austin married Emeline Lincoln, who was born at North Windham, Conn., a daughter of the late Burr and Almira (Wood) Lincoln, and granddaughter of Jonah Lincoln. Mrs. Austin has proven herself a true helpmeet and by reason of her husband's ill health, has assumed much of the burden of the farm's management. Politically Mr. Austin is a Democrat, but has never been a politician. His social relations are confined to membership in Nathan Hale Post, G. A. R., in which he takes all a true soldier's interest. Neither he nor his wife belong to any religious denomination, but they have so ordered their lives along lines of charity and love that none are more highly regarded in the community where they have so long made their home.

JOHN R. WASHBURN. An old and distinguished name in New England is that of Washburn. John Washburn came from Worcestershire, England, in the ship "Elizabeth," as early as 1631, and his wife Margerie, then forty-nine years of age, and his two sons, John, aged fourteen years, and Philip, aged eleven years, followed in 1635. It is probable that John Washburn, the emigrant, was the first secretary of the Massachusetts Colony Company. On April 13, 1635, he and his son John became early proprietors of the town of Bridgewater, Mass., and the elder John died there prior to 1670. The name was variously spelled—Washburne, Washborn, Washborne, Washburn, the last spelling being the generally accepted one. John was one of the first freemen of Duxbury. His son Philip never married, hence the next in line was the eldest son, John.

John Washburn (2), son of John, was born in England in 1621, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Experience and Jane (Cook) Mitchell, the latter of whom was a daughter of Francis Cook, one of the original one hundred who signed the historic compact on the deck of the "Mayflower," before the landing. The children born to John and Elizabeth were: John, Thomas, Joseph, Samuel, Jonathan, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Jane, James, and Sarah. The will of John (2) was probated in 1686.

Sergeant Samuel Washburn, fourth son of John (2), was born in 1651 in Bridgewater, died March 24, 1720, at the age of sixty-nine years, and was buried at that place. About 1677 he married Deborah Packard, who was a daughter of Samuel Packard, of Bridgewater, and their children were: Samuel, born in 1678; Noah, 1682 (died in 1719); Israel, 1684 (died in 1718); Capt. Nehemiah, 1686; Capt. Benjamin (died in 1784); Hannah (died in 1766); and Susannah (died March 13, 1719). The father was a prominent man, in both church and military life.

Samuel Washburn, the eldest son of Sergt. Samuel, was born in 1678, in Bridgewater, Mass., and inherited land from his father which he sold in 1734, at the age of fifty-six years. His first marriage, on Jan. 9, 1701, was to Deliverance Leonard, daughter of Isaac Leonard, but she lived only a short time, and he married his second wife, Abigail, about 1703. His children were: David, born April 30, 1704; Deliverance, Oct. 7, 1706; Solomon, Oct. 1, 1708; Samuel, June 2, 1710; Abigail, March 3, 1712; and Tabitha, Aug. 28, 1716 (died in 1736).

Solomon Washburn, fifth in the ancestral line from the emigrant John, was born Oct. 1, 1708, in Bridgewater, Mass., and died in 1784. He became one of the first settlers in Stafford, about 1738, settling in that part of the town known as Orcutt-ville. He was married Jan. 13, 1732, to Martha, daughter of William, Jr., and Jane (Washburn) Orcutt, of Bridgewater. Mrs. Washburn's death occurred in 1789, at the age of eighty-six years. Their children were: Lydia, born Dec. 17, 1732, in Bridgewater, died July 19, 1755, in Stafford; Solomon, born Sept. 1, 1734, died Dec. 20, 1816; Tabitha was born June 1, 1736, in Bridgewater; Martha, born May 27, 1738, in Bridgewater, died March 30, 1740, in Stafford; William was born Feb. 13, 1740, in Stafford; Martha, born March 14, 1742, in Stafford, died March 6, 1813; Azubah, born March 6, 1744, in Stafford; Abigail was born July 7, 1745, in Stafford; Moses, born July 7, 1749, in Stafford, died in Watertown, N. Y.; and Jacob, born in August, 1751, in Stafford, died in western New York.

John R. Washburn

Lieut. Solomon Washburn, son of Solomon, and the great-grandfather of John R., was born Sept. 1, 1734, in Bridgewater, Mass., and died Dec. 20, 1816, in Stafford. Lieut. Solomon was a Revolutionary hero, obtaining his title by service in that struggle, and in later years was a farmer. He was married April 28, 1757, to Mary Warner, daughter of Moses Warner, and she died Aug. 1, 1812, at the age of seventy-five years. Their children were: Nathan, born June 25, 1758, and died Oct. 9, 1837; Lydia, born Dec. 28, 1759, was first married to John Harington, second to John Edson, and third to Aaron Eaton, and lived to be eighty-six years of age, dying Feb. 8, 1845; Mary, born Jan. 26, 1762, married Stephen Orcutt, and died April 15, 1860; Hannah, born April 6, 1764, married Israel Howe, a Revolutionary soldier, and she lived to the age of eighty-six, dying Aug. 27, 1850; Eleanor, born March 17, 1766, married Simon Fairman, and died April 21, 1852; Martha, born July 19, 1768, died in infancy; Huldah, born June 30, 1770, married Stephen Case, and died April 23, 1861; Eleazer, born April 23, 1772, died April 18, 1773; Capt. Eleazer, born March 26, 1774, married Betsey Orcutt, and died July 24, 1857; Irene, born July 15, 1776, never married, and lived to the age of ninety-three years, dying March 4, 1869; Martha, born Feb. 5, 1778, never married, and lived to the age of ninety-three years, dying Dec. 18, 1871; Asenath, born Sept. 8, 1780, married Alpheus Converse, and died Jan. 10, 1853; and Catherine, born Oct. 3, 1786, married Seth Washburn, and died on March 3, 1874. The average age of the nine members of this family that lived to extreme old age was over eighty-seven.

Capt. Nathan Washburn, the eldest son of Lieut. Solomon, was born June 25, 1758, in Stafford, Conn., and died Aug. 9, 1837, while visiting his daughter in Franklinville, N. Y. His death was caused by a stroke of paralysis. His business in life had included both farming and milling, and for a number of years he operated a gristmill at Furnace Hollow. Although he was a good farmer, an excellent miller and a consistent member of the Congregational Church, his family take most interest in his record as a brave soldier in the Revolutionary war. Being a robust and well-conditioned man, his loyal services were gladly accepted by Capt. Paul Blodgett, as a private, and he served gallantly at Bunker Hill with Gen. Putnam, and was at Valley Forge with Washington. Although he was badly wounded in the wrist he would not leave the army, and served for five years, was promoted to be captain, and was finally one of the worthy pensioners of the Government.

Capt. Nathan Washburn was married in 1779 to Anna Ellithorpe, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Marsh) Ellithorpe, of West Stafford, who lived to be ninety-three years of age, she having been born Oct. 25, 1760, and died Dec. 3, 1852. Their children were: Orinda, born May 11, 1780, married Amasa Fuller, of Stafford, and died July 30, 1870; Orrilla, born July 23, 1782, married a Mr. Fairfield, of Stafford, and died in February, 1868; Millison, born Oct. 3, 1785, married John McNall, of Franklinville, N. Y., and died Oct. 9, 1862; John E. is mentioned below; Achsah, born Dec. 8, 1790, married William Washburn, of Stafford, and died April 27, 1860; Abigail, born April 18, 1794, married Asa Moulton, of Monson, Mass., and died June 6, 1873; and Ursula, born May 27, 1796, married Rufus Moulton, of Hardwick, Massachusetts.

John Ellithorpe Washburn, son of Capt. Nathan, and father of John R., was born May 19, 1788, in Stafford, Conn., and died Oct. 2, 1858, in his old home. His business was foundry work, he being a molder by trade, and becoming very skillful in the making of hollow ware—a new process at that time. He was in demand at many foundries outside of Stafford, notably at what was known as New Furnace, at Furnace Hollow and in Hydeville. He was a natural-born mechanic and was also skilled in carpentering. For many years he continued at work, only one serious accident happening to him, when a ladle of molten iron was spilled over his foot, but his naturally robust constitution enabled him to regain his health. His death was caused by typhoid fever. In his later life he became a Republican in his political views.

Mr. Washburn was united in marriage about 1810 to Levina Avery, who was born Aug. 13, 1787, in Stafford, Conn., and died May 4, 1829. She was a daughter of Jabez and Sally (Gilmore) Avery. Their children were: (1) George Washington, born July 5, 1811, in Stafford, died Nov. 16, 1843, at the age of thirty-two years, of consumption. By trade he was a foundryman. His wife, Emeline (McLenethan), of Springfield, died on Feb. 23, 1850, at the age of thirty-three years. Their son, George Franklin, died April 21, 1845, at the age of seven years. (2) Rufus Avery, born March 1, 1813, in Stafford, died Nov. 15, 1855, at the age of forty-two years. His business was foundry work also. His first marriage, in 1837, was to Ruth J. Corpe, daughter of Joseph and Amanda (Converse) Corpe, and she died Aug. 2, 1838, at the age of eighteen years. His second marriage, in 1842, was to Mrs. Luther Babbitt, formerly Charlotte Strong, a daughter of Major Erastus Strong, of East Windsor, Conn., and a granddaughter of Gov. Roger Wolcott. She was born Jan. 24, 1817. Their children were—Lottie, born Dec. 9, 1842; Helen Frances, June 1, 1845; and Lavina, Nov. 8, 1850. (3) Edwin, born Jan. 13, 1816, in Stafford, died Nov. 7, 1835, in his twentieth year, cut off in his young manhood by typhoid fever. (4) Avery, born Oct. 23, 1818, in Stafford, is a retired farmer of Topeka, Kans. Formerly he was in the manufacturing line, and for many years was cashier of the banks in Brockport, N. Y., and Topeka, Kans. On Nov. 9, 1841, he married Caston Gordon, of Rushford, N. Y., and their children were—Lovina Caston, born June 26, 1845 (died Sept. 17, 1848); Cornelia Sweet, Nov. 1, 1850 (died Nov. 19, 1856); and Frank Monroe, April 8, 1859. (5) John R. was born Jan. 7, 1821. (6) James Monroe was born July 2, 1823, in Stafford, and died May 11, 1893, in Topeka, Kans., beloved by all who knew him, rounding out a long and useful life of nearly seventy years. He left Stafford when about nineteen years of age, and lived West and South until 1863, when he came to West Stafford from Baton Rouge, La., where he had been employed as draughtsman in the United States Land Office. His home was in West Stafford from that time until his removal with his family, in 1884, to Topeka, Kans., where he passed the remainder of his days. He was an educated and very capable man, a teacher of more than ordinary ability, and while in Stafford engaged in educational work, both as teacher and (for several years) as a member of the board of school visitors. During his later years he engaged somewhat extensively in educational work. He represented his old town in the Legislature in 1870, and was a selectman of the town in 1871. On Dec. 15, 1852, he married Cornelia Sweet, of Hume, N. Y., daughter of Philip and Mary (Nye) Sweet, and their children were—Harry Monroe, born Sept. 23, 1855, was married May 11, 1886, to Ella Myra Sponsable, of Paola, Kans., and lives in Topeka, Kans.; Albert Duane, born July 18, 1859, was married Feb. 7, 1901, to Mary Rand, of Letart Falls, Ohio; and Mary Lavina, born Oct. 12, 1862, died July 31, 1864. (7) Benjamin Franklin, born Feb. 16, 1826, died of typhoid fever, Jan. 20, 1837. (8) Lavina, born April 27, 1829, died in September, 1829.

John R. Washburn spent his boyhood in Stafford and attended the local district and select schools. Later he became a pupil of the high school in Centerville, N. Y., enjoying the scholarly instruction of Prof. Jonathan W. Earle for a period of two years. At the age of twenty-four years he left school, well equipped mentally for almost any career, but his natural inclination lay in the direction of mechanics, and during his school days he had absorbed the principles which soon enabled him to secure employment in that line.

A partnership was soon formed with another enthusiastic machinist, the well-known Moses B. Harvey, under the firm name of M. B. Harvey & Co., and for two years Mr. Washburn conducted that business, then coming to West Stafford, where he established a business of his own for the manufacture of chucks. Later he formed a partnership with Edward F. Whiton, the firm style then being Washburn & Whiton. Six years later Mr. Washburn purchased the business, the name changing to the J. R. Washburn Machine Co., and continuing thus until 1865. The business was thus started in 1848, beginning with about fifteen employes, for the manufacture of lathe and drill chucks. Mr. Washburn continually made improvements, and in 1865 he sold the business to David E. Whiton, now of New London, Connecticut.

Shortly after the war of the Rebellion Mr. Washburn formed another partnership, this time with Alonzo Eaton, the firm style being Washburn & Eaton, who purchased a woolen mill in the town of Sprague, village of Hanover, Conn., and there for two years engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, the panic of 1866 eventually causing them to close this formerly promising venture. On account of conditions which they could not foresee their products fell off in value, and the loss was heavy. In 1868 Mr. Washburn began the manufacture of chucks in West Stafford, and successfully prosecuted that business until 1891, when he sold it to J. C. Perkins & Co., and the plant was removed to Hartford, Conn. Mr. Washburn then retired for several years from manufacturing life, taking his comfort and ease on his farm.

Mr. Washburn was the first person in this country to introduce scroll and other chucks into European and other foreign markets, the result of which was an immediate large demand for them, which has increased from year to year till many thousand chucks are exported thither annually. An agent of a large firm engaged in the manufacture of spinning-rings, for cotton spinning, came from Manchester, England, to see Mr. Washburn in regard to making some improvements for holding rings during the process of manufacture. Thereupon Mr. Washburn made quite a number of chucks, with special appliances, which so pleased the party that he received more orders and special acknowledgements and thanks. The following, dated West Stafford, Conn., Oct. 1, 1897, is from a catalogue issued by a firm who succeeded Mr. Washburn in the chuck business:

"The modern chuck is the outgrowth of the original invention of our superintendent, Hon. J. R. Washburn. During the year 1848 he commenced the manufacture of the scroll-chuck—a few lever-chucks having been made previously by his associate, Mr. Simon Fairman, under a patent issued in 1840. In the year 1849-50 Mr. Washburn made several improvements, the most important being the fastening of the front plate in which the jaws move to the face-plate by bolts instead of a nut on the back of the chuck as first made, thus securing the chuck more firmly. In 1851-52 he made the first chuck in which gears were used, this being the greatest improvement ever made on the original scroll-chuck, for which letters patent were granted through the patent attorneys of the Scientific American and ground claims were allowed after a thorough investigation in the patent offices of the world. From that invention every geared chuck, however made, to the present time, has been constructed upon this original conception of Mr. Washburn, and there have been no improvements made of any importance that did not originate with him. The first independent reversible-jaw chuck ever made was manufactured in his shops in 1855, and was sold to Howe & Converse, of Staffordville, Conn. Improvements have followed one after the other under his supervision as the demand for chucks for various uses became known.

"In 1868 he patented the combination of the lever- and geared-wrench chuck which, has lately been improved, and which promises to be the most popular chuck ever put upon the market. It is necessary to see this chuck to fully appreciate it, as it is almost instantaneous in its action when changing work from large to small or small to large. . . . Improvements have always been in order in his shops, or, in a word, for fifty years he has made it his study to meet the different demands of the trade in this line and the goods produced by him have a world-wide reputation for simplicity, adaptability, strength and durability. Five years ago Mr. Washburn retired and the business has been in other hands. Recently, upon the reorganization of the business, he has again taken charge, and brings with him new ideas and improvements, together with his long experience and knowledge of the wants of the trade. It is our purpose to maintain the reputation of the Washburn Chuck.

"Very truly,

"J. R. WASHBURN MACHINE CO."

Not only has Mr. Washburn been a prominent figure in the industrial life of West Stafford, but he has also been conspicuously identified with its political and public affairs. Beginning public life as a Democrat, he saw reason, in 1854, to change his views, and ever since has been closely identified with the Republican party. For a number of years, in 1850, 1857, 1858, 1866, 1869, 1875 and 1895, he represented his town in the Legislature, and was in the Senate during 1862, as the choice of the 20th District. In 1895 he was called the "father of the House," and during this term he had the honor of being called to the chair during the Speaker's absence. Much of the beneficial legislation of these years had his influence, and he was chairman of the committee on Engrossed Bills, was House chairman of the Railroad committee, served on the committee on New Towns and Probate Districts, on the Educational committee, Federal Relations, Roads and Bridges, and in 1895 was chairman of the House committee on Forfeited Rights. He enjoys the distinction of being the only man ever sent to the State Legislature from Stafford as the choice of both parties.

In his native town Mr. Washburn has been honored with every office he could be prevailed upon to accept, has been a member of the board of selectmen for several terms, has been justice of the peace, registrar of voters, member of the board of relief, a notary public (since 1888), and has served as a member of the school board for over fifty years, being secretary of same for more than ten years. His service as selectman was during the progress of the Civil war, when the duties were especially important. As soon as news came of the firing on Sumter, in April, 1861, Mr. Washburn went at once to Stafford Springs, and with other prominent men called a mass-meeting, before which he made the first speech, offering to pay from his own pocket each man enlisting the sum of $10. Twenty men enlisted the first day, afterward as many more, so that in all about forty men received this bounty of "pin money," as Mr. Washburn called it, from his own pocket. His official capacity as member of State Legislature rendered him exempt from military service in the Rebellion, but this fact did not prevent him from having his name put in the same as any private citizen, with the understanding that if drafted he would either go or send a substitute who could serve better than he.

John R. Washburn was married May 16, 1847, to Adelaide Fairman, who was born Feb. 9, 1826, a daughter of Simon and Harriet (Wright) Fairman, the former of whom was the celebrated inventor and manufacturer of the chuck nail machine, and was the Fairman who, in 1833, invented a steam road wagon, and also obtained a patent on an oscillating steam engine, these machines being the predecessors of the present automobile. These letters patent, now in Mr. Washburn's possession, are signed by Pres. Andrew Jackson, having been issued before the days of the patent commissioner. Children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Washburn as follows: (1) Belva Adelaide, born Feb. 17, 1849, was married May 18, 1870, to Edward O. Wilbur, of Eastford, Conn., a dentist by profession, who had been a brave soldier during the Civil war. He died July 24, 1891, in Thompsonville, leaving no children, and Mrs. Wilbur now resides with her parents. (2) Franklin R., born April 13, 1856, resides in Cambridgeport, Mass., where he is a machinist and pattern-maker. He married Mary Pease, of Monson, Mass., and their son, Benjamin R., was born in April, 1889. (3) Harriet Lavina, born in 1858, married Lauriston J. Cummings, of Springfield, who is there engaged in a general trucking business. Their daughter, Eliza Adelaide, was born June 17, 1881. (4) Rebecca May, born in 1866, was united in marriage to Charles R. Andrews, a machinist now living in New London, Conn.; their children are, George R., born June 18, 1890; Avery Wilbur, Nov. 13, 1891; Adelaide Marion, Dec. 15, 1898; and Belva May, July 30, 1902. Six children of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Washburn passed away in infancy.

Probably no citizen of his locality is better or more widely known in the Masonic fraternity than Mr. Washburn, he having been one of the charter members of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., of which he was made senior warden at the time of its installation, and in which he has always taken a very deep interest. Formerly he was also connected with the I. O. O. F. lodge at Stafford Hollow and was very active in that order, passing all the chairs and being sent several times as a representative to the Grand Lodge.

Mr. Washburn attends the Congregational Church in West Stafford and is a member of the Universalist society. In every circle of the town's life, he has borne a leading part, and few men of Tolland county are more thoroughly representative. Honesty, integrity, modesty, public spirit, and generosity have been his prominent characteristics.

JOHN LEE CHAPMAN, a retired farmer and cattle dealer of the town of Plainfield, Windham county, is now enjoying the fruits of an industrious and useful life, and has met with a well deserved success.

John Chapman, the progenitor of those of the name about Stonington and Westerly, was of English origin, and was a son of John and Joanna (Sumner) Chapman, who lived about fifty miles from London. Tradition has it that the younger John Chapman was pressed into the British navy, and the ship to which he was assigned came to Boston. There the young man escaped, and seeking the liberty of which he had been unjustly deprived, fled into Rhode Island, where he found refuge in the house of Samuel Allen, of Wakefield, R. I. Mr. Chapman was a weaver, and worked at his trade in North Stonington, Conn., the remainder of his life. He married Sarah Brown, Feb. 16, 1710, and died in 1760. To this union were born: Sarah, born Nov. 25, 1710, married to Ichabod Brown; Jonah, born Sept. 2, 1712; John, born Sept. 9, 1714, married to Mary Boardman; William, born Dec. 19, 1716, who married Abigail Plumb; Andrew, born March 3, 1719, who married Hannah Smith; Sumner, born about 1723; Thomas, born about 1724; and Eunice.

Sumner Chapman, whose name appears in the preceding paragraph, was married in Westerly, R. I., Feb. 23, 1756, to Elizabeth Herrick. Their children were: John, Sumner, Elizabeth, Timothy, Joseph, Israel and Case.

Joseph Chapman, son of Sumner, was born in 1767, married for his first wife, Dec. 21, 1791, in Westerly, R. I., Elizabeth Kenyon, of Hopkinton, and after her death, Eunice Clark. The old farm on which Joseph Chapman was born and where he lived, was about two miles east of Westerly, along the line of the Shore Line Road. His brother Case inherited the old home, and Joseph received a new house that his father had built. There, after a life time devoted to farming, he died at the advanced age of eighty-nine years, and was buried in the family lot near by. When a young man he united with the old Baptist Church, but in later years became a member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

Betsey (or Elizabeth) Kenyon, the first wife of Joseph Chapman, was a native of Westerly, R. I., born in 1768, and she died in 1825. Of their children, (1) John, became the father of John Lee Chapman. (2) Benjamin moved to Tioga county, Pa., married, and left a family. (3) Betsey married Daniel L. Sisson, and lived first at Bloomfield, Conn., but in 1827 they moved to West Hartford, where he died in 1841; their children were: Eliza Ann, deceased wife of Sidney Wadsworth; Albert Lee, deceased; Minerva, deceased wife of Mr. Gridley; Abigail, who married B. S. Bishop; Thomas, a druggist of the firm of T. Sisson & Co., Hartford; Joseph C., deceased; and James Henry and Alice, who both died in childhood. (4) Joseph, a farmer of Bloomfield, Conn., died unmarried. (5) Mary Ann married George Gorton, of Westerly, R. I., and had a home at Bloomfield, Conn. (6) William, of Westerly, R. I., removed to Stonington, Conn., where he died. (7) Rouse, of Westerly, was later in Hartford, Conn. (8) Emeline married William Rogers, of Plainfield, N. J., and is now deceased.

Elder John Chapman, the oldest member of the above family, was born in Westerly, R. I., Sept. 23, 1792, and became qualified for teacher in the local schools, following that profession for some years. Later he made his home in Westerly, where he followed farming and dealt extensively in cattle. In 1844 he came to Plainfield, and bought a farm in the Flat Rock District, and engaged in its cultivation until 1856, when he fractured his leg, after which calamity he lived retired from active business. As an elder of the Westerly Baptist Church he took an active part in religious affairs. In politics he was first a Whig, and then became a Republican. He was married to Abigail, a daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Cotrell) Sisson. The Sissons of this branch come of a mingled Scotch and French nativity, and trace their ancestry back to three brothers who settled in Rhode Island in the early days. The mother was born in Westerly in 1791, and died in Plainfield, April 1, 1849. The father died in April, 1881. Both were buried in the family lot at Westerly. To John Chapman and his excellent wife were born: Abbie Jane, born in Norwich, in 1817, who married George H. Gardner, of Wakefield, R. I., and lived in Providence, R. I., where she died at the age of sixty-two; Louise A., born Sept. 20, 1822, who married John Chapman, of Westerly, R. I., and died at the age of seventy-seven; John Lee; Elizabeth, born July 29, 1828, who married Horatio Gates, became the mother of two sons, Hobart and Dr. Edward, and died in Providence at the age of sixty-eight years; R. Emma, born in 1832, married Matthew Harvey, of Newport, N. H., in 1876, and since his death in 1884 has lived in Providence, R. I.; and Adalaide Victoria, born in 1839, who married, in Providence, R. I., Edmund Potter, and became the mother of one daughter, Lillian.

John Lee Chapman was born Feb. 6, 1825, in Westerly, R. I., where he obtained a practical education in the local schools. When he was nineteen he came with his parents to Plainfield, and attended the Academy one term when Mr. Benedict was at its head. He taught seven winter terms: in Westerly one term, in West Greenwich three terms, Griswold one term, Hampton one term, and in Frederick county (Md.) one term. When he was twenty-four he began canvassing for books for Henry Bill of Norwich, and for five winters was employed at this work, his summers being devoted to farm work. While in the employ of Mr. Bill he traveled very extensively through New York, New England, Maryland, Virginia and was one winter in Canada. As a book agent he acquired a knowledge of human nature that has been of great service to him in later years. In 1860 he bought the farm of 200 acres where he now resides, and from time to time has added both to his buildings and real estate holdings. At one time he owned seven hundred acres of land, but lately he has sold the farm to his son Hermon, with whom he now resides. In former years he dealt extensively in cattle, and his son still continues the business, having at the present time a herd of one hundred cattle. This is in vivid contrast with the condition of the farm when it was first purchased, as it was then in an unimproved state, and would not support the fourteen cows and four oxen with which Mr. Chapman began business. In politics he was a Whig, and is now a Republican. At various times he has served very efficiently on the board of selectmen, and has been a justice of the peace several years. In 1872 he represented the town in the State Legislature, and served on the committee on Roads and Bridges. He is a man of deep religious convictions, and while still a lad united with the Baptist Church at Westerly. His church connections were transferred to the Baptist Church at Packerville some fifty-eight years ago, and though he has been frequently asked to join the much more prosperous church at Moosup, he has declined. In various ways, such as being Sunday-school superintendent, and a worker in the church, he has devotedly supported the cause. For twenty years he has been a deacon, and is a trustee of the Packer-ville Church at the present time. He has always been ready to give a helping hand to young men in business, when he believed it to be the call of duty.

Mr. Chapman was first married in 1855, to Maria Browning, who died in 1857. Sybil Brown, his second wife, died leaving him an eleven-day old son, Hermon, who has grown to manhood, and Feb. 8, 1883, married Lucy Addie Tripp, a classmate, and daughter of Henry D. Tripp, of Plainfield, Conn. Hermon was for seven years manager of a large farm in Andover, Mass. He bought the home place from his father in 1893, and, settling on it, has extensively engaged in farming and cattle dealing. Mr. Chapman for his third wife married Martha Brown, a sister of his second wife, and she died eight years later. To this union were born two children: Mahlon, who died at the age of six years; and Martha, who lived to be three months old. Mr. Chapman was married in 1873 to Mrs. Sarah D. (Swallow) Abell, of Vermont, who died in 1875, leaving a son, J. Lee, Jr., formerly a teacher in Plainfield Academy. He was educated in Phillips Andover Academy, the Peddie Institute at Hightstown, N. J., was graduated from the Willimantic State Normal School in 1895, from Brown University in 1900, and is now principal of the high school and Byfield grammar school of Bristol, R. I. In 1901 he married Mary A. Williams, daughter of William L. Williams, of Willimantic, Conn. To them was born, May 20, 1902, a daughter, named Hazel Miriam.

John L. Chapman, Sr., was again married, June 5, 1879, to Jane A. Abell, of Swanton, Vt., who died in 1901.

ALFRED THEODORE YOUNG was a highly respected citizen of Mt. Hope, in the town of Mansfield, Tolland county, where he and his father together followed the occupation of blacksmithing for more than three-quarters of a century with much honor and success.

William C. Young, son of William, and the grandfather of Alfred T., resided in early life in Lisbon, Conn., but made his home at different times in Mansfield Hollow, Hebron, Chaplin, and finally in Mansfield, where he followed blacksmithing many years. The last of his life was spent in Michigan, where he died. There he followed farming. Nancy Crane, his wife, died in Michigan, passing away before Mr. Young. Their children were: (1) Olive, who married W. E. Owens, and lived and died in Oakland county, Mich.; (2) William C., Jr., the father of Alfred T. Young; (3) Eliphalet, who married Sally French, was a blacksmith, lived in Herkimer county, N. Y., and died in Michigan; (4) Samuel, a farmer and early settler in Michigan where he died; (5) Thomas, who went on a whaling voyage in early life, but later, like his brothers, became a pioneer settler, in Michigan, where he died; (6) Harriet, who married Joseph Swift, a farmer and saw mill man in Michigan, where she died; (7) David, who served in the Seminole war and later was a farmer in Michigan, where he died; (8) Erastus, who married C. Maria Osborn, and after living in Michigan, was a farmer and blacksmith in Mansfield, where he died.

William C. Young, Jr., was born Aug. 28, 1803, in Lisbon, Conn., and was about twelve years old when his father located in Mansfield. The trade of blacksmithing was acquired from his father, and after his marriage he settled in the village of Mt. Hope, where he was employed for many years in the auger and bit shop of Alfred Lillie. Later he erected a blacksmith shop at Mt. Hope for himself, where he worked at his trade until 1855, when he retired to devote the rest of his active years to farm work. His death, Jan. 4, 1892, came as the result of pneumonia, and put an unexpected end to a hale and hearty career. Mr. Young, generally known as Capt. Young, was buried at Mt. Hope, and is remembered by those who knew him best as a man of fine character and unswerving integrity. In early life he was a Democrat, but on the organization of the Republican party he cast in his political interests with it, voting for Gen. Fremont. He voted for all the other national candidates of the Republican party as long as he lived. In his early years he was active in militia affairs and served as Captain of the local company, Mansfield Light Infantry. For one term he represented Mansfield in the General Assembly at New Haven, and was also assessor and justice of the peace. The Baptist Church at Warrenville claimed him as one of its active and trustworthy members.

Mr. Young was married to Mehitable Swift, who was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., in 1807, a daughter of Ira and Ollie (Truex) Swift. She died March 12, 1881, having become the mother of a large family. (1) Harriet M., born Jan. 27, 1828, is the widow of Jared Lanphere, and resides at Mt. Hope. (2) William C. died young. (3) George W., born March 21, 1831, married Caroline P. Russ, and died in Chaplin in 1870, from disease contracted in military service during the Civil war. While a young man he was in Wisconsin at the outbreak of the Civil war; he enlisted in a regiment from that State, served ten months, and was honorably discharged on account of failing health. Later he enlisted in the 3d Regular Heavy Artillery and served his full term of three years. (4) David died young. (5) Alfred T. was born Aug. 4, 1835, and died Jan. 21, 1903. (6) Olive L., born Dec. 19, 1837, is the widow of George Martin, and lives in Chaplin. (7) Julia M., born Aug. 20, 1840, married Dwight Heminway, and resided in Florence, Mass., where she passed away. (8) Caroline M. married Dwight Heminway after the death of her sister, and is now living in Elgin, Ill. (9) Mary E., the wife of Adna Back, died in Florence, Mass. (10) Joseph S. married Susan Luella Andrews, and died in Florence, Mass., where he had followed the work of silk making for nearly thirty years.

Alfred T. Young was born Aug. 4, 1835, in Mansfield, in a house near his shop, and attended district school until he reached the age of eighteen years, generally only for a short time each winter. He assisted his father in the shop, and worked on the farm. Learning the trade of blacksmithing, he remained at home until he was twenty-one, when he took charge of the shop, and followed the trade to the time of his death, though of late years he was not active at it. The house in which he lived was built in 1876 by him, and he divided his time between his shop and his farm of eighty-five acres.

Mr. Young was married Dec. 25, 1859, to Juliette Russ, a native of Chaplin, and a daughter of John and Almira (Utley) Russ. Of their children, (1) Frank A. married Winona Hudson. He graduated from the Willimantic high school and the School of Pedagogy, New York University, taught school in Chaplin, Coventry and Mansfield, was principal of the grammar school at South Coventry and Willimantic, Conn., and Hackensack, N. J., and for twelve years he filled the last position very successfully. His children are Wilfred and Winona. (2) William C., Jr., is unmarried and has become a carpenter and contractor. Mr. Young was a Republican all his life, and cast his first vote for Gen. Fremont.

ABNER YOUNG. To all who are familiar with his well directed life the name of Abner Young carries with it an impression of commercial strength second to none in the town of Killingly, Windham county. Though at present retired from business activity, his brain conceived and carried to the pinnacle of remarkable success a shoe business which, because of its steady rise from small to large results, and its capacity for employing labor, brought about and for many years sustained, the most successful era that Danielson has ever known. This venerable and honored citizen was born in the Mashentuck District, Killingly, Nov. 29, 1819, and from earliest youth was made to feel not only the dignity but the necessity of uninterrupted toil.

Othniel Young, the grandfather of Abner, was a successful farmer in the Mashentuck District, Killingly, and besides Israel, the father of Abner, he had three other sons, Joshua, Searles, and Othniel, all of whom were farmers, and the latter of whom died in Abington, Conn. Israel was a farmer for his entire life, and up to the time of his death in 1838, at the age of fifty-four years, lived on the old homestead settled by his sire. He was an industrious, practical man, and managed to acquire a competence while rearing a large family. In politics he was a Whig, and he was an earnest believer in Christianity. He married Margaret Chase, of East Killingly, a daughter of Cromwell Chase, and who died about 1822, while still in the prime of life. Six children were born of this union: Benjamin, the deceased husband of Lucina Hyde, of Brooklyn; Nathaniel, who married Mary Wood, and engaged in blacksmithing in Killingly up to the time of his death; Polly, deceased wife of Israel Chase, of East Killingly; Jonathan, who died in Mashentuck, having formerly married Janette Dorman; Abner; and Sylvia, the deceased wife of Isaac Wade, a farmer, of Foster, Rhode Island.

Although but three years of age when he lost his mother, Abner Young continued to live on the paternal farm in the Mashentuck District until his twelfth year. In the meantime he had attended the district schools whenever the arduous farm duties permitted, and his first outside service was as a farm hand for Almon Ames, of South Killingly, with whom he remained for six months, receiving as remuneration six dollars a month and board. Thereafter he made his home with his brother, Benjamin, in East Brooklyn, where up to his eighteenth year he attended school during the winter season, but did not make much headway financially, for up to this time his wages had all gone to his father. When nineteen years old he began to learn the carpenter's trade with Granville Wood, of North Killingly, this carpenter being an expert, and doing a business that required the help of three apprentices. Mr. Young bound himself to two years of service for seventy dollars a year, and during that time the hours were long and the work exacting. After completing his apprenticeship he came to Danielson, then Danielsonville, and for two years was employed as a journeyman by Green & Walker, and Elisha Chamberlain, well known contractors of their time. He thereafter engaged in an independent contracting business for seventeen years, and at times was obliged to employ a large force of men.

The beginning of the shoe business of which Mr. Young made so distinct a success was brought about through his conversion of one of his carpenter shops into an establishment for making women's shoes, and in this venture he took as partner Noah Shumway, the firm name being Young & Shumway. At the expiration of a year Mr. Young purchased the interest of Mr. Shumway, built an addition to his shop, and in truth saw before him a growing and lucrative trade. Soon a still larger addition became imperative, and from this the business overflowed into Rothwell Hall, while yet another shop was built to meet the demands for his excellent shoes. Thus three shops were in operation at the same time, and four hundred people found constant employment. Much of this work was cut out in the factory and completed in the surrounding homes, and shoe makers came many miles to lay in a supply of home work. So was inaugurated a remarkable prosperity for Danielson, for the shoe business constituted the largest of its industries, and was also the most substantial and reliable. During the Civil war, when the business was most successful, the owner was obliged to meet the tax upon all manufactured goods, and the five per cent demanded amounted to about eighteen hundred dollars a month. Nevertheless, Mr. Young continued in his business until he disposed of it to his sons, Henry S. and George W., who in time began to feel the depression incident to the natural tendency to concentrate the shoe business in the large centers. Mr. Young engaged in the clothing business in 1873 with his son, under the firm name of H. S. Young & Co., and continued with fair success up to the time of the death of his son in 1884, after which he ran the enterprise alone until selling out to F. O. Flagg, in June, 1890. Since then he has been practically retired from commercial cares, and has spent his time principally in looking after his large real-estate holdings.

As a staunch Republican Mr. Young has indelibly impressed his broad-mindedness and public services upon the community of Killingly. For more than twenty years he has served as a Burgess of the borough, and was warden in 1867-68, the year 1873 witnessing his services in the Legislature. He was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Killingly, was a director up to the time of the sale of the bank in 1896, and was president thereof from 1891 until 1895. At the time of its organization he was a member of the Music Hall Company, has since been a director, and was president of the company for several years following 1890. He has been a great worker in the Methodist Church, having joined that organization in 1841. He is one of the most liberal contributors and active supporters of the Danielson church, and has been steward of the same for over forty-five years. For the past thirty years he has been a trustee in the church, and at the time of the construction of the old Danielson church he donated one-quarter of the cost of construction. At times he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school, and for half a century has been a teacher in the school.

On Sept. 5, 1842, Rev. George May, of Danielson, performed the ceremony uniting Mr. Young and Emily Baker, born May 11, 1822, a daughter of Simon Baker. Mrs. Young died in April, 1858, leaving three children. Henry S. was born Sept. 25, 1843, and died March 4, 1884. He was engaged in business with his father, married Amelia Wetherell, and left two children: Clarence E., who married Emma Houghton; and Clara J. George W. Young was born June 2, 1848, married Emma Cook, and has two children: Louis, a graduate of Brown University, class of 1902; and Howard. Mr. Young is engaged in the boot, shoe and gentlemen's furnishing goods business at Woonsocket, R. I., in partnership with his brother, under the firm name of Young Brothers. Eugene B. Young was born Oct. 26, 1851, married Katie B. Day, and is a member of the firm of Young Brothers at Woonsocket, R. I. The second marriage of Mr. Young occurred Aug. 1, 1859, his wife being Juliet Westcott, born in Sterling, Conn., Nov. 7, 1826, a daughter of John Westcott. Of this union there are two children: Clarence W., born March 7, 1861, who died Feb. 21, 1864; and J. Emily, born April 7, 1863, and now the wife of E. C. Babson, of East Brooklyn, Conn. Mr. Young holds an exceptional position in the community of Killingly, where his integrity and splendid ability have stood the test of years, and where he still retains the mental strength and bodily vigor usually associated with much younger men.

WILLIAM HERBERT WEBSTER. Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., numbers among its successful citizens none more highly respected than William Herbert Webster, who was born Sept. 21, 1852, at Three Rivers, Massachusetts.

William Edgar Webster, his father, was born in Norfolk, Conn., and met his death by drowning in the Mississippi river, at Fulton, Ill., in April, 1855. By trade he was a sawyer, and at the time of his death was operating a sawmill at Fulton. In attempting to save a raft he was caught in the boom rope, and was drowned almost instantly. Formerly he had operated sawmills in several localities in Massachusetts, and had been in the West but two years when he met his unfortunate death. In politics he was a Republican, firm in his convictions, and in religion he was a devout member of the Baptist Church. All his life he was a hard-working man, and won many friends by his kind, tender disposition.

On Oct. 15, 1851, Mr. Webster was married to Susan Sophia Braman, of Belchertown, Mass., daughter of Francis and Thankful (Hyde) Braman, the former of whom was a carpenter and farmer. To this union were born: William H.; and George Edward, who died at the age of seven months.

William Herbert Webster obtained his education in his native town, at the district schools, and at Southbridge, Mass. During the summer he worked upon the farm, and at the age of seventeen he left school and devoted all his time to farm work on the old homestead, in Willington. When he was eighteen he entered the employ of the American Optical Co., of Southbridge, Mass., where he remained about five or six years, during which time he learned the trade, having served an apprenticeship of three years. At the expiration of his term of employment with the above-mentioned company, Mr. Webster went to Shelton, Conn., and worked at his trade for one year, when the company with which he was connected failed. He then came to Stafford, Conn., and entered the employ of E. C. Dennis, in the grain business, continuing this connection one year. Mr. Webster then entered the employ of Bidwell & Smith, butchers, but after three and one-half years he returned to the American Optical Co., as a gold frame spectacle worker, and continued with them two years. On Jan. 1, 1882, he returned to Stafford Springs and formed a partnership with W. P. Bidwell, and under the firm name of Bidwell & Co., has attained remarkable success, in the conduct of a meat market. As time has advanced, the firm has increased its facilities until the establishment of Bidwell & Co. is regarded as the best equipped in its line in the vicinity, and their trade is an excellent one, their patrons including the leading people of Stafford. Mr. Webster's keen business acumen has been displayed to excellent advantage in the conduct of his establishment; he recognizes just what his customers require and supplies their wants at the lowest possible prices. The quality of the stock is always excellent, and the service given above criticism. The policy pursued by this enterprising firm is such as to insure continued prosperity.

On Sept. 22, 1873, Mr. Webster was married to Clara Mariah Davis, a daughter of Stephen and Miranda (Hill) Davis, of Southbridge, Mass., and Charlton, Mass., respectively. To this union have been born: Rose M., C. Louise, and William E. (born Aug. 15, 1886), all residing with their parents.

Socially Mr. Webster is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Southbridge, Mass., of which he was steward; of Orient Chapter, No. 42, R. A. M., Stafford Springs; of the Veteran Firemen's Association of Southbridge, Mass., of which he is very proud, he having taken an active part in same, served in the fire department several years, and was secretary of the Hook and Ladder Co.; he is also a member of the Good Templar Lodge, and prominent in temperance work. Mr. Webster attends the Congregational Church, and is an active member of the Ecclesiastical Society of that denomination.

Although a very energetic business man, and one who thoroughly understands every detail of his calling, Mr. Webster is very fond of life in the woods, and his vacations are always spent in hunting trips. When he can forget business cares and roam through the great woods with his gun and rod for companions Mr. Webster is most happy, and he never returns without some very interesting specimens of his prowess as a hunter. Nature, wild and free, appeals to him, and he knows and loves the untamed things of the forest. All the birds and larger game are well known to him, and he does not confine his trips to Connecticut, but often goes into the hunting grounds in other States, always coming home happy and with renewed energy and health, better fitted in every way for his duties.

All of the success which has attended Mr. Webster's efforts is due to his own unaided work, and he may be truly called a self-made man. Of a kind, quiet, retiring disposition, he is a man worthy of highest esteem, and the confidence placed in him by his fellow citizens is not misplaced. In politics Mr. Webster is a very stanch Republican, but has not sought or desired office, preferring to devote his time and attention to his own affairs.

ERHARD LINCK. The subject of this sketch is one of the best known and most highly respected German citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., where he has done much in the building up and improvement of the town. As mentioned, he is a native of the land which gave to the world a Bismarck and some of the most distinguished men of this or any other generation, his birth having occurred in the city of Balingen, Wittenberg, Germany, Feb. 11, 1829, a son of George and Susanna Wagner Linck. The trade of the elder Mr. Linck was that of weaver, and he employed a number of assistants at hand looms, some at his home and many others in their homes, at that time weaving being principally carried on in that way instead of in factories.

In 1852 George Linck took his wife and four children and started for the United States, the family being: Erhard; Mary, deceased; Wilhelm, who learned the trade of saddler in Hartford and now lives in Nebraska; and Catherine, who died while young in Hartford. After settling in this country one child, Sophia, was born, who subsequently married and now lives in Peru, Ill. The port from which this family sailed was Antwerp, and the good ship "Victoria" was the one which finally landed them safely in New York after the passage of forty-nine days.

The destination of the family was Northampton, Mass., where lived Jacob Hoele, a brother to the stepmother of our subject, and six months later the father went to Coventry, and from there to Rockville, where he remained some years, working in the American mill at the latter place; in later years he bought a farm near Burnside, Conn., which he sold and then removed into Hartford, from which city he migrated to Illinois, where he bought a farm and where he died at the age of seventy-two.

When Erhard Linck was but nine years old he suffered the loss of his mother, of whom he was the only child. At one time his father was quite prosperous, and if this prosperity had continued he would have been able to have given his children every advantage, but factories building in the district destroyed the business in the smaller way, and many weavers were ruined and forced to find employment in other localities. The education that Erhard received was in the common schools of his native land, and while young he learned the trade of a baker, being so employed in Balingen and other places, and then served for fourteen months in the army, at the expiration of this time coming with his parents to the United States. The first employment which he secured after coming to the United States was in the gig room on the washer of a mill at Northampton, where he signed a contract for one year, continuing at his first work for six months, and employing the remaining six in spinning, coming to Rockville in November, 1853. Until 1858 he was employed in the American mill in spinning, and it was during this time that he built a house on High street, in company with another man. In 1858 there came a depression in the mill, and Mr. Linck decided to go West and look over the country, and after selling his property in Rockville he took a long trip, extending through Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin and Michigan, but finally returned to Rockville, not having found any location that suited him better.

Mr. Linck returned to the American mill and continued until 1862, ten years in all, leaving it to purchase property in the town on Village street, and at once began the erection of a brewery, associating with him Frank Rosenberger for a time, and for the succeeding eighteen years he most successfully conducted this business and also a cafe which received some of the best patronage in the city. In 1878 he retired from active business, but still retains enough to keep him comfortably occupied without undue effort.

Mr. Linck was married June 18, 1853, in Northampton, Mass., to Miss Susanna Rosenberger, who was born in Baden, Germany, Oct. 28, 1827, and came to this country in 1849 with her brother Edward, and three children were born of this union: Erhard, a market man of Manchester, Conn.; and two little girls who died in childhood.

Mr. Linck cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and since that time has been a stanch supporter of the Republican party. For three years he was assessor, filling the duties of the office to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, and is one of the leading members of the Turner Society, holding many of the offices; he is also a member of Sick Society No. 1, and belongs to the German society, D. O. H., of Rockville, No. 436. Much of the improvement manifest on Village street and in that locality is due to the influence of Mr. Linck, who has erected a number of buildings and encouraged financially many efforts at improvement. Both he and his excellent wife are Protestants, and are among the highly respected residents and Mr. Linck is a representative of the best class of German citizens in Rockville.

JOHN WOOD EATON. In 1636, with his wife Martha, (I) William Eaton came from Kent, England, and settled in Waterloo, Mass., later removing to Reading, and there established the Eaton family in New England. (II) Daniel, the son of William the immigrant, was born Nov. 11, 1638, in Watertown, Mass., later removed to Windsor, Conn., and established the Eaton family in the State of Connecticut. (III) William Eaton, son of Daniel, was born Dec. 15, 1665, in Reading, Mass., and his son, (IV) Samuel, was born Sept. 11, 1705, in Windsor, Conn. (V) Ensign Aaron Eaton, the great-grandfather of John Wood Eaton, was born March 18, 1737, in Tolland, Conn., and died May 25, 1815, in West Stafford, Conn. He married Lydia Barber, who was born in 1736 and died July 29, 1790, when fifty-four years old, the children of this marriage being: Roxanna, born Sept. 19, 1763; Aaron, May 6, 1766; Lydia, Jan. 3, 1769, who married a Mr. Hunt; Lucinda, July 26, 1772; Barber, March 14, 1775, these being the children of the first marriage. April 12, 1791, Ensign Aaron married Mrs. Abigail Converse, and three children were born of this union: Josiah Welles; Luther; and Sarah. Abigail died May 30, 1815.

(VI) Aaron Eaton, the grandfather, was born May 6, 1766, in Stafford, Conn., and died Sept. 10, 1842. His first marriage was to Tryphena Petty, born in 1770, who died June 8, 1815, leaving these children: Horace, born Feb. 18, 1790, who married Clara Bradley, daughter of Capt. Reuben Bradley, of Ellington; Mary, Nov. 10, 1791, who married William Gowdy, Sept. 22, 1825; Lydia, Nov. 10, 1792, who married Lyman Lyon; Eli, the father of John W., Sept. 19, 1794; Betsey, Aug. 11, 1796, who married Abel Mumford; and Nathan, born April 20, 1799. Nathan went to New York State and settled in Madison county, where Eaton township was named after him. He was a very prominent man there and of high standing. He was married three times; his first wife was Charlotte Edson, the name of the second is not known, and the third was a Miss Hubbard. There were several children in the family. The second marriage of Aaron Eaton occurred April 2, 1821, to Charlotte Edson, who was the mother of the first wife of Nathan, and two children were born of this union: Anna, born April 18, 1801, who married Samuel Converse, of Stafford; and Lucinda, who married Horace Parmenter, of Massachusetts.

(VII) Eli Eaton was born at Stafford, Conn., and spent his early life there, living at home until his marriage, when he located on a farm in Somers, and remained there all his life of activity, dying in Wales, Mass., April 3, 1866, at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Lyon, while upon a visit to her; he was buried at Somers. Previous to marriage his wife had been Miss Elmira Bourne, a native of Somers, born Feb. 4, 1795, a daughter of Moses and Huldah (Reed) Bourne, who died Dec. 31, 1870. The children born of this marriage were: Almira Caroline, born Sept. 25, 1817, who married William Russell, a farmer of Somers, where she died Feb. 3, 1855; Calvin Reed, born Oct. 26, 1818, a railroad contractor, married to Julia Bedurtha, who died in Dakota; William Bourne, born Jan. 29, 1820, who died Oct. 18, 1839, in Baton Rouge, La.; Sarah Adelia, born Aug. 18, 1821, who married, Sept. 19, 1843, J. H. Lyon, and died in Wales, Mass.; Charles, born Aug. 4, 1823, a mechanic, residing in St. Paul, Minn., who married, Nov. 22, 1847, Lucinda M. Buffam; Louise Josephine, born Oct. 17, 1824, married, April 20, 1846, C. A. Harwood, of Stafford, Conn., who died in Wales, Mass., Feb. 15, 1901; Dwight Chapin, born May 11, 1820, who married Sarah Frost, was a joiner by trade, and died in South Coventry, Conn.; Daniel, born Aug. 25, 1827, who died May 6, 1850, in Wales, Mass.; John Wood, born May 5, 1829; Laura Wood, born Sept. 8, 1830, who married J. M. Lyon, a joiner, later a farmer of Wales, Mass., where she died Nov. 9, 1867; Orson Alonzo, born Oct. 20, 1831, a retired farmer in Wales, Mass., married Chloe M. Needham, and died in February, 1902; Maria Antoinette, born Sept. 13, 1833, who married B. F. Taylor, May 11, 1853, and since his death, in 1900, has resided in Stafford Springs; Celestia Amanda, born Sept. 13, 1836, who married July 5, 1853, E. S. Wood, a farmer of Somers, and after his death, in 1869, married Frank Marsh in 1873, and died in Lexington, Neb., Dec. 15, 1896; Ellen Augusta, born Sept. 4, 1837, who married, Sept. 11, 1856, H. M. Nelson, a machinist, is now the widow of Minot Needham, and resides in Somers. Mr. Eaton, the father of this family, was not a man of large means, and during the last two years of his life was in very indifferent health. A staunch Republican, he had been a pronounced Abolitionist and a Free Soiler; for many years he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and was an upright man and greatly respected.

(VIII) John Wood Eaton was born in Somers, and was but seventeen months old when he was taken to the home of his aunt, Mrs. Sally Wood, in Somers, with whom he lived as a son until he was twenty-one years old. His education was obtained first in the district schools, later in a select school taught by Rev. Luke Wood, at Somers. His rearing was that of a farm boy, and when he reached his majority and desired to engage in business for himself he went to East Hartford and there rented a small tract of land and remained one summer. He then made a short visit to some relatives in Pennsylvania, following which he located at Woodstock, Conn., and there learned the carpenter trade, was thus engaged for two years and then returned to Somers and located in the north part of the town on a farm occupied by his father-in-law, Chauncey Pease. Mr. Eaton took charge of the place, paid off the mortgages and successfully followed farming there until he retired from active life in 1896, at which time he disposed of the farm.

The first marriage of Mr. Eaton occurred March 24, 1853, to Sophia M. Pease, born Aug. 20, 1832, a native of Somers, a daughter of Chauncey and Nancy (Chapman) Pease; she died July 24, 1897, leaving no children. The second marriage of Mr. Eaton took place Aug. 2, 1898, to Mrs. Jane Richardson, born in Stafford, Conn., March 5, 1839, the widow of William Richardson, and daughter of Horace and Clarissa (Bradley) Eaton. Mrs. Eaton had one child by her previous marriage—Emma J., who married Aubrey Munyon, of Northampton, Mass., and has two children: William A., who married Mabel Burbank; and Martha F., who married Edward B. Arms, and died in 1896.

Horace Eaton, the father of Mrs. Eaton, married Clarissa Bradley, a native of Ellington, a daughter of Capt. Reuben Bradley and granddaughter of Josiah Bradley, who lived to be 100 years old; she died at the age of forty-six, in 1836. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Eaton were: Harriet H., who died at the age of eighteen, Oct. 15, 1836; Lovisa, who married Chauncy Baker and died in 1887 in Bridgeport; Eliza G., who married Marshall Pease, of Enfield, and died there in 1899, at the age of seventy-two; Mrs. Eaton; Jason, a twin, who died young; and Francis L., who married Samantha Lee, and went to California, where all trace of them has been lost. Horace Eaton was drafted into the army during the war of 1812, but having a family, his brother Eli, then single, volunteered to take his brother's place and perform his service so that his elder brother might remain with his family. The government accepted young Eli and he faithfully served his family and his country, remaining until the end of the war, when he returned to his home. Horace Eaton died Nov. 10, 1835.

Mr. Eaton is in sympathy with the Democratic party, and has filled many offices in the town very efficiently, having been justice of the peace, grand juror, member of the school committee and a member of the board of assessors. For many years he has been a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Church, while Mrs. Eaton is as highly valued in the Congregational Church, of which she is a member.

WILLIAM R. ORCUTT, deceased. The subject of this biography, William R. Orcutt, was during life one of the leading citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., and his career probably gives greater evidence of good citizenship than any other presented to the people of his city of the same time. As a public servant his course was honorable and efficient and commanded the confidence and respect of all, and he left a name of which his posterity may well feel proud.

William R. Orcutt was born Oct. 19, 1823, in Stafford, Conn., a few miles east of Stafford Springs, a son of William and Eliza (Converse) Orcutt, his name being one always found in the family, descending from father to son, and at one time there were living four generations bearing it. As one in a family of thirteen children, he had no unusual educational advantages, but went to school in the district, the curriculum embracing the "three Rs," as was the custom of the time, with plenty of birching interspersed, and when not at school his time was fully occupied in farm duties.

When aged fourteen, however, the farm and the school books were put behind, and young Orcutt made his way to Windsor Locks, where his uncle, H. A. Converse, had a foundry in operation, and there he was given employment. By the time he was nineteen he was competent to take entire charge of this foundry, which employed from thirty-five to forty men; he later filled a similar position in South Coventry, taking advantage while there of school privileges offered by Prof. John Hall, who later became a teacher in Ellington Academy.

In March, 1847, Mr. Orcutt came to Rockville, in company with Charles Hall, and established the foundry business of Orcutt & Hall, the firm doing well from the first, as the building of the big mills at that time made trade and work in their line good, and what was at first intended as a trial location became a permanent one. Mr. Orcutt later bought out the interest of his partner and conducted the foundry alone, his business ability enabling him to successfully carry out this design. Late in the fifties he sold this foundry to the late Cyrus White, having in the meantime engaged in another profitable line.

About 1847 Mr. Orcutt had purchased from John H. Martin the tract of land on East Main street which is now the center of Rockville, but at that time the only buildings upon it were a small frame one occupied by Martin's bakery and another small frame one occupied as a wheelwright's shop. This tract fronted on the canal and was lined on either side by alders. With the foresight which made him a successful business man Mr. Orcutt recognized the probable value of this tract in the rapidly growing town, and immediately began its improvement, building at first business rooms, but later he erected the brick building which is now occupied by the Metcalf drug store and the Talcott grocery, and later he erected the Monitor block.

In 1895 much of this property was destroyed by the fire which swept the city, but the estate rebuilt the seven stores now standing. After 1860 Mr. Orcutt only rented his property, the management of which, with his other business, public and private, occupied his time. The building of the Rockville railroad was one of his dearest enterprises, as he could see the vast benefit such a road would be to his town, and it was under his superintendence the road was built and under his personal supervision that the rolling stock was purchased. He paid for the first preliminary survey from his own pocket. After its completion he was its first superintendent, and lived to receive the thanks of some who had opposed him in the earlier stages of the work.

For a number of years Mr. Orcutt served as selectman, and probably that office had never been more creditably filled; his fellow-citizens elected him term after term, irrespective of party, and he was often the candidate on three tickets for that office, and as first selectman was probably better known than any one who had previously held it in Rockville or in Vernon. He was the organizer of the first fire department in Rockville, started the first subscription in its behalf, and was first chief of the department.

On Sept. 6, 1849, Mr. Orcutt was married to Miss Frances L. Skinner, born Sept. 11, 1827, in Vernon, a daughter of Nelson and Fanny (Skinner) Skinner, the former of whom was a farmer of Vernon, the latter a native of Bolton, a daughter of Eldad Skinner. Reuben Skinner, the great-grandfather of Frances L. Skinner, was a native of Bolton, and was a Revolutionary soldier. One son, William F., was born of this marriage, June 9, 1850, who resides in Rockville. In 1852 Mr. Orcutt built the home where he lived through life, and which is still the family residence, located on East Main street, and there he passed away May 15, 1882, from pneumonia; he now rests in Grove Hill cemetery.

The first vote that Mr. Orcutt cast for President was for the great Whig, Henry Clay, in 1856, joining the Republican party upon its organization, and ever after he was one of its staunchest members. Socially he was connected with the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Fayette Lodge, A. F. & A. M. At one time he was a director in the Rockville National Bank, but at the time of his death had put aside many of his previous business connections.

William R. Orcutt was distinctively a self-made man, and left a large estate which was the outgrowth of a small beginning, the details of which he was always willing to relate. Becoming the possessor of nine pence while still a small boy, he saved it and gradually added to it until he was able to buy a gun, and with it he shot game and thus earned money, denying himself many things in order to save and become independent. From his early youth he comprehended the value of credit, and in all his career it was his constant aim to preserve it, and he took a pride in the fact that no one could dispute that his word was as good as his bond. A careful and judicious buyer, he never bought until he felt sure he could pay, and thus an unblemished integrity was maintained which was ever a source of gratification to him, for he felt that honesty of word was as desirable in business as honesty of deed.

In 1868 Mr. Orcutt went abroad, and with his son, whom he met in London, traveled over Great Britain and through the continent to the Mediterranean, going thence to Egypt and the interior of Africa, and returning home in 1869, the trip being partly in the hope of restoring health to his only child. Among his many commendable virtues was his firm stand on temperance and his determination that none of his property should be rented to any business which engaged in the selling of liquor, a stand taken by his successors. Mr. Orcutt possessed the happy faculty of being able to handle men and thus obtained the best results from those in his employ, gaining their esteem and respect, while maintaining the dignity and firmness of an employer. Mrs. Orcutt is a resident of Rockville, a lady of culture and refinement, and one who is highly respected in the city. Her social connection is with Sabra Trumbull Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

PETER WENDHISER. The death of Peter Wendhiser, on Jan. 31, 1894, at Ormond, Fla., where he was sojourning for his health, removed one of the best known business men and most highly respected citizens of Rockville, Tolland county. Mr. Wendhiser was one of the self-made men of that city, where his long business career had been attended with success, and had made for him a reputation for honesty and integrity such as is seldom enjoyed.

Mr. Wendhiser was born in 1835, in the Rhine Province, near Cologne, Prussia, and was a boy when his parents came to the United States, in 1847, first settling in Pittsfield, Mass., where his father, Nicholas Wendhiser, followed his trade of stonemason, and later in life engaged in farming. In his native land Peter first attended school, and he also had some advantages after locating in his new home. While still a youth, however, he entered the woolen mills at Pittsfield, Mass., continuing at that work until a favorable opportunity offered, when he left the mills and began to learn the trade of cabinetmaker, which at that time was one of great profit, and in a short time he had become very proficient. He first located in Rockville, in 1860, when he entered the employ of Mr. Metcalf, who conducted a factory for making all kinds of furniture—everything in those days being made by hand—in the building on Market street now owned by Mr. Robertson, and partly occupied by Ransom Bros., grocers. There Mr. Wendhiser remained until he was ready to enter business on his own account. When he first located in Rockville his capital consisted of his mechanical skill and his energy and determination to succeed, and it was seven years before he was enabled to open up a business of his own. In 1867 he located on West street, nearly opposite the head of Windsor, and his venture proving a success, very soon larger quarters were required, necessitating the erection of a commodious structure on the same site. This block was later completely destroyed by fire, a conflagration which up to that time was one of the largest that had ever desolated the city, and represented a great financial loss to Mr. Wendhiser. With characteristic energy, however, he at once entered into business again, opening up a furniture and undertaking establishment in the Coggswell building, on Park street, the site of the present Prescott block, where he became more prosperous than formerly. There he remained until September, 1881, when he disposed of this enterprise to E. H. Preston, and retired from active life for a short time. During this period Mr. Wendhiser had originated and patented (Patent No. 72,346, granted

Peter Mendelsohn

Dec. 17, 1867) a "body preserver," a system for preserving bodies in and restoring them to a natural condition, and which was in general use among undertakers all over the United States until the present method of embalming took its place. It is still occasionally used by persons who prefer it as being cleaner than embalming and less objectionable in many ways.

After a few years of rest Mr. Wendhiser again embarked in business, opening up a boot and shoe establishment, having purchased the stock of A. Hyneck, in the Johnson building, but a few years later he sold this to Mr. Hanel and took a very enjoyable trip through the South and West. In September, 1889, he bought out the business of George W. Randall, who conducted a music store in the Henry block, removing in December, 1889, to the newly built Doane block. He associated with him his son, and P. Wendhiser & Son were the first tenants of that building, in which the business has been conducted ever since. It was on a more extensive scale than had ever before been attempted in that line in the city, and this progressive firm immediately took rank with the well known houses of the State. After the death of Peter Wendhiser his son George P. took the entire management, and under the old firm name continues under the same excellent rules, conditions and straightforward practices that established the firm's reputation.

Mr. Wendhiser died of pneumonia, at Ormond, Fla., while he was spending the winter months there, as he had done for some years, sometimes enjoying the balmy climate at Palatka, St. Augustine and elsewhere. As soon as it was apparent that his illness was serious his wife and son were telegraphed for, and they made the trip as quickly as possible, but arrived about an hour too late to see him alive. He was brought home and interred in St. Bernard's cemetery, in Rockville, and the heavy snowstorm which occurred on the day of the funeral was in striking contrast to the sunny clime where he had been sojourning. Many were the citizens who came to pay the final mark of respect, St. Bernard's Church being too small to accommodate all who attended.

Mr. Wendhiser was one of the first fifty voters of the Democratic ticket in his town, and through life was an enthusiastic and influential member of that party. During the campaign of 1876 he was a member of the town Democratic committee, and through his financial backing, push and energy was organized one of the largest torchlight processions that the town was ever permitted to witness. At one time Mr. Wendhiser was a candidate for representative, and polled the largest vote ever received by a Democrat up to that time, but he was too independent a thinker and too firmly fixed in opinions he believed to be best to have made a successful politician, who has to be willing to veer at the will of a party, for he acted conscientiously in every detail of both public and private life.

The fortune left by Mr. Wendhiser was ample, although he started in life as wage earner. Far and wide was he known for his generosity and public spirit, and seldom was any call made on him, for any reasonable purpose, to which he did not cheerfully respond, his town benefiting in many ways. When death was approaching he remarked to sorrowing friends, "I have tried to live an upright life, and never intentionally wronged anyone, and were I to live my life over I could not do more." All churches and benevolent organizations, regardless of creed, benefited by his charity, his great desire being to do the most good possible.

Musically inclined to a remarkable degree, it was always a subject of regret to Mr. Wendhiser that he had not been able in youth to cultivate what was more than an inclination, although with no instruction he became well known in many circles as a fine violinist, and his musical tastes resulted in his connection with many musical organizations, all of which found in him an enthusiastic supporter and substantial member. He was organist at St. Bernard's Church for a few years.

Mr. Wendhiser was married, in 1861, in Rockville, to Miss Delia B. Kivel, a native of New York City, only daughter of Henry and Margaret Kivel. Children as follows were born to this union: John Henry, who died when a young man; and George Peter and Laura J., who reside with their mother. The daughter is an accomplished musician, a pianist of more than ordinary ability, and has studied under some of the best known teachers in America. Both son and daughter possess in a remarkable degree the prominent traits of their admirable father. "Linden Place," on the corner of Vernon avenue and Linden street, had been for a number of years the home of Mr. Wendhiser, and in this pleasant home his family still reside.

GEORGE PETER WENDHISER, the capable son of Peter Wendhiser, and who now conducts the business, is one of the best known musicians in Rockville, where he was born March 27, 1867. He attended both the common and high schools of the city, and in 1886 entered St. John's College, at Fordham, N. Y. From his earliest childhood he had taken readily and eagerly to music, and his understanding and enjoyment of the violin, under his father's instruction, caused his parents to early give him the best advantages to be found; under Prof. Preisinger, Prof. Blasius, and later Prof. Kehrle, of New York, he became an accomplished performer.

George P. Wendhiser purchased, in December, 1899, the billposting business conducted for many years by J. S. Thrall, and which is now quite an important business. He has increased the plant to many times its former size. All his boards are built of the best matched lumber, and are in first-class locations, and the business is now known as one of the best in the State. It is conducted under the name of The Rockville Bill Posting Co., and several men are employed. Mr. Wendhiser is a member of the New England Association of Bill Posters and the Associated Bill Posters and Distributors of the United States and Canada, an organization representing many millions of dollars capital, and widely known in the advertising world.

Mr. Wendhiser was a member of the firm of P. Wendhiser & Son at its organization, and in 1894 took full charge, and he now manages what is by far the most representative house in that line in Tolland county, employing a number of assistants. He was at the head, practically the founder, of the Rockville Orchestral Club, which was the best orchestra the city ever had, and to music lovers was an organization of which they might well feel proud. For a number of years previous to giving up such work Mr. Wendhiser was the acknowledged head of musical matters, and had charge of the musical portion of all entertainments where orchestral music was required. For a number of seasons he directed the orchestra of one of the large White Mountain hotels. On Jan. 6, 1894, he had charge of the music and staged the Rockville Wheel Club's minstrel entertainment, which was, no doubt, the most successful affair ever given in Rockville by local talent. Henry Theatre was crowded by a surprised and delighted audience, who listened to an up-to-date minstrel performance, consisting of an elaborate First Part, followed by an Olio of Specialties that was favorably compared to professional productions.

Since the death of his father, the additional responsibilities of business have caused Mr. Wendhiser's withdrawal from the greater part of public musical work, as many of his former engagements took him often from home, although he cheerfully gives his time and talent to local affairs, when he can consistently do so.

ALLEN HAMMOND. The history of Rockville's leading men would be sadly incomplete without a sketch of Allen Hammond, whose son, A. Park Hammond, is one of the prominent citizens of that city, with whose history the name of Hammond has been inseparably connected since 1837. Allen Hammond was a representative of the seventh generation of this old New England family, the ancestral history of which can be found in the biography of Joseph C. Hammond, of Rockville.

The late Allen Hammond, of Rockville, a son of Elijah Hammond, was born July 28, 1801, in the town of Vernon, Tolland Co., Conn., was reared on his father's farm and given such educational advantages as were then afforded. For several winters consecutively in his early life young Hammond occupied himself in teaching school and then resumed work on the farm. Locating in Rockville in 1837, in connection with the late George Kellogg, he built the mills and established the business of the New England Manufacturing Company, and was made the first superintendent of these mills, later becoming the efficient agent of the company, a relation he sustained the rest of his life. At the time of Mr. Hammond's location at Rockville it was a mere hamlet, and for the next quarter of a century probably no man was more largely identified with its growth and more important affairs than he. Mr. Hammond was one of the organizers and was first president of what became the Rockville National Bank; was agent of the Panola Mills; president of the Rockville Railroad; treasurer of the Savings Bank, of Rockville; and at one time agent of the Rock Manufacturing Company. In many ways he demonstrated his usefulness as a citizen; was active in the founding of the First Congregational Church and in the erection of its building, and later was identified with the Second Congregational Church, going to it in the second year of its organization.

Allen Hammond was noted for being ever ready with means and influence to aid and further any good cause that was deserving, and benevolent work and enterprises always found in him a friend. His unostentatious manner and simple habits were characteristic and this trait of character rendered him indifferent to the political honors which his fellow-citizens would have gladly heaped upon him. A conception of the man has been set forth by a friend in these lines:

"Through all the coming years that silent but faithful influence of pure principles and steadfast, honest purpose will be felt, controlling, restraining, persuading, in the direction of a higher and a better life. To all the young who knew him he stood as a representative result of good habits and sound Christian principles. No one can quaff the intoxicating cup, utter the profane oath, or yield to any debasing temptation without trampling under foot the obligation such a life imposes.

"Little can we afford, in times like these, when avarice, pride and selfishness form the rule rather than the exception in the lives of men, to lose such an example of disinterested devotion to duty. That ceaseless energy forced a recognition of every just cause and beneficent purpose bearing upon the growth and prosperity of Rockville, and so as strangers survey our beautiful village, resonant with the whirl of untiring industries, and happy in the cheerful results of honest toil, and ask to whose influence is due the success with which these labors have been crowned, we need be at no loss for an answer.

"The name of Allen Hammond is lifted into view upon each advancing wave of strength and progress through which our village has already taken rank among the more important industrial centers of the State. How cheering is the remembrance that death appeared to him divested of its terrors, and was met without dismay and in the full assurance of a blessed immortality."

On Oct. 29, 1826, Allen Hammond was married in Vernon Center to Orra Park, a daughter of Josiah and Sarah (Safford) Park, born May 10, 1806, and to them were born: Sarah, born at Vernon, Sept. 19, 1829, who married (first) Hezekiah Dewing, M. D., and (second) Anthony M. Gibson, and now a widow, living in Rockville; Allen Park, born at Vernon, June 24, 1835; and Harriet C., born April 13, 1839, in Rockville, who died Oct. 10, 1870, unmarried.

The recreation that Mr. Hammond permitted himself was that of farming, and his leisure time was agreeably spent by him in looking after his lands and flocks, all operations being carried on under his own direction. His affection was centered around the surroundings of his boyhood and there he found more pleasure than would have been his if viewing the wonders of the world. The death of this prominent man took place Dec. 29, 1864, and his wife survived until Dec. 29, 1890, passing away on the same month and day as her husband, and both rest in the beautiful surroundings of Grove Hill cemetery.

A. PARK HAMMOND, of Rockville, a son of the late Allen Hammond, was born June 24, 1835, in Vernon, and received his elementary education in the local schools, the public schools of Rockville, and a private school in Ellington, which was supplemented by attendance at a Polytechnic school. His school days over, he began employment in the New England mill at Rockville, in order to get a practical knowledge of the business of the company, which was the manufacture of woolen and worsted goods. After four years of experience in the manufacturing department of the mills young Hammond entered the office, where he became acquainted with the financial department of the business, under the direction of his father, who at that time was treasurer of the company, a relation he sustained with the company from its inception until his death in 1864, a period of more than a quarter of a century. On the organization of the present company operating the mills, in 1879, A. Park Hammond was elected its treasurer, a position he has since very efficiently and satisfactorily filled.

In his political affiliations Mr. Hammond is a Republican, and as such was elected as a Representative from Vernon to the State Legislature in 1869, and served three years as a member of the city council, his election to that body occurring in 1894; following this, in 1895-96, he was one of the city aldermen. As a member of Co. D, 14th P. V. I., during the Civil war, he performed honorable service and had the honor of commanding the company at the battle of Antietam, thus winning the best of rights to be a valued and esteemed member of Burpee Post, G. A. R., of Rockville; he is also a member of the Army and Navy Club of Connecticut. Socially he is connected with the Masonic fraternity, being a Knight Templar, member of Washington Commandery, No. 1. The thorough training which he received under his father, who was a business man of great ability and a good financier, fitted him admirably to carry forward to still greater success the important work begun by his honored parent. Mr. Hammond is president of the Rockville National Bank, the Aqueduct Company and the Rockville Building and Loan Association, and is also a director in the Rockville Fire Insurance Company, an enterprising and public-spirited citizen, and a man of social and genial nature, popular with the masses.

On Dec. 7, 1859, A. Park Hammond was married to Lois Cone Bissell, born Sept. 17, 1837, in North Coventry, Conn., and daughter of George Cone and Elizabeth (White) Bissell. Three children were born to them: Allen, Nov. 19, 1860; George Bissell, April 4, 1862; and John Park, June 16, 1866, who died June 30, 1867. The mother of these children died July 28, 1872, and Aug. 27, 1873, Mr. Hammond was married to Augusta Sophia Bissell, a sister of his first wife.

ELIAB A. CONVERSE (deceased) was born in 1805, in Stafford, Tolland county, where he died Sept. 19, 1871. His father, Dr. Josiah Converse, was born in 1777 in Stafford, where he died March 3, 1844.

Dr. Converse was for many years a practicing physician in Stafford, where he attained eminence. Martha Alden, his wife, a daughter of Capt. Joseph and Lydia (Hyde) Alden, of Stafford, Conn., was the mother of the following children: Eliab; Almira and Almeda, twins, of whom the former died Aug. 15, 1848, at the age of twenty-nine years, and the latter married Gotham Smith, and removed to Minneapolis, where she died; Martha, who died in 1818, at the age of six years; Martha C., deceased in 1834, at the age of eighteen years; Robert B., who died in 1821, when only a year and a half old; Hiram, who was at one time connected with his brother, Eliab A., in the manufacturing business; Caroline, who married Nathaniel Hyde.

Capt. Joseph Converse, born in 1736 in Stafford, died in that place Oct. 25, 1814. His wife, Elizabeth, died July 1, 1815. Their children were: Eleanor, who was born in Stafford in 1771, and died unmarried in 1815; and Josiah, the father of Eliab A. Converse. Capt. Converse was the first person whose body was buried in the cemetery on Stafford street.

Eliab A. Converse acquired his education in the public school and early entered the store of the Furnace Company at Stafford, under Capt. Hyde. Later he was associated in the business, and in 1849 became its head. When the satinette mill was established, he became the agent of the corporation, and was a leading member of the firm of which Nathan Washburn was the other principal party. They started the factory in Worcester under the firm name of Converse & Washburn, with which he was associated for four years. In 1853 Mr. Converse started the Hope mill in Stafford in company with Mr. Washburn. The two separated in 1855, Mr. Washburn taking the wheel business and Mr. Converse the mill. This enterprise he carried on very successfully until the panic of 1857. During this time he also ran the Peel & McCarthy mill. While the war was on Mr. Converse sold vast quantities of goods and became wealthy. After the war he built the Tuckersville and the Home mills, investing over $80,000 in the latter mill.

Mr. E. Hyde had secured an old satinnet mill, which stood on the present location of the Riverside mill, and in it he interested Mr. Converse. Mr. Converse carried on these various mill properties until his death. He had another mill laid out above the home mill, and some of the lumber had already been delivered at the time of his death. The Home mill was twice burned. Early in his life he became associated with Parley Howe, formed a firm of Howe & Converse and the two were engaged in the making of the Harvey loom. Mr. Converse had a jovial and friendly disposition, and his history indicates a man of boundless energy. Always a staunch Universalist, he was a deacon in the local church. In politics he was a Democrat. His death took place Sept. 19, 1871.

Mr. Converse was married to Sarah Adeline Young, who died June 21, 1874, at the age of seventy years. She was a daughter of John and Hannah (Converse) Young. Her father was a carpenter and builder on Stafford street. Their children were: Henry, who died Dec. 3, 1871, at the age of thirty-four years; Alden, who is in the life insurance business in California, and married Vesta Olin; Caroline, the wife of C. C. Kimball, of Hartford; Adeline, married to Julius H. Strong, of Bolton, Conn., a lawyer of note, an astute politician, and at one time the representative of his district in the House of Representatives at Washington; William A., deceased in 1837 at the age of six years; Albert E., who died in 1837, four years of age.

It is said that Eliab Alden Converse was the greatest manufacturer ever known in Stafford. His push and energy were marked, and he did not know the meaning of failure. Though he was often forced to do his business on paper, as he had but little money at his command, it is said that he never began an enterprise that he did not finish successfully. It is asserted that he would have had a mill every five hundred feet along the stream from Staffordville to Stafford Springs if he had lived but a few years longer.

WILLIAM WARD WEBBER. This highly honored citizen of Woodstock, Windham county, was born Jan. 31, 1836, in Pomfret, Conn. His father, Ariel Webber, was a native of Pennsylvania, was born Sept. 2, 1793, and died in Woodstock, Conn., May 1, 1875. In early life, Ariel Webber followed the wagon maker's trade, and located in Pomfret, Conn., when about thirty years old, continued to follow his trade, later added undertaking and continued at all three lines until he purchased a farm in Woodstock, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a strong anti-slavery man and eventually became a Republican, which party seemed to be in his opinion, the only substantial organization likely to ever become strong enough before the public to be able to carry out his ideas concerning human liberty. In religion he was a Congregationalist and a liberal contributor financially to the support of his church.

Ariel Webber married, August 23, 1818, Lucina Holmes, who was born July 21, 1797, in Ashford, Conn., and died in Woodstock, March 31, 1880. She was a kind, loving and self-sacrificing mother, with a clear intellect, was beloved by all her children and neighbors and lived a consistent Christian life. To this union were born six children, of whom Erastus Chandler, born Feb. 7, 1824, in Pomfret, learned his trade with his father and was in the employ of the Corliss Engine Company of Providence, R. I., for over twenty-three years, having charge of the finer machine work. He married, June 14, 1855, Miss Elvira Swift, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; his death took place in Woodstock July 9, 1899. The second child, George Nelson Webber, was born Aug. 27, 1826, is a minister in the Congregational Church, and first married, May 4, 1858, Charlotte Fairbanks, daughter of the inventor of the famous Fairbanks scales. This lady died March 29, 1869, and Aug. 29, 1871, Mr. Webber married Carrie Ladd, who was born in Constantinople, Turkey, the daughter of a missionary. Mr. Webber was graduated from Amherst College, has traveled extensively and made a tour of the Holy Land and has won a high reputation as a lecturer. Jane Elizabeth, born in Pomfret, Sept. 9, 1828, was married May 25, 1859, to Henry Phillips, of Woodstock, where he died Sept. 17, 1876. He was the owner of a large farm, which has been purchased by the town of Woodstock and is now known as the "town farm." He was the father of two children, viz.: Jennie Phillips, born Nov. 18, 1860; and Wendell Holmes Phillips, born May 17, 1869. Harriet Serena, the fourth child of Ariel Webber, was born Feb. 24, 1831, in Pomfret, was married, Sept. 3, 1855, to Sanford Fisher, of Woodstock, and died April 4, 1888, in Springfield, Mass. The fifth of the family is William W., the subject proper of this sketch. The sixth child is Ellen Lucina, who was born July 24, 1840, in Pomfret, and was married April 2, 1862, to Sherman B. Bishop, of Norwich, who died March 19, 1895; she is now living with her son in Concord, N. H. Christopher Webber, grandfather of William Ward Webber, was born in Mansfield, and there died.

William W. Webber received his early education in the district schools of Pomfret and later attended the Woodstock Academy for several terms, from which he was graduated in 1855. He then made a profession of school teaching for over twenty-five years and taught in several of the Woodstock districts. In 1896 Mr. Webber relinquished teaching and purchased the homestead in Woodstock, where he has 116 acres in the home place with one outlying wood lot. Besides carrying on general farming he keeps nine cows, disposing of his milk in Boston.

Mr. Webber is a member of Senexet Grange, No. 40, of Woodstock, in which he has served as lecturer and steward. Religiously he is a member of Woodstock Hill Congregational Church, was its organist for several years, and has been superintendent of its Sunday-school for nine years. In politics Mr. Webber is a Republican and has served as town constable and as registrar of voters for several years; he has also served on the school board and has been chairman and clerk of the board and acting school visitor a long time and has always taken an active interest in the Woodstock Academy and the cause of education generally. Mr. Webber has never married.

PERY G. TRIPP, of Central Village, Windham Co., Conn., is one of the well-known citizens and large landholders of the town of Plainfield. His grandfather, Peregrine Tripp, was long a resident of Rhode Island, following the trade of shoemaker in Exeter, where he died. His wife, Isabella (Sprague) Tripp, was born Aug. 26, 1768, and died Sept. 26, 1812. The family left by these most worthy ancestors consisted of the following members: Isabella, who was born Dec. 22, 1791; John, Nov. 17, 1793; Sarah, March 13, 1797 (deceased May 25, 1798); Sarah (2), Aug. 6, 1799, who married Silas Moore and died in Richmondtown, R. I., March 19, 1862; Betsey, Oct. 22, 1802 (who married William Northop and died in Warwick, R. I.); Deborah, Sept. 29, 1804, (who died May, 1846, the wife of Mr. Hoxie, of Rhode Island); Lyman, April 11, 1806, (who died in March, 1808); and Phoebe, March 28, 1809, who married in Rhode Island.

John Tripp, the father of Pery G. Tripp, of Plainfield, was born in Exeter, R. I., where he carried on farming on the home place until marriage, and then, after a few years of operating rented land near Exeter, came in 1823 to Plainfield, in company with his wife's parents, and they all located on a farm in the southern part of the town which his father-in-law purchased. Until the death of his wife, Mr. Tripp remained on this property and then removed to Brooklyn and until his death made his home there with his son. In March, 1852, he passed away and was buried in Brooklyn.

Through his marriage, in Exeter, R. I., to Sarah Bissell, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Allen) Bissell, John Tripp became connected with one of the leading families of Rhode Island. Samuel Bissell was born in East Greenwich, R. I., and enlisted in the Continental army under Gen. Nathaniel Greene, was made a lieutenant and later was promoted to be a captain; soon after this last appointment he resigned and went on board a privateer vessel, and thus assisted in the capture of twenty-seven British vessels, some of these being of great value. Until the close of the Revolutionary war he remained connected with the navy and drew a pension until his death. For many years he worked at farming in Plainfield, and his remains lie in a private burying ground at Flat Rock, in that town.

The beloved mother of Mr. Tripp, of Central Village, died in Plainfield at the age of forty-nine years, and she also sleeps in that burying ground. The children of John Tripp and his wife were: Lucy Ann, born in April, 1818, who married Gilbert Robbins, a factory superintendent, and died in Plainfield; Samuel B., born Feb. 23, 1820, who married Betsey Keach, was a shoemaker by trade, entered the army during the Civil war as a member of the 11th C. V. I., and was killed at Cold Harbor; Huldah, born Oct. 12, 1821, who married Miner Tucker, and died in Plainfield; Pery G., born Oct. 12, 1823; Stephen H., born in June, 1826, who married Abbie Pidge, served bravely in the Civil war in the 1st Conn. Cav., later became a farmer and died in Brooklyn; Henry D., born Feb. 23, 1828, who married Adelaide Simmons, and is a farmer, living in East Brooklyn; Sophia, deceased in infancy; Emily, who married Lewis Trescott, and died in Providence, R. I.; and George, born in August, 1834, who married Lydia Spicer, and is now engaged in the lumber business in Mystic, Conn., being retired from a seafaring life.

Pery G. Tripp was born in the south part of the town of Plainfield, and until he was seventeen years of age he remained at home, attending the district schools and assisting in the work on the home farm. However, this quiet life did not quite satisfy the youth, who was anxious to see something more of the world than was bounded by his native hills, and at Mystic, Conn., he secured a situation on board a whaling vessel, the bark "Leander," shipping before the mast, and when it again sailed into the home harbor, he had seen many countries and endured many experiences. The vessel was considered fairly successful in its work and was gone for a period of twenty-two months, visiting in search of its prey, the cold waters of the Antarctic ocean and Australian waters and the sea about New Zealand, returning by way of Cape Horn, thus encircling the globe.

For the following year Mr. Tripp again tried farming, but the next year joined the crew of the whaler "Atlantic" and was out with this staunch vessel for a period of two years, with very good success, during which time he visited the South Atlantic, went thence to the Indian ocean and later on touched the northwest coast of America, in the vicinity of Behring strait. In this voyage he visited the Sandwich, the Philippine and Ladrone islands, as well as other groups, including the Friendly islands, and during his sojourn in the Sandwich islands he became personally acquainted with a number of prominent people there, some of whom have been noted in the affairs of that part of the world in later years.

Again the ship sailed around the dread "Horn" in safety, reaching the home port at Mystic with decks loaded with the products of their labors. Within a year of his return, Mr. Tripp had married and settled down to domestic life on a rented farm in Plainfield, residing in the southern part of the town until 1851, when he purchased a farm consisting of 254 acres of good land, in the southern part of the town of Brooklyn, which he still owns. Mr. Tripp resided on this farm until 1869 when he bought his present farm, located on Shepard Hill, which was formerly the property of Mrs. Lucy A. Remington and is a part of what was once the old Simeon Shepard farm, and comprises 209 acres.

For a long period Mr. Tripp gave a great deal of attention to dairying and at one time kept as many as sixty cows but he has reduced his output and has retained only half the number. In almost all of his enterprises Mr. Tripp has been very successful, as he has applied those principles which are calculated to bring prosperity, temperance, energy, industry and honesty.

The first marriage of Mr. Tripp took place March 4, 1848, to Lydia Ann Robbins, who was born in January, 1829, and who was a daughter of Elijah Robbins, of Brooklyn, who married a Miss Dean. Her death took place May 16, 1874. Their children were: Pery G., born Feb. 25, 1849, a farmer of Ellington, Conn., who married Mary N. Hixcox, and had one child, Maude Elizabeth; Elihu Sprague, born May 3, 1852, who was married Dec. 1, 1886, to Agnes Dumath, and was engaged in farming near Danielson until his death, Sept. 4, 1900; Alice, born in April, 1854, deceased in June, 1854; John Bissell, born in January, 1856, who was married Feb. 14, 1877, to Emeline Hill, and is now the efficient superintendent of Rosebud Indian school, located at Rosebud, South Dakota, where he also owns a farm of 640 acres and is extensively engaged in farming and sheep raising, his five children being,—Charles H., John, Lydia A., Emma and Pery G.; Emma, born July 8, 1857, married to Charles N. Kingsbury, the agent for the Old Colony Railroad at Pawtucket, R. I., their one child, James Newton, having died in 1901 at the age of eight years; Isabelle, born Sept. 4, 1861, who was married on Sept. 17, 1882 to William S. Brown, of Danielson, Conn., and whose only child, Cecile S., born Dec. 19, 1884, was killed by the cars at Danielson, Aug. 7, 1899; Grace, born March 30, 1864, who married Herbert Davis, a meat dealer in Wauregan, Conn.; and Lizzie, born on Dec. 8, 1866, a resident of Danielson.

The second marriage of Mr. Tripp occurred April 19, 1876, to Harriet Irene Robbins, who was born Nov. 18, 1838, a native of Brooklyn, and a daughter of Erastus and Lucy (Parsons) Robbins, the one child of this union being Annie Irene, who was born Feb. 27, 1877. She graduated from the Willimantic Normal School in 1895, and is a teacher, a young lady of education and accomplishments.

Mr. Tripp has always taken a very decided and public-spirited interest in political affairs and has served for two terms on the board of selectmen in Plainfield, and has been urged many times for a number of the local offices by his Democratic friends, but they rest under the disadvantage of being in the minority in that locality. Although he clings to Democratic principles, there have been occasions when Mr. Tripp has considered it his duty to cut loose from party lines, notably during the Civil war and the administrations of President Grant, and occasionally when he believed that his vote would have its influence in the advancement of prohibition laws. Mr. Tripp was the youngest one of the original fifteen Free Soilers in Plainfield, and is the only one of the number still surviving.

In fraternal circles Mr. Tripp has long been an active Mason, having joined Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., of Danielson, over thirty-five years ago and is one of its oldest and most honored members. In earlier years he connected himself with the Packerville Baptist Church, but now attends the Congregational Church with his wife. She was a member of the Brooklyn Church, but transferred her letter to that at Wauregan. Mr. Tripp has been a man of deeds during a long life and has won a position of respect and prominence through his own efforts. Intelligent, well read and traveled, he is a delightful host and in his locality is one of the most respected citizens.

E. N. FOOTE, one of the oldest merchants in the city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., both in point of service and in age, is also one of the most successful business citizens, a man most favorably known in every circle of the city's life. For over thirty-seven years he has been in the mercantile line and is well known over the greater part of Tolland county.

Mr. Foote comes from the old Foote family of New England, and was born July 17, 1833, near East Middlebury, Vt., a son of Noble and Emily (Smith) Foote, the former of whom was a native of the State of New York, who went to Vermont when a young man and located in the vicinity of Middlebury, where he married Emily Smith, a native of Chester, Vermont, a daughter of Nathaniel Smith, a farmer of that locality, who at one time owned much of the land upon which the town of Chester is now built.

Noble Foote was a farmer by occupation and also a cattle dealer, raising great numbers of sheep, and was well known in his neighborhood as a man of means and prominence. His life extended to the age of sixty-seven, his wife surviving to be seventy, and they reared a family of three children: Allen, a farmer on the old homestead farm, near East Middlebury; Nancy, who married James Fenn, and died in the old home town; and our subject. Noble Foote was well named, his life example being of an exalted character. As a prominent member of the Methodist Church, he was one of its efficient officers and the promoter of many of its charitable and benevolent enterprises, was also an enthusiastic member of the Masonic order and most active in the ranks of the Republican party.

E. N. Foote was reared in his native town where he attended the district school; this comprised only a few months in winter, but he improved his opportunities so well that he was accepted as a teacher when but seventeen years old, taking charge of the home school where he had so lately been a pupil, this being a task that required considerable nerve and the exercise of judgment and tact. The term was successfully ended, in spite of two disadvantages, that he "boarded around," according to the custom of the time, and that he received in money $13.00 per month, which in the eyes of the school directors, "was big pay for such easy work."

The money thus earned was used in paying his way through two terms at the Johnson Academy at Johnson, Vt., and then he took up teaching as a regular profession, and was most favorably regarded through the county, his scholarship meeting all demands made upon it and his management of pupils winning both regard and affection. Until his marriage, Mr. Foote made his home with his parents, working on the farm whenever he had vacations, and thus learned the best modes of agriculture under the eye of his father, who was a very successful farmer.

With a foresight beyond his years, Mr. Foote had saved his earnings, and when a neighboring farm came on the market, was able to purchase it, with some assistance from his father. Some older friends did not regard this as a wise undertaking, but he believed the place only needed intelligent measures to bring it up to a state of productiveness, and with energy and determination he went to work, and in two years proved that he was right, raising enough grain to finish paying for the land. Succeeding so well in this matter, he soon after bought another farm, under like conditions, and on this place first went to housekeeping, having been married in September, 1856, to Miss Harriet Stowell, a native of Middlebury, the daughter of Miller Stowell, who for years was sheriff of Addison county, Vt., the Stowells being of the pioneer family of the name who settled at Middlebury. Mr. and Mrs. Foote have one son, Edmund W., engaged in newspaper work and residing with his parents.

After locating on the new farm, Mr. Foote engaged in the business of trading in cattle and sheep, also in lumbering, his business tact being soon proven in the buying and selling of his commodities. Particularly was he prominent in the lumber business, shipping large quantities of it to Rockville, and he was very prosperous. About that time an asthmatic trouble developed and finally became so annoying that he felt compelled to seek another climate, and as his wife had a sister, Mrs. Albert Phillips, living in Rockville, he was tempted to try that climate; from his first night in the city his relief was great and the longer he remained the better opinion he had, but his business interests required his return to Vermont, where the trouble returned. As this was intolerable, Mr. Foote left again at once and buying three car loads of lumber, he started to Rockville, sold the lumber there, and again had relief in that climate from his asthma. This definitely settled the question and he immediately offered his farm for sale, and had no difficulty in disposing of it for double what it cost him, as he had so improved it, making of it one of the best in that part of the State.

In the spring of 1865 he had settled in Rockville, and soon opened the first lumber yard in that city, carrying on that business successfully until 1869, when he disposed of it to George M. Paulk. The parents of his wife were growing old and much wished to have their children come back to the home in Vermont to be with them in their declining years, and after disposing of his business Mr. Foote returned to Middlebury, where he remained about a year, the old father, in the meantime having died, and the mother consenting to return to Rockville with Mr. and Mrs. Foote.

Upon his second location in the city, Mr. Foote bought out the business of Mr. Shelton, in the Doane Block, the line being jewelry, stationery, books and Yankee notions, and in connection he held the school book trade of Tolland county, but later he sold out all lines except jewelry and decided to move to some other location. With this idea in view, he looked about and finally settled upon Scranton, Pa., where he remained but a few months, and again returned to Rockville, soon after opening up a store in the Exchange Block, displaying a stock of boots, shoes and jewelry, and there a very prosperous season of trade followed. When the Fitch Block was erected, the business was transferred to it, and has been conducted there on the same upright and energetic lines by which it first gained the confidence of the public.

The first presidential vote cast by Mr. Foote was for John C. Fremont, and ever since he has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party. Mr. Foote has been called upon to take a prominent stand in many public affairs, and was one of the committee to represent the mercantile interests for the revaluation of Rockville and the town of Vernon, for, although his career has been that of a business man instead of a politician, he has never been known to shirk any duty of a good citizen. As one of the successful and self-made business men of Rockville, he has long borne a reputation for solidity, and well represents the commercial element of that busy and progressive city.

ERNEST MURRY ARNOLD. The annals of the particular family of which Ernest M. Arnold, the well known stock broker of Putnam, Windham county, and Walter S. Arnold, machinist and chief engineer of the Grosvenor Dale Mills, are worthy representatives, are interestingly interwoven with the history of the ancient royalty of picturesque Wales, among the sheltering hills of which lived their ancestors for many years. The family name was closely identified with the records of early events in New England, and figures conspicuously in the records of both church and State.

William and Thomas Arnold, sons of Thomas Arnold, of Cheselbourne, by different wives, were the American ancestors of the Rhode Island Arnolds. They were descended in the seventeenth generation in direct line from Yuir, king of Gwentland, who flourished about the twelfth century, and who in turn was descended from Yuir, second son of Cadwaladir, king of the Britons.

William Arnold, son of Thomas by his first wife, Alice Gulley, was born June 24, 1587, and married Christina Peak, born in 1583, daughter of Thomas Peak. With his family William Arnold sailed from Dartmouth, England, May 1, 1635, arriving in New England June 24th, following. He lived for a time at Hingham, but removed to Providence, R. I., April 20, 1636, and later to Pawtuxet, where he was one of the members of the Baptist Church in 1639, and in 1640, with others, signed the agreement for civil government. He held various important offices, and was held in high esteem. From Roger Williams he received grants of land in Providence, Pawtuxet, and Warwick. His death occurred in 1676. His children, born between 1611 and 1622, were Elizabeth, Benedict, Joanna and Stephen.

Stephen Arnold, son of William, born Dec. 22, 1622, came with his father to New England, and lived at Providence and other places in the vicinity. He had large landed properties, and was exceedingly well to do. On Nov. 24, 1646, he married Sarah Smith, born in 1629, daughter of Edward Smith, of Rehoboth. He was prominent in public affairs, and filled important stations in the Colony, being chosen deputy in 1664, and assistant governor in 1667. He died in 1667, and his widow died in 1713.

Stephen Arnold, son of Stephen, born Nov. 27, 1654, married Jan. 12, 1688, Mary Sheldon, daughter of John and Joan (Vincent) Sheldon. Mr. Arnold was deputy in 1704-1706-1709.

Philip Arnold, son of Stephen, born Feb. 12, 1693, married June 10, 1714 (at which time he lived at Providence), Susannah Greene, born July 16, 1694, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Greene, of Warwick. The children of this union were: Susannah, born July 23, 1716; Mary, Feb. 6, 1720; Benjamin, Nov. 1, 1722; Elizabeth, Nov. 23, 1724; Philip, Jan. 9, 1726; Thomas, June 22, 1730; and Stephen, Sept. 2, 1732.

Benjamin Arnold, son of Philip, born Nov. 1, 1722, died Feb. 25, 1799. His wife, Barbara, born March 8, 1724, died Oct. 4, 1814. The children of this union were as follows: Benjamin, born April 2, 1749; Elizabeth, Nov. 18, 1753 (died Feb. 10, 1771); John R., Dec. 1, 1755; Philip and Stephen, Nov. 17, 1756; Henry, April 10, 1758; Thomas, July 21, 1759; Mary, July 1, 1761 (died Feb. 2, 1782); and Dutee, July 30, 1765.

Benjamin Arnold, son of Benjamin and Barbara, was born April 2, 1749, and his wife Sarah was born Nov. 26, 1752. They became the parents of nine children; Lorey, born March 14, 1774; Elisha, Oct. 27, 1775; Welcome, Oct. 1, 1778; Mary, Jan. 25, 1782; Merritt, May 27, 1784; Thomas Greene, Nov. 26, 1786; Benjamin, May 21, 1789; Sarah, Dec. 24, 1791; and Owen, July 3, 1794.

Thomas Greene Arnold, born in Rhode Island Nov. 26, 1786, married Dec. 21, 1806, Eleanor G. Bowen, born Oct. 19, 1789, who died Nov. 1, 1882. Mrs. Arnold died April 17, 1860. Their children were: Almira, born Oct. 10, 1816, married Henry Madison, of Norwich Falls, Conn.; Albert Bowen, born Jan. 30, 1822, married Maria Spencer, of Windham; Lucinda, born Dec. 21, 1824, married Edward F. Manchester, of Providence, R. I.; Merritt Thomas, born March 3, 1827, married Josephine Nickerson; Levi Bowen was born July 7, 1829. The family were all members of the Society of Friends.

Levi Bowen Arnold, born in Coventry, R. I., July 7, 1829, was educated in the Friends School at Providence, and in his younger days was engaged with his father in the manufacture of acid. Having a natural aptitude for things mechanical, he turned his attention to learning the trade of machinist, in which trade he engaged in his native State. On June 13, 1874, he became identified with the State of Connecticut, and found employment as machinist in the Grosvenor Dale Mills, of which his brother-in-law, Lucius Briggs, was at that time manager. He was thus employed up to the time of his death, which occurred in Grosvenor Dale, Dec. 29, 1900. Politically he was first a Whig and later a Republican, but never sought any kind of office, or mingled with affairs outside of his regular work. Though a Friend in religious belief, he worshiped in the Methodist Episcopal Church, owing to the absence of a meeting-house of his own denomination. At Willimantic, Conn., Feb. 6, 1856, Mr. Arnold married Eunice A. Briggs, born July 21, 1836, daughter of Wanton and Mary (Tift) Briggs, of Coventry, R. I. She bore him the following children: (1) Ernest Murry, born Jan. 25, 1857, and (2) Walter S., April 12, 1858, are mentioned below. (3) Mary Eleanor, born Jan. 22, 1861, was educated in the Thompson schools, and lived for a number of years with her uncle, the late Lucius Briggs, of Glasgo, Conn., the noted manufacturer of that town. Miss Arnold is the author of books on crocheting, lace, thread, etc., embodying her designs, which were used by the Glasgo Mills. She is a woman of fine educational and social standing, and at present makes her home with her mother in Putnam, where she is a member of the Methodist Church. She is a member of Trumbull Chapter, D. A. R., of Norwich. (4) Lucius Frank, born Nov. 11, 1862, is now manager for the Iroquois Machine Co., of Providence. He married Hattie Douglas, of Coventry. (5) Clifford Bowen, born March 9, 1868, is draughtsman for the Whittin Co., of Whitinsville, Mass. He married Ella W. Young, of that place. (6) Edwin Tift, born Nov. 3, 1872, died March 9, 1891.

Ernest Murry Arnold, the eldest son of Levi B., was born in Coventry, R. I., Jan. 25, 1857, and was educated in the Friends School. He subsequently engaged in educational work, and was employed in mechanical establishments at Worcester and other points until thirty-five years old. He then became accountant for the Grosvenor Dale Co., with whom he remained until 1901, in that year removing to Putnam and starting in connection with Douglas, Lacey & Co., of New York, a brokerage business, in which line of activity he is meeting with pronounced success. He possesses excellent business ability, shrewd common sense and unquestioned integrity, and is destined to take an important part in the general affairs of his adopted town. He is a charter member of Corner Stone Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of North Grosvenor Dale; of Putnam Chapter; and of Montgomery Council, of Danielson. A Republican in political affiliation, he has never entered into the strife for office. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is active in its affairs, being steward, and has been assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school for eight years. Mr. Arnold lives with his mother and sister in Putnam.

WALTER S. ARNOLD, chief engineer and master machinist for the Grosvenor Dale Co., was born in Coventry, R. I., April 12, 1858, second son of Levi B. Arnold. Like his brother, he was educated in the Friends School at Providence, and when sixteen years of age came to Connecticut with his parents, locating at Grosvenor Dale. Under his father he learned the machinist's trade, thereafter engaging in the same at Worcester, Mass., and at Suncook, Merrimack Co., N. H., in which latter city he remained four years. After four years with the Grosvenor Dale Co. he went to Berkeley, R. I., where he was master machinist for the Lonsdale Co., for four and a half years. In 1887 he returned to Grosvenor Dale as master machinist for the Grosvenor Dale Co., and was later appointed chief engineer of all the Grosvenor Dale mills, a responsibility discharged by him with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the company.

In Suncook, N. H., Mr. Arnold married Ida L. Wells, daughter of Zadoc Wells, of North Grosvenor Dale, and by this union there were three children: Eleanor, who is a student at the Putnam high school; Ethel; and Byron Edward. Mr. Arnold is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers of New York. He is a Republican, but no politician. Formerly a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, he is now a member of the Peniel Church of Grosvenor Dale, in which he is a deacon, and also a Sunday-school teacher. His wife is also active in the church. Mr. Arnold bears an enviable reputation in the community of Grosvenor Dale, and is one of the most skilled machinists in the State.

John Briggs is recorded in Kingston, R. I., in 1671, as clerk of a military company, and the next year as a land purchaser. He was a freeman in 1673, and constable in 1687. It is assumed by Austin, in his Genealogical Dictionary of Rhode Island, that Thomas of Kingston and Greenwich, and Daniel of East Greenwich, were his sons, his other children being: John, of North Kingston; James, of Kingston, Portsmouth and Cranston; Frances; Richard, of Kingston and East Greenwich; and Robert, Mary, Ann and Sarah, who seem to have left no posterity. Frances, the wife of John Briggs, died in 1697, the same year as her husband.

John Briggs, of Portsmouth, R. I., was born in 1609, and died in 1690. He was an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck (Rhode Island) in 1638. His children were: John, of Portsmouth and Tiverton; Thomas, of Portsmouth and Dartmouth, Mass.; William, of Portsmouth and Little Compton; Susanna; Job, of Portsmouth and Little Compton; and Enoch, of Portsmouth. From the foregoing sources came the Briggses of Rhode Island.

Jonathan Briggs, the grandfather of Eunice A., wife of Levi B. Arnold, married Mary Greene. He served in the Revolutionary war, in the Rhode Island Continental Line, being a member of the company of Capt. Hughes, and in 1779 was in the regiment of Col. Angell. He was a corporal in 1781, and a United States pensioner of Kent county, R. I., in 1835, receiving a pension of $8 per month. He participated in the historic battles of Germantown, Yorktown and Monmouth.

Wanton Briggs, son of Jonathan, was born Oct. 5, 1788, and was a farmer in his native town of Coventry. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. On Dec. 22, 1816, he married Mary Tift, daughter of Solomon and Eunice (Burrows) Tift, of Groton, Conn., and to this union came the following children: Eunice A., born in Coventry Feb. 5, 1818, died May 18, 1833. Jonathan, born April 22, 1819, died July 6, 1819. Ira Greene, born April 29, 1820, died Jan. 6, 1902. Wanton, born Nov. 25, 1821, lives in Danielson, Conn. Jonathan T., born May 3, 1823, resides in Sheridan, Cal. Lucius, born Dec. 21, 1825, died Jan. 27, 1901. Sarah B., born July 7, 1827, married Thomas Wilbur, of North Grosvenor Dale. George W., born April 19, 1829, resides in Danielson. Ezra, born Oct. 9, 1830, lives in Voluntown, Conn., where he is a manufacturer. Mary A., born March 17, 1832, married Jonathan Spencer, of Providence, R. I. James Henry Clay, born Nov. 16, 1834, died May 8, 1857. Eunice A., born July 21, 1836, is the widow of Levi Bowen Arnold, and resides in Putnam. Wanton Briggs died March 22, 1849, in Phoenix, R. I., his wife surviving him until July 9, 1866; her death occurred in Voluntown. Both are buried in the Knotty Oak cemetery, Washington, R. I. He was a Whig, and a member of the Baptist Church of Rice City. At a period when cotton factories were springing up all over New England, and particularly in Rhode Island, Mr. Briggs decided to leave his farm and locate in a factory village. He therefore settled at Harrisville, in Coventry, which continued to be his home for many years, and where he reared his children to a knowledge of the cotton business, which several of them successfully followed as a life occupation.

Solomon Tift, mentioned above, was born May 28, 1758, in South Kingston, R. I., and died Dec. 2, 1850, in Groton, Conn., whither he removed during the Revolution. At Arnold's attack on New London, Sept. 6, 1781, he was made a prisoner of war by the British, and put on board the prison ship "Jersey," where he came near dying of fever. He was a United States pensioner from March 4, 1831, receiving from the Government $40 a year. He first enlisted in March, 1777, and served three months under Col. John Gardner, and in July, 1778, enlisted for nine months in the company of Capt. West, under Col. Topham, of Rhode Island.

ALONZO BAILEY (deceased), who was born in Lebanon, Conn., Dec. 14, 1799, was a son of William and Lucretia (Tracey) Bailey, and was in his lifetime one of the most prominent and respected citizens of Vernon, Tolland county. When a young man he came to Rockville, and worked as a dyer in the Rock mill. He was active and saving, and soon acquired a complete knowledge of the business. Mr. Bailey was admitted as a member of the Springville Mill Company, manufacturing satinets and building the first Springville mill. Phineas Talcott afterward became a member of this same company.

Mr. Bailey had a store in Rockville, which he carried on for a number of years, and was engaged in this way when he died, July 25, 1867. He was one of a company who built the old Hockanum mill, where he was engaged in the manufacture of satinets for a number of years.

Mr. Bailey's second marriage occurred Jan. 15, 1857, when he married Catherine Noble, a native of Willington, and a daughter of Solomon and Dorcas (Vinton) Noble. Lucinda Pease, his first wife, was a native of Somers, and became the mother of the following children: Lucinda, born Dec. 9, 1840, who lives unmarried at Rockville; Eleanor G., born June 15, 1844, who married Sylvester Ryder, of Plainville, Conn.; Lucretia, born Oct. 28, 1846, who died Nov. 14, 1862. To Mr. Bailey's second marriage were born Isabelle C., born Feb. 22, 1858, now Mrs. William H. Sill, of Rockville; William, born June 2, 1860, who married a Miss Severson, and resides in Olympia, Wash.; Mary, born Sept. 18, 1863, now Mrs. George L. McLean, of Ellington.

Mr. Bailey's business career was singularly successful and highly creditable. In 1831 he was associated with Col. McLean and others in building the Frank mill. This mill began operating with six cashmere machines in 1847, and the building was architecturally the finest in the village. It was destroyed by fire in 1851, and on its site in 1864 rose the Florence mill. Mr. Bailey was the manager of the mill established by Grant & McKinney, which declared a dividend of 150 per cent. in 1836. During the years 1837 and 1838 Mr. Bailey built and put in operation the former Springville mill. In 1850 Mr. Bailey built a new mill near the old twin mills, where he made satinets. This mill was burned in 1854. The Hockanum Company was organized May 31, 1836. The original incorporation was composed of Lebbeus P. Tinker, president; Alonzo Bailey; Austin Holt, agent; Ralph Talcott and Mr. Bickford, and the original capital was $7,500. In 1851 the "Rockville Hotel" was begun, with Mr. Bailey as one of its most important stockholders. He was also largely interested in the District Aqueduct Company, and was in every way a helpful and inspiring citizen.

HUTCHINS. Grandfather Joseph Hutchins, a native of Cumberland county, Maine, was left an orphan at an early age, and grew up in Cumberland county, where he followed farming, dying at the age of eighty-two. His third wife, Nancy Lawrence, was the grandmother of Joseph Hutchins of Columbia, and she, too, was a native of Cumberland county. Five children were born of this third marriage: Asa; Solomon, Henry and Tristram, who resided in Maine; Joseph, who died when young.

Asa Hutchins, father of Joseph Hutchins, was born July 1, 1811, and grew to manhood in the town of Pownal, Cumberland Co., Me. Having a natural inclination for medicine, he studied at Bowdoin College medical school, and after being graduated, located in the town of Poland, Maine, where he remained twelve years. Then he removed to Durham and for four years pursued his practice of medicine, but his health failing, he located in Columbia, Conn., in 1852, purchased a farm on Chestnut Hill, and devoted his attention to farming, only practicing his profession occasionally. Later he sold his property on Chestnut Hill, and for four years resided at Colchester, but his last days were spent in Columbia. In politics, he was first a Whig, and later a Republican, and always took an active interest in local affairs; he gave liberally to the Congregational Church, of which he and his wife were members. He died May 8, 1865.

On July 3, 1836, he married in Freeport, Me., Eliza Frances Armstrong, of Lebanon, a daughter of John Armstrong, a native of Rhode Island, whose wife's maiden name was Esther Dorrance, of Columbia. Mrs. Hutchins was born Feb. 8, 1817, and died Dec. 9, 1900, in Columbia. To Mr. and Mrs. Asa Hutchins were born: John A., born April 16, 1838, deceased at the age of forty-nine, married to Gertrude Ford, who died Aug. 3, 1887; Joseph and Esther, twins, born Dec. 4, 1840, Esther being still unmarried; Eliza A., born Oct. 6, 1846, unmarried; Harriet E., born Jan. 12, 1857, unmarried. Both the latter live in Columbia.

JOSEPH HUTCHINS grew to manhood in Columbia, attended the select schools and the State Normal at New Britain and the Suffield Literary Institute. After finishing his school course, Mr. Hutchins took the agency for maps and books and traveled through portions of the Middle states and Canada for nearly ten years, when he located at Columbia in 1869, and purchased a farm near the Centre, although he has never engaged in farming extensively. For a number of years he has conducted a flourishing insurance business in Columbia, and for the past six years has been postmaster of Columbia.

Politically Mr. Hutchins has been a staunch Republican and has held nearly all of the minor offices of the town, has been justice of the peace, member of the school board and registrar of elections. At one time his constituents did all in their power to induce Mr. Hutchins to accept the nomination for senatorship, but he did not care to embark in public life so actively. For many years he has been a consistent and active member of the Congregational Church, and for twelve or fifteen years, superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. Hutchins is a charter member of the Grange and has been largely instrumental in promoting the growth of that order.

STEPHEN PAUL WEBSTER. The death of Stephen Paul Webster at Pomfret, Windham county, Oct. 27, 1884, was a distinct loss to the community. Starting life amidst the most inauspicious surroundings, but endowed with a rich inheritance of brains and a large capacity for work, he finally won for himself a solid prosperity and a reputation for much learning.

Benjamin Webster, father of Stephen Paul, was a man of ability and intelligence, who followed farming and the trade of a wheelwright for the greater part of his mature life. He was born and lived for some time in the eastern part of the town of Pomfret. When a young man he married Marsilva Chamberlain, and after her death, which occurred in West Woodstock, he took a second wife, Matilda Clark; she survived her husband and died in Webster, Mass. By the first marriage there were four children, two of whom, Benjamin and Luther, were school teachers; the first married Sophia Chandler, and later followed carpentering at Eastford, Conn., dying there; the second was a skilled mathematician and died in Woodstock, where he resided for some time; Nancy died in young womanhood, and Stephen Paul is mentioned below. By the second marriage there were three children: Halsey married a Miss Whiting, became a merchant in Woodstock, and later resided in Willington, where he died; Cynthia, deceased, never married; Huldah married Windsor Bruce, a machinist of Webster, Mass., and later resided in Pascoag, R. I.; they died there.

In early manhood Mr. Webster purchased a farm in West Woodstock, where he made a home for himself and family for many years and carried on a successful agricultural industry. Exceedingly proficient as a wheelwright, he also conducted a large business in this line, greatly increasing his income. After the death of his first wife he moved to Cooperstown, N. Y., where, after a short residence, he died.

Stephen Paul Webster was the youngest child of Benjamin and Marsilva Webster. Born in West Woodstock, Conn., May 15, 1802, he was but five years old when his mother died, and still very young when the family moved to Cooperstown, N. Y. There at the tender age of nine he lost his father and was sent to work among the neighboring farmers. With a sturdy heart he took up his rough tasks and courageously continued them for seven long years. Meanwhile he found a little time to attend the district schools, where, taking to his studies with avidity, he made remarkable progress. At the age of sixteen he hired out for three years as a carpenter apprentice to his brother Benjamin. The compensation was not much, only his board and clothes, but he became so proficient at his trade that, upon the fulfillment of his contract, he found no difficulty whatever in securing positions. He first traveled through northern Connecticut and southern Massachusetts, working at his trade from place to place. After a few years, however, he married and settled upon a farm at Woodstock Center. His wife, Mary Lyons, was born in Woodstock, Aug. 13, 1805, daughter of Thomas and Thankful (Fisher) Lyons, prosperous farming people of Woodstock. Mr. Lyons died in that place, Aug. 26, 1824, at the age of sixty-four, and his wife, who was formerly of Pawtucket, R. I., died at the age of eighty-seven. Mrs. Webster was an efficient helpmeet for over fifty years; she died April 22, 1882. By her Mr. Webster had three children: Lucian B., born Oct. 17, 1830, now a retired farmer of Osage, Iowa, where as a young man he was a pioneer, married Eunice Chapman and, after her death, Jane Burrows, and had eleven children; Emily is mentioned below; Myron, born July 9, 1839, enlisted in Co. D, 21st C. V. I., and died in Hampton Hospital at Fortress Monroe, Va.; he is buried at Woodstock Center cemetery.

Ill health was the immediate cause of Mr. Webster's locating at Woodstock Center, but he remained there the rest of his business life. His farm always bore evidence of skillful management, and by adding improvements from time to time he materially increased its value. Besides farming he worked assiduously at his carpenter's trade, and, prudently saving his earnings, amassed considerable property.

Mr. Webster, by nature a student, made a specialty of history and current events. Naturally, too, keenly interested in politics, he was at first a Whig and later a stanch Republican, but not, however, an office seeker. As a large-hearted man he gave liberally to the support of the Baptist Church, of which he was a prominent member. For courage and persistence in resisting hard luck he evinced extraordinary power.

MRS. BENJAMIN L. GALLUP, formerly Emily Webster, was born in Woodstock, Nov. 28, 1836. In the district school of her neighborhood and in a young ladies' seminary, at Townsend, Mass., a school during her attendance there in a highly flourishing condition, she obtained a thorough education and excellent preparation for teaching. She then taught school for some time; first, at Woodstock, Conn., and later at Burlington, N. J. The boarding around practice was then in vogue, and besides her living, obtained in this arduous way, she received at Woodstock an additional compensation of two dollars and fifty cents a week, and at Burlington, three dollars. She finally returned to her home, remaining there until her marriage, which occurred Dec. 23, 1868. She survived her husband, and is still living on her farm in Pomfret.

BENJAMIN L. GALLUP, her husband, was born in Voluntown, Conn., July 30, 1827, son of Benjamin and Amy (Gallup) Gallup. In the school of his native town and in Plainfield Academy he obtained his education, which thoroughly prepared him for teaching. For several years he followed that profession, filling at different times, with marked ability, positions in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Illinois. He was married twice; first, to Lydia Tillinghast, of Rhode Island, and, after her death, to Emily Webster, who is mentioned above. There were no children by either marriage. Mr. Gallup finally returned to the Voluntown homestead and followed farming for several years; but later, disposing of the farm, moved to Woodstock, where he remained six years. Then finding the attractive farm owned by James Manning and located in Pomfret for sale, he purchased it; and there he resided the rest of his life. Bringing intelligence and energy to bear in his farming, he remodeled the house and enlarged the place by an additional land purchase, vastly improving the property. His death occurred Jan. 19, 1897, and he was buried at Woodstock.

Mr. Gallup was a man who strenuously endeavored to realize the noblest possibilities. He was at one time a member of the First Baptist Church at Greenwich, R. I., and later transferred his membership to the First Baptist Church at Woodstock. As a Republican he evinced a keen interest in politics, and during his residence at Voluntown, filled with marked ability a few town offices. His travels and his varied experiences gave him broad views of life, and he was very highly esteemed.

JOHN G. BAILEY, one of the most highly respected old citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., and since 1863, a deacon in the Congregational Church, is the last representative of his father's family, and the only one who settled in Tolland county.

Deacon Bailey was born in Harwinton, Conn., Dec. 12, 1820, a son of Jonathan and Chloe (Griswold) Bailey, the former of whom was a son of Ezra Bailey, a farmer who lived near the town line, in the town of Burlington, Conn. Jonathan was born in Burlington, but his wife was a member of the old Griswold family of Windsor. John G. was one of eight children, all of whom grew to adult age, their names being: Thomas J., a wood-worker, who died at Fort Howard, Wis., now a part of Green Bay; Jason, for some time a business man of Springfield, Mass., who died in Red Bank, N. J.; John G.; Augusta, who married Freedom Piper, of Berlin, Conn., and died in the town of Bristol; Sophia, who married a Mr. Potter, later a Griswold, and died at Litchfield, Conn.; Julia, who married a Mr. Tyler and died in Henry county, Ill.; Chloe, who married a Mr. Allen, and died in Plymouth, Conn.; and Emily, who married a Mr. Parkhurst and died in Hartford.

John G. Bailey enjoyed the educational advantages offered at the district schools in Harwinton, the sessions usually being held only in winter, as there was always work for the children in summer, and until he was twenty-one years old he lived with his parents, but at that time he went to Springfield and began work at the carpenter trade, soon becoming a good workman and quite capable of entering into building; a short time after he took contracts through New Britain, later in Bristol, both of these towns being in the State of Connecticut, and in 1855 he made a business trip to Oshkosh, Wis., going by rail to Chicago, then by lake to Sheboygan, there taking the stage for a forty mile journey to Fond du Lac, and again by water to Oshkosh, this being the most expeditious way of reaching that city in those days.

Mr. Bailey there began to operate a planing mill, and engaged in the manufacture of sash, doors and blinds in that locality for five years, becoming a well known and prominent citizen, and filling a position in the city council. In 1860 he returned to Rockville, and until 1888 was engaged as a builder and contractor, the erection of houses being his specialty, and he was depended upon to perform work in his line for almost all of the great manufacturers of the place. There are many evidences of Mr. Bailey's work in Rockville, these including the Opera House, the Citizens' Block, and second school on School street, the Henry Block and some of the residences which still adorn the city, notably that of Henry Adams, which was one of the finest houses in Rockville in its day, and still one of the handsomest.

John G. Bailey was married in Hartford in 1847, to Miss Mary Tuttle, of South Windsor, who was born Jan. 17, 1826, and died April 24, 1900. Although Mr. Bailey cast his first vote for a Democratic candidate, James K. Polk, in 1844, his opinions changed by 1856, and since that time he has been a staunch Republican. One term he served as selectman in Vernon, where his opinion and good judgment are highly valued. While still a resident of Oshkosh, he united with the Congregational Church, and when he came to Rockville he joined the First Congregational Church; he is now a member of the Union Church, having been made a deacon prior to the organization of the latter, about 1863, and is the oldest deacon, in point of service, in the church. Mr. Bailey has been noted in the church for his generosity and benevolence, being always ready to aid a worthy object and is a man whose influence has been exerted in the right direction. From a poor boy, by his own efforts he has accumulated ample means, and is considered one of the substantial citizens of Rockville.

EBENEZER ALONZO HARWOOD (deceased) was a farmer at Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., and belonged to the family with which C. E. Harwood, of Rockville, is connected, the Harwood family history being published in connection with the sketch of the latter gentleman. E. A. Harwood is a grandson of Jonathan Harwood and his third wife, Margery Snell.

Ebenezer Harwood, the father of E. A. Harwood, was born in Stafford, Conn., June 2, 1797, and was a school teacher in that vicinity in his early life. Reared a farmer, he spent the most of his life in the tillage of rented farms in various places in Connecticut and Massachusetts. For a number of years he kept a boarding house in Rockville, and his last years were spent in the home of his son, Henry, in Tolland, where he died Nov. 24, 1874. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Church. Minerva Dimmick, his wife, was born at Crystal Lake in 1797, and died April 18, 1860. They had a numerous and happy family: (1) Ebenezer Alonzo, born Dec. 2, 1819; (2) Crispus A., born June 22, 1821, a prominent farmer in Somers, who married Louisa Eaton, and died Feb. 15, 1901, at Wales, Mass., where he had lived a retired life; (3) Minerva A., born April 29, 1823, who died March 6, 1826; (4) Nancy L., born March 13, 1825, who was the first wife of Elijah Holt, a wool sorter, and who died in Rockville, Oct. 18, 1864; (5) Dorcas A., born Aug. 17, 1827, who married John Fletcher, and has a home near Crystal Lake, in Ellington; (6) Malvina Adeline, born July 29, 1829, who married Francis T. Burpee, of Waterbury, Conn. (a colonel of the 21st C. V. I., mortally wounded at Cold Harbor in June, 1864), and who has become the mother of Col. Lucien F., Charles W., and a daughter who died in infancy; (7) Minerva Angeline, twin of the above, deceased Sept. 29, 1849; (8) Jonathan A., born Sept. 11, 1831, who died Aug. 2, 1832; (9) Hannah M., born June 15, 1833, who died Sept. 7, 1849; (10) Margery S., born Sept. 4, 1835, the widow of William Howlett, who lives in Hampden, Mass., and has the following children, Adella, Ernest W., LeRoy and Eva; (11) Henry A., born June 15, 1837, who married Mary Tracy, resides in Willimantic, where he is employed as a teamster, and is the father of Alphonso, who died young, Adelbert T. and Francis B.; (12) Emily J., born Dec. 31, 1839, who married John Slater, of Springfield, Mass., and is the mother of Orlando J. and Albertus N.

E. A. Harwood was born near Springfield, Mass., where he received but a limited schooling, as he was under the necessity of applying himself to work while still very young. For a time he was employed in various places at mill and farm work, finally bringing up at Somerville, where he was employed in a mill. About 1858 Mr. Harwood came to the farm where he died, Oct. 6, 1879. His death was caused by consumption, doubtless resulting from the stress and strain of caring for his first wife, who was an invalid, and to whom he gave the most devoted care and attention. A Republican, he never held office, but satisfied himself with voting right. For many years he was a member, and served as steward and treasurer, of the Somers Methodist Church.

E. A. Harwood was married to Miss Augusta Cobb, his first wife, who died when a young woman, and was the mother of one son, Harvey A., who was born Feb. 22, 1848, married Hattie Rathbone, and resides at Maynard, Mass., where he follows the occupation of a wool sorter. Their children are: Cora P., born Jan. 20, 1874, the wife of William Wilder, of Rindge, N. H.; Fanny B., born Jan. 22, 1876; Lucien A., born Oct. 24, 1880, who was killed Oct. 14, 1900, in the Electric General Works; Leslie and Lester, twins, born October, 1884, both deceased; Angelia and Myrtilla, both deceased.

E. A. Harwood married for his second wife Dorcas Hulburt, Nov. 25, 1858, a native of Somers, and a daughter of Timothy and Dorathy (Pease) Hulburt. Mrs. Harwood was born Feb. 22, 1822, and died May 2, 1895. She was the mother of the following family: (1) Fred T., born March 4, 1860, married Idella Wentworth, and is living in Springfield, Mass., where he is a machinist. They had two children. Raymond A. was born July 17, 1892, and George W., born Nov. 16, 1895, died Dec. 2, 1900. (2) Myrtilla D., born June 12, 1864, taught school several years, being employed in Monson, Mass., in Stafford, and four years in Somers, and was married Aug. 28, 1888, to George W. Davis, a native of Stafford, who was born June 21, 1850, a son of Deacon Alden and Eunice (Cady) Davis. Mr. Davis was a farmer, and resided in Stafford until his death, March 10, 1894, his remains being interred in West cemetery, in Somers. His widow is residing on the family estate, and is the mother of Fred. C., born March 8, 1890, and Spencer H., born Oct. 13, 1891.

Deacon Davis was born April 17, 1807, in Stafford, Conn., where his early life was spent. As a young man he was employed in brick making in Enfield, and for twelve years taught school in the vicinity of his home. At one time he owned 600 acres of land. A successful farmer, his name was that of an honorable and upright man. He died on his farm in October, 1887. A Whig, he became a Republican in his later life, and held many town offices. For many years previous to his death he was a deacon in the West Parish Congregational Church in Stafford. April 9, 1837, he married Eunice Cady, who was born in August, 1807, in Somers, a daughter of David and Abigail (Chapin) Cady. She died in June, 1880, and was buried in Somers. Of their children, (1) Samuel A., born May 16, 1839, married Mrs. Marcia Bond, and lives in Somers. (2) Margaret S., born in September, 1840, died when twenty-five years old. (3) Eunice M., born June 7, 1842, married E. O. Dimmock, and died six months after marriage. (4) Edwin C., born March 26, 1844, enlisted Aug. 19, 1862, in Co. K, 22d C. V. I., saw much service in Virginia, and was mustered out with his regiment, July 7, 1863. He located in Darien, Ga., in 1866, and was inspector and surveyor of customs there from 1876 to 1880, filling the position of deputy collector from 1880 to 1886, and was vice-consul for Portugal there from 1880 to 1886. He represented the town of Stafford in the State Legislature of 1887, and was on the committee on Humane Institutions. He lives at Somers, where he is recognized as a shrewd and successful business man. (5) Franklin C., born June 15, 1846, married Lucy Copeland, and lives in East Long Meadow, where he is engaged in farming. To him and his wife were born the following children: J. Alden; Margaret A., who died young; Mabel E.; Lawrence C.; David C.; and a son that died in infancy. (6) George W. was born June 21, 1850.

SAMUEL FITCH (deceased), the first mayor of the city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., during his busy life did as much toward the growth and development of the city as any one man who has ever been a resident. Almost every movement of progress had his hearty support, and he was one of the most respected citizens and one whose death meant a great loss to the community. Not only in the city and county was Samuel Fitch known and esteemed, but through the State his reputation was firmly established as a leading public man, he having ably represented his town in the Legislature in 1860, 1861 and 1877, and from 1863 to 1869 held the important position of State railroad commissioner. Mr. Fitch was one of the incorporators and for years a director in the People's Savings Bank at Rockville, and belonged to many minor organizations which owed to him the chief foundation of their support.

Samuel Fitch was born Dec. 2, 1821, in Enfield, Hartford Co., Conn., the only child of Samuel and Nancy (Atwell) Fitch, the former of whom was born in Bolton, but later removed to Albion, N. Y., where he died; the latter was a native of Montville, Conn. His early youth was passed in Enfield, where he pursued his studies in the local schools, later attending an excellent institution of learning in North Wilbraham, Mass., and while not at school, employing his time on the farm.

In those days, agriculture was carried on in a very laborious way, and young Fitch did not feel an attraction for the kind of a life which was the only one possible for him in that section, so that when an opportunity offered by which he could see something of the world, and at the same time make some advance financially, he started out, first on foot with tin trunks, selling Yankee notions, later with a team, dispensing tin ware, etc., and in the course of events he eagerly embraced the offer of the Enfield Powder Company to become their traveling agent, starting out in 1839 on his first trip. For a period of fifteen years he peddled powder through the New England States and Canada for the above named company. A man of acute perceptions, he was ever on the alert to profit by new ventures, and by 1854 he began to realize that the manufacture of stockinet, then in its infancy, offered an encouraging field, and early in that year he perfected arrangements by which he could enter into its manufacture in the town of Stafford, in Tolland county, and he and his brother-in-law, Harlow Spencer, brought from Providence, the first Circular knitting machine ever introduced into Tolland county.

As the capital of the firm was small, Mr. Fitch was obliged to begin the new business in a small way, and for several years was handicapped by limited means, and later financial troubles severely tested his pluck and energy, his efforts resulting finally, however, in the extensive business later carried on in Rockville, whither he removed in 1867 and located in what was then the Glasgo mill.

In 1861 Mr. Fitch admitted Andrew Burke as a partner and during the war this firm manufactured undergarments for lumbermen's trade and soldiers' use, doing a fine business and taxing the capacity of the mill to the utmost. About 1865 the firm of Fitch & Burke was dissolved, the former purchasing the entire business and equipments which soon after were removed to the Glasgow Thread Company mill, where the enterprise took on a new lease of life. In 1874 the business was moved into the mill occupied formerly by the Carlisle Thread Company, and there a wide spreading trade was carried on until 1897. On Feb. 2, 1880, the firm of Samuel Fitch & Sons, was formed and their product of knit goods, together with specialties give them a deservedly high reputation, these goods being in demand over the world. The success of the industry was entirely owing to the energetic efforts of its inceptor, and to his courage through the early days when financial failure stared him in the face. In 1888 the business was incorporated as the Samuel Fitch & Sons Company.

Mr. Fitch was married Jan. 9, 1845, to Miss Mariette Spencer, of Enfield, a daughter of Daniel and Sarah (Parsons) Spencer, born Aug. 31, 1820, who died Nov. 12, 1891, the death of Mr. Fitch taking place June 20, 1896; both now sleep in the beautiful Grove Hill cemetery. The children born of this union were: Spencer S., who resides in Rockville, married Charlotte F. Angell, a native of Trowbridge, England, and has two children, Mariette N. and Walter S.; Sarah E., who married C. H. Strickland, lives in New York, and has three children, Cora E., Grace and Howard; and Fred. H., deceased Dec. 26, 1877, who married Estella Newman, of Tolland, and left three children, two sons and a daughter.

Early in his political career Mr. Fitch was a staunch Whig, but later became an active supporter of Republican principles, and through his public career was ever an active worker for his party, accepting his duties in the Legislature and performing them to the credit of his town and to the benefit of his constituents. Although not a member of the Second Congregational Church, Mr. Fitch was a liberal supporter of it, his wife's connection with it being sufficient to enlist from him a generous interest in its various charities and objects of Christian benevolence.

On Jan. 1, 1872, Mr. Fitch bought from the widow of Stanley White, the ground on Union street where the Fitch Block now stands, and in 1882 began work on the first building, one of wood, and when it was completed it was put in use as a skating rink; in 1887 it was reconstructed as a business block. This was destroyed by fire April 2, 1888, and upon the site was erected the handsome Fitch Block which now adorns the street. Mr. Fitch was one of the most prominent men of the city and most valuable in its industrial development.

DAVID A. GRIGGS, deceased. During life David A. Griggs was one of the leading and highly-respected citizens of Chaplin, Windham county. His ancestry can be traced back as far as that of any family in Windham county, and his maternal grandsire was a soldier in the patriot army during the Revolutionary struggle.

Mr. Griggs was born June 23, 1811, a son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Hewitt) Griggs, a grandson of John and Ruth (Ashley) Griggs, and of Robert Hewitt, and a great-grandson of Nathan Griggs. A family of eleven children was born to his parents.

David A. Griggs was born in Hampton, Conn., and during his minority lived in Hampton, Brooklyn and Pomfret, in Abington Society. At the age of seventeen he united with the Congregational Church at the latter place, but at the age of twenty removed to Chaplin and very soon became associated with the church in that place. From that time he began teaching school during the winter seasons and worked during the summers on his father's farm, until 1837, when he purchased a saw mill, grist mill and shingle mill, which he operated for over a half century.

On retiring from active work, Mr. Griggs removed in 1900 to Chaplin Center, but his residence there was short, his death occurring Nov. 21, 1900. In politics he was formerly a Whig, but from the organization of the Republican party was ever an ardent and active member. In 1841 he was chosen justice of the peace, which office he held until 1881, a period of forty years, when age set a limit to farther service. In 1854 Mr. Griggs was elected a member of the Connecticut Legislature, where his services were of the greatest value to his constituency. Frequently he was chosen to the position of selectman of the town and was especially earnest in the support of the government during the Civil war and was zealous in his efforts to furnish the quota of his town in that eventful crisis. He was a very patriotic man and a personal friend of Gov. Buckingham. He raised many substitutes.

Mr. Griggs was married first March 1, 1837, to Damaris C., a daughter of Chester Storrs, of Chaplin, who died in 1854, leaving two surviving children. Clark Hewitt, born Jan. 27, 1839, was graduated from Amherst College, in 1863, entered government service as hospital steward soon after, underwent a varied experience and later was discharged on account of illness. For a time he engaged in teaching, then entered the Patent office in Washington city as a clerk, and by his ability won rapid preferment. At the date of his death, Nov. 11, 1872, he was filling the responsible position of chief examiner in that bureau. He married Mrs. S. S. Morris, a widow with two children, Emma and Ballard, and three daughters were born to him: Kate P., who married William Robertson, the well-known trick bicycle rider, who is now engaged in the cycle business in Washington, D. C., and who had two children, Hewitt G. and William Wallace; Dora, the wife of Ernest I. Atwood, a traveling salesman who resides at Springfield, Mass., their one child being Elise Lincoln; and Elise Catharine Griggs, who died in childhood. The second child of Mr. Griggs's first marriage was Catherine Ferdon, born June 2, 1847, and the wife of Edgar S. Lincoln, whose biography appears on another page of this volume. The second marriage of Mr. Griggs was to Miss Sarah L. Barrows in 1855, who was a daughter of Phares Barrows, a resident of Mansfield. One child was born of this union, but it did not survive infancy. Mrs. Griggs is still residing in Chaplin, esteemed and highly respected.

DEACON ALLEN TYLER BIXBY. As a maintainer of the honor and enterprise of one of the oldest families of Thompson, Deacon Allen Tyler Bixby occupies a unique and altogether enviable position in the community. A native of the town of Thompson, he was born March 27, 1825, and though at present living retired upon his splendidly cultivated farm, and seventy-eight years of age, his career has been crowded with much worth while, accompanied with unquestioned devotion to the best welfare of his neighbors and friends.

The Bixbys of the old town of Killingly descended from one Joseph Bixby, of Ipswich, Mass., about 1659, who removed to Rowley Village the following year. He served in King Philip's war in 1676, and was made a freeman of Oxford, Mass., in 1689-90. He made an agreement of marriage, Oct. 15, 1647, with Sarah, widow of Luke Heard, then of Salisbury, but formerly of Ipswich; Mrs. Bixby was born a Wyatt. Her death occurred June 3, 1704, while that of Mr. Bixby occurred April 19, 1700. The children of this couple were as follows: Joseph, who married March 29, 1682, Sarah, daughter of John and Sarah Gould, of Topsfield (their children were Sarah, Joseph, Jonathan, George, Daniel, Benjamin, Marcey, and Abigail); Sarah; Nathaniel; Mary; George, the ancestor of the Oxford (Mass.) Bixbys; Jonathan, who married Sarah Smith, of Topsfield, where their descendants lived for many years; Daniel, who married Hannah Chandler, of Andover; and Benjamin, who married his wife Mary in Topsfield, and left many descendants.

There is a family tradition among the Thompson Bixbys to the effect that Daniel, Jacob and Jesse, brothers, came from Topsfield, Mass., to Thompson, and settled at Brandy Hill. From the Larned history of Windham county it appears that Benjamin Bixby, of Topsfield, was doubtless the first resident of Brandy Hill, where he built the house east of the road to Boston in 1719. It is further stated that Jacob Bixby, a nephew of Benjamin, settled north of Quinnotisset Hill between 1721 and 1726. Benjamin Bixby's name appears on record as one of the original members of the Thompson Parish Church organized Jan. 18, 1730, and the name of Jacob Bixby is connected with the same church in 1732.

Daniel Bixby, mentioned above, was the great-grandfather of Allen Tyler Bixby, of Thompson, and his grandfather was Daniel's son, Moses. Daniel and Moses Bixby, of Killingly, served during the Revolution in the 4th Connecticut Regiment, commanded by Col. Durkee, their term of service being from Aug. 16, 1779, to Jan. 15. Moses Bixby's name appears among the United States pensioners of 1832.

Moses Bixby lived on a large farm in the Brandy Hill District of Thompson, where he had large landed possessions, and where he engaged in butchering and stock raising as well as general farming. He was a deacon in the Congregational Church, and a Federalist in politics. His death occurred in 1854, and he is buried in East Thompson cemetery beside his wife, formerly Mary Green, who was born in Thompson, and died on the old homestead. To this couple were born three children: Clara, who died unmarried; Lemuel, who died in Thompson; and Halsey.

Halsey Bixby, son of Moses, was one of the most prominent citizens of Thompson during his day. He was born on a farm, and made farming his life occupation, although he was also an educator, and spent nine winters teaching schools in different parts of Massachusetts. He was a well read man and took much interest in the public schools of his native town. With his brother, Lemuel, he became interested in stock raising and butchering, and this line of business brought in a considerable portion of his revenue. In 1850 he removed to the vicinity of New Boston, Conn., where he purchased a tract of land in the Payne District, near the Woodstock line, upon which his death occurred at the age of eighty years. He was a member of the East Woodstock Congregational Church, in which he was a deacon for a number of years, and in politics he was first a Whig and then a Republican. By his marriage with Esther Tyler, of Thompson, daughter of Rufus Tyler, eight children were born: Allen Tyler; Moses Nelson, deceased in 1900; Albert, who died while young; Loren, who died while young; Henry, who died in Webster; George, now occupying his father's farm; Franklin, an officer of the United States customs department in Boston, an ex-soldier of the Civil war; and Esther, who died young.

Allen Tyler Bixby was born on the old Bixby homestead in Thompson, and was educated in the public schools of Thompson and Webster. When his father left the farm in 1850 he remained, and for more than half a century tilled its broad expanses and raised large numbers of stock, carrying on also a dairy. He has lived on his present place since 1842. He is one of the large land-owners in his part of the county, and pays taxes amounting to a large sum. He has filled many positions of trust in the town, having been selectman, assessor, and representative of Thompson in the Legislature in 1870. He has ever been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and his religious affiliations have been with the Baptist Church, of which he has been a deacon for many years. He has been superintendent of the Thompson Baptist Sunday-school for eighteen years.

On Jan. 1, 1851, Mr. Bixby married Georgiana Rhodes, daughter of Nelson Rhodes, and who died June 11, 1897, deeply regretted by her hosts of devoted friends. She was an admirable woman, and devoted wife and mother. Of the three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bixby, Esther, born Feb. 15, 1856, died Sept. 13, 1883; Cora, born Dec. 6, 1861, who was a teacher, died Feb. 28, 1902; and Herbert A., born June 30, 1868, now operates the homestead. The latter is engaged in farming and dairying, and sends his milk to Boston. Like his father he enjoys an exceptional reputation in the community, where he is valued for his enterprising methods, thrift, and high moral character. He married Oct. 12, 1898, Emma Chappell, born June 17, 1874, daughter of Edward Chappell; before her marriage she was a teacher in the public schools of Thompson and Rockville.

THEODORE HULBURT, one of the prominent and respected citizens of Somers, Tolland county, descends from an old Somers family.

Job Hulburt, the grandfather of Theodore, was a farmer and shoemaker, and had his residence but a short distance from the present home of his grandson. A hardworking and upright man, he died Jan. 11, 1826, at the age of seventy-six, being interred in the West cemetery, at Somers. In ordinary circumstances, he had high ambitions for his family. He married Dorcas, a daughter of Hezekiah and Mary (Root) Spencer, of Somers, who were married in 1739. She died in 1822, and was buried in the West cemetery. To them were born: Job; Justin, who married a Miss Gleason, and died in Somers; Dorcas, who died unmarried; Timothy, who married Dorothy (Dolly) Pease, and was a farmer in Somers; Chauncey, who married Ruby Pease a sister of Dorothy.

Capt. Job Hulburt, father of Theodore, was born in Somers in August, 1781, near the present home of Theodore, and received somewhat meagre educational advantages. He was reared mainly to hard farm work. At that time shoemaking was a popular trade in Somers, and while still a boy he began to learn the trade. In after years he made many boots and shoes for the Enfield Shakers. His shop was located in his house after his marriage, and this trade he combined with farming the rest of his active life. He lived to be over ninety years old. He died Feb. 24, 1872. For two terms he represented Somers in the General Assembly. In early life he was a Whig and then became a Republican. For many years he was a captain in the old Floodwood militia. Mrs. Hulburt was a member of the Congregational Church, and he was associated with that body.

Hulburt married Lucinda, a daughter of Dea. Jabez Collins, one of the prominent citizens, who lived to be ninety-five. Mrs. Hulburt died April 17, 1863, at the age of seventy-four. It is said she appeared to be as young as her daughters at the time of her death. To Capt. and Mrs. Hulburt were born: Alpheus C., who married Lucinda Williams, was a farmer and died in Somers; Mary, married to C. Backus Pomeroy, a farmer; Lucinda, who married William Spears, lived for a time in Ellington, and later moved to Genesee county, N. Y., where both died; Henry, who married Emaline Fields, and lived in Somers, where he died; Benjamin Franklin, who married Cornelia Farmer, and resided in Hartford, where he was a tobacco merchant; twins, who died young; James, a farmer, who married Laurana Lathrop, and on her death was married in 1856 to a second wife, Dimmis Georgiana Hinckley, of Belcherton, Mass.; Job, Jr., a farmer, who married Eunice Brace, on her death married Jane Simonds, and died in Somers; Theodore; William, a teamster, who was drowned in the Connecticut river near the Enfield bridge; Emaline C., a twin to William, who married Frank D. Chaffee, of Wilbraham, Mass., and died in Springfield, Mass., where he was engaged in business as a carpenter; Edwin, who married Henrietta Walker, and lived on the homestead, where he died in early life.

Theodore Hulburt was born Dec. 26, 1824, in the old house still standing about a quarter of a mile east of his present home, and was early set to work. When he was eight years old he went to live with his brother Alpheus, but only remained with him a year, making his home for the three ensuing years with his uncle, C. Backus Pomeroy. When he was sixteen he finished his schooling, having attended only the winter term some eight years. When he was thirteen years old he cut, raked, bound, and set up an acre of rye, and was done before six o'clock in the evening, showing his strength and ability as a farmer at that early age. At the present time he still retains that strength and ability as a mower that has marked him all through his life.

When Mr. Hulburt was fifteen he hired out for seven months at $65 for the season, and did all manner of farm work. The two following summers he was employed by Oliver Pease, the first summer at $9.50 a month, and the second at $12. Still later he worked for Elijah Billings, a farmer on Hall Hill, where he often put in fifteen hours a day. For a time he was a teamster and an employee in the tannery of the Ninth district of Somers. The output of the tannery was sent to Hartford, Springfield, and other points, and he was one of the teamsters employed in that service.

When Mr. Hulburt was twenty-two he took a farm on Hall Hill on shares with Parsons Hall, which he bought the following year, incurring a heavy debt. The next year he was married and settled on the farm. For thirteen years he successfully engaged in farming. When he received a proposition of selling the farm at a good profit over its cost he did not hesitate to accept it. In 1861 he bought a tract of fifty acres, a part of his present farm, of Daniel Webster, then warden of the State prison. At the present time his farm consists of 100 acres, which he has extensively and thoroughly improved. His years there he has spent in general farming, buying and selling of stock, and the handling of tobacco.

Mr. Hulburt was married March 28, 1848, to Florilla Gowdy, who was born Nov. 7, 1829, a daughter of William and Mary (Eaton) Gowdy. She was a noble hearted woman, a devoted wife and mother, and died Nov. 1, 1899, her remains being laid to rest in the West cemetery at Somers. Their oldest child, (1) Celia, born Jan. 24, 1852, married B. Franklin Wardwell, Sept. 24, 1878, and died March 24, 1880, leaving one child, Celia H., who was born Feb. 6, 1880, and now resides with her grandfather. (2) Edwin T., born April 14, 1856, was married Jan. 16, 1879, to Ida E. Prevost, and is engaged in farming the home place. He has the following family: Alice M., born March 17, 1881; Grace B., July 14, 1885; Flora C., Dec. 26, 1889; Theodore J., July 20, 1892. (3) Hattie C., born March 10, 1859, married Gabriel A. Armstrong, July 28, 1886; Mr. Armstrong is a well-known hotel man, who has a summer hotel at Avalon, N. J., and a winter hotel in Philadelphia; they have had Hulburt A., born Jan. 29, 1896, and Edward G., born Sept. 20, 1897. (4) Gertie I., born Sept. 25, 1869, was married Aug. 23, 1893, to Charles W. Pendleton, who died Feb. 19, 1895.

Mr. Hulburt is a Democrat, but believes in selecting the best man for public position. For two years he served on the board of selectmen. He attends the Congregational Church, and his wife was a devoted member of the Methodist Church. Many years ago, as no undertaker was near, Mr. Hulburt was called upon to prepare bodies for burial. He is thoroughly self-made and successful, and he has many friends in the community, where he is known as "Uncle Theodore."

Frank D. Chaffee, who married Emaline C. Hulburt, sister of Theodore, lived in Haddam, Stafford, Somers, Springfield, Mass., and Albany, N. Y. He served in the Civil war three and one-half years in the 11th C. V. I., Co. B. While he was away his family lived in Somers, Conn. He was engaged in railroad work.

Frank W. Chaffee, son of Frank D. Chaffee, born Dec. 17, 1850, in Springfield, Mass., has been a railroad man for many years. He began with the Connecticut River Railroad, and then went to the Wason Manufacturing Company of Brightwood; then he became general foreman of the Boston and Albany shops at Springfield, where he remained eight years. Then about 1881 he took a position in Baltimore with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, where he continued some three years as general foreman of the passenger and freight work at Camden Station, near Baltimore.

After leaving the latter place he located in Albany with the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, where he was general foreman of the car department. His next place of service was at the Albany Railroad shops, where he remained for nine years, when he was appointed superintendent of the car department, which place he held for seven years, afterwards becoming general car inspector for the entire New York system of the road, which position he still holds, with headquarters at Albany.

Mr. Chaffee was married May 22, 1872, to Elizabeth A. James, daughter of William and Ellen (Hollister) James of Springfield, Massachusetts.

COL. FRANCIS McLEAN was a son of Alexander, who was born July 18, 1747, and married Johannah Smith, of North Bolton, now known as Vernon, in 1768. For a few years they lived in North Bolton, and then removed to the Wheaton place in Vernon, where their lives were spent. Their children were: Mary, Francis, Allen, Mary (2), and Rosannah.

Alexander McLean was a hardworking and ambitious man, devoted to his business, and reared his children after the strict fashion of the times. In 1765 he united with the church. In the spring of 1789 he removed to the old red house which occupied the site of the present residence of Aaron Kellogg, and in 1793 he built the new house opposite, which was used for many years as an orphan asylum. A temporary home for dependent children, which was completed in 1900, now occupies the site of this ancient landmark. Alexander McLean was an industrious farmer and is said to have taken more timber to Hartford than any other man of his time. His death, which occurred June 30, 1806, is recorded as having been very sudden, and he was buried in the old burying ground. Johannah, his wife, died in the family of her son, Francis, May 29, 1822, at the age of seventy-five years. Susannah, a sister of Alexander, born Sept. 21, 1751, married David Dorchester, and lived at what is now Dobsonville, where she became a widow. Elijah King, her second husband, was a farmer in the eastern part of Vernon, where she died March 5, 1815.

Col. Francis McLean was born in South Bolton, Sept. 26, 1777. When quite young he accompanied his parents to Wheaton Place, Vernon. When about thirteen years old he attended a school taught by Abner Reed, in the old school house on the hill, where the catechism was recited by the whole school every Saturday when the lessons were finished. In 1794 he taught school, and Feb. 10, 1800, was married to Roxey McKinney, a daughter of James McKinney, of Ellington. In March, 1821, he bought most of the land which is now Rockville of the heirs of Deacons Hall, Brockway nd Wills, and the following month built the first atory in Rockville, for the purpose of making atinet. The second mill was also named by him rom his own name, and was called the "Frank Mill." George Kellogg began with him and Ralph Talcott, as the three owners of the last named mill, ut he was the sole agent. The paper mill was uilt in 1833. For a number of years he provided or the boarding houses connected with the mills. n 1840 he gave up the agency of the paper mill, n which by its failure in 1837 he lost more than $13,000. He surveyed and laid out the road to Ellington, straightened the road from Ellington to Vernon, and laid out the road from Vernon to the county line. In 1805 he built a grist mill and a saw mill, which he moved to Phenix village, and sold for $3,000, when he began his factory at "Old Rock." He was also engaged with Col. Lebbeus Tinker and Alonzo Bailey in carrying on a woolen mill at the Bark Mill pond. Before that he had been interested in a cotton mill at Talcottville.

Francis McLean became connected with the militia service when he was eighteen years old, and rose from one grade to another until he became colonel. His services were efficient and in the highest degree creditable. In the panic of 1837 he lost many thousand dollars by signing notes for others, but he stood up under the tremendous strain and came through with flying colors. In 1858 he united with the church. In 1848 he sold his homestead to his son Francis, and built the first house west of the church. Col. McLean was very active in building up the school system and establishing the high school. The maple trees around the school house at Vernon Center were set out by him. He had six children by his first wife, all of whom have passed away. Sarah B. Childs, his second wife, was born at Barre, Mass., and became the mother of seven children. Of these, three are yet living: Roxey, now widow of Dr. Francis L. Dickinson, residing in Rockville; Mary, Mrs. Jacob Hardy, of Berkeley, California; John Hall, of San Francisco, unmarried.

Col. McLean was a man of strong character, keen integrity, and a generous heart. He reared thirteen children of his own, and gave a home to many a struggling and ambitious youth. Continuing in active business life until he was seventy-seven years of age, he had much to do with the affairs of his region, and is remembered as one of the best and noblest men of the last generation.

EDWARD EVERETT BUTTERFIELD, who was born in Springfield, Mass., April 18, 1831, is a son of Jonas Butterfield, who was born in Syracuse, N. Y., in 1790, and died in Springfield, Mass., Aug. 7, 1852.

For forty years Jonas Butterfield was connected with the Springfield armory, and was employed the most of that long period in the filing department. In Springfield he cleared the pine timber from a lot near the armory, and built him a home on East State street. An old-line Whig, he never was an office seeker. In religion he was a devoted and active member of the Congregational Church. In 1814 he was married to Miss Anna McQuivey, of Springfield, a daughter of Solomon McQuivey. To this union were born: Ann, who died when two years of age; James, who was born in 1816; Julia, born in 1818; Oliver, 1820; William Harvey, 1824; Persis, 1822; Henry, 1826; Mary Louise, 1829; Edward E., 1831.

Jeremiah Butterfield was the grandfather of Edward Everett.

Edward Everett Butterfield received his education in the public schools of his native town, and at sixteen years of age became a newsboy on the train of the Boston and Albany Road, which ran between Springfield and Worcester, making the trip four times a day. After a year at this kind of work, he gave it up, and going to Ware, Mass., secured a position as stage driver on a line from West Bromfield, to Amherst, Mass., making a trip of twenty-seven miles daily. This was before the day of railroads, and he was engaged on the stage for three years. In April, 1851, Mr. Butterfield became the driver of a four-horse team between Staffordville and Stafford Springs,, and thence to Hartford, carrying freight for Arba G. Hyde, at which he worked two years, and then, after spending a year in a machine shop, entered the teaming business, buying the outfit and good will of Jasper Spellman, and built up a considerable trade between Staffordville and Stafford Springs, having Wilson Ferry for a partner, under the firm name of Ferry & Butterfield. The two continued together for a year, when Mr. Butterfield bought out his partner, and became the sole proprietor of the business. He conducted it for some fifteen years, when he sold it to Oscar Marcy. Mr. Butterfield took a position with the New London and Northern Railroad Company, as purchasing agent, having his headquarters at Stafford Springs. For some fifteen years he held this position with the Company, purchasing wood, ties, timber, and passed on all claims against the road.

Mr. Butterfield in 1886 set up in the wood business for himself, and furnished finished lumber, having a planing mill which is now operated by his two sons, who do custom work only. In this enterprise a large success crowned his industry. A steam planing-mill was put in operation when they rebuilt about 1889. Mr. Butterfield and his family were living in rooms over the First National Bank, when the memorable flood of 1877 poured down the valley, and swept away all their household effects.

Mr. Butterfield belongs to Wolcott Lodge, F. & A. M., of Stafford Hollow, of which he is now past master. He is a charter member of Orient Chapter, No. 42, R. A. M., of Stafford. He is a member of the Universalist Church at Stafford Hollow, where his wife also finds her religious home. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, and for twenty-six years was moderator at the town meeting. He has also been a member of the board of burgesses, where he served on the committee on Roads. Though he has been solicited to take office many times he has not usually accepted, although he has been constable and assessor.

Mr. Butterfield was married March 18, 1852, to Lura Foscitt. She was born Nov. 25, 1834, a daughter of Dwight and Lurancy (Nelson) Foscitt, of Wales, Mass., where her father was a farmer and a shoemaker. To this union were born: Clara J., born Jan. 15, 1853, who married Irving Grant, of Staffordville, and is now a widow, making her home with her father; Ella, born March 7, 1855, who died Oct. 28, of the same year; Charles Edward, born Oct. 1, 1856, who married Anna Clara Smith, a daughter of William Smith; Frank Dwight, born Oct. 28, 1861, who married Hattie Willis, and is now dead.

Mr. Butterfield has a home on East street, where he and his family are very comfortably situated.

DUTEE SMITH. The death of Dutee Smith, Oct. 20, 1898, removed from Putnam, Windham county, a citizen who for a number of years had been prominent in its busy life, and a man whose liberal generosity, kindness of heart and cheerful manner had attached to him more than the ordinary number of personal friends.

Mr. Smith was a genuine child of Rhode Island, proud through life of his brave little State and an exemplar of all that is distinctive and dominant in the influences there. His ancestral line includes a number of notable names, a leading one being Gov. Dutee Smith.

Seneca Smith, the father of the late Dutee Smith, of Putnam, was born March 1, 1796, son of Dutee and Huldah (Mowry) Smith, who were married in 1789, the former being a son of Daniel Smith and the latter a daughter of Stephen Mowry, of Smithfield. The children born to Dutee and Huldah Smith were: Lucina, born Oct. 28, 1789, deceased April 28, 1790; Dennis, born in Smithfield, R. I., March 25, 1792, deceased March 25, 1795; Alvah, born in Gloucester, June 15, 1794; Seneca; Mowry, born in Gloucester, Aug. 12, 1798; and Huldah Mowry, born March 21, 1801.

Dutee Smith was born March 13, 1825, in Burrillville, R. I., son of Seneca and Nancy (Hunt) Smith, and acquired his education in the schools of his native place. According to the general rule he learned a trade as soon as his school days were over, selecting that of butcher, which he followed for a number of years. After his location in Putnam he successfully carried on a meat business for some time, being a man who possessed those requisites which in almost any line of endeavor prove successful. For a period of eight years he conducted the "Elm Street Hotel," making it one of the most popular inns in that vicinity. The family still owns this property, although Mr. Smith sold the business in 1888. In association with his son, Luther, Mr. Smith conducted the New York branch grocery for five years, closing the business at the end of that period. He accumulated large means and was generous in its disposal, his kind heart and charitable disposition recognizing claims when many others would have passed them by. He attended the Universalist Church and gave generously to that organization, although he by no means confined his benevolences to it.

In political life, Mr. Smith was identified with the Republican party, and took a very active part in its councils. He served the town very acceptably as selectman, fire warden and as a member of the school committee. Mr. Smith was prominent in Masonic circles.

Mr. Smith was married (first) to Eliza J. Dudley, who died in 1867, in Douglass, Mass., where the family was then living, Mr. Smith at that time conducting a farm in that locality. The three children of this union were: Luella and Clara, both of whom are married and living in Boston, Mass.; and George, who died young. Mr. Smith was married (second) June 20, 1868, to Miss Maggie F. Small, daughter of Abner L. and Laura F. (Wixon) Small, of Harwichport, Mass., where Mr. Small followed the trade of sailmaker. The eldest son, Luther G., born April 29, 1869, passed out of life at the early age of twenty-five years, a young man of brilliant prospects and most estimable qualities. He married Miss Anna Lepriz and she, with three children, survives him. For a number of years he was his father's capable partner in business. Dutee Roy, the second son, born Feb. 4, 1873, married Mabel B. Moore, of Alston, Mass., and is a practicing attorney in Boston; Charles A. and Bessie May both died in early childhood, the former at the age of eight months and the latter when three and one-half years old.

Mrs. Smith has been sadly bereaved in the loss of her dear ones, but may take a measure of comfort in remembering the esteem in which they were held. Mr. Smith was an exceedingly able man and in his business life in Putnam displayed not only ability but built up a reputation for integrity as well. Popular with all classes, his most lovable characteristics were shown to those who knew him best and who with affection recall his kindness and charity of thought and deed and his great consideration for others, even in his last sickness. Mr. Smith will long be remembered in Putnam.

NATHANIEL ROOT GRANT. In 1726 Samuel Grant wisely purchased a large extent of land from the town of Bolton, Conn., a portion of which is located on the corner of Union and West streets, in the present city of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn. Since that time, this land has been in the possession of the family, the original deed being in the possession of Nathaniel R. Grant, whose comfortable home is the third house built upon the site since the erection of the log cabin in 1726. The main portion of the residence was built by Ozias Grant, the great-grandfather, and June 8, 1812, Francis Grant, his son, became its owner; April 18, 1849, it passed into the possession of his son, Harlow, and in 1861, it was purchased by Nathaniel R.

Nathaniel R. Grant was born March 20, 1836, in Rockville, in the old family home, a son of Harlow K. and Emily Ann (Rathburn) Grant. N. R. Grant was an infant of but three months when a family removal was made to the State of New York, a distance of 400 miles, the journey being made by teams, after the manner of travel in those days. The first school he attended was in Allegany county, N. Y., where his parents settled, but before he had entered his 'teens his grandfather desired the return of the family to the old homestead, and they went back to Rockville. There Nathaniel was taught the elements of arithmetic, reading, spelling and geography, his opportunities being confined to those studies, which were very thoroughly taught, some of the most brilliant and successful men of the country having received their only instruction in just such schools. Reared a farmer boy, responsibilities were early placed upon his shoulders, and as his father died when he was but eighteen years old, these probably had much influence in maturing his character. April 6, 1859, he was married to Miss Agnes Susan Anderson, in Thompsonville, born March 4, 1837, the daughter of William and Susan (Reed) Anderson, the former of whom was employed in the dye house of the Hartford Carpet Company, at Thompsonville, Conn. The mother of Mrs. Grant died when she was but four years old, and when she was six years of age she went to live in the family of Rev. James Ely, of Bolton, Conn.; she was one of four children, the others being: Margaret, who lives in Johnsonburg, Pa.; Jane, the widow of John Reed, of Wapping, Conn.; and William, who died when a young man. Mrs. Grant was the youngest; her father had come to America from Scotland in youth, as had her mother; and they married in America.

There were three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Grant. (1) Frank Harlow, born in 1864, in 1885 married in Rockville Nellie Lydia McPherson, born in 1866, a daughter of John and Emma (Bilson) McPherson; she died in 1893 leaving two children, Bernice Louise and Nellie Agnes. His second marriage was to Agnes Eva McGregor, nee Rheel, a native of Pittsfield, Mass., daughter of Henry William and Mary Jane (Smith) Rheel, by whom he has had one child, Harlow Rheel. He is a farmer and lives on Union street. (2) Mary Louise, born in 1867, married in 1895 Frank Herbert Potter, and resides in Glastonbury, Conn., with four children, Hazel Hay, Lilian Agnes, Ethel Belle and Henry Newton. (3) Lilla Belle, born in 1871, married in 1893 Wallace Erskine Strong, and resides in Rockville. Mr. and Mrs. Strong have an adopted son, Clifton Emerson Strong, born July 6, 1896, in New Britain.

When Mr. Grant cast his first vote it was for Abraham Lincoln, and ever since he has been a staunch Republican and has efficiently served city and town in many positions, three terms as selectman, two years as superintendent of streets, and three years as a member of the school committee. Both he and his excellent wife are valued members of the Baptist Church, and Mr. Grant belongs to the Ellington Grange.

Mr. Grant is one of the oldest native-born citizens of Rockville, and is of a type which would do credit to any community.

CHAUNCEY WINCHELL, Jr. One of the old and reliable citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., who has watched the rapid growth of that industrial city from infancy and has grown with its progress into one of its most substantial citizens, is Chauncey Winchell, Jr., the subject of this review. The father, Chauncey Winchell, Sr., in fully mentioned elsewhere in this volume.

Chauncey Winchell, Jr., was born May 15, 1825, in Vernon, Conn., and was four years old when his parents, Chauncey and Mary (Vibberts) Winchell, came to Rockville. His early schooling was received under Miss Nash, and when he had graduated from her instruction, he entered Ellington Academy, when the well remembered teachers Merrill and Russ were employed there. At the age of seventeen he left school, to enter the Springville mill, beginning a service there which lasted for forty-four years. Beginning at the bottom, where the boys receive $5.00 per month for "tending cards," he gradually rose through the grades of carding, spinning, etc., until he had reached the highest position, his whole interest being centered in the Springville mill. Scarcely leaving it during his long term of service, it was something of a wrench when advancing years advised him to lay aside business cares, and resign his old position to other hands.

The first marriage of Mr. Winchell was in 1848, in Coventry, Conn., to Miss Catherine Haskins, of Manchester, Conn., and one child was born of this union, Henry, now a resident of Rockville. This wife died in Rockville, and in 1853, in Warehouse Point, Conn., Mr. Winchell married Miss Almira Phelps, who was born Aug. 9, 1832, in Mansfield, Conn., a daughter of Daniel and Maria (Owen) Phelps. When sixteen years old, Miss Phelps had gone to Warehouse Point and worked in what was then the Sexton mill. Her father was a blacksmith by trade, who was born in Mansfield, but died at Warehouse Point, his wife only surviving him a short time. Mrs. Winchell is the sixth child and second daughter in the family of her parents, the other children being: John, Charles, Amelia, Alvin, Harvey, Almira, William, Frank, Halsey, and Jane. Halsey was a soldier in the Civil war and gave up his life for his country; John also was a soldier. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Winchell are: Lizzie J., now Mrs. George G. Smith, who resides on Elm street, in Rockville, and has a sketch csewhere in this work; and Frank V., who married Rose Becker, and resides in Rockville.

Mr. Winchell's first home was on West Main street, but later he removed to what is now Orchard street, and in 1882 he built his excellent house on the corner of Orchard and Village streets, where he has since resided, enjoying the fruits of long years of conscientious and painstaking work.

Although a staunch Republican, Mr. Winchell is not a politician in the accepted meaning of the term, but always casts his vote and desires the success of his party. Since 1886 he has lived somewhat in retirement, and is known as one of the substantial old citizens, highly respected in every walk of life.

RUFUS D. CURTIS, one of the prominent residents of Killingly, Windham county, an honored survivor of the Civil war, and a useful and esteemed citizen, has been a resident of that part of Connecticut for the past half-century, although he comes of New York ancestry.

Chester Curtis, the grandfather, was a native of New York, and there grew to manhood and married Lodica Cady. He followed farming as an occupation, but died before he reached middle life. His children were as follows: Chester, who married, moved West and there reared a family; Playman, who married Phila Backus, of Chaplin, Conn., also moved West and died there; Norman, the father of Rufus D.; Chauncy, a teacher in Brooklyn, Conn., for many years, who married Polly Adams, later also located in the West, and became mayor of Grand Rapids; and Phoebe, the one daughter, who married Dyer Downing and, like her husband, died in Brooklyn, Conn. All of the family were born in New York. The widow of Chester Curtis, Sr., married (second) a Mr. Brann and lived to the advanced age of 101 years.

Norman Curtis, the father of Rufus D., was born in 1794 in the State of New York, and after the death of his father, accompanied the family to Brooklyn, Conn. During a short residence in Mansfield, Conn., he married Margaret Greenman, a native of Wakefield, R. I., daughter of John and Annie (Allen) Greenman, an old family of prominence in Rhode Island. John Greenman served in the Revolutionary army and after his death, at the age of seventy-five years, his widow drew a pension. She lived to the great age of 101 years and six months. They lived for a time at Lebanon, Conn., but later moved to Mansfield, where Mr. Greenman became an extensive farmer and large ship owner.

Soon after his marriage, Norman Curtis moved to Brooklyn, Conn., where he bought a farm in the west part of the town and as he was a blacksmith by trade, he combined the work of the smithy with that of the farm. With the exception of a short time in Ashford and Killingly, Mr. Curtis spent his whole life on this farm, his death occurring in April, 1867, at the age of seventy-three years. In politics he was a Democrat. He possessed the respect and confidence of his friends and was an honest and useful citizen. His children were: (1) John G., a farmer, who resided in Pomfret, Conn., married Ann Card and had these children, George D., Rufus Alexander, Abby, Sarah and John W., a carriage manufacturer of Ansonia, Conn.; (2) Eliza Ann, deceased, who married John Kelley, and lived in Killingly; (3) Rufus Demick, of Killingly; (4) Mary Jane, deceased, wife of Stephen Arnold, of Chestnut Hill, who left children, William H. and Charles E., of Walpole, Mass.; (5) William W., who married Sarah Goodwin, of Maine, resides in Augusta, Me., is a farmer, formerly a manufacturer, and has one surviving son, William, George and Charles being deceased; (6) Christopher, deceased, who lived in Killingly and died in Washington, D. C., from wounds received during his service in the 21st. Mass. Reg., during the Civil war, a brave and gallant soldier, who married Orilla Luce, and whose children died young; and (7) George, deceased, who lived in New London, Conn., and married Laura Brewster, of Norwich, Connecticut.

Rufus D. Curtis was born March 9, 1824, in Ashford, Conn. Until he was six years of age he lived in Brooklyn, Conn., his parents having moved there in his infancy, but when he was seven years old he went with his parents to Willimantic to work in a factory. There and in Killingly, whither his parents later removed, he attended school for three months each year until he was seventeen years of age. Thus his education was limited, but he was ambitious and industrious and possessed of great natural intelligence, so that there are few better informed men in his locality than Mr. Curtis. A busy life and association with men, wide reading and many experiences, have been better teachers than the schools of his youth. Until 1858 Mr. Curtis continued at mill work, being much of the time engaged at this business in Putnam and Killingly, and his skill and faithful service advanced him to the position of boss of many operatives in the Wilkinson & Fisher mill in Pomfret and Thompson at that time.

In 1858 Mr. Curtis was given charge of work at Attawaugan, town of Killingly, and for a time was boss farmer and had charge of the letting of the tenements, etc. In 1860 he purchased a tract of seventeen acres of good land near Dayville, built there a comfortable residence and made it the family home. Since that time he has added to his holdings until he now owns some fifty-two acres and in addition has built a number of excellent tenant houses, which he readily rents to operatives in the Attawaugan mill. Mr. Curtis calls himself a farmer, but the management and care of his property, looking after his rents, etc., would be considered enough business for any one less active than Mr. Curtis.

On Aug. 1, 1862, Mr. Curtis enlisted for the defense of his country, entering Co. K, 18th Conn. Reg., and after experiencing some of the worst hardships of a soldier's life, he was honorably discharged Sep. 23, 1865. During his first year in the service, Mr. Curtis' regiment was used for guard duty, but after that it took part in some of the most serious battles of the war. Mr. Curtis participated in the battles of Winchester, Cedar Creek, Lookout Mountain and Piedmont, and it was in the last named battle that he was wounded in the right leg by the explosion of a shell, and was also taken prisoner. His captors conveyed him first to Staunton, W. Va., thence to Richmond, where he was confined in Libby Prison for ninety-seven days, at the end of that time being paroled. He was then sent to Annapolis, Md., and was given a furlough. The wound from which Mr. Curtis suffered necessitated an amputation, which, with untold suffering, had to be twice afterward repeated. For two years it was impossible for this brave soldier to engage in any active work, but he finally began dairy farming and for thirty-five years successfully conducted a milk route which he has only recently discontinued. Although vigorous both in mind and body, Mr. Curtis is now contemplating a more restful future. His record as a brave and efficient soldier reflects honor upon him and he is one of the most respected citizens of the community.

On March 5, 1848, in Brooklyn, Conn., Mr. Curtis was married to Lydia A. Phillips, born in Providence, R. I., a daughter of Gardiner and Mary Ann (Davis) Phillips, granddaughter of Richard and Elizabeth (Parker) Phillips, born Jan. 29, 1828. To Mr. and Mrs. Curtis were born nine children: (1) Emma Josephine, born Sept. 2, 1849, was educated in the Killingly high school, taught for some time in Woodstock Academy, and is now a teacher in New York City. She married G. Irving Hopkins and has one son, John Carver, born June 8, 1875. (2) Anna R., born Sept. 16, 1851, died Oct. 1, 1864. (3) Janette Phillips, born Aug. 12, 1853, in Plainfield, Conn., married (first) Edwin W. Talbott, of Brooklyn, Conn., who died Dec. 2, 1879, in Exeter, N. H., where they had lived a few years. Her three daughters by her first marriage are: Mary F., born Oct. 21, 1872; Janette P., born Aug. 20, 1875, and Ethel W., born July 14, 1877. She married (second) John W. Emerson and they live in Kingman, Ariz. (4) Ida Isabelle, born Sept. 6, 1855, in Thompson, Conn., resides at home. She was a student at the Musical Conservatory at Boston. (5) Estelle, born Nov. 23, 1857, was a student of the Killingly high school, and is a teacher. (6) James D., born March 26, 1860, in Killingly, died at the age of four months. (7) Lena Frances, born Nov. 2, 1861, in Killingly, taught in Brooklyn, Conn., nine years, and in Wauregan. She married George Tripp and has two children: Lucy Estelle, born Feb. 10, 1889; and Lena Phillips, born July 3, 1890. (8) Lewis Lincoln Grant, born April 14, 1866, in Killingly, attended the Killingly high school and Phillips Exeter Academy at Exeter, N. H., where he graduated in 1889. He is now a mail agent, residing at New London, Conn. He married Oct. 18, 1893, Charlotte Kenworthy and their one daughter Dorothy Mildred was born June 10, 1894. (9) Fred W., born July 12, 1868, died Sept. 2, 1870.

Mr. Curtis through a long and active life has taken a deep interest in men and events and has long been identified with the Republican party. Mr. Curtis has reared a large and creditable family and has given them every educational opportunity within his power. Possessed of strong convictions and most excellent judgment he has made himself known to a wide circle. His interests in local improvements and enterprises has been marked.

In her married life Mrs. Curtis has been a most efficient helpmeet of her husband. During the Civil war she faithfully nurtured and reared her children, and in their hearts has a place most sacred to them.

ASA GOODWIN JACOBS (deceased), a retired merchant of Rockville, Tolland county, was one of the oldest citizens of the town, and notwithstanding his great age, which almost reached the ninety-year mark, was remarkably well preserved to the end, with a clear mind and elastic step. Mr. Jacobs was one of those old-fashioned gentlemen, with clear and positive moral ideas and standards of right and honor which are somehow counted obsolete in the present day, and was a type of a citizen that is far away in the past, to whom conscience and right were more than trade and dollars. His long life was marked by the radiation of the best influence. From childhood he had to fight the battle of life and was furnished with but a meagre education. Yet a strong moral character, a quick and observing ear, a retentive memory and a strong will pushed him far to the front. When but a young man, hardly yet of age, he united with the church, and all his life confessed the power of a strong religious character. He was a dutiful child, and his gratitude towards his parents was shown in marked and characteristic ways. His parents had fourteen children, and at the time of his death, March 16, 1902, he was the only survivor, his brother Oliver P., ten years his junior, who died in 1883, being the last of the family to linger with him.

Mr. Jacobs was born May 31, 1812, in the town of Mansfield, Conn., and was a son of Benjamin and Lucinda (Meacham) Jacobs. The father was a native of Mansfield, lived to be about seventy-five years of age, and died in Smithfield, R. I. He was the only child of his father's first wife, was engaged in business as a plow maker, and also followed the trade of chair making, as the demands of the neighborhood might call upon him. When not otherwise occupied, he worked at the repairing of buildings, and was in fact a natural mechanic, ready to turn his hand to almost anything. When he became a man he was twice married, and each wife bore him children. The mother of Asa Goodwin was his second wife, and she long survived her husband, dying in what is now Danielson, Connecticut.

Asa Goodwin Jacobs had a varied and eventful career, but one which grandly revealed his powers of mind and heart. Beginning with but a limited education, perhaps not to exceed a year in his entire life, he was put to work when a small boy. He was reared in his native town until he reached the age of nineteen years. The first factory ever put up in Willimantic was erected when he was a lad of seven or eight years, and his father worked in its construction in the town of Windham. Asa G. found employment in a mill where cotton yarn was made which was given out to private families to be woven. His first work was to put the yarn on an apron, which fed it in to the carding machine, and he was employed in two mills before taking up his trade in the year that he became sixteen. That year he applied himself to the tanner, currier and shoemaker trade, under Lewis Tinker, of Mansfield. The first year he had $25, the second year, $35, and the third, $50. When he had learned his trade, he worked among the farmers as a journeyman shoemaker, going from house to house, and doing the entire work for large families. He did not continue at this any length of time however, but engaged with Walter Edwards, of Berlin, Conn., who made a specialty of fine shoes for the southern trade. At this work Mr. Jacobs became very expert, and though he began at $10 a month, he soon received large wages, and was noted as the most expert workman in the factory. After several years in Berlin he came back to Mansfield, where he bought himself a house, and was married. In these years he was practically the entire support of his parents. For a short time he was at Lebanon, and then spent some time at Forest Lake, Pa., looking up a location, his wife meantime remaining with her parents, at whose desire he abandoned his proposed location in Pennsylvania.

Returning to this State, Mr. Jacobs located at Lebanon, and entered into business for himself as the proprietor and manager of a shoe factory, after the fashion of the times. Lebanon did not prove a satisfactory location, and after making extensive investigations, and receiving a very flattering proposition from Rockville, which his limited means did not allow him to consider, he bought fifteen acres of land near Tolland Center, and there he built a house and barn and presently began the manufacture of shoes, employing several men and selling his product in the city of New York. This business was not long continued, however, as his health broke down under the strain and compelled him to seek out-of-door work. He accordingly went on the road, and peddled dry goods, ladies' and children's shoes and notions, and in later years opened a store in Stafford Springs, being in the mercantile business for about five years. At the expiration of that time he came back to Tolland, where he yet retained his property and had bought thirty acres more, and made his home there some years; later, he sold it, and bought a shoe store in Willimantic, which he held in his possession for a short time only, when he sold it also. Jan. 1, 1867, he established himself as a shoe merchant in Rockville, and for sixteen years he had a very successful business in that city. In 1891 he sold out and retired from business. From that time to his death he took that ease and comfort that rightfully follow a long and well spent life.

Mr. Jacobs was married May 12, 1835, to Miss Laura Clark, of Lebanon, Conn., the daughter of Nathan and Anna (Goodwin) Clark. Mrs. Jacobs died Nov. 24, 1889, after over fifty-four years of married life, in which she displayed christian virtues of high order. She died in Rockville, at the age of seventy-six years. The present Mrs. Jacobs was born in Bolton, Vt., and was a Miss Betsy R. Joslen, a daughter of Samuel and Betsy (Palmer) Joslen, to whom she was born Aug. 8, 1830. Her parents left Vermont and removed to New York when she was young. In her maturer life she had her home in Rockville for many years. She is a member of the Methodist Church, to which Mr. Jacobs was admitted when he was a young man in Tolland. He was class leader and steward, and in Rockville his interest in the work of the church was profound. He was on the board of trustees, and in his earlier years was steward.

Mr. Jacobs made his home on Brooklyn street, at the corner of Jacobs street, named in honor of him. This property he improved extensively and it was there that he died. He was buried in Tolland, Conn. In his earlier life Mr. Jacobs voted the Democratic ticket, but at the beginning of the controversy over the Missouri Compromise he left that party. At the organization of the Republican party, he became a Republican, and continued with it till his death.

Mr. Jacobs was named after Jonathan Goodwin, for twenty years a noted clergyman of the Baptist church, and pastor of the church at Mansfield.

JOSEPH OCTAVE BLANCHETTE, one of the foremost business men of Willimantic, is one of the leading French citizens of that place. He was born in St. Charles, Canada, Oct. 16, 1850, a son of Ansaibe and Felecet (Robarge) Blanchette. The Blanchette family is an old one in that part of Canada, and its representatives have been conspicuous for several generations in local and general affairs.

Joseph Octave Blanchette

Ansaibe Blanchette was a school teacher in Canada, and was a man of great learning. In 1867 he brought his family to Connecticut, and settled in Putnam, where he taught French in the local schools. From Putnam he moved to Moosup, then to Wauregan, and still later to Danielson, where he died at the age of sixty-one. His widow survived him many years and died in Fall River, Mass., when about seventy-eight years old. To them were born eleven sons and six daughters, and fifteen of their children lived to reach adult age, and two of their sons and three of their daughters were school teachers. Mr. Blanchette was enthusiastically devoted to education, and extended to all his children who would embrace it the opportunity to go to college.

Joseph Octave Blanchette began his schooling under his father's instruction, and as he did not desire to go to college so much as he wished to get into the work of the world, his education was cut short, yet it was very good for the time. At sixteen years of age the young man left school, and, turning away from college life, began the trade of harness maker at Actonvale, Canada. About this time however, the senior Blanchette removed to Putnam, Conn., and Joseph, wishing to keep with his family, accompanied him to that city, where he resumed his trade in the shop of Frank Leavitt. As a journeyman Mr. Blanchette worked at his trade in Woonsocket, R. I., and Webster, Mass. From this last named town he came to Willimantic, where Frank Gilman, his brother-in-law, had been in the bakery business, and whose sudden death had left his affairs without a manager. Mr. Blanchette took it in charge, and though it was a new business to him, he soon became adept, and after about six months bought it, on credit, incurring heavy obligations. This large debt did not daunt the young adventurer, as he had great courage and was determined to succeed. In 1878 he took possession of the business, it being established at that time in the Brainard House Building, on the northwest corner of Church and Main Streets. In 1882 he removed his business to its present location on Church Street, and it is now the leading establishment of the kind in Willimantic.

Joseph O. Blanchette was married in Putnam, Conn., June 2, 1873, to Miss Emily Gilman, a native of Webster, Mass., where she was born May 29, 1855, daughter of Joseph and Emily (Shagnon) Gilman, both being natives of Canada. There they were married July 15, 1834, and soon after came to the United States, first settling in Vermont, then removing to Webster, Mass., and finally coming to Putnam, where he and his wife died at the ages of eighty-five and eighty-two years, respectively. Their golden wedding was celebrated at Putnam, July 15, 1884. Their family consisted of fourteen children, of whom Mrs. Blanchette was among the younger ones, and was but a child when her parents came to Grosvenor Dale, Conn., was about fifteen years old when they came to Putnam, where she was living at the time of her marriage.

To Mr. and Mrs. Blanchette were born the following children: Flora A., born April 18, 1874, died when she was six years old; William Alfred and Delia Maud both died in childhood; Arthur died soon after the coming of his parents to Willimantic; Albina A., was born Feb. 8, 1886; and Mary Rose was born Feb. 25, 1893. Mr. Blanchette is a Democrat, and belongs to the Knights of Columbus, St. Jean Baptiste Society, the Foresters of America, the A. O. U. W., and the American Benefit Society. Mr. Blanchette also belongs to the Board of Trade, and the Merchants' Exchange, and was one of the original stockholders in the Vanderman Plumbing Co., of Willimantic. In religion he is a Roman Catholic, and belongs to St. Joseph's parish. The excellent home in which the Blanchette family is housed, on Prospect street, was thoroughly remodeled by our subject some years ago, and is now one of the choice residences of the city. They have a summer cottage on the sea shore at Pleasure Beach. Mr. Blanchette is a pleasant and courteous gentleman, and is held in the very highest esteem by all who know him, not only for his business qualities, but for his attractive and winning personal character.

JOSEPH FERRY. One of the representative citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., who has long been known in connection with both industrial and agricultural life there, is Joseph Ferry, who is a native son of Connecticut, born in Staffordville, Oct. 7, 1836.

It was in Staffordville that the grandfather and great-grandfather of Joseph Ferry lived and died, the former passing away at the age of ninety-nine years. By marriage great-grandfather James Ferry was connected with the Warren family, and he was well known as a reliable wheelwright and also as a farmer. His children were: James (2), who became the grandfather of Joseph Ferry of this sketch; Cyrus, who was a blacksmith; Jason, who learned the carpenter trade; Chauncy, who also was a carpenter, moved West and died there; Darias, who was a farmer, also was skilled in many trades, and who reared a family of fifteen children; Cynthia, who became Mrs. Fuller and lived in Palmer, Mass.; and Clarissa, who first married Timothy Foskett, and second Jesse Foskett, of Stafford.

James Ferry (2), son of James, was born in Staffordville, Jan. 23, 1773, and was a carpenter and farmer, the only tradesman of the latter class in his vicinity in his time, and it was his business to make coffins, which he constructed for from one to two dollars apiece, this charge including the usual work of undertaking. He married Polly Rogers, who was born Jan. 2, 1777, in Wales, Mass., and who died Nov. 2, 1840; the death of Mr. Ferry occurred in 1858, at the age of eighty-five years, and he was buried in the Hall District cemetery.

The children born to James and Polly Ferry were: (1) Abigail, who was born March 9, 1798, and married Ara Tyler, of Willington, Conn.; (2) Bathsheba, who was born March 23, 1800, and died Oct. 9, 1803; (3) Bathsheba (2), who was born Aug. 2, 1804, and married Robert Needham, of Stafford; (4) James, who was born Sept. 2, 1808, married Esther King, of Hawley, Mass. (by trade he was a moulder, working for many years in Stafford and the surrounding towns, and he still survives and remembers with pleasure the celebration which took place July 4, 1826, in rejoicing over the completion of the Hydeville Furnace, which he, with others, had commenced to erect April 4, 1826); (5) Abner, who was born Nov. 19, 1810, in Stafford; (6) Alvin, who was born July 23, 1813, in Stafford, Conn., and died on Jan. 12, 1884, having spent his life in Stafford as a moulder, and who was married Aug. 10, 1834, to Azubah Needham, born March 11, 1817, in Wales, Mass. (she now lives in Windsor Locks, with her daughter, her other children having been, Henry and Henry J., who died in infancy, George, a soldier of the Civil war, Almeda and William A., the latter now living in Stafford); and (7) Mary, who was born Feb. 6, 1822, and died in May, 1898, the wife of Horace Curtis, of Union, Connecticut.

Abner Ferry, the father of Joseph Ferry, was by trade a moulder and metal worker and followed the same during the major portion of his life. After completing the course of instruction in the Hyde foundry, he worked in the foundries in South Coventry, Troy, N. Y., Worcester, Mass., and in New Jersey at Jersey City, everywhere being known as a man of skill in his trade and one whose reliable work was in demand.

Abner Ferry married Polly Smith, who was born in Stafford, and died in Fiskdale, Mass., and her father was Joseph Smith, of Stafford. Their children were: Alonzo, who is engaged in the livery business, at Sturbridge, Mass., and married Jane Eaton; Joseph; Henry, who died in infancy; and Sarahette, who died unmarried.

In Staffordville, Conn., which has been the home of his relatives for so long a period, Joseph Ferry was born and was educated; he remained in school until he was nineteen years of age and attended the winter sessions, having been engaged since he was sixteen years of age at work during the summers in the Nathan Washburn foundry at Worcester, Mass. After leaving school he worked for one and one-half years in the spinning department of the E. A. Converse woolen mill and from there went to Bridgehampton, L. I., where he engaged for two years in extensive farming and fishing operations. Coming back to Stafford, he spent the next year in the Converse mill in the spinning department, but in 1851 he purchased the Pardon Davis farm of the other heirs and took care of his parents until their death. The tract comprised 155 acres of fine land and there Mr. Ferry has engaged in farming ever since, with the exception of about eighteen months during the Civil war, when he worked in the Staffordville mill. But whether as farmer or mill worker, Mr. Ferry has won the esteem of all of those with whom he has been thrown in contact; and is one of the representative citizens of his locality. His farming operations are carried on in connection with some dairying, and he finds a sale for his fine butter in Stafford Springs.

On Oct. 25, 1859, Mr. Ferry was united in marriage to Jane Frances Davis, a daughter of Pardon and Hannah (Wheeler) Davis, a prominent farmer of West Stafford. From this marriage there has been no issue.

Politically Mr. Ferry is a staunch Democrat and he has been called upon to serve in a number of prominent positions, having been assessor for two terms, for two years was selectman and is at present a member of the board, and in 1871 he most ably represented his town in the Legislature, serving on the committee on Cities and Boroughs. He is of the Universalist faith.

MAJOR AMOS T. FOWLER, for twenty-five years one of the foremost business men of Willimantic, Windham county, is now retired from active business, and he enjoys a confidence and respect that have been unbroken since his first entrance into the circle of commercial activities and rivalries.

Major Fowler comes from an old and historic New England family, first represented in Connecticut by William Fowler of New Haven, supposed to have been a son of William Fowler, of Milford, 1639, who was one of the "seven pillars" of the church at its foundation that year. This earlier Fowler was a man of affairs, and served frequently as a representative, as lieutenant, and finally as assistant of the colony. He died in 1661, leaving two sons, William and John.

(I) William Fowler, of New Haven, was born in England, where two of his children were baptized in 1649. He married first (probably) a daughter of Edmund Topp. For his second wife he married, in 1670, Widow Elizabeth Baldwin. He removed to Milford, where he died in 1683.

(II) Mark Fowler, son of William, of New Haven, was baptized in New Haven in 1655, became a proprietor of New Haven, 1685, and died the following year. His wife's Christian name was probably Mary.

(III) John Fowler, son of Mark, was born in 1681, and moved to Lebanon about 1702. His wife's name was Sarah. The house he built about 1702 in Goshen Society, in the town of Lebanon, stood until 1830, and had been occupied by five generations of the family.

(IV) Capt. Dijah Fowler, son of John, born in 1717, was married in 1745 to Abigail Bigelow, of Colchester.

(V) Capt. Amos Fowler, son of Capt. Dijah, born in 1758, died in 1837, in North Society, Lebanon. He is buried at Liberty Hill in Lebanon. He married a Miss Dewey, and they had a large family of children. His widow survived some years, living to be ninety-two years old. She drew a pension as the widow of a Revolutionary soldier for some years, as her husband was a corporal in the Continental army, having been a member of Washington's Life Guards. He was in the battle of Long Island, and served with honor to the close of the war. Of their family of twelve children six were sons, some of whom attained distinction.

(1) Orrin Fowler graduated from Yale, became a Congregational clergyman, and won distinction in the pulpit at Fall River, Mass., and elsewhere. He served two years with credit in the Massachusetts State Senate and for two terms was a Member of Congress, where he was the author of the bill reducing postage on letters from five cents to three cents. His death occurred during his second term.

(2) John Fowler was a farmer and a merchant, and at one time taught school with signal success. He died in Woodstock, Conn. (3) Amos is mentioned below. (4) Henry lived in Goshen Society, where he followed farming and where he died. (5) Dajah died in his teens. (6) Col. Anson Fowler resided in Lebanon Center, Conn., and was a member of the staff of his brother, Gen. Amos Fowler, being a prominent citizen of his day. Of the six daughters, five married: Mrs. Williams, and Mrs. Brigham, of Lebanon, went to New York State to live; Mrs. Otis, of Colchester; Mrs. Royce, of Lyme; and Mrs. Hardin of Lebanon.

(VI) Major General Amos Fowler, the father of Major Amos T., was born in Lebanon, July 19, 1795, and was married Dec. 11, 1816, to Lydia L. Backus, of Franklin, Conn., where she was born Aug. 2, 1798, daughter of Oliver and Dysa (Hyde) Backus. She died Jan. 6, 1849, and Gen. Fowler married Sarah Hayden, of Windsor, Conn. Gen. Fowler was the father of the following children:

(1) Edward P. C., born Nov. 15, 1818, was a farmer. He lived in Goshen Society until the early fifties, when he went West to Minnesota, settling at Lake City. He died in Minneapolis. (2) Catherine, born July 2, 1820, died May 14, 1837. (3) Lydia A., born March 4, 1823, was married Jan. 31, 1844, to Col. Jedediah Hough, of Bozrah, where she died. (4) Major Amos T., born Feb. 12, 1825, was at one time the third Amos Fowler living—his grandfather, Capt. Amos, his father, Gen. Amos, and himself. (5) Oliver B., born July 28, 1826, lived at Norwich for a time, and then went West to Galesburg, Ill., afterward removing into Iowa, and still later to Minneapolis, his present home. (6) Albert A., born June 13, 1830, died Feb. 19, 1831. (7) Harriet H., born Aug. 15, 1832, died unmarried in Colchester, when twenty-one years old. (8) Andrew Jackson, born June 13, 1835, is living retired in St. Paul; he was a successful farmer, cashier of a bank of Lake City, and served as county treasurer in Minnesota, being also at one time a member of the Legislature of that State. He has returned to Lake City, where he is cashier in a bank. (9) Sarah E., born Feb. 11, 1838, married Philip who died Jan. 25, 1883; she is now living in Windsor, Connecticut.

Gen. Fowler stood among the most prominent people of Lebanon in his day, and won more than a local reputation as a successful farmer and capable business man. For two terms he was a member of the General Assembly, and one term sat in the State Senate. In the Democratic party he was regarded as a leader. For twenty-seven years he served in the old State militia, in which he held all offices, from that of fourth corporal up to major general of Connecticut militia, being elected to the latter office by vote of the Legislature. His coat is still in the possession of his son, Major Amos T. His residence was in the east part of Goshen Society. He died July 21, 1875, in Windsor, and is buried there. In the Congregational Church of which he was a member, he was very prominent and much esteemed. For a time he lived at Colchester, so that his children could have the advantages of Bacon Academy.

(VII) Major Amos T. Fowler was born in the eastern part of Goshen Society, Feb. 12, 1825, in the second house which stood on that site. He attended school in Lebanon, mostly in the winter months, having Mr. Parks and George Standish among his earliest teachers. For some months he attended Bacon Academy, at Colchester, and when a young man he taught school on Long Island. Remaining at home until he was twenty-one, he early did his part in the work of the farm, and came into his successful career with a clear mind and a frame inured to toil.

Major Fowler was married, May 7, 1850, at Babylon, Long Island, to Miss Ann Eliza Seaman, of that city, where she was born Oct. 27, 1827, daughter of Col. Lawrence and Eliza (Ruland) Seaman. To this marriage have come two children: (1) Frank S., born March 3, 1851, in Goshen Society, Lebanon, was for a time in the hardware business with his father in Willimantic but is now a resident of Salem, Mass., engaged in the same line. He married Miss Jennie Alpaugh, of Willimantic, and they have one son, Amos S. (2) Ella A., born March 14, 1861, in Lebanon, Conn., died May 6, 1869, in Willimantic, Connecticut.

After his marriage Major Fowler located on his father's farm in Lebanon, where he remained for a number of years. In 1866 he removed to Willimantic, where he was engaged for two years in farming and dairying; in 1868 he formed a partnership with John Porter, and entered the butcher business on the corner of Railway and Main streets. In 1869 he formed a partnership with A. B. Carpenter, and engaged in the hardware business under the firm name of Carpenter & Fowler. They continued together in business for more than twenty years, and built up an extensive trade, one of the largest in that line in eastern Connecticut. After the dissolution of this firm, the business passed into the hands of A. T. Fowler & Son, who conducted it until November, 1892, when they sold to Way and Company.

Following 1892, Mr. Fowler was connected with various financial and commercial enterprises for a number of years, part of the time being president of the Merchants' Loan & Trust Company, and vice-president of the First National Bank, of which he was one of the organizers; he was a director of the Dime Savings Bank, helped to organize the Morrison Machine Company, and is vice-president and director of the Hall & Bill Printing Company, which he helped to organize. For years he has been president of the Vanderman Plumbing Company, and served as a director of the State Agricultural Fairs.

At the age of nineteen Mr. Fowler was appointed aid-de-camp on the staff of the major general of the Connecticut militia, with the rank of major, and held his commission six years. In Lebanon he was assessor and a member of the board of relief. Since coming to Willimantic he has been selectman three years, and in 1883 was a member of the General Assembly, where he was appointed on the committee on Humane Institutions, and chairman of the Windham County members of the Legislature.

Col. Fowler voted for Lincoln when he was a candidate the first term, and has remained a staunch Republican since that time. In the Congregational Church he has filled many offices, including that of deacon. In the fall of 1875 he built the home in which he is now living, on Bellevue street. No people in Willimantic are more highly respected than Amos T. Fowler and his excellent wife, and when their Golden Wedding was celebrated May 7, 1900, 100 people were present and the occasion aroused a feeling of general satisfaction that such a worthy couple had been spared to each other and to the community for so long a period.

THOMAS P. BOTHAM. In viewing the scheme of human life and human accomplishment we can not but introduce individual comparisons—they force themselves upon us without personal volition, and we are led to conjecture as to the worthy life and success of one individual and the shadowed and unprolific life of another who apparently started out under more favorable auspices. Can we do other than believe that every life is in its proper setting, and that personal loyalty and determination on the one hand, and personal apathy and negligence on the other, determination the outcome? There are things in the circumstances of our lives that we can change; there are opportunities that our efforts may enlarge. We can conquer many of the difficulties that beset our career, and, so doing, be strong. If we go through life timidly, weakly, ineffectively, the fault is neither with our endowment nor our environment. It is with ourselves. When one sets himself to live a true life, man can not interrupt him; an all-wise Providence will not. The writer is moved to these thoughts in scrutinizing as closely as may be the career of Mr. Botham, who for more than thirty years has been a prominent figure in the industrial life of Putnam, Windham county, who has achieved a magnificent temporal success through his own efforts, and who has so ordered his life as to command the confidence and high regard of his fellow men, and they constitute a discriminating factor, quickly judging the clear resonance of the true metal and the jarring dissonance of the false. Is not that man who has done much, and done it well, worthy of all honor? It cannot be otherwise, and in this resume of the life history of Mr. Botham may be found both lesson and incentive, for his career marks the span extending between the poor boy who faces the battle of life without fortuitous aid or influence, and the man of sterling character and native strength who is the prime factor in industrial enterprises of magnificent scope and importance, with the due concomitants of commercial prestige and well earned affluence. Let us read the lesson, "line upon line; precept upon precept," and let who may profit thereby.

Thomas Porter Botham is a native son of Windham county, Conn., having been born in the village of Pomfret, Aug. 18, 1831. His father, Zibah Botham, was born in the same town, and there made his home during the entire course of his life, which was devoted to agricultural pursuits, his death occurring at the age of seventy-five. The family was established in America by the grandfather of Thomas P., whose name was originally Higginbotham, and who emigrated to America during the war of the Revolution, settling in Pomfret, Conn., where he died while still a young man; the change of name to the present orthography was made by him. His wife, Dorcas, attained a remarkable age, passing away July 4, 1871; had she lived until the 18th of the succeeding month she would have been one hundred years old. Both she and her husband are interred in the old Randall and Botham burying-ground, near Pomfret. They had three sons and three daughters, the names of the sons having been Darius, Elisha and Zibah, the last mentioned of whom was the father of our subject.

Zibah Botham married Miss Ziphra Keach, who was born in Thompson, Conn., daughter of Alfred Keach, and she died in Montville, Conn., at the patriarchal age of one hundred years, nine months and three days, having retained her mental and physical faculties in marked degree until the day of her death. Of the children born of this union we are able to enter the following brief record: Lyman, a retired shoemaker, resides in Moosup, Conn.; Phoebe, who resides in Pomfret, is the widow of Elisha Morey, who was killed while in service during the war of the Rebellion; Louis and Leavens (twins) are both now deceased, the former (who was a shoemaker by vocation) having died in Montville, while the latter went to California during the memorable gold excitement of 1849, and there died; Elizabeth married Alfred Beals, a farmer of Windham county, and both are now deceased; George died in Springfield, Mass., where he had been engaged in the livery business; Lucinda became the second wife of Alfred Beals, previously mentioned, and is now deceased; Thomas P. is the immediate subject of this review; James, who is a resident of Pomfret, is a farmer and also a skilled carpenter and builder, being a veteran of the war of the Rebellion; Emily became the wife of Jerome Baker, a shoe maker, and died in Rhode Island; Zibah, likewise a shoemaker by trade, was a valiant soldier in the Civil war and was held in captivity at Andersonville prison for some time, dying several years later, in Montville, Conn.; and Daniel, who is an honored citizen of Montville, received wounds in the Civil war from the effects of which he has remained permanently crippled.

Thomas P. Botham was reared on the homestead farm in Pomfret until he had attained the age of ten years, assisting in the farm work and attending the common schools of the place and period. At the age mentioned he assumed the responsibility of his own maintenance, going to Eastford, where he attended school during the day and worked at the trade of shoemaking during the evening. There he remained about eight years, within which time he gained a thorough knowledge of his trade and thus, unconsciously, laid the foundation for the distinctive success which came to him in the fullness of years, as the result of such knowledge. His industry, perseverance and fidelity of purpose were to be noted as dominating elements in his character when a youth, and that these have been the conservators of his great success none can doubt. He continued to follow his trade in Eastford and Pomfret until he had attained his legal majority, and thereafter was employed for one year in New Britain, and then was engaged in shoemaking in Pomfret again, for a period of about four years. He was then called to South Brookfield to assist in the establishing of the shoe factory of Kimball & Robinson, which was notable as having been the second shop in the State to utilize steam power in the operation of its machinery. His services were in requisition there in directing the manufacture of men's calfskin shoes, which had previously never been put on the market, and he was identified with the work of that factory for about three years, and then, in the year 1865, came to Putnam, which has ever since continued to be his home and field of operation, and the place where he has risen to a commanding position in the industrial world. Here he associated himself with Charles M. Fisher, under the firm name of C. M. Fisher & Co., and engaged in the manufacture of women's shoes, later instituting also the manufacture of men's heavy shoes, principally to supply the western trade. Mr. Botham, amply fortified in practical knowledge and experience and in executive ability, took charge of the inside work of the factory, operations being instituted on a modest scale, and under his guidance the best quality of work was turned out and the enterprise continued to grow in scope and importance until it became one of the principal industries of that section of New England. The business was continued under the management noted for the long period of twenty-one years, when Mr. Fisher died, and Mr. Botham then admitted two other men to partnership, the firm name remaining the same as before. Mr. Botham continued to be actively identified with the enterprise for the further period of nine years, making three decades in all, and then retired, this being in the year 1895. In the early days a corps of about fifty operatives was employed, and at the present time the business demands the retention of about one hundred employes, while the productive capacity of the plant is for the turning out of one thousand pairs of shoes per diem. The extent of the plant is shown in the fact that the building utilized is 160 x 24 feet in dimensions, four stories in height, and has a floor space of more than 14,000 square feet, while light is secured from three hundred windows. Mr. Botham still retains an interest in the business in whose promotion he has been so important a factor, and which stands conspicuous among the successful commercial ventures of the State. All of his life has been characterized by the greatest vigor, business ability, honor and integrity, and now, though past the threescore years and ten which the psalmist allotted to humanity, he gives no evidence of physical or mental disintegration, and stands prominently at the front as one of Putnam's most honored and esteemed citizens, and as one who has ever had the welfare of his home city closely at heart and has made his life count for good in the community. Mindful of his own early struggles, Mr. Botham has ever retained the utmost respect for the dignity of honest toil, and his broad and kindly nature has no room for trivial or petty distinctions, honest worth being the thing he most appreciates in human nature, while his tolerance and charity of judgment indicate the man of clearness of vision, the man who is able to understand the realities of life and to make the most of himself and to aid his fellows in so doing. Mental obliquity spoils many an otherwise symmetrical character, and from this our subject is free, having clearly defined opinions, understanding the genesis of human thought and action and holding high regard for the responsibility that canopies every life. Mr. Botham has extensive business and real-estate interests in Putnam, and is far from inactive or supine, as the days of his useful and worthy life pass in ever hastening succession. He is a member of the directorate of the Putnam Electric Light & Power Company, and is president and a director of the Putnam Box Corporation, in whose organization he was instrumental, the company conducting a large business in the manufacture of paper and wooden boxes, and in other ways has he shown his progressive public spirit, contributing to the advancement of the material prosperity and substantial upbuilding of his home city, as a commercial and industrial center and as an attractive place of residence.

During the crucial period culminating in the war of the Rebellion Mr. Botham was known as a strenuous opponent of the institution of human slavery, and was eligible for a title which is to be designated as a distinctive honor, though not at the time so applied, having been what the neutral and disaffected termed a "rank Abolitionist." At the organization of the Republican party he gave his allegiance to the same, and has ever since been one of its staunch supporters, though he has invariably refused to be considered in connection with candidacy for public office, his only service having been as a member of the board of review, for a period of four years, and this is to be considered more in the light of a civic duty than in that of political office. The religious faith of Mr. Botham is that of the Congregational Church, in whose work he has been a prominent factor for a long term of years, having been an officer and member of the church in Putnam for more than twenty years, and having been a deacon for twelve years, while his active identification with the furthering of the cause of the Master through influence and effective work in the church covers a period of nearly two score years. He is a member of the directorate of the Douglas Camp Meeting Association, of Douglas, Mass., this being a church organization whose annual assemblies are productive of much good in the spiritual uplifting of the people and in unifying the church work in this section of the Union.

On Nov. 24, 1870, was solemnized the marriage of Mr. Botham to Miss Arathusa Buck, of Putnam, she being the daughter of Elisha Buck, who was one of the representative citizens of the place. Mr. and Mrs. Botham have one son, who is a young man of fine character and marked ability, Ralph Walton Botham, born Jan. 10, 1876, in Putnam, and who is now a successful young lawyer of New York City, where he holds the responsible position of claim agent for the consolidated railroads of the metropolis. His early educational discipline was received in the public schools of his native city, and after being graduated from the Putnam high school he matriculated at Amherst College, where he completed his literary course, being graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, taking first honors in languages. He then entered the New York Law School, where he completed a thorough course, being graduated cum laude, and having been admitted to the bar of the Empire State. He is a thorough student, a young man of fine intellectuality, and is destined to make his mark in his profession or in any other field of endeavor where he sees fit to direct his energies.

JAMES MORRIS TALCOTT, a well-known and much respected citizen of Ellington, Tolland county, has for many years been a familiar presence in that community. A full history of the Talcott family is given elsewhere.

Deacon Flavel Talcott, father of James M., was born July 18, 1786, in Bolton, Tolland county, where he had the training of the typical farmer boy of the time. Attending the district schools, he proved himself an exceptionally bright and earnest student, and for many years after reaching manhood he taught school during the winter seasons in Manchester, Bolton and Vernon. He excelled in mathematics and penmanship. About the time of his marriage he bought a large farm in North Bolton, for which he became deeply involved in debt. Box Mountain was on this farm, and as it contained much timber Mr. Talcott dealt largely in firewood and lumber, which he prepared at his own sawmill, and sold in Hartford and Rockville. Some of the oldest houses in Rockville were built from lumber cut and sold by him. For many years he continued in the lumber business, in which he achieved success, for he not only paid off all his indebtedness, but left some little for his family. Mr. Talcott had a fine apple orchard, and in early life made cider brandy. Later in his life he became convinced that this was wrong, and threw open his orchards to his neighbors, but becoming dissatisfied with their treatment of his trees he fed the apples to his cows and hogs. Deacon Talcott died March 28, 1844, and was buried at Vernon, but his body was some years later removed to Talcottville. His death was the result of an accident which occurred some years previously. He fell into a kettle of boiling water and considerable skin came off his body, being supplanted by a dry growth. From this time he fell into a decline, and never recovered his health.

Contributing freely to the agricultural press, Deacon Talcott was known as an intelligent and original thinker along the lines of farming and stock raising. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Congregational Church, where he served as deacon, and was a faithful worker in church conventions and other gatherings. Of a free and generous disposition, he was a ready contributor to all charities, and contributed largely towards the parsonage at Vernon, besides work on the grounds. Deacon Talcott sold his farm and Box Mountain some ten years before he died and purchased a farm at Talcottville, where he spent his later years.

Deacon Talcott married Eunice Alvord Hubbard, who was born May 26, 1791, and died Nov.

5, 1872, in the same room in which her husband passed away. After the Deacon's death the homestead was bought from the other heirs by James M., to whom they gave a quit claim deed for everything—all that belonged to the deceased father. He made this purchase in order that his mother might remain in the old place, and she passed her last years there. Mrs. Talcott was a native of Bolton, and a daughter of Nathaniel and Eunice (Alvord) Hubbard. The children of Deacon Talcott and his wife numbered seven. (1) Nathaniel Hubbard, born Jan. 18, 1816, taught school in his early life and then was for many years the agent at Vernon station for the Hartford, Providence and Fishkill Railroad. Afterwards he was with Talcott Brothers. He was twice married, first to Betsy Chapman and subsequently to Mrs. Julia Breckenridge, of Monson, Mass., where his last years were spent. In his Christian life he was a Congregationalist and efficient in church work. (2) James Morris was born Nov. 23, 1817. (3) William Flavel, born Dec. 21, 1819, was twice married; first to Mary Edson and later to Marietta Webber. He taught school in early life, and was a talented man, though for a time he was somewhat demented. He died in Kansas, where he was employed in the erection of the building of the Kansas University. He was at one time a lecturer on Astronomy at Georgetown (Ky.) Academy. (4) Samuel Olmstead, born Sept. 5, 1821, died April 6, 1825. (5) Philander Parmelee, born Oct. 1, 1823, married Jane Spencer, and spent his life as a farmer on the old homestead. For many years he was a deacon of the Vernon Congregational Church, and was a man of even temper, much beloved by all who knew him. He died April 22, 1862, and his funeral is remembered as one of the largest ever held in Vernon. (6) Elizabeth Ann, born Aug. 4, 1825, married John Q. A. Perrin, a merchant in LaFayette, Ind., where she died, Sept. 22, 1889. (7) Royal, born June 7, 1828, died July 2, 1832.

James Morris Talcott was born in Vernon, where he received a good common-school education, and was fitted for college at the famous Ellington high school, his original intention being to become a clergyman. Because of physical disability, however, he was obliged to abandon study and he became a teacher. For eight years he was thus engaged in the schools of Hartford and the vicinity, for some time in the old "stone schoolhouse" (now called the Brown school) then the only public school in Hartford, where, in all, over thirteen hundred pupils came under his teaching and care. He was afterward called to the Connecticut State Prison where he served for about six years, the latter part of the time as deputy warden. At the end of that period he was called to Providence, R. I., to take charge of the Providence Reform School, which he had to establish, and for five years he was superintendent of that school. He then was called to a similar position at Westboro, Mass., where he also remained about five years, resigning only when at the point of absolute collapse from so prolonged and intense a strain. Taking a vacation, his health resumed its normal tone, and he took a position as agent of the Willimantic Linen Company, with which he remained three years, when he was called to Providence, and for nearly seventeen years gave character and success to the reform school there, long looked upon as a model of its kind. In 1876, when he resigned his office, he had given more than thirty years to the care of State criminals, and juvenile offenders. After two years spent in rest and travel with his wife, he came back to his native country, and bought the attractive home of Rev. Diodate Brockway, where he now resides.

James M. Talcott and Amanda Stoughton were married Jan. 13, 1841. Mrs. Talcott was a daughter of Deacon Horace and Lavina (Kilbourn) Stoughton. She had only the advantages of a district school education, but seemed endowed with the qualities both mental and physical, needed for the work of her after life with criminals and juvenile offenders. The only child of this union Henrietta Elizabeth, is the wife of Horace W. Kibbe, supervisor of the farm of the State Reform School for Boys at Meriden, Conn. Mrs. Talcott died at the Providence Reform School, of which she had been the greatly beloved and efficient matron for about fifteen years, July 5, 1869, in her fifty-second year. She had aided her husband greatly in the splendid work he undertook. In token of the esteem in which she was held, places of business were closed at the hour of the funeral and the chief officers of the State and city went to Talcottville as her bearers.

The following lines, written by a citizen of Providence, came out in the city papers at this time of her death:

Peacefully folded hands
 Across the breast.
 Their work of guiding the erring one,
 Their work of lifting the fallen done,
 At last they rest.

Patient and tireless feet.
 No more their fall
 Will carry joy to the bed of pain.
 Of the voice of want they never again
 Will heed the call.

Holily restful face.
 The smile is dead
 That brought such peace to the stricken one,
 Scattering darkness like the sun
 With the light it shed.

Faithful and tender hear.
 The fount is dry
 That sweetened many a bitter stream;
 That led so many to see the gleam
 Of the Throne on high.

Spirit we loved, recalled
 By Him who gave,
 Long will you be a beacon bright
 Guiding us to the realm of light
 Beyond the grave.

Merciful Saviour, grant
That we may be
Trustful like her in Thy boundless love,
Sharers with her of Thy home above,
Near unto Thee.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 8, 1869.

Mr. Talcott was married Nov. 2, 1870, to Julia Belden, daughter of Rev. Charles and Mary (Ludlow) Hyde, of Hartford, and granddaughter of Rev. James Hyde, and of Peter Ludlow, the latter a prominent merchant of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Talcott are active members of the Congregational Church, and are widely known for their unceasing work for the young. They have a foster child, Rosella Julia, on whom they bestow parental care.

Rev. James Hyde, of Norwich, Conn., paternal grandfather of Mrs. Julia B. Talcott, was a minister of the M. E. Church. He served in the war of the Revolution, holding the rank of captain. His wife was Martha Nevins.

Rev. Charles Hyde, Mrs. Talcott's father, was born May 29, 1797, in Norwich, Conn. He studied with Rev. Dr. Samuel Nott, of Franklin, Conn., a noted divine, also attended Princeton College, and became a Congregational minister, serving the following churches: Doylestown, Pa.; Norwich Falls, Conn. (twice); Ashford, Conn.; Coventry, Conn., and he was also in East Hartford. His health becoming impaired, he removed in 1854 to Ellington, Conn., where he remained until 1869, supplying Stafford Springs, and, part of the time, the church at Staffordville. From Ellington he removed to Hartford, where he died in 1871. He married Mary Ludlow, who was born in New York City, March 31, 1799, and died in 1887.

Peter Ludlow, Mrs. Talcott's maternal grandfather, was born in Bristol, England. His first wife died in that country, and he subsequently came to America, settling in New York City, where he became a prominent merchant. He was an elder in Rev. Dr. Spring's church in that city. He married for his second wife, Elizabeth Raynolds, of Enfield, Conn., a descendant of Rev. Peter Raynolds, the first Congregational minister in Enfield, where he died. Peter and Elizabeth Ludlow died in New York City, and were buried there, but their remains were subsequently removed to Enfield, Conn. They had a family of seven sons and one daughter.

THOMAS CLINTON BUGBEE (deceased), in his day one of the best known and most distinguished citizens of Windham county, Conn., was born in Packerville, that county, Oct. 2, 1838, and died in Putnam April 17, 1900. He was educated at Packerville, in the common schools, and, after having finished his studies, began his business life as clerk in the hardware and tinware store of Stephen Spaulding, in Putnam. Within a few months he embarked in the same line on his own account, in the same town, and conducted it about thirty years, when he sold out to Charles N. Allen. A little later on he resumed business in the hardware and tinware trade, in the same town, having achieved quite an enviable reputation as a dealer in these articles. In his latter years he opened a five and ten cent store in Putnam, and, being very witty, made of it a perfect success. He was also a very open-hearted gentleman and ever ready to aid those who happened to be in need of assistance. He was likewise very public-spirited, and was one of the projectors and incorporators of the Cemetery Association, and as a Republican filled several of the town offices when solicited to do so, but was never an office seeker.

Thomas C. Bugbee was joined in a happy marriage Nov. 6, 1868, with Miss Ellen Maria Keith, a daughter of William and Nancy (Luther) Keith, of Raynham, Bristol Co., Mass. Both of her parents died in Putnam, Conn. Ada Gertrude, the only child born to Thomas C. and Ellen M. Bugbee, was born in Putnam Jan. 12, 1872, and was most untimely called away Dec. 25, 1899.

Thomas C. Bugbee was emphatically what is usually termed a self-made man, and his death was the cause of poignant grief on the part of his family and neighbors. His sad ending is thus sympathetically spoken of in the Putnam Patriot of April 20, 1900, which editorial, at the risk of some trivial repetitions, is given here in full, as showing the esteem in which he was held by his neighbors:

Several weeks ago, while working in his barn, without premonition, Mr. Thomas C. Bugbee received a paralytic shock which entirely disabled his left side. After three weeks he felt encouraged that he was going to recover. A week or two after he was enabled to be up and dress, he experienced a strange sensation which caused him to say to his family that he was going to die. He got back to his room and lay down, and in a few minutes, without another word, he was peacefully sleeping in death.

Mr. Bugbee was one of Putnam's oldest business men, having come here forty years ago. He first worked for Stephen Spaulding, the first tinsmith here, who died in Bristol, R. I., several months ago, and whose body was brought here and buried in Grove cemetery, where close by Mr. Bugbee is laid, once more together, but in the quiet of death. Mr. Bugbee was born in Plainfield, sixty-two years ago, his parents being Chester and Phebe Bugbee. He started a hardware store, after working for Mr. Spaulding a few years, and greatly prospered although he was burned out twice. He bought the old Quinebaug block, which covered the lot now occupied by the Union block. In 1877 that was consumed by fire. He put up a brick block in its place and that was burned down in 1882, causing him a great loss. He sold the lot to the present Union Block company. He started business again in the Union block, which he sold, and then, after a few years, opened another hardware store in the Bosworth block, and that after a few years he sold to Mr. George M. Morse. After being out of business a few years, he opened a store of fancy articles in the Bosworth block. This he sold just before he was stricken down with paralysis. Besides these two blocks mentioned, he built the Bugbee House block.

As a mark of respect to Mr. Bugbee all the business houses closed during the funeral. Mr. Bugbee was of an impulsive nature, but very kind-hearted, and his uprightness in all his dealings was never questioned by any one.

THOMAS C. BUGBEE

He leaves a wife who devotedly cared for and watched over him during his illness, which gave her little opportunity for complete rest. He is also survived by three brothers. The loss of a charming daughter last year he felt keenly, as did also Mrs. Bugbee, and this may have had something to do with his shock, as he and his wife had just returned from the cemetery and he was putting up his horse when he was stricken down.

JOSEPH WILLIAM CHANDLER, who belongs to the number of the old and honored residents of Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn., was born in Forest Green, Gloucester, England.

Deacon James Chandler, the father of Joseph William, was born in England, where he married Jane Stafford, a daughter of John and Mary Stafford, both English born and bred, but who died in Stafford. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler came to this country in 1846, sailing from Liverpool.

Deacon James Chandler taught school in England, and then became associated with the woolen factories, having charge of the finishing department. When he came to Stafford, he was put in charge of the fulling and finishing department of the mills of Nelson, Kingsbury & Co., where he remained until 1853, when he removed to South Coventry to take a similar position in a woolen mill conducted by the same firm, where he remained for three years. At the expiration of that time he gave up his position with the Company, and returning to Stafford Springs, lived a retired life on account of his failing health. He was a Republican and very active in the Congregational Church, with which he had united himself on coming to the village. His deep religious character and spiritual fervor qualified him for the position of deacon, to which he was early elected, and which he filled as long as he lived. Three of his children died young; Joseph W. is the subject of this article; Emily Jane lives in Barre Plains, married to Henry R. Lord, of Spencer, Mass.; Frederick J. was born Jan. 24, 1844; Elizabeth Ann and Phronema T. are living in Worcester, Mass.

Joseph William Chandler was born in England, where his education begun at a very early age, was broken off at the age of seven years by the departure of his family for America; it was continued at Stafford, the first home of the parents after reaching these shores. When he was sixteen years of age he left school to work in the mill at Coventry with his father, later taking a place in the cotton mill at Stafford, and, still later being engaged in painting, all this being while he was still a lad. His training for active business life was received in the old Stafford Bank, where he was employed for eighteen years, rising from a clerkship to be teller of the bank. Since 1869 he has been engaged in real estate and insurance business, having the agency of many of the larger and sounder insurance companies. For four years he did bookkeeping for Smith & Cooley. For a number of years, in addition to his other cares, Mr.

Chandler has cultivated a very complete farm of some fifteen acres, this being more of a recreation and a delight to him than anything else.

Mr. Chandler has been a notary public from 1860 to the present, and was a trial justice from 1872 to 1889, when the borough court of Stafford Springs was established. He was made judge of that court, a position he held until 1898, when he resigned on receiving his appointment as postmaster.

Mr. Chandler was appointed in January, 1898, postmaster of Stafford Springs, and in that capacity he is still serving the Stafford Springs public, much to his own credit and to the general satisfaction. Mr. Chandler is much interested in the operations of the Republican party, and is one of its prominent and acknowledged leaders in his section. From 1862 to 1898 he served as chairman of the Republican town committee. In 1882 he was named county commissioner of Tolland county, and served on the board until 1885, being named again for this position in 1895, for a term of four years. Mr. Chandler was a charter member of Wasson Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Stafford Springs, and was also a charter member of Stafford Grange, No. 55, P. of H.

Mr. Chandler was married Jan. 31, 1860, to Martha Ellis, a daughter of Willis and Abigail (Carpenter) Ellis, of Stafford, and all the children born to this marriage are dead.

Willis Ellis had a general store in Stafford for many years. In the Congregational Church, of which he was an active member, he took a deep interest. He died when in the prime of life in Stafford, where he was born. These were his children: Abigail, who married William Smith of Stafford; Martha, married to Joseph William Chandler, whose name introduces this article; twins, both of whom died in infancy.

Joseph W. Chandler, after leaving the bank, started a leather and tanning business in which he was engaged for several years. He was an original incorporator of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association, and has served as one of its directors. He was at one time a trustee in the Savings Bank of Stafford Springs.

WILLARD P. FULLER is the leading merchant of Somers, Tolland county, where he has long since won recognition as one of the substantial citizens of that old Connecticut town.

The original American ancestor of the Fuller family was Edward Fuller, who came from England in the "Mayflower" in 1620. Dr. Matthew Fuller, his son, came over in 1640, and settled in Barnstable, Mass. Samuel Fuller, son of Dr. Matthew, came to Colchester, Conn., and Young Fuller, his son, located in Ellington, where he had children baptized as early as 1732. Young Fuller, accompanied by his son Joshua, removed to Ludlow, Massachusetts.

Joshua Fuller was born Sept. 9, 1730, and his death occurred in 1810. He married Mary Lathrop, born in 1736, in Tolland, and their children were born in Ludlow; (1) Elisha, born April 11, 1754, was the great-grandfather of Willard P. (2) Solomon L., born in 1756, married Martha Moody, and after her death wedded Tamar Smith; both lie in the North Cemetery of Somers. He was a Revolutionary soldier, serving in a Massachusetts regiment. Coming to Somers he became a large landowner in the southern part of the town, and was known as 'Squire Fuller. He lived to be ninety-eight, and was active almost to the day of his death. (3) Ezekiel, born in 1758, was a farmer, and lived in Ludlow. (4) Sarah, born in 1762, married Benjamin Chapin, of Chicopee, Mass. (5) Lydia, born 1765, married David Barton, and died in Whitestone, N. Y. (6) Benjamin, born in 1767, settled in Monson, Mass., and was a farmer there. (7) Olive, born Feb. 13, 1777, married William McKinney, of Ellington, where he was engaged in farming.

Elisha Fuller, son of Joshua, married Jane Loveland.

Isaac Fuller, son of Elisha, and grandfather of Willard P., was born in Ludlow, Mass., Oct. 30, 1777. When a young man he came to Somers where he married and then removed to Monson, Mass., from which point he enlisted in the war of 1812, doing duty along the Massachusetts coast as a captain in the state militia. In 1816 he came back to Somers to purchase a large farm in the cultivation of which he engaged during the remainder of his life. He died April 4, 1865, and was buried in the West cemetery. In politics Isaac Fuller was a Whig and in his time filled many town offices. Gifted with a good bass voice and a love for music, he led the choir in the Somers Congregational Church for many years. Eleanor Jones, his wife, was a granddaughter of the man who erected the first house in Somers. Their children were: Horace, who married Sally Phillips, was a farmer in Somers, where he died. Eleanor, who married John Tiffany, a farmer, lived in Somers. Philo, the father of Willard P., was born March 22, 1810. Emeline, married Albert Clark, who was proprietor of the "United States Hotel" in Boston for many years, and later of the "Brevoort" hotel, in New York; Mrs. Clark now lives in New York; all other members of the family are deceased. Elvira, who married Joseph Griggs, resided in Springfield. Otis died at the age of fifteen.

Philo Fuller, son of Isaac, was born in Monson, Mass., and came to Somers with his parents while still young. His education was acquired in the district school, and he was reared a farmer boy. After his marriage he resided for a number of years in a house across the road from that occupied by his parents. Later he moved into his parents' home and cared for them in their old age. After their death the farm passed to him and he was extensively and successfully engaged in farming and the buying and selling of cattle. In 1872 Mr. Fuller moved to Somers street, and purchased the house that is now the home of his son, Willard P., where he lived until his death, Dec. 22, 1893. His interment was in the West cemetery at Somers. In political sentiment he was a Republican. He became possessed of a competency and was highly esteemed for his genuine worth. Philo Fuller married Aurelia Fields, a native of Springfield, Mass., daughter of Daniel Cherry Wood Fields of that city. They had one child, Willard P. Mrs. Fuller died in September, 1888, at the age of sixty-seven years, and was buried in the West cemetery at Somers. She was a woman of much refinement and highly esteemed. When she was but ten years old she designed and worked in colors on linen a genealogical record of her father and mother and their children. The work was remarkably well done—the plan and selection and blending of colors indicating at that early age unusual artistic taste. This unique record is preserved by her son.

Willard P. Fuller was born Nov. 30, 1850, in Somers, where he attended district school and a select school kept by Prof. Ripley. Later he was a student at the academy in Wilbraham, Mass. Mr. Fuller taught school two winters in his native district, working on the farm in the summer, and then became a clerk in the store of C. A. Arnold, where he remained two and a half years. In company with A. E. Arnold he purchased a general store at Hampden, Mass., which they conducted under the name of Fuller & Arnold. Presently Mr. Fuller bought out his partner, and after another three years sold out and came back to Somers to purchase the store of C. A. Arnold; there he has continued in business very successfully to the present time. For several years prior to 1890 Mr. Fuller was in company with C. M. Needham. He keeps a general store and has secured a fine patronage. In 1897 Mr. Fuller opened a branch store in Somerville, which is under the immediate supervision of Raymond S. Bugbee, his son-in-law, who in 1900 became his partner in this concern, the firm being Fuller & Bugbee. Mr. Fuller is also engaged in farming, having bought the Job Hulburt homestead and farm on the road between Somers and Somerville, and expended much time and money in the development of the place. He raises vegetables and fruits which are marketed through his two stores. He is a trustee of the People's Savings Bank at Rockville and a director and treasurer of the Somers Creamery Association, of which latter he was one of the organizers.

Willard P. Fuller and Isabelle Pease were married May 24, 1876. Mrs. Fuller was born April 28, 1856, in Somers, daughter of Col. Amos and Mariette (Moore) Pease, and died April 10, 1887. They had children as follows: (1) Etta A., born April 2, 1877, married Raymond S. Bugbee, of Somers, son of Charles and Emily Sykes Bugbee, of East Longmeadow. (2) Herbert W., born April 1, 1883, was educated at Williston Academy and Hunter's Business College, at Hartford, and is now at home assisting his father in the Somers store.

(3) Belle P., twin to Herbert, was educated in the district schools, and the Abbott Academy, at Andover, Mass., where she took a special course in music, and is now a student in the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, where she is continuing her study of instrumental music; she is highly accomplished.

Mr. Fuller married for his second wife, Ella Louise Collins, who was born March 28, 1856, in Ellington, and is the daughter of Guy P. and Marinette (Moore) Collins, and to this union came one child, Willard C., born April 8, 1889.

Willard P. Fuller is a Republican, and was a member of the General Assembly in 1886 where he served as clerk of the Fisheries committee. For several terms he served as a member of the board of assessors, for several years has been chairman of the school committee, and for many years he was postmaster at Somers. He is chairman of the Society committee of the Somers Congregational Church, to which he and his wife belong. In his numerous connections Mr. Fuller has made many friends, and is widely known and liked.

LYMAN TWINING TINGIER, clerk of the Superior court of Tolland county, and judge of the City court of Rockville, is one of the foremost attorneys of his county, and has been prominent in his party for some time. He was born in Webster, Mass., June 9, 1862, a son of Seymour A. and Sarah (Twining) Tingier.

The family is an old one in Massachusetts, Mr. Tingier descending from Gov. William Bradford, of Plymouth Colony; from William Twining, who came from England in 1630, and lived at Yarmouth, Mass.; from George Steele, who was one of the first settlers of Hartford, and who fought in the Pequot war, under Capt. John Mason, in 1639; and from John Tinker, one of the founders of New London. In 1856 his family name was changed by the Legislature of Massachusetts from Tinker to Tingier.

Edward L. Tinker, the paternal grandfather of Lyman T., was born in Westfield, Mass., and was a tanner by trade. He married Laura Steele, a native of West Hartford, Conn., and their family consisted of three sons and three daughters, but two of whom are surviving: William, a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.; and Gertrude, widow of Dr. Sterling C. Newton, of California.

Seymour A. Tingier was a native of Tolland, Mass., removing in 1856 to Webster, Mass., where he was engaged in the practice of law for more than twenty years. In 1878 he removed to the adjoining town of Thompson, Conn., where he purchased a farm and resided until the time of his decease, July 23, 1888; his wife passed away in 1864, in Webster, where both are buried. Mr. Tingier was a valued member of the Masonic fraternity, and Mrs. Tingier had long been connected with the Congregational Church. Their family consisted of two children: Sarah P., who resides in Thompson, Conn.; and Lyman Twining, the subject of this sketch.

Lyman Twining Tingier acquired his early education in the public schools of Webster, Mass., and at Nichols Academy, in Dudley, Mass., following his attendance at which he entered Yale Law School, and was graduated from there in 1888. He was admitted to the Bar at New Haven immediately after graduation. In December, of the same year, he began the practice of his profession at Webster, Mass., his native town, but in November, 1889, he removed to Rockville, where he has since remained and enjoyed a large and constantly increasing clientage.

Mr. Tingier's natural ability and acquired gifts were soon recognized in Rockville, resulting in his election, in January, 1890, as probate judge of the Ellington district, this honor being conferred after a shorter residence in the town than any other man ever elected to the office. He succeeded Gelon W. West, and in November, 1890, was elected to succeed himself, in the following month being elected alderman from the Second ward, in which position he served most efficiently on the committee on Public Works and Police, while he also was made president of the board. In 1893 Mr. Tingier was appointed clerk of the Superior court of Tolland county, which office he efficiently fills.

Mr. Tingier has borne an active part in politics, as a Democrat. In February, 1899, he was made judge of the City court of Rockville, a position for which he is well fitted. In 1896 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago. Socially he is connected with Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., at Rockville, having become a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1884, in South Woodstock, Conn. He also affiliates with Adoniram Chapter, at Rockville, giving his earnest attention to the organization and enjoying deserved popularity with his brethren.

Mr. Tingier was united in marriage Nov. 16, 1893, in Rockville, to Miss Charlotte E. Skinner, a daughter of Nelson D. and Isabella E. (Brown) Skinner. Judge Tingier is a very popular man, his ability being recognized by both political parties, and his legal associates unite in their prophecies of a future brilliant career.

ADDISON J. GREENSLIT, prosecuting agent for Windham county, and a prominent citizen of Hampton, Conn., was born in Hampton, May 16, 1849.

William F. Greenslit, the father of Addison J., was a life-long resident of Hampton where he was a farmer, and was a brother of Hon. David Greenslit of Hampton, of whom extended mention is made elsewhere. William F. Greenslit died in Hampton.

He was thrice married. The children of his first union, with Esther Dorrance, of Brooklyn, were: Katherine D., who is the wife of Hernan Allen of Hampton; and Addison J., of this sketch.

Addison J. Greenslit attended the schools of his native town during his early youth, and later graduated from the Schofield Business College at Providence, R. I. At the age of seventeen he began teaching school, first in the North Society of Canterbury for two terms and later one term in Howard Valley in Hampton. The two succeeding years were spent as a clerk in the dry-goods store of Ely & Co., at Danielson, and in the same capacity Mr. Greenslit served in the general store of A. & W. Sprague in Central Falls, R. I. Later he engaged in a general store business at Cranston, R. I., where he remained for two years and then located for a year at East Providence. Mr. Greenslit then removed to Canterbury where he farmed during the following summer and taught school during the winter in the Hyde district. Mr. Greenslit then came to Hampton and engaged in farming on the "Jackson place" as it was locally known, although it belonged to his father, and here eleven years were spent alternating between farming and school teaching as the seasons changed. In 1888 Mr. Greenslit purchased the general store located on Hampton Hill, of the Guild estate, and successfully conducted this until he disposed of it in the fall of 1901.

On Sept. 3, 1873, Mr. Greenslit was married, in Canterbury, to Miss Mary Abigail Hyde, a native of Canterbury, daughter of Jirah Hyde. Three children were born to this union, namely: Maude A., who is a graduate of Dean Academy and the Emerson school in Boston; Julia M., who is the wife of F. L. Hall, of North Windham; and Harold, who died young.

In political life Mr. Greenslit has long been prominently identified with the Republican party. In 1888 he was appointed postmaster, holding the office until 1897 when he resigned in order to accept the office of Representative. During his legislative term of service he was a member of the committee on Appropriations. Mr. Greenslit has had a long and useful career on the board of selectmen, often being its chairman, has been assessor three terms, and is now one of the town auditors. For many years he has been school visitor. In the fall of 1901 Mr. Greenslit was appointed prosecuting agent for Windham county, to succeed O. S. Chappell, of Scotland, Conn., deceased. This was generally regarded as a very wise and well deserved appointment. Mr. Greenslit attends the Congregational Church, and has been a member of its ecclesiastical Society, serving as clerk and treasurer.

DANIEL PRESTON BURLINGHAM. Among the representatives of substantial New England families who have contributed to the well-being of Danielson, Windham county, may be mentioned Daniel Preston Burlingham, a resident of this part of Killingly since 1850, and, before his retirement in 1890, identified with grocery and farming interests. This venerable and public-spirited citizen was born in Edmeston, Otsego Co., N. Y., Jan. 21, 1818, and though at present four score and five years of age, still retains an alertness of mind and body possible only with those who have observed the laws of health and correct living.

Rodger Burlingame, the emigrating ancestor of the Burlinghams and Burlingames of this country, came to America and located at Stonington, Conn., whence he removed to the Providence Plantation, upon which he died. He was the owner of 500 acres of land, a part of which now comprises the town site of Providence, R. I., and which was inherited by his son Rodger, whose son Jonathan was the great-grandfather of Daniel Preston Burlingham. This Jonathan had a brother, Anson, who was none other than the famous diplomat and Chinese Minister.

Benjamin Burlingham, the grandfather of Daniel Preston, was born June 26, 1751, and was one of the signers of the petition to the General Court, asking that the family name be changed to Burlingham. Benjamin Burlingham was an interesting and capable man, a shoemaker by trade, but by preference a school teacher, and while engaged in the latter occupation received the munificent sum of $4 a week and board around. The latter years of his life were devoted to farming, and his death, in his eighty-third year, was occasioned by shock. He was twice married, and the children by the first wife were as follows: William, born Jan. 12, 1771, died young; Dorcas, born Sept. 28, 1773, married John Bates, a farmer and stone cutter, and died in Edmeston, N. Y.; Charles, born May 24, 1776, died young; and Charles, born May 18, 1778, was a farmer by occupation, and died in Edmeston, N. Y. Hannah Sparks, the second Mrs. Burlingham, and whom her husband survived, bore him eight children: Samuel, the father of Daniel Preston, born June 27, 1791; Sarah, born Aug. 10, 1794, married a Mr. Coomer, and lived in Killingly; Phila May, born in May, 1796, became the wife of Benjamin Chase, and died at an old age in Otsego county, N. Y.; Eunice, born July 4, 1802, became the wife of William Johnson, a farmer of Putnam; Waldo, born April 19, 1805, married, first, Miss Young, of Mashentuck, and second, Miss Martin, and during his active life was a farmer and miller of Putnam; Benjamin, born Sept. 17, 1808, married Calista Elliott, and was a farmer and miller in Brooklyn; Anson, born July 27, 1811, married and moved away from Killingly; and Almira, born Sept. 12, 1815, married Lucien Carpenter, and died in Putnam. Benjamin Burlingham was a man of great force of character and high moral integrity, and he was regarded as one of the bulwarks of the community in which he lived.

Samuel Burlingham, the father of Daniel Preston, was a native of East Killingly, where he lived on the paternal farm, and received such limited schooling as the time and place permitted. Previous to his marriage he worked out on the surrounding farms, but in 1816 he took his wife and two children in a cart and traveled 250 miles to Otsego county, N. Y. The trip consumed the greater part of a week, and the little family settled in the woods, on 160 acres of land, to the clearing of which the enterprising father set himself to accomplish. As he had served in the war of 1812, and been distinguished for valiant service, it is supposed that he received this land from the government, else he would have remained in his native community of Killingly, to which place he in reality returned, twelve years after going to New York. In Ballouville the family found work in a factory for a year, and then removed to East Greenwich, R. I., later to Phoenix, and in 1829 to Lippitt, where the father placed his three oldest boys in the factory, their total wages consisting of twenty-two shillings a week. As was customary with the children of that time, the father took these wages until shortly before the boys attained their majority. From the Lippitt factory Mr. Burlingham removed to the farm in East Killingly, which he had purchased from his father's estate, and there he lived for a number of years, eventually disposing of the farm to his son, Eratus, and himself locating in Danielson, where he purchased the house now owned by our subject. The death of Mr. Burlingham, caused by a fall sustained while assisting an unfortunate neighbor to shingle his barn, a fire having destroyed its predecessor, occurred April 26, 1862. He was a Democrat in early life, but the latter years of his life were spent in stanch support of the Republican party. He worshipped at the Baptist Church at East Killingly, in which he was an active worker, and toward the support of which he contributed as his means permitted.

In Foster, R. I., Mr. Burlingham married Randall Preston, born in Foster, April 11, 1795, a daughter of Esquire Daniel and Mary (Baker) Preston, the former of whom was a basket maker by trade, a prominent man in the community, and for many years justice of the peace. Mrs. Burlingham received a fall down stairs which resulted in her death at the home of her son, Eratus, in East Killingly, March 4, 1867. She was the devoted mother of the following children: (1) Erastus Nelson, born Aug. 19, 1812, married Miss Wood, worked as a mill hand in early life, but later turned his attention to farming near Providence, R. I., where his death occurred Jan. 18, 1864. (2) Eratus, born July 7, 1816, married, first, Polly B. Wright, second Ellen Jane Lamb, and third Mrs. Elizabeth E. Youngs. He was a mill worker in early life, but later became a self-educated Methodist minister, being a member of the Southern Massachusetts Conference until 1885, when he joined the Congregational Church, and while living in Danielson has been a "supply" minister for several years. (3) Daniel Preston was born Jan. 21, 1818. (4) Lewis, born Sept. 4, 1820, married Elizabeth Robbins, became the father of Samuel L. Burlingham, mentioned elsewhere in this work, and died Jan. 19, 1890, a resident of Willimantic. (5) Mary Melissa, born May 10, 1824, married Dr. Samuel Chase, and died in East Killingly, July 27, 1853. (6) William Brayton, born Nov. 10, 1825, married Zilpah Hammond, and was a shoemaker until shortly before his death, Jan. 18, 1852.

Daniel Preston Burlingham was about eight years of age when the family fortunes were shifted to Foster, R. I., and he, of course, accompanied the rest to Ballouville and Phoenix, where they lived for several years. He attended school at Edmeston, N. Y., the school house serving also as a blacksmith shop, and the furniture being of the crudest kind. The seats were made of slabs with the flat side up, and the legs were stakes at the corners and middle. At the age of fifteen years Mr. Burlingham saw the last of school, and this was at Warwick, R. I., where he had attended irregularly during the winter season. When ten years of age he began work in the cotton mill at Ballouville, his wages at the time being fifty cents a week, and his hours from daylight to dark, six months in the year, and during the winter time from daylight until eight o'clock in the evening. His wages went to his father until he became of age, and during his factory days he was identified with factories in Phoenix, R. I., Lippitt, Frozen Point, now River Point, Natick and Centerville. He had acquired the trade of mule spinner, and in this line was considered an expert. After his marriage he continued to live at Centerville for a couple of years, and then removed to Washington, in the town of Coventry, R. I., where he was employed in the cloth factory of John J. Kelton (in the estimation of Mr. Burlingham one of the best men he ever worked for), whose commodities were considered the best in the State of Rhode Island, and commanded by far the best price.

In 1846 Mr. Burlingham left Washington and located on his father's farm in East Killingly, and March 25, 1850, came to Danielson, and moved into the house in which he still lives. This same house has been his place of abode ever since, with the exception of a year and a half in another part of the village. As a means of livelihood in Danielson he purchased a grocery store of Daniel E. Day, located in Capt. Reynolds' block near the railway station. For a time he conducted an independent business, but later took Mr. Day into partnership, under the firm name of D. E. Day & Co. This arrangement was amicably and profitably maintained until Mr. Burlingham bought out Mr. Day and moved his place of business into the Exchange Block, where he remained until retiring from business in December, 1865. He sold his grocery to John and James Kies, who were very soon after burned out. From that time on Mr. Burlingham engaged in farming and dairying, having a milk route in the village, the latter being disposed of in 1900. Since then he has lived in comparative retirement, but has nevertheless maintained an interest in public affairs. He erected the block called after him on the corner of North Main and Academy streets in 1898, and two years later built the addition to the block.

On Nov. 22, 1838, Mr. Burlingham married Hannah, daughter of Lewis and Anna (Spencer) Bateman, who was born in East Greenwich, April 13, 1818. Mrs. Burlingham began to work in the mills when but ten years of age, her father having died when she was seven years old, leaving little for the maintenance of his family. She was the only child in the family, and continued to work in the factory up to the time of her marriage. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Burlingham, a daughter who died in infancy in 1842, and Daniel Lewis, born July 29, 1846. Daniel Lewis Burlingham began to learn the trade of printer in the Transcript office while attending school, the paper being owned at the time by J. Q. A. Stone, of Danielson. Close application, however, necessitated a change of occupation and residence, and a physician ordered him to St. Paul, Minn., where he worked at his trade for a number of years. He then located at Stillwater, Minn., and became a reporter for the St. Paul Pioneer Press, for which paper he was also local agent. He later engaged in the stationery and blank book business at No. 108 South Main street, Stillwater. By his marriage with Annie Josephine Kelley, Dec. 16, 1869, the following children were born: Marion Josephine, born July 1, 1872, married Harry Heisel, of West Superior, Wis., and has two children, of whom Harry was born Oct. 29, 1894, and Elizabeth Louise was born Oct. 17, 1897; Ellen Louise, born May 31, 1874; William Bateman, born Aug. 1, 1876; Lewis Preston, born May 27, 1879; Helen Cleveland, born Jan. 9, 1883, died July 18, 1885; George Hancock, born Sept. 23, 1884, died Aug. 8, 1901; Charles Oliver, born March 17, 1889; and Marjorie Greene, born Sept. 15, 1892.

A Republican in national politics, Daniel P. Burlingham has held many important offices in the town and county, in all of which he has faithfully served the best interests of the people who honored him with their confidence and appreciation. For two years he was prosecuting agent of Windham county, and during that time he has so fearlessly and wisely performed his exacting duties that two fine cows belonging to him were poisoned by those to whom he had denied leniency. That the town people approved of his strenuousness was evidenced by the starting of a subscription paper, which resulted in his being reimbursed for the loss of his cattle, although he did not need the money. For thirteen consecutive years he was grand juror, and a number of years later he served in the same capacity for four years. Mr. and Mrs. Burlingham joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Centerville in 1842, and by letter were transferred to the Danielson church in 1846. In Centerville Mr. Burlingham was class leader for two years, and during his residence in East Killingly was chosen class leader of the services held in the homes of the people of the denomination. Two years before his removal to Danielson he was chosen class leader of the Danielson church, and held the same position for the long period of forty years. The following is from a paper read by the Sunday-school historian on the occasion of an anniversary: "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness." The class of Mr. Burlingham, while the members have been changed, has always been known as class Number 1, and this class he still taught even when superintendent of the Sunday-school. Even at the present time, with the cares of so many years upon his head, he still teaches and exhorts as of old whenever his health permits, his wide and clear understanding of the Scriptures being of great help to those who listen. He was chosen a trustee of the church in 1851, and held the office for more than twenty-five years, his stewardship in the church covering a period of forty years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Burlingham retain their faculties to a remarkable extent, although the former has for some time been afflicted with rheumatism, and is unable to walk very well. They are the personification of all that is happy, jolly, hospitable and kindly, and their friends and well-wishers are legion.

TIMOTHY DIMOCK, M. D., late of Coventry, Tolland county, where his lifetime of three-quarters of a century was passed, closing on April 29, 1874, was a man of prominence and a citizen of great usefulness, not only to his immediate community but out and beyond town limits.

Dr. Dimock was born April 7, 1800, in Coventry, the second youngest child and only son of the eight children of Capt. Daniel Dimock, a respected farmer and a descendant of Elder Thomas Dimmock, an early emigrant to the American Colonies. Elder Thomas was of Dorchester, had, in 1639, a grant of land in Barnstable, and was admitted a freeman of the Colony in the same year. The name Dimmock is an old one in England, variously spelled, probably originally the same as Dymocke, the hereditary champion of England, an office now abolished, who at coronation owed the service of challenge to all competitors for the Crown. In this country the name is written Dymocke, Dimmock, Dimock, etc. This branch of the family usually write the name Dimmock, but many Dimock. It is probably a Welsh or West of England name, and some facts stated by Burke in his genealogy of the family favor the family tradition that Elder Thomas Dimmock's father was Edward Dimmock.

Elder Thomas Dimmock became the leading man of Barnstable, and in one way or another was connected with all the acts of the first settlers. He was townsman in 1643-44; was deputy to Plymouth in 1640, 1641, 1642, 1643, 1648, 1649 and 1650; was appointed a magistrate or judge in 1640, and was reappointed in 1644; was one of the Council of War in 1644, and later a lieutenant in the militia. He was ordained an elder in the Barnstable church, of which society he had been a member from its organization. Before his removal to Barnstable he had married Ann Hammond, and their children were: Timothy, Mehitabel and Shubael. Elder Dimmock died in 1658 or 1659. His widow Ann died probably in or before 1686. From this Elder Dimmock the late Dr. Timothy Dimock, of Coventry, was descended through Ensign Shubael, John, Timothy, Timothy (2), and Capt. Daniel Dimock.

(II) Ensign Shubael Dimock, baptized Sept. 15, 1644, married, in April, 1663, Joanna Bursley, daughter of John. He lived to a great age, and sustained the character and reputation of his father. He was much employed in town affairs; was selectman in 1685 and 1686; deputy to the General Court in 1685, 1686 and 1689, and ensign in the militia. About 1693 he removed to Mansfield, Conn., where he was known as Deacon Dimock. His death occurred in Mansfield, Oct. 29, 1732, when he was in the ninety-first year of his age. His wife, Joanna, lived to be eighty-three years of age, dying May 8, 1827. Their children were: Thomas, born in April, 1664; John, January, 1666; Timothy, March, 1668; Shubael, February, 1673; Joseph, September, 1675; Mehetabel, 1677; Benjamin, 1680; Joanna, March, 1682; and Thankful, Nov. 16, 1684.

(III) John Dimock, born in January, 1666, married in November, 1689, Elizabeth Lumbert, and in 1709 removed from Barnstable to Falmouth. Their nine children were as follows: Sarah, Ann, Mary, Theophilus, Timothy, Ebenezer, Thankful, Elizabeth and David.

(IV) Timothy Dimock, born July 16, 1698, in Barnstable, married, Aug. 15, 1723, Ann Bradford, a descendant of Gov. Bradford (record of marriage in Mansfield), and removed to Mansfield, Conn. Their children were: Ann, born May 23, 1724; Timothy, April 8, 1726; John, March 24, 1727-28; Joanna, Aug. 28, 1730; Josiah, March 2, 1732-33; Simeon, Sept. 19, 1735; Sylvanus, June 18, 1738; Oliver, Dec. 31, 1740; and Dan, May 13, 1743.

(V) Timothy Dimock (2), born April 8, 1726, married March 11, 1749-50, Desire Dimock (marriage and births of children of record in Coventry), and lived in the town of Coventry, Conn. The children of this marriage were: Desire, born Feb. 22, 1751; Eunice, Feb. 9, 1753; Anne, Sept. 15, 1754; Lois, May 12, 1756; Sibil, March 18, 1758; Lucy, March 22, 1760; Timothy, Aug. 22, 1762; Daniel, Feb. 20, 1765; Mason, June 22, 1767; Rhoda, Aug. 10, 1770; and Rogger, Aug. 5, 1772. The mother of this family was also a lineal descendant of Elder Thomas Dimock, of Barnstable, the American ancestor of the family, her line being through Ensign Shubael, Capt. Thomas and Thomas Dimock (2).

(VI) Capt. Daniel Dimock, born Feb. 20, 1765, was a farmer of Coventry. He married Nov. 16, 1786, Anna Wright, and their children were: Anna C., born Aug. 18, 1787; Parthena, April 9, 1789; Lucinda, March 18, 1791; Sallie, June 23, 1793; Harty, Dec. 24, 1794; Clara Maria, Sept. 14, 1796; Timothy, Jr., April 7, 1800, and Desiah, March 31, 1802.

(VII) In early life Dr. Timothy Dimock, besides attending the district school, studied the higher English branches and Greek and Latin with Rev. Chauncey Booth, then pastor of the First Congregational Church in Coventry, and afterward continued his studies at Bacon Academy, in Colchester, Conn., until he was fitted to enter Yale College. We next find him a medical student in the office of Dr. Chauncey Burgess, of Coventry, and subsequently for more than a year, a "good student," as his instructor called him, under the tuition of Professor Jonathan Knight, M. D., of New Haven. He attended two courses of lectures at the Medical Institution of Yale College, where he was graduated in 1823. Later he practiced his profession a few years at Granby, Mass., and in the spring of 1827 he settled in his native town, where he was a very successful practitioner for nearly forty-five years.

"Dr. Dimock was a man of superior mental endowments, which had been well improved by years of study and observation. He stood high as a man of ability and integrity. As a practitioner he was intelligent, judicious and self-reliant, attending faithfully to his own patients, and answering many calls as consulting physician. His field of practice was extensive, and the number of his patients always large. His good judgment, abundant common sense, and large fund of information, made him an able counselor, and, together with his uprightness of character and gentlemanly bearing, secured the confidence of his medical brethren and the community. He took a deep interest in public affairs, and his numerous friends manifested their confidence in him by placing him in several positions of trust, the duties of which he discharged in a manner creditable to himself and constituents. For some years he was surgeon of a regiment of Connecticut militia. He was a member of the House of Representatives in 1838, and was a senator for the Twenty-first District in 1846. He was a member of the Connecticut Medical Society, and in 1858 was elected a member of the standing committee for Examination of De-grees.

"The Doctor was endowed with a sound constitution. In person he was tall, symmetrical in form, and prepossessing in appearance. His pleasing address and cordial greeting gladdened many a heart, and whether in the sick room or social gathering, as one of his intelligent neighbors said, 'Dr. Dimock was a man who carried a great deal of light with him.'

"Dr. Dimock was twice married, first, to Miss Mary Ann Moody, of Granby, Mass., and last to Miss Laura F. Booth, daughter of Rev. Chauncey Booth, a lady of excellent ability and good sense. He was the father, by each marriage, of a son and two daughters. His last wife, died Jan. 15, 1872; none of the daughters survived. The elder son, Daniel W., during the last two years of the Civil war, was a volunteer in the Union service. After the close of the war he studied medicine and is now a practicing physician. The younger son, Henry F., graduated honorably at Yale College in 1863, studied law and was admitted to the Bar, and has since resided in the city of New York, where besides attaining success in his profession, he has acceptably filled important positions of trust and responsibility.

"Dr. Dimock was a Christian. For more than forty years he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and one of its most efficient supporters. During the last two years of his life, though confined to his home by increasing infirmities, he was usually cheerful, retaining his public spirit, and often participating in conversation upon matters of general interest. Sustained by the Christian's faith, he calmly anticipated the time of his departure. The ennobling influence of his example will long continue. He was a Freemason of high degree."

GRAVES. The Graves (or Greaves) family ancestry, gathered from various sources, is as follows:

Says the "History of Brunswick, Topsham and Harpswell, Maine," compiled by the Wheelers: "Four brothers of this name came to Topsham at different dates. They came from Falmouth, Maine, in the latter part of the seventeenth century. John Graves removed from Kittery to Falmouth and married Martha, daughter of Michael Mitton. The Topsham families are probably descended from him, though the connection has not been traced.

"Johnson Graves was born Feb. 1, 1732, and married (first) in Falmouth, Sarah, a sister of Samuel Staples, and (second) May 23, 1803, Mrs. Susannah Hobbs, formerly of Falmouth. He died Jan. 18, 1824. The children born to his first marriage were: Daniel, died in Falmouth in infancy; Elizabeth; John; William; Crispus, born in 1767. John Graves, a brother of Johnson, married in 1769, Sarah Boynton, of Falmouth. Their children were: Daniel; Sarah; Johnson, born Feb. 21, 1774; Elizabeth; John, married Margaret Gray; Esther; Levi. Samuel Graves, a brother of Johnson and John, had his intention to Mary Gooding of Topsham, recorded Nov. 29, 1770. He was one of the selectmen in 1773. He died Aug. 23, 1792. His children were: Ebenezer, born Aug. 21, 1775, died Aug. 14, 1832; Jacob; Thomas; Jabez; Susan, who married Joseph Jack of Bowdoinham; Molly, who married Ephraim Marriner; Ann, who married Isaac Jaquis, of Bowdoin. Joseph Graves, a brother of Johnson, John and Samuel, was a selectman in 1770, was a grantee with Samuel, of half of 1,000 acres of land, etc."

Buelter's History of Farmington, Maine, sets forth that: "The Graves family originated in Gascony, in southern France, and settled at Graveslines upon the English Channel. Crossing to England they had a home at Gravesend. In the sixteenth century Thomas Graves was created Baron of Gravesend. He left nine children, and a grandson, also Thomas Graves, who came to Boston under contract with the New England Company of London in 1630, as land surveyor, military engineer, and mineralogist. He laid out the town of Charlestown, and built bridges, fortifications, dams and mills. From this Thomas Graves was descended William Graves, born in Brentwood, N. H., June 19, 1704, and married Margaret Lowe. Joseph Graves, a son of William, born in Brentwood, N. H., in 1742, married in 1766, Lydia Taylor, and removed to Deerfield, N. H., March 13, 1766. Jonathan Graves, a son of Joseph, settled in Farmington, Maine, in the latter part of the eighteenth century."

WASHINGTON DANE GRAVES was born July 20, 1847, in Bowdoinham, Maine, and is a son of James and Martha (Preble) Graves. James Graves was born in December, 1811, in Bowdoinham, Maine, and died in the same town Nov. 26, 1893. By trade he was a spar maker, and followed his calling except for twenty years before his death, ten of which he was engaged in farming. The remaining ten years he spent retired from active business on account of delicate health. In politics James Graves was a Republican and was very stanch in his support of the party, but never desired nor sought office. Mr. Graves was a member of the Universalist Church, in which he took a very active part.

The mother of Washington Dane Graves was the first wife of James Graves, and a daughter of John and Mary (Hayden) Preble, her birth occurring in Bowdoinham, Maine. She was married about 1840, and she died in 1851 in her native town. To this union were born: Charles Ervin, born Sept. 27, 1841, now living in Menlo, Guthrie Co., Iowa, a farmer, married (first) Mary Randall, and after her death married a second time. Emeline Wilson, born May 20, 1843, married John O. Curtis, and died in Menlo, Iowa. Washington D., is the subject of this notice.

James Graves married (second) in 1852, Mary Dunning, of Harpswell, Maine, who died in 1890 in Bowdoinham, Maine. Extended mention of the children of this marriage occurs in the sketch of Frederick Hersey Graves.

The grandfather of Washington Dane Graves was Johnson Graves, who according to family records married a lady whose surname was Densmore.

Washington Dane Graves was educated in the common schools of his native town, but when he attained the age of twenty he left Bowdoinham and made two deep water voyages, going around Cape Horn. On his return from his first voyage, realizing that his education was incomplete he attended a private academy at Litchfield, Maine, for one term. By this time Mr. Graves had attained the age of twenty-two and he again made a voyage to Liverpool, and probably would have continued his seafaring life longer had he not been sent for by his uncle, E. W. Preble, of Stafford, Conn. In August, 1870, he came to Stafford and entered the wheel shops of Mr. Preble, remaining there seven years as foreman of the shops. At this time he turned his attention to the carpenter trade, which he had learned at sea, and has since that time been successfully engaged in that calling. Among the comfortable and well-built houses Mr. Graves has erected the residences of Charles G. Ellis and Richard S. Hicks are especially admired. Mr. Graves also owns a fine little farm of thirty-five acres near Orcuttville, on which he carries on general farming in addition to his work as a carpenter and builder.

On June 11, 1872, Mr. Graves was married to Edith McIntire, a daughter of Loren and Lomira (Johnson) McIntire, of West Stafford. Mr. McIntire was a carpenter, but is now deceased, as is also his wife. To Mr. and Mrs. Graves have been born: (1) Martha Preble, born April 27, 1873, married, Oct. 26, 1892, Franklin Augustus Lasbury, of Stafford Hollow, a wool sorter. They have no children. (2) Alonzo McIntire, born July 20, 1877, married Aug. 23, 1899, Hannah VanHeynigan. He is a machinist of New London, for D. E. Whiton, and has two children. (3) Alice Lomira, born May 28, 1882, is at home. (4) Frederick Johnson, born May 6, 1885. (5) Mabel Emeline, born June 30, 1887. (6) Eleanor, born Sept. 11, 1900. (7) Fredric W., born Oct. 11, 1902.

The political opinions of Mr. Graves have always been in accordance with the doctrines of the Republican party, whose platform and candidates he supports upon all occasions. In recognition of his worth as a man, as well as of his loyalty to the party and his general fitness for public office, Mr. Graves has been selected to fill several positions of trust and responsibility within the gift of the people. He has served most acceptably as a member of the board of selectmen, for several terms on the school committee, as constable and as a grand juror, giving entire satisfaction in every instance.

Socially Mr. Graves is connected with Wolcott Lodge, No. 40, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford Hollow, of which he has served as steward. Mr. Graves attends the Congregational Church of West Stafford and gives liberally of his means and time towards its support. Mr. Graves is one of the substantial and representative men of Stafford, and no one in the entire community stands higher in the estimation of his fellow townsmen. In every walk of life he has proven himself worthy of public and personal confidence, and what he has accomplished in the past is a promise for greater things in the future which now opens brightly before him.

FREDERICK HERSEY GRAVES was born March 20, 1860, in Bowdoinham, Maine, and is a son of James and Mary (Dunning) Graves.

James Graves was twice married, and mention of his children by his first wife, Martha Preble, may be found in the sketch of Washington Dane Graves. James Graves married for his second wife, Mary Dunning, the mother of Frederick Hersey Graves, in 1852. The birth of Mrs. Graves occurred in Harpswell, and she died in 1890, in Bowdoinham, Maine. To this marriage were born: James Clement, born Sept. 14, 1853, died in February, 1901, in Dexter, Maine. He was a weaver by trade, who married (first) Priscilla Mains, and his second wife's name was Myra. William Johnson, born Aug. 16, 1855, is a farmer on the old homestead in Maine, and married Abbie Meriner. Mary Alice, born Jan. 28, 1857, resides in Nantucket, unmarried. Frederick Hersey is the subject of this sketch.

The education of Frederick Hersey Graves was obtained in his native town, and when he was sixteen he began to learn the trade of carpenter, at which he worked until February, 1894, when he removed to Stafford, in the village of Orcuttville. There he has since resided, and has become one of the most reliable and efficient carpenters and builders of that place. His own pleasant home in Orcuttville was erected by him in 1894, and is a good sample of what he is capable of accomplishing.

On May 24, 1894, Mr. Graves was married to Mary Hayden Preble, the daughter of Ervin W. and Eliza (Rogers) Preble, of Orcuttville, and no children have been born of this union.

Mr. Graves is connected with the K. P., Kennebec Lodge, No. 142, in Bowdoinham, Maine, and is also a member of Manufacturers and Mechanics Lodge, No. 62, I. O. O. F., of Lewiston, Maine, and a member of the Masonic order, Village Lodge, No. 32, A. F. & A. M., of Bowdoinham, Maine. The church affiliations of Mr. Graves are with the Congregational Church of West Stafford, which he attends. In politics Mr. Graves is a staunch Republican.

LOUIS OVIDE MORASSE, M. D. In the scheme of life we find two things that make for discontent. One is lack of harmony with one's environment, the other is dissatisfaction with one's present surroundings. Of these, the first may be overcome, the second may be put out of one's life.

A congenial environment is not one of the necessities of life; present opportunities if rightly used are as great as the soul need ask. To be strong the mind and soul must fight something, overcome something. Muscle can not be gained on a bed of eider down. A great part of the strength of life consists in the degree with which we get into harmony with our appointed environment, and it must ever be recognized as true that the man who attains any worthy success in life is he who makes the most of his surroundings and bends existing opportunities to the accomplishment of what will and definite purpose suggest.

It is a pleasure to review in even a desultory way the life history of one who has harmonized his life with the conditions that exist, and has bent them to his will, making them prolific of good and of personal advancement in legitimate lines. Louis Ovide Morasse, M. D., stands today as one of the successful and representative physicians and surgeons of the city of Putnam, Windham county, and his accomplishment has been such as to entitle him to the honor and confidence born of personal integrity. Rather than being the victim of circumstances, he has been their master, and the high standing which he has attained in the noble profession to which he devotes his attention, and in the community at large, indicates to what extent he has made his life worthy in all its relations. What more consonant than that such men should be given while living, a place in the pages of historical productions of this nature, so that others may learn and profit by their examples and through knowledge of the elements which have entered into and conserved their success.

Louis Ovide Morasse is of French lineage, as the name implies, and in the genealogy for generations we find men of distinction and sterling character and women of gentle refinement. In connection we can not but revert to the pertinent statement of Macaulay, who said: "A man who takes no pride in the achievements of remote ancestors will never accomplish anything worthy of being remembered with pride by his remote descendants." Dr. Morasse was born in the city of Sorel, in the province of Quebec, Canada, Nov. 15, 1860, being the third son of Louis Morasse, who was born in the same town, Sept. 16, 1837.

Louis Morasse, father of Dr. Morasse, still maintains his home in Sorel, where he was mayor for eight years, having been elected to the office by acclamation and resigning it finally by reason of impaired health. He served as mayor from 1887 until 1895, and has long been one of the honored and influential men of his native city. Louis Morasse has held other official preferments, having been a member of the council and the board of aldermen, and having been president of numerous civic and religious societies with which he has been identified. For eighteen years he followed the vocation of mariner in the employ of one company, being captain on boats plying between Quebec and Montreal. He was also engaged in the brokerage business for a number of years, but is now living retired, having nearly reached the Psalmist's span of three score years and ten. Louis Morasse is one of the largest property-owners in Sorel and he has ever been known as a progressive and public-spirited citizen. In politics he supports the Liberal party, of which Premier Laurier of the Dominion is the leading representative. His religious faith is that of the Catholic Church, of which he is a devoted member and communicant, and in which he served for a number of years as a member of the board of trustees of his parish.

On Jan. 7, 1857, Louis Morasse was united in marriage to Miss Annette Pouliot, who was born in St. Ours, Quebec, Canada, in the year 1835, being the only daughter of Louis and Catherine (Millette) Pouliot, representatives of prominent old French families of the province of Quebec. Mr. Morasse was summoned into eternal rest in April, 1887, and of the family of children we enter the following brief record: Louis Adelard died at the age of six years; Leopold died at the age of five; Louis Ovide is the immediate subject of this review; Charles passed away in infancy, as did also Charles Edmond; Louis Leopold is a successful agriculturist of Ste. Anne de Sorel, Province of Quebec; and George Edmond is a machinist, residing in Worcester, Massachusetts.

The grandfather of the Doctor in the agnatic line was Christian Mouet de Moras, who was born in 1815 in St. Pierre les Becquets, Province of Quebec, and who died in Sorel, March 9, 1854, at the age of thirty-nine years. He devoted his life to the vocation of a mariner, and was known as an able and skilled navigator, having been a pilot during the greater portion of his active career. He married Catherine Beland, in Sorel, where she died Aug. 31, 1872, at the venerable age of seventy-four years. They had children as follows: Louis Morasse, father of Dr. Morasse; William, who is now a distinguished painter of Farnham, Quebec; Lena, the widow of Onesime Cloutier and a resident of Three Rivers, Quebec; Marie, the widow of David Page, of Sorel, Canada; Catherine Falardeau and Louise Lamothe, both married and residing in the city of Worcester, Mass. Tracing the lineage back still another generation we find that the paternal great-grandfather of the Doctor was Christopher Mouet de Moras, who was likewise a mariner by profession and who lived to a venerable age, having been married to Marguerite Nau, Aug. 12, 1805. He was a son of Christian Mouet de Moras, whose was also a seafaring life, and who married Marguerite Oui dit St. Laurent. The maternal grandfather of Dr. Morasse died May 20, 1881, his wife having passed away Aug. 15, 1873, at the age of eighty years.

Dr. Louis Ovide Morasse secured his preliminary educational discipline in the parochial schools of his native town, Sorel, and thereafter became a student in the College of the Sacred Heart, in that place, where he completed an academic or preparatory course. He was next matriculated in the St.

Joseph Seminary, in the picturesque old city of Three Rivers, Canada, and later went to Montreal, where he completed a literary course under the preceptorship of a private Parisian tutor, Prof. Leblond de Brumath, now president of the Academy du Plateau of Montreal, Canada. That the scholastic advantages of Dr. Morasse were of exceptional excellence is evident from the fact that he was next permitted to continue his studies for two years in the Laval University, Montreal, after which he began the work of technical preparation for his chosen profession by entering the medical department of the Victoria University, of Cobourg, Ontario, where he was graduated with distinction as a member of the class of 1884, receiving his degree of Doctor of Medicine. During the year following his graduation Dr. Morasse was engaged in practice as a surgeon in the Sixty-fourth regiment of the English army, a Canadian regiment, and at the expiration of the time noted, he resigned to go to Southbridge, Mass., by special request. There he was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession from January, 1885, until December, 1887, when he came to Putnam, Conn., to succeed Dr. F. X. Barolet. His distinctive ability as a physician and surgeon and his pleasing personality soon caused his budding professional prestige to mature into definite precedence, and he has continued to enjoy a large and representative practice to the present day, having been absent from the city only during the year 1891, when he traveled through various sections of the country for the benefit of his wife's health.

In his political adherence the Doctor is found staunchly arrayed in support of the principles and policies of the Republican party, and in February, 1898, he was elected city physician of Putnam. He has served for the past four years in this capacity, and has also been a valued member of the board of health. He is identified with the national, State and county medical societies, is a devoted student of the sciences of medicine and surgery, keeping in touch with the advances made, and being a subscriber to the best medical journals of the day. His diplomas were indorsed by the University of the State of New York, April 27, 1891, after a severe examination at Albany, N. Y. He is visiting physician to the Day-Kimball hospital in Putnam, having held this position since the establishment of that institution. He was appointed a notary public by Governors Lounsburry, McLean and Chamberlain, and in 1901 was elected to the office of justice of the peace in which he is still serving. The Doctor is a popular and prominent member of various social organizations in Putnam, having been a charter member of Court City of Putnam, Foresters of America, of which he served as physician for several years; and he is also identified with the Order of Artisans, C. F. and the Knights of Columbus (in each of which he has held official preferment), the St. Jean Baptist Union, and the A. O. U. W. The Doctor is an enthusiastic supporter of the Franco-

American Conventions in Connecticut, in the interests of French-speaking people, and he was honored with the office of president of the congress of this body for the fifteenth annual session, which was held in Putnam, Sept. 26 and 27, 1900. As a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Doctor has served as organist of the local lodge, being a devotee of the divine art and being recognized as a talented musician. He has a number of attractive compositions to his credit, his scores showing both clearness of technical knowledge and a fine musical appreciation.

In conclusion we will touch briefly upon the domestic chapter in the history of Dr. Morasse. On May 3, 1886, Dr. Morassé was united in marriage to Miss Zelia Odile Bronze de St. Roch, of Glens Falls, New York, where she was born Jan. 8, 1861, a daughter of Edward and Louise (Donais) Bronze de St. Roch. Mrs. Morasse is a lady of gracious presence, and the attractive family home is a center of refinement and cordial hospitality. Mrs. Morasse is an active member of A. G. Warner Corps, No. 38, W. R. C., and a devoted member of the Women's Board of the Day-Kimball hospital. Dr. and Mrs. Morasse are both direct descendants of French noble families which emigrated to America in the eighteenth century. They have no children.

WILLIAM ANDREW COMINS, a noted business man of Stafford, Tolland county, and one of the leading citizens of that community, was born in Willimantic, Conn., April 6, 1840, and is a son of David E. Comins, who died in Canterbury, Connecticut.

David E. Comins was connected with the cotton mills of Willimantic until several years before his death when he became a farmer. In politics he was a Whig, and served as a constable in Willimantic. Emily Austin, who became his wife, died in Canterbury, having become the mother of the following children: (1) Sanford A., a stone mason in Willimantic; (2) Rosa L., the wife of William Thompson, an employe of the Willimantic Linen Company in the blacksmith department; (3) George E., a soldier in the West; (4) William A.; (5) Albert, who died in a Rebel prison at Salisbury, N. C.; (6) Emma F., wife of John Barnard, a member of the Hartford Fire Department; (7) David E., a general store keeper at Alton, Missouri; (8) Charles W., living in Stafford, where he is a wood worker in the employ of his brother, William A. Comins.

William Andrew Comins was born in Willimantic, Conn., and had his education in the local schools, which, however, he had to leave at the early age of twelve, and go to work in the mill. From time to time until he reached manhood he had opportunities for brief attendance at school. While William was still a boy of seventeen he learned the trade of machine forging and general blacksmithing in the shop of the Willimantic Linen Company, and from 1859 to 1865 was employed at his trade in the shops of the Star Arms Company in Lowell, Mass. For a year Mr. Comins was at Binghamton, N. Y., and another at Yonkers, N. Y. For three years he worked at Chicopee Falls for the Massachusetts Arms Company, and for a year at Amherst, Mass., for the Roper Repeating Arms Company. In 1865 Mr. Comins entered the shop of James Fisk Brooks, the manufacturer of road scrapers at Stafford. He remained there a year, and in 1867 established a factory for the making of patent road scrapers, which Mr. Brooks disposed of to the trade. The same year Mr. Comins began the making of carriages and wagons; employing at first one assistant, his establishment has gradually grown until it occupies a space of 9,400 feet and employs eight hands. Mr. Comins makes a specialty of Concord and light and heavy team wagons, and has won an enviable reputation for the quality and finish of his work. There are also employed in this plant four blacksmith shoers of oxen and light and heavy horses. An important branch of Mr. Comins' business is the repairing and painting of wagons and carriages. The entire working of the plant is under his personal supervision.

Mr. Comins is a Republican. He has served as a burgess for several years and was warden one year. One year he was on the board of assessors, and he was one of the first directors and an original incorporator of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association. In the Methodist Church he is a faithful working member, and has been steward for several years. Mr. Comins belongs to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., of Stafford.

Mr. Comins and Julia Louise, a daughter of James Fisk Brooks, of Stafford, were married in November, 1860. To this union were born: (1) Eugene Henry died in infancy. (2) William Price died in infancy. (3) Albert Olin. (4) Sarah Louise, a teacher in the public schools, graduated from the local high school and took the training course in the Worcester Normal. (5) James Brooks graduated from the local high school and from Wilbraham Academy, after which he took a four years' course in Middletown, from which he was graduated in 1896. At the Hahnemann Medical School, in Philadelphia, James B. Comins took a course in medicine, graduating in June, 1899. He opened an office on State street, in Springfield, Mass., where he is doing well. (6) Caroline Emma graduated from the Stafford high school and the normal at Westfield, Mass., taught school in Stafford for several years and is now teaching in Springfield. (7) Grace Belle, graduated from the local high school, and from the normal at Willimantic; for a time she was a teacher but is not now engaged in the school room.

ALBERT O. COMINS, son of William A. and Julia L. (Brooks) Comins, was born in Stafford. He had his schooling in the common schools which he left when sixteen years old to work in his father's carriage shop until he was twenty-three. At that age he entered the Philadelphia Dental College, from which he was graduated in 1891. For a few months he was employed by L. D. Stebbins, a noted dentist of Springfield, Mass., but the year of his graduation he opened an office for the practice of dentistry in Stafford Springs, where he has won marked success in his chosen calling. The dental examination in Massachusetts has been taken by him, and he is licensed to practice in that State. Dr. Comins belongs to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, A. F. & A. M., which he has served as secretary one year. In his politics he is a Republican.

Dr. Comins and Miss Elizabeth Maria Tobin, a daughter of William and Elizabeth Maria (Hartwell) Tobin, were married April 18, 1900, and to them has come one child, William Albert, born April 16, 1901. Dr. Comins bought out Dr. J. E. Middleton in 1897, and now has a thoroughly equipped dental office in Johnson's block at the corner of Main street and Furnace Avenue.

CHARLES NEWELL CHANDLER. The Chandler family is descended from one of those immortal few whose representatives built wiser than they knew on the "rock bound coasts" of New England. Could the veil be lifted and the successive generations pass in review, many of the name of Chandler would shine out resplendent in the throng of gathered worthies. The members of the family farthest removed in point of time furnish little but a bare array of dates, owing, of course, to the fact that the historian is dependent almost entirely upon the old ecclesiastical and public records, which give little but the bare date of an event. Sometimes an early writer speaks of deeds as well as dates, but writings of this character are few. When the fathers wrote, it was about matters of state or religion, and not of commonplaces.

The founding of the Chandler family in America was due to the exodus of the early Puritans in the first half of the seventeenth century from England on account of the exactions of Charles I. The first of the name to arrive was William Chandler, his wife Annis, whose maiden name was probably Alcock, and their four children, who are of record in Roxbury, Mass., as early as 1637. Both William and his wife were admitted to the church in that year. Mr. Chandler was a small landed proprietor of the town, where he took the freeman's oath in 1640, "lived a godly life," and died in 1641. His widow then married John Parmenter, and died March 15, 1683.

John Chandler, born probably in England, came with his parents to Roxbury. He married, Feb. 16, 1658, Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of William and Anna (Mantel) Douglas, of Ipswich and Boston, Mass., and New London, Conn. Both John Chandler and his wife, Elizabeth, were admitted to the Roxbury church. Mr. Chandler removed to New Roxbury, and later to Woodstock, Conn., in 1686, residing first just north of Sawmill brook, which place for generations remained in the family. He served as selectman in 1693-94, and was often moderator of town meetings and active in town affairs generally. He was one of six persons who purchased of Capt. James Fitch, of Norwich, a tract of some 1,500 acres in Windham county. Mr. Chandler died April 15, 1703, and his wife in 1705, at New London, Connecticut.

Hon. John Chandler, born April 16, 1665, in Roxbury, was the next in line. He first married, Nov. 10, 1692, Mary, daughter of Deacon John Raymond, born March 12, 1671-72, and a native of New London, Conn. She died April 8, 1711, and Mr. Chandler then married, Nov. 14, 1711, Esther Britman, widow of Palsgrave Alcock. At the organization of the town of Woodstock, Nov. 27, 1690, Mr. Chandler was chosen town clerk and teacher in the school. He served several years as clerk, and was selectman in 1694. Later he was a resident for some years of New London, where he married and where several of his children were born. Returning to Woodstock, he resided in the south part of the town, and on April 3, 1703, he was appointed town surveyor, was for several years a representative in the General Court at Boston, and became a very prominent public man. He was a colonel of militia, and in 1731, on the organization of Worcester county, he became probate and common pleas judge, and was commissioned chief justice, which office he held until the time of his death. He had held other public trusts. For nearly forty years he was a commissioner of the peace, and for seven years he was His Majesty's counsel. His death occurred Aug. 10, 1743. One of his sons was Judge Thomas Chandler, of Chester, Vt. Another was Judge John Chandler, of Worcester.

William Chandler, born in New London, Conn., Nov. 3, 1698, married, May 22, 1725, Jemima Bradbury, who was born Jan. 25, 1703, a daughter of Thomas Bradbury, of Salisbury. He resided in that part of Killingly which is now the town of Thompson, and on the west line of Chandler Hill, where he owned some thousand acres of land. By occupation he was a farmer. He also followed surveying, and is mentioned as having been a member of the church.

Theophilus Chandler, the next in line, was born Feb. 13, 1732. His first wife, whom he married May 26, 1763, was Elizabeth Frink, and after her death he married, probably Sept. 1, 1773, Abigail Ballard. His first wife was the daughter of Thomas Frink, of Barre, Mass., and she died in Petersham, Mass., March 23, 1771. Mr. Chandler was for some years a resident of that town, and was a representative from there in the Legislature. He returned to Thompson, Conn., and built a fine home on Chandler Hill, where he died, July 31, 1816, at eighty-four years of age.

Lieutenant Winthrop Chandler, the sixth in succession, was born April 4, 1764, at Petersham, Mass., and on May 30, 1793, was married to Mary Morse, of Woodstock. They lived in Thompson, where he was occupied in farming on Chandler Hill. His wife was born April 5, 1772, daughter of Abel Morse, of Woodstock, and she died May 10, 1852, her husband passing away Oct. 21, 1829.

Charles Chandler, the seventh in line, was born Oct. 1, 1797, and first married Betsy Aldrich. Upon her death he married, Feb. 22, 1853, Harriett Newell Hall, who was born Feb. 27, 1820, and was the daughter of Paris Hall, of Oxford and Uxbridge, Mass. Charles Chandler passed his entire life time as a cultivator of the soil on the old Chandler homestead, and died April 30, 1881. He lies buried in the East Woodstock Cemetery. He was rather a quiet and reserved man, in political belief a Democrat, and a man who was highly respected in Windham county. Mrs. Chandler died Oct. 1, 1890. She was the mother of two children, Charles Newell, the immediate subject of this sketch; and David Hall, born Dec. 7, 1855, who married first Eleanor Tenney, and second Eva Brayman, and resides in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Charles Newell Chandler was born Jan. 7, 1854, near New Boston, on the old Chandler homestead. His education was acquired in the district school and at Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass. He has passed his entire life time on the old homestead, where he has for several years, besides conducting the farm, been engaged as a manufacturer of and dealer in all kinds of lumber. He operates a good sawmill for this purpose, and also owns considerable timber land in Woodstock and Thompson. He also acts as agent for the large firm of Rogers & Hubbard, of Middletown. Mr. Chandler is unmarried. In political belief he subscribes to the principles of Jefferson, and has followed closely in the footsteps of his illustrious ancestry in the building of an upright character. In 1890 and 1891 he served on the board of selectmen, has been assessor and justice of the peace of the town of Thompson. He is quite active in the Windham county agricultural affairs, being a member of Woodstock Agricultural Society, and also of Windham Agricultural Society, in both of which he is a director.

RUSSELL THRALL, a retired farmer now residing in Ellington, Tolland county, is spending his last years in the well-deserved peace and comfort which fitly follow a long and active life. The last of an old family in the town Mr. Thrall is one of its most honorable and successful representatives. The family and ancestral history not found here is contained in the sketch of the late William Thrall which appears elsewhere.

Horatio Thrall, the father of Russell, was born in Ellington, April 20, 1793, and was reared as a farmer. He erected a house on the old place, opposite that occupied by his father, upon attaining majority. This farm he sold to his sons Russell and Norman, and bought the farm in East Windsor, then owned by his father-in-law Capt. Oliver Clark. To this farm Mr. Thrall removed and made it his home the rest of his life. The house and barn now standing he built and made other extensive and valuable improvements. His death occurred when he was seventy-eight years old, and he was buried in Ellington. Mr. Thrall was peculiarly gifted as a musician, playing almost any instrument; he taught singing school in many places in Tolland and Hartford counties, and he possessed a magnificent voice. He accumulated a good property, enjoying a competence in his last years, and he had a large circle of acquaintances.

Horatio Thrall's wife, Sybil Clark, was born in East Windsor, a daughter of Capt. Oliver and Azubah (Barber) Clark, the former of whom was a soldier in the Continental army. Mrs. Thrall survived her husband four years, and died at the age of seventy-eight. Their children were: (1) Aurelia, who died young; (2) Russell; (3) Norman, who married Harriet Grant, daughter of Warren Grant, of South Windsor, is a retired farmer and lives in South Manchester, Conn.; (4) Reuben, who married Lydia Parsons, was for years a farmer and is now a resident of Vernon; (5) Moses, who married Adelaide Pinney, daughter of Loren Pinney, of Ellington, is a farmer in East Windsor; (6) Edwin, who married Justina Grant, daughter of Horace Grant, is a farmer of East Windsor; (7) Clarissa, who married Augustus Lancaster, of Tolland, died in East Hartford, her funeral taking place in Windsorville; (8) Charles, who married Rosetta Grant, daughter of Warren Grant, lived in Ellington and East Windsor, and was buried in Windsorville.

Russell Thrall was born in Ellington Oct. 4, 1825. There he attended the district school during two and a half months in the winter, and worked on the farm during the busy season until he was seventeen years old. After leaving school, he assisted his father on the home farm during a number of years, at the end of which time his accumulated savings—the result of the most careful and painstaking economy—amounted to $1,300. This was the foundation on which he was to make a start in life, but reverses attended him at the very beginning of his career. His money was lost, and this imperiled the home which he had intended for his young bride. The young couple were made of heroic stuff, however, and undauntedly faced the future. In five years Russell Thrall was able to buy out his brother Norman, and the farm which had thus come into his possession as the result of pluck and hard work was subsequently increased until at one time he owned 200 acres. Mr. Thrall followed farming until 1888, when he purchased a home in Ellington Center and left the farm in charge of his son Judson H. When his son died Mr. Thrall sold the place.

On Dec. 20, 1849, Mr. Thrall was married to Miss Charlotte S. Grant, who was born April 25, 1827, in South Windsor, a daughter of Hiram and Mary (Osmer) Grant, and a sister of Sheldon J. Grant, of Wapping and South Windsor. To Russell Thrall and his wife came the following children: (1) Ralph H., born Nov. 20, 1851, was married to Hattie Smith, daughter of Charles and Cornelia (Armstrong) Smith. For years he was a well-known farmer in Ellington where he took a prominent part in the Grange, and for a time held the office of selectman. He died Dec. 26, 1892, leaving children as follows: Charlotte C., born Oct. 30, 1876; Charles R., born Oct. 9, 1879 (graduated from the Rockville high school in 1898; then attended Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and from 400 pupils at the latter institution he was recommended by the teachers for a responsible position with the American Express Co. He held this position for two years, when failing eyesight necessitated a change. He was then employed a year by the La Roach Electrical Co., and is now at his home in Ellington, in the hope that complete rest will restore his impaired vision); Edna Alma, born Oct. 4, 1887, is attending the Rockville high school. (2) Estella M., born July 12, 1853, died June 10, 1866. (3) Eddie H., born May 10, 1856, died Jan. 12, 1866. (4) Judson H., born July 27, 1858, married Emma Warner, daughter of Treat M. and Lucina (Lawrence) Warner, of Ellington; he farmed the old homestead until his death in 1894, and his widow now lives in Rockville. They had one son Clayton. (5) Ella May, born July 10, 1863, died Jan. 22, 1866. (6) Merritt G., born March 6, 1868, died April 25, 1871.

Mr. Thrall is a Democrat. He served as assessor for two years, and was a member of the board of selectmen three years, being chairman two years. In 1879 he was elected to the State Legislature, where he was appointed on the committee on Insurance. For a year he was on the board of relief and for several years on the school committee. Mr. and Mrs. Thrall both belong to the Windsorville M. E. Church. They are highly respected and successful, and in the good results of their years of industry Mr. Thrall feels that his wife has been an important factor.

SAMUEL MONROE HARWOOD is an honored and venerable character familiar to all in Stafford Springs, Tolland Co., Conn., where his long and useful life commands the hearty respect of the community. He was born June 23, 1822, in West Stafford, a son of Samuel Harwood.

Samuel M. Harwood was born in West Stafford where he was educated in the local schools and when he was eighteen years of age took up the work of life by engaging in farming on the family homestead. This place has come to him and he has occupied the same house sixty-two years. The farm contains 175 acres and is in a high state of cultivation. It comprises also an extensive and valuable timber tract.

Mr. Harwood belongs to the Congregational Church, and is a Republican. Though he has repeatedly declined political positions he has twice served on the Board of Relief.

Mr. Harwood was married Dec. 2, 1846, at Stafford, by the Rev. Elliot Palmer, to Miss Emeline Nancy Dimmock. Mrs. Harwood was born Jan. 15, 1827, in Ellington, and died Sept. 7, 1896, in West Stafford. She was the daughter of Harvey and Harriet (Newell) Dimmock of Stafford, and became the mother of the following family: (1) Nancy Francelia, born Jan. 17, 1848, married Alvin M. Gold, May 10, 1867, and has one child, Mabel Francelia, born Oct. 5, 1873. (2) Love Rosalia, born Nov. 29, 1849, married Henry Lufner June 14, 1869, a machinist in D. E. Whiton's machine shop in New London, and is the mother of Mabel Rosalia, born Oct. 27, 1870, died Jan. 7, 1871, and Forest Dimmock, born Nov. 28, 1876. (3) Pliny Monroe, born Dec. 30, 1853, married June 23, 1875, Addie O. Weatherby, and is now a machinist in the shop of D. E. Whiton, at New London, Conn. They have children: Pliny Leroy, born March 25, 1876, now a clerk in the Savings Bank, and married to Rowena Mossett Lee, June 6, 1900; Ernest Monroe, born March 16, 1878, a clerk in the office of The Eastern Shipbuilding Company, of New London; and Ida May, born June 22, 1884, now at home. (4) Ella Josephine, born Dec. 6, 1859, married Herman A. Lovett, Oct. 22, 1890. He was a farmer in Ellington, and they had the following children: Harry Richmond, born July 29, 1891, died Aug. 6, 1892; and Herman Leslie, born June 30, 1894. Herman A. Lovett died April 18, 1902, and his family now reside in West Stafford.

ALBERT S. TRUESDELL (deceased), for over forty years a prominent contractor and builder of Putnam, Windham county, comes of a family long known in Windham county, his grandfather, Samuel Truesdell, and his father, Samuel Truesdell (2), having been residents of that section.

Samuel Truesdell (1), a shoemaker by trade, married twice and lived in Woodstock. By his marriages there were seven children: Seth, Samuel, Augustus, Rachel, Esther, Jerusha and Lois.

Samuel Truesdell (2), a well known contractor and builder, born in Woodstock, April 5, 1801, resided at several different places in the county. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade which he followed for many years. On Dec. 16, 1823, he married Harriet Sharp, who was born in Pomfret, May 25, 1796; she died in Southbridge, Mass., Jan. 30, 1879. By this union there were seven children: (1) Jerusha F., born Oct. 18, 1824, married Hiram Weaver, of Plainfield (deceased), and resides in Haverhill, Mass. She has two children, Carlos, and Annette. (2) George S., a carpenter, born in Woodstock, Jan. 24, 1826, married Susan Davis (deceased) and they had two children, Harriet, and Charles. Mr. Truesdell died in Southbridge, Mass., in January, 1894. (3) Mary A., born April 12, 1827, married Walter D. Torrey of Putnam, and after his death Henry Russell of Arcadia, Mo. Her children were: Harriet, George, Howard, and Russell. (4) Harriet E., born in Thompson, May 24, 1828, married Almanson Herendeen, of Putnam, Conn., and they had one child, Myron. (5) Ellen F. (deceased), born in Pomfret, Sept. 25, 1829, married Albert Johnson, (deceased), of Putnam and they had three children: Maria, Carrie and Annie. (6) Albert, is mentioned below. (7) Samuel Storrs, a carpenter, born in Hampton, May 9, 1835, never married. He died in Killingly, Nov. 11, 1860.

For some time Mr. Truesdell made his home in Thompson, Conn., and later in Killingly and Norwich. He was an expert workman and his services as a carpenter were greatly in demand. In time he rose to the position of a contractor and builder. The Methodist Church in Manchester was erected under his direction. In religious and public affairs Mr. Truesdell always evinced a keen interest. He belonged to the Congregational Church, and in politics affiliated with the Republicans. He was not, however, an office seeker. Personally, a short man of average weight, he was always healthy and robust and possessed an unlimited capacity for work. In character he evinced the strictest honesty and the highest integrity.

Albert Simmons Truesdell was born in Pomfret, July 24, 1831. At the age of ten he moved with his parents to Killingly and in the school of that place and in Danielson Academy—which he attended for one term—he procured, by the time he was fifteen, a very fair education. For a life work he chose the carpenter's trade, and at the age of sixteen entered his father's shop as an apprentice. By strict attention to business he readily mastered all the details of his craft and became an expert workman. For the first ten years of his business life he worked much of the time with his father and his uncle, Augustus Truesdell, a contractor. At the age of twenty he went to Rockville, Conn., where he made his home for about eight years. Here in company with his uncle he assisted in the erection of the Catholic church, the Kellogg and Corbin residences, and many other buildings. During this period of his life he also worked at various places in Connecticut. On April 24, 1854, he married Jane Antoinette Truesdell, who was born in Hampton, Aug. 28, 1835, daughter of the architect and builder, Augustus Truesdell and Mary (Sexton), of Rockville. Mrs. Albert Truesdell died in Putnam, Feb. 1, 1901. Of this union there were born three children: Fannie L., born in Rockville; Princess L., and Flora M., in Putnam. All three are living at home, and as active members of the Baptist Church belong to the Foreign Missionary Society.

In 1859 Mr. Truesdell went with his family to Great Barrington, Mass., and one year later, Jan. 1, 1860, moved to Putnam, where he opened a shop, and went into business for himself as a contractor and builder. Among the numerous residences of Putnam that stand as evidences of his workmanship are those of Messrs. George M. Morse, Dwight Sharp, and Moses G. Leonard. Assisted by his brother, George S., he also built the Congregational Church. In 1872 Mr. Truesdell turned his attention more particularly to small jobbing, and began handling only the finest grades of work such as stair-building, cabinet making, brackets, etc. In this line he continued until his death, and was considered the most expert workman in his State. In his shop on Truesdell street were to be found the best set of wood working tools in the city.

Mr. Truesdell's death, which occurred Feb. 7, 1902, while alone at his shop, probably from heart disease, was a shock to all. Though he had been in declining health for the past year he had not made any special complaint before leaving home. He was mourned, not only by his immediate family, where he had been a most affectionate father, but also by a host of citizens and friends from various places. Though not a man to push himself to the front Mr. Truesdell evinced a keen interest in public and religious affairs. Greatly to the benefit of the city he opened Truesdell street, near his home on Chapel. As a member of the Baptist Church Mr. Truesdell served on the building committee. In politics he was a Republican.

HON. HENRY CLAPP belongs to a family of high social standing and of pronounced integrity of character.

Jonathan Clapp, his grandfather, was a prominent citizen of Norton, Mass., where, during his long and useful life, he worked at civil engineering. He was married twice and had twelve children. Late in life he went to Hampton and lived with his son, David, and there, in November, 1864, he died at the age of ninety-six. In politics he affiliated with the Whigs, and, with marked executive ability and a keen sense of equity, he served as sheriff at Norton for some time. His high moral principles made him influential in religious affairs, and he was chosen deacon of the Congregational Church in Hampton.

Deacon David Clapp, who, unfortunately, lacked the vigorous constitution of his father, was a highly respected farmer of Hampton. Born in Norton, Mass., April 30, 1807, he spent his early days in that place. When a young man, being afflicted with ill health, he led a leisurely life, but in the spring of 1833, his health being improved, he came to Hampton and purchased a farm in the eastern part of that town. A few months later, in Easton, Mass., he married, on Sept. 17, 1833, Temperance D. White, who was born May 8, 1814. She died suddenly of apoplexy, Oct. 1, 1893, at the home of her son Henry. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Clapp: Cordana, born March 5, 1835, died March 19, 1850. David, Jr., a mechanic, born April 15, 1836, married Harriett P. Holly, and died in Willimantic, Conn., June 5, 1889; he was a soldier in the Civil war. Charles, born March 2, 1839, married Miranda Wilson; he enlisted in the 25th Conn. V. I., as a private, and at the time of his death, at Baton Rouge, was lieutenant of his company. Christopher, a carpenter, at Worcester, Mass., born June 6, 1841, married Frances Tiffany; he, too, was a soldier in the Civil war. Dyer, a resident of Bridgeport, Conn., born Oct. 15, 1843, married Maggie Deegan. Milton, a school teacher, born Dec. 14, 1845, married Ellen Martin, and died Feb. 21, 1871, in Hampton. Henry is mentioned later. Delia, born April 16, 1849, married E. D. Goodell, and died in Brookfield, Mass., May 31, 1883. Ellen, born Feb. 14, 1851, married Riley B. Witter, of Brooklyn, Conn., and died Feb. 13, 1879. Abbie, born March 22, 1857, died Aug. 21, 1876.

Though in the early part of his agricultural career David Clapp met with financial reverses, he bravely mastered his difficulties, and became one of the most successful farmers in Hampton. In 1868 he sold his first farm on the east side and purchased the "Utley Place," where he lived the rest of his life. Here the fatal cancer, which was to end his life, lessened his usefulness. He died May 31, 1873. Though not a man to push himself to the front, Mr. Clapp, through the merited esteem of his fellow citizens, was often elected to places of honor. As a thoroughly qualified Republican, he held several town offices; and, as a worthy Congregationalist, he held the deaconship of his church for several years.

Hon. Henry Clapp, as an educator, intelligent farmer and leader in public and social affairs, is one of the best-known persons in Hampton. He was born in the eastern part of that town, June 5, 1847, about twenty years before his parents moved to the "Utley Place." In the common school of his district, and in a select school taught by Dr. Rienzi Robinson and a Miss Carey of Scotland, he received a solid education and an inspiration for professional work. At the age of eighteen he taught school one term in the Tat Nic Hill district of Brooklyn, and the following winter he taught in the Jericho district, and nearly every winter since, until 1896, his able services as a teacher were employed in Hampton or in Pomfret. He is the oldest teacher in point of years of service in this section. For a great many years he has owned one of the largest farms in Hampton, a 225-acre tract, where he has worked during summers. Besides attending to official duties he still carries on this farm, superintending the general agricultural work and carrying on a large dairying business.

On Nov. 26, 1874, Mr. Clapp married S. Belle Kinne, who was born in Plainfield, Conn., in 1853, daughter of Erastus Kinne, a Plainfield farmer; she died April 25, 1897. On March 16, 1898, Mr. Clapp married Mrs. Mary Webster, who was born in Hampton, daughter of Christopher and Sarah (Durkee) Hevey. By his first wife Mr. Clapp had one child, Nellie Frances, born March 8, 1880, who graduated from the high school at Brookfield, Mass., as well as from a kindergarten training school; she now teaches school and music in Brookfield, Mass. The present Mrs. Clapp has one child by her first marriage, Clarence, born Sept. 16, 1892.

Mr. Clapp has proved himself a thoroughly alive and ever-ready public servant. He is now justice of the peace in Hampton, and has officiated in that capacity for the past six years. Since the age of twenty-one he has acted on the board of education, and he has served for a considerable time on the board of selectmen, presiding as chairman for two years. During the year of the memorable deadlock (1890-91) he sat in the State Legislature, and, being a thoroughly well-informed and sympathetic schoolman, worked with the committees on School Funds and Humane Institutions. Socially he has been master and secretary of Little River Grange, of which he is still a member. He helped organize the Willimantic Colony of Pilgrim Fathers; but when the Chancey F. Cleveland Colony, No. 176, was organized in Hampton, he changed his membership to that lodge, with which both he and his wife still affiliate. In religious affairs he has also come to the front through his own merit. He has been deacon of the Congregational Church for the last fifteen years, superintendent of its Sunday-school for several years, and has served on the Society's committee. In fact, no one could have better directed his forces and his thoroughly well-trained talents in the service of the general public than has Hon. Henry Clapp.

NATHAN EXLEY, a prosperous farmer and influential citizen residing on North Society street, Canterbury, Windham county, is of English descent.

Nathan Exley's father, Nathan Exley, was born in Holmfirth, Yorkshire, England, Sept. 26, 1818. He learned the trade of hand loom woolen weaving, at which he later secured employment, working a loom in his own home. In 1854 Mr. Exley came to America. Being a man of energy, well equipped for life, he readily found employment; first at Lawrence, Mass., where he remained a year, and later in Woonsocket, R. I. He married in England Mary Fenton. About a year after his arrival in this country she, at his request, set sail with her children. The ship making unusually slow progress—requiring six weeks for the voyage—the food supply ran short; and Mrs. Exley denying herself for the sake of her children, finally sickened and died and was buried at sea. Mr. Exley later married Mary Bentley, and after her death, which occurred in about a year, he was married in Woodstock, by the Episcopal minister in September, 1856, to Jennette Ridell. Mr. Exley's third wife was born in Glasgow, Scotland, Sept. 27, 1829; she died in Plainville, now Woodville, R. I., in September, 1872, at the age of forty-three, and is buried in the River Bend Cemetery, at Westerly.

By his first marriage Mr. Exley had five children: (1) Thomas B., a farmer, born Feb. 8, 1842, married Mattie Morris and lives in Weir City, Kansas. They have six children: Mary, Amelia, Ira, Grover, Grace, and Angeline. (2) Lydia, born Feb. 20, 1845, married William Morgan (deceased) of Westerly, R. I., and has five children: Mary, George, William and twins, John and Nathan. (3) Amelia, born April 28, 1847, married John Bedford, an Englishman, and lives in Arlington, R. I. They have one child, Mary. (4) John, born Oct. 28, 1848, lives at Norwich, Conn. (5) Ira, born April 15, 1852, married Sarah Thorp, and resides at Potter Hill, R. I. They have one child, Frederick. By his last marriage Mr. Exley had six children: (1) Ann Janette, born June 17, 1858, married Samuel Wibberley. (2) Matthew Henry, April 22, 1860, married Mary Mahoney and lives in Versailles, Conn. He has four children, Mary, Albert, Matthew and Alice. (3) William, born Sept. 20, 1862, died at the age of two and a half years. (4) Nathan is mentioned below. (5) Albert, born May 30, 1867, married, in Oct., 1897, Callia Babcock, and lives at New London, Conn. They have two children, Bertha E., born Nov. 20, 1898, and Clarice Callia, born Nov. 10, 1900. (6) Alexander, born Aug. 28, 1872, died Sept. 1, 1872.

For over twenty years after coming to Woonsocket, R. I., Mr. Exley followed his trade as a weaver; about four years at Millville, Mass., another four years at Westerly, R. I., three years in Carolina Mills, four years at Plainville, R. I., and six years at Greeneville, now a part of Norwich, Conn. In 1880 he came to Canterbury and purchased the farm now occupied by his son Nathan, and here he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred April 19, 1890. He is buried in the River Bend Cemetery at Westerly, R. I. As a thoroughly competent and industrious workman Mr. Exley won the esteem of all who knew him. He belonged to the Episcopal Church and endeavored conscientiously to follow its teachings. In politics a Republican, he evinced a keen interest in public affairs.

Nathan Exley (2) was born in Westerly, R. I., Jan. 5, 1866, but spent most of his boyhood days in Norwich, Conn., where he attended the graded schools for many years. When he was fourteen years old the family moved to Canterbury and he there attended the district schools for some time. On April 25, 1889, he married Anna Evenor Babcock, who was born Jan. 16, 1867, daughter of William S. Babcock, who is mentioned below. Mr. and Mrs. Exley have four children: William Stuart, born Jan. 14, 1891; Edith Main, Sept. 18, 1893; Florence Ridell, Sept. 27, 1896; and Lucius Morgan, Sept. 1, 1901.

Mr. Exley has for years carried on the family homestead, making a thorough success of general farming and dairying. As a man keenly interested in the diffusion of knowledge, he is a member of the board of education. He has also served on the grand jury and the board of relief. Socially and religiously he is well known. He attends the Congregational Church and has belonged to the Grange.

THE BABCOCK FAMILY to which Mrs. Exley belongs is one of considerable prominence, has possessed a coat of arms and has been represented in this country since early Colonial days. Three brothers—James, Jesse and Nathaniel Babcock—came from England and landed at Newport, R. I. Nathaniel, hearing that Stonington, Conn., offered excellent prospects for settlement, hired in Moosup a very powerful Indian, Moosuck, to carry him to that place. This feat the Indian accomplished by the aid of a stick basket, strapped to his shoulders. Little is known of the other ancestors preceding Nathaniel Babcock, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Exley. He married Mary Laricon, who was very well to do, owning real estate, now in possession of her great-great-grandchildren. Of this union there were three children: Jonas L., who was drafted to serve in the Revolution, fought under Washington, and was killed at the battle of White Plains; Stephen H., who is mentioned below; and Mary.

Stephen H. Babcock, the grandfather of Mrs. Exley, was born in North Stonington, Conn., June 13, 1765, and there received the training for his life work. He also made his home in that place for most of his mature life. He engaged in farming extensively, and also carried on a lumbering business, getting out and selling timber for ship building. Stephen H. Babcock was married three times. First to Mary Hinckley; after her death to Elizabeth Stuart, who was born in Voluntown, Conn.; and later, Sept. 7, 1808, to Mercy Davis, who was born in North Stonington, Conn., March 16, 1782. By the first marriage there were four children: (1) Eunice, married Ethan Crandall, and had three children: Wealthy, Nancy and Caroline. Mrs. Crandall died in her eighty-first year. (2) Stephen, Jr. (died in his seventy-eighth year), married Amy Bentley and had four children: Mary Ann, Frank W., Ira B., and Lucy G. (3) Samuel H. (died at the age of seventy-three), married Caroline Slanton and had four children: Samuel A.; Daniel H. (died at the age of twenty-one); Horace S.; and Albert Clinton, who enlisted in the Civil war, but died before he reached the front. (4) Henry (died in his seventy-sixth year), married Mary Ross and had two daughters. By the second marriage there was one child, (5) Elizabeth. An infant when her mother died, she grew to womanhood and married Cyrus W. Brown, and they had ten children: Emily, Cyrus, Gideon, Louisa, Benadam, William, Thomas, James, John, and Sarah. By the third marriage there were six children: (6) Charles D., married Betsey Richmond. He left no children. (7) Nathaniel S., born March 7, 1813, never married and lived to an advanced age. (8) Mercy Ann, born Dec. 3, 1814, married Thomas M. Brown and they had four children: Thomas H., William E.,

Herman C., and Stephen E. Mrs. Brown died when Stephen was an infant. (9) John D., born Feb. 5, 1817, married Harriet D. Bentley, and after her death Eunice Ann Main, of North Stonington. By the first marriage there were two children: Susan H., and John R. By the second marriage there were four children: William P., Wealthy E., Abbie L., and Betsy A. (10) Jonas L. (born Nov. 8, 1818, died April 21, 1855) married Abbie C. Stanton, and had one son, Edwin L., who died in childhood. (11) William Stuart is mentioned below.

Hon. William Stuart Babcock, father of Mrs. Exley, for many years a prominent citizen of Plainfield, Conn., was a man of rare attainments and considerable genius. He was born March 22, 1822, and attended the district and select schools of North Stonington, where his alert mind and studious habits enabled him to acquire a very thorough education. So ambitious was he that as a young man he taught school in winter and worked on the farm in summer. He later made farming the main business of his life. On Oct. 4, 1859, he married at North Stonington, Conn., Frances E. Main, and they had six children, born as follows (1) William Payson, born Feb. 5, 1862; he married May 11, 1892, Gracie A. Green, and they have three children: Frances Eva, Lillian Carrie, and William Edwin (born Nov. 3, 1901). (2) Nella, July 28, 1865; she married, Jan. 1, 1890, George L. Bradford, who is mentioned more fully elsewhere in this volume. (3) Anna Evenor—Mrs. Exley—is mentioned above. (4) Stephen Richard, Feb. 6, 1870; he married, April 6, 1898, Birdie May Kenyon, and they have one child, Ella May (born Jan. 25, 1899). (5) Callia Main, Nov. 16, 1871; she married, in Oct., 1897, Albert Exley, of Norwich, Conn., and they have had the following children: Bertha E. and Clarice Callia. (6) Telley Eugene, Oct. 22, 1876; he graduated from the Norwich Academy and is now in the junior year of the Boston University School of Law.

Mr. Babcock purchased of the late Hon. Joseph Hutchins a splendid farm in Plainfield, containing 120 acres, to which he moved in 1865, and thereafter made it his home. Besides being extensively engaged in agriculture Mr. Babcock gave considerable time to inventions and secured patents for improvements on plows, wagons and other farm implements. He also invested in the Robinson & Fowler Foundry Co, and was its treasurer for several years. He died in Plainfield, Conn., May 18, 1899. William S. Babcock was president for many years of the Plainfield Cemetery Association, an office he held at the time of his death. He is buried in the family plot in said cemetery.

Mr. Babcock possessed those traits of character that won him favors everywhere. At the age of nineteen he was made lieutenant of a military company in his town of North Stonington, and later received the honor of captain. At various times he was elected to fill the offices of selectman and justice of the peace, and he served on the board of relief. In 1871 he was sent to the State Legislature, where he represented his town with marked efficiency. In politics Mr. Babcock was an unwavering Republican, and in religious sentiment, a man of liberal views. Possessed of great personal magnetism and genial manners, he had many warm friends.

THE MAIN FAMILY. By her mother Mrs. Exley is descended from Ezekiel Main, who married and in 1670 came to Stonington, where he became a large land owner, receiving land grants in 1672 and 1680, and in the meantime making extensive land purchases. He died June 19, 1714. His wife's name was Mary.

Richard H. Main, son of Simeon X. (who was a descendant of Ezekiel) and Martha (York) Main, and grandfather of Mrs. Exley, was born in North Stonington, Feb. 24, 1808, and married Abbie S. Crandall. He died Sept. 26, 1901, at the advanced age of ninety-three, and she passed away Sept. 9, 1851, in her forty-sixth year. By her he had five children: George W., is an extensive farmer at Hop River, in the town of Columbia, Conn.; Charles H., born Jan. 3, 1837, resides at Milltown, in the town of North Stonington, Conn.; Frances E., June 15, 1840, mentioned above, is still living; Mary A., born July 26, 1844, married George Avery and resides in North Stonington; and John D., born in 1846, died Sept. 1, 1851.

EZRA SAMUEL COLBURN. The Colburn family is one of the oldest, and was at one time the wealthiest, family among the early settlers of Stafford, Tolland county, owning all the land from just above Hydeville to the line of Union and the State line. Six generations have lived and died in the old house and four generations have been born there.

Samuel Colburn, the great-grandfather of Ezra Samuel Colburn, of this sketch, was born in Stafford and died there in 1826. He married a member of the Patterson family and they were farmers who lived in great comfort on their lands, extended a wide hospitality and were highly esteemed.

Samuel Colburn, Jr., son of Samuel, Sr., was born in Stafford and died there Nov. 7, 1853, at the age of seventy-four years. His burial was at Sandy Knoll (now called Hillside Cemetery), and he was a much respected man, a good farmer and an ardent Democrat. His wife was Susannah Rogers, and their children were: Matilda, who died at the age of seven years; Dexter; Annis, who (first) married Russell Carpenter and (second) Earl Smith; Sarah, who married Schuyler Ledoyt, of Stafford; Samuel, who became a farmer, married Sallie Smith and was accidentally killed by being run over by an ox cart; Alvin, who (first) married Eliza Bradway, and (second) Chloe Emeline Belcher, of Stafford, where he was a farmer; Susan, who married Dwight Ledoyt, and now lives a widow in South Coventry, Conn.; Amasa, who married (first) Theodocia Belcher, and (second) Mary Maria Noble, and was a farmer, a foundryman and a mechanic; and Betsey, who married Samuel Young, of Stafford, and died at the early age of twenty-eight years.

Dexter Colburn, the son of Samuel, Jr., and the father of Ezra S. Colburn, was born April 1, 1805, in the house of his ancestors, and there his death occurred Dec. 7, 1895. Mr. Colburn was one of the best physical representatives of the family, being hearty and robust and living so industrious and abstemious a life that at the age of ninety years he had the strength and ambition to attend a hunting party. His political faith was in the Democratic party and he held a number of minor offices, and in the Methodist Church he was always interested. Although he never became a church member, he was a constant attendant and was one of the most liberal supporters.

Dexter Colburn and Louisa Tupper were married Oct. 28, 1830. She was born April 29, 1807, in Monson, Mass., was a daughter of Ezra and Huldah (Spencer) Tupper, and she lived until Feb. 6, 1894, dying in Stafford. The children of this marriage were: Minerva, who was born Aug. 18, 1832, and married Levi Peck, a farmer of Monson, Mass.; Maranda, who was born July 23, 1834, and married David Ebenezer Johnson, a carpenter of Stafford; Huldah, who was born Feb. 12, 1838, died April 6, 1838; an infant daughter who died when a few hours old; Lucius Dexter, who was born March 14, 1839, in Stafford; Emeline, who was born Aug. 16, 1841, and died Oct. 24, 1865; Ezra S., of this biography; Amelia Louisa, who was born May 25, 1847, married Aaron Titus Converse, of Stafford, who was accidentally shot and killed in Wales, Mass., during a coon hunt, Sept. 21, 1878 (his wife died in Stafford, May 27, 1893); Betsey Jane, who was born Jan. 9, 1850, and married Monroe Edward Carew, of Monson, Mass., where he was a farmer. She died May 21, 1899.

Ezra Samuel Colburn was born on Christmas Day, 1843, in the same house which is now his dwelling, on "Colburn Hill" in Stafford, Conn. His educational opportunities were the best the locality afforded, and he employed his spare time on the farm. His life has been in the main an agricultural one. He has remained on the old farm which contains 110 acres and there he carries on general farming, raising the products of his section in the greatest abundance. As a good farmer he is known among his neighbors and is a thoroughly respected and esteemed citizen.

Mr. Colburn was married Nov. 26, 1874, to Caroline Eliza Carpenter, who was born Jan. 20, 1848, in Charlton, Mass. She was the daughter of Rev. John and Clementine Harris (McIntire) Carpenter, the former of whom was a minister of the Methodist Church. He served the churches of South Deerfield, Lock's Village and Holland, Mass., Mash-apaug and West Woodstock, Conn., and also the churches of other towns in which he was stationed after finishing his education at Wilbraham Academy. Mr. and Mrs. Colburn have one daughter, Myra Lillian, who was born Oct. 27, 1879, and married Oct. 11, 1900, to William Archie Thompson, of Toledo, Ohio, a son of William Henry Thompson. Mr. Thompson is a painter by trade and now resides in Stafford, and he and Mrs. Thompson have one son, Merton Lyle, born Aug. 27, 1901.

Mr. Colburn attends the Methodist Church in Staffordville, and is a liberal contributor to its support, Mrs. Colburn being a member. In politics he is a Democrat, but is inclined to use his own judgment, voting many times without regard to party ties for the man he feels assured will best fill the position.

LUCIUS DEXTER COLBURN, the son of Dexter and the brother of Ezra Samuel Colburn, of the foregoing sketch, was born March 14, 1839, in Stafford, on "Colburn Hill," and received his education in the common schools of that locality. At the age of sixteen he began work on the home farm, and in 1861, his father erected him a residence on a tract of fifty acres which he had given him from the estate. Since then he has added 135 acres, making in all 185 acres, and there he raises large crops of all products of his vicinity.

Mr. Colburn was married first Dec. 9, 1857, to Harriet Child, daughter of Horace and Mary (Bradway) Child, of Monson, Mass. Charles Dexter Colburn, son of Lucius Dexter and Harriet (Child) Colburn, was born Aug. 16, 1859, in Stafford, Conn. He is a farmer, and owns a farm in Palmer, Mass., on which he lives. He was married Dec. 29, 1881, to Mrs. Jane Augusta (Warner) Coddling, of Palmer, Mass. The children born to them are Ethel Viola, born Jan. 19, 1893, Ina Louisa, born Jan. 15, 1897.

The second marriage of Mr. Colburn was Jan. 1, 1865, to Fransana Fiette Chaffee, of Monson, Mass., who was a daughter of John Leonard and Persis (Pease) Chaffee, the former of whom is a farmer eighty-five years of age living now in Monson. One child was born to Lucius Dexter and Fransana F. (Chaffee) Colburn: Elmer Frederick, who was born June 9, 1866, in Stafford, Conn., and married June 18, 1889, to Rosamond Lucretia Smith, of Stafford, Conn. Mrs. Elmer F. Colburn is a daughter of David Smith, and her children are: Richard Chaffee, born Aug. 23, 1894; Raymond Hyde, born Jan. 21, 1896; Forest Elmer, born May 26, 1898, and a son born Feb. 17, 1903. Elmer Frederick Colburn is cashier and bookkeeper in Baker's tea store in Springfield, Mass., and is a very worthy and promising young man.

Lucius Dexter Colburn is a constant attendant upon the services of the Congregational Church at Staffordville, and gives liberally of his means towards its support. In politics he is a Democrat, but has not desired office although he has served upon the district school board and been chosen as a grand juror, his sagacity, probity and excellent standing in the community fitting him for these as well as higher positions within the gift of the people.

GEORGE ROWLAND, a prominent agriculturist in Canterbury, Windham Co., Conn., was born June 20, 1839, in Derbyshire, England, where his father and his father's people had lived before him.

John Rowland, son of Edward, and father of George, was born in Taddington, Derbyshire, in November, 1783, and there grew to manhood. He married Clarinda Coats, also of Derbyshire, England, and after her death, Alice Hays, who was born in Bolton, Lancashire, England, daughter of John Hays. By the first marriage there were seven children: (1) Ann, married Richard Williams. She died in Belfast, Ireland. (2) John, left England and came to New York, but later returned to his own country where he died. (3) Joseph, was a successful business man, operating a factory and keeping a store at New York Mills, N. Y. He died at Ilion, N. Y. (4) Edward was an overseer at New York Mills. He lived there forty-five years, living for twenty years a retired life. (5) Mary, married Peter Bartell and lived in Derbyshire, England; she died in Lancaster. (6) Samuel, who was in the insurance business, died in Liverpool, England. (7) Thomas, a farmer, died in Derbyshire, England. By his second marriage Mr. Rowland had nine children: (8) Henry, died in one of the southern States on his way to Texas. (9) William, for nearly twenty years in the employ of the Remington Co., is now a retired citizen of Ilion, Herkimer Co., N. Y. (10) Clarinda, died in England at the age of twenty-four. (11) Jane married Pierce Brumley and lived in Cheshire, England; she died at the age of thirty-two. (12) George, is mentioned below. (13) James, a mill-operative, lived in Derbyshire, Eng.; he died at the age of thirty-seven. (14) Charles, resides in Oswego county, N. Y. (15) Annie Elizabeth, married James Rhodes and lives in Cheshire, England. (16) Isaac came to America, but later returned to England, where he died in his twenty-eighth year.

George Rowland received his training for life mainly in factories. At the age of twelve he left the public schools which he had previously attended and entered a cotton factory in Derbyshire, England. After three years of faithful service he entered a mill at Cheshire, where displaying marked efficiency he worked for twelve years. In 1867, on the steamship "Mannaten" he came to New York. His previous factory training enabled him readily to secure positions, and for two years he worked in the N. Y. Mills near Utica, for three years as weaver and loom fixer for the Lonsdale Co., in Rhode Island, and two years longer as loom fixer in a factory at Taftville, Connecticut.

Mr. Rowland married, in Phenix, R. I., Sarah

A. Reed, widow of Robert Reed, whom she married in England. She was born in Manchester, England, Jan. 13, 1838, daughter of Andrew and Ann (Moorhead) Knox, and at the age of eighteen came to New York. Andrew Knox, father of Mrs. Rowland, by occupation a silk manufacturer, was a native of Scotland, where he for the most part resided, dying at Dundee. His wife, Ann (Moorhead), an English woman, died in 1839. By her he had three children: Andrew John, lived in Scotland where he probably died. Thomas, resides in Warrington, England. Sarah A., is mentioned above. Mrs. Knox, by her marriage to a Mr. Carson had two children: Nancy, who married William Hawley, and lived at Manchester, where she died; and Samuel, who also died in Manchester, England. By her first marriage Mrs. Reed had one child, Thomas, born Sept. 10, 1857, who lived to be twenty-one and cast his first vote with the Prohibition party; he died in Canterbury.

Mr. and Mrs. Rowland have had five children: (1) Harriet Alice, born Aug. 20, 1870, married George D. Stewart, of Worcester, Mass., and they have one child, William Charles, who was born Oct. 28, 1899. (2) Elizabeth, born Jan. 6, 1872, died Oct. 16, 1874. (3) Joseph, born Oct. 19, 1873, received his education in the common schools of his neighborhood, acquiring great accuracy and rapidity in mathematics. For a business he has mainly followed hotel work. He began as a clerk in the store of A. H. Mathewson, of Canterbury. Later he worked at the "Hallatt House" in Providence, R. I., was employed in responsible positions in hotels in New York City, and at summer hotels on the Jersey coast, and he is now room clerk in the Pine Forest Inn, at Summerville, S. C., an immense and very exclusive establishment. He has also been employed by the Providence Athletic Club, and by a similar organization at Buffalo, one of the best in the country. For the summer of 1902 he had charge of a hotel at Cape May, N. J. (4) Hannah Louise, born Dec. 17, 1874, died Nov. 14, 1886. (5) Charles Frederick, born May 26, 1876, is a man of marked ability. He is employed as fitter up by the Plunger Elevator Co., of Worcester, Mass., and resides at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

In April, 1875, Mr. Rowland purchased a farm in the town of Canterbury and engaged in agriculture. Two years later he bought the Le Valley place where he has since resided. The two farms embrace about 100 acres, and he works them both. He carries on general farming and having about a dozen cows also conducts a profitable dairy business. Mr. Rowland has never taken an active part in the public affairs of his town. As a member of the First Congregational Church of Canterbury, to which his wife also belongs, he serves on the Society Committee. He has for some time been an efficient member of the School Committee. With his wife a charter member of the Canterbury Grange he has acted as Chaplain, and is now Master and has also been for several years treasurer. His wife has also filled several offices including those of Pomona, Ceres, and Flora.

SAMUEL DOUGLASS DANIELSON, deceased. In the locality comprising Killingly, in Windham county, remarkable for loyalty to the traditions and histories of its time honored families, the name of Danielson takes pre-eminence as the oldest, one of the most substantial, and one of the most widely known and respected. The borough of Danielson, which perpetuates so many worthy lives, was named as a tribute to a descendant of the first settler of the town, and from this branch of the family have come men and women of mental and moral poise, and with old-time religious devotion and zeal.

Sergt. James Danielson, born about 1648, married March 11, 1685, (according to the George W. Danielson Memorial), Abigail Rose, who died in about five years. He married (second) June 22, 1700, Mary Ackers. Mr. Danielson was among the early immigrants to what is now Block Island, R. I., where he purchased a number of tracts of land between 1688 and 1705. At the May session of the General Assembly, 1696, he was admitted a freeman of the Colony of Rhode Island. In 1700 he was elected town sergeant of New Shoreham; in 1704-05 he was a member of its town council, and in August, 1705, he was chosen a deputy to the General Assembly. The family tradition is that Sergt. Danielson was of Scottish descent. In his youth and early manhood he fought in the wars against the Indians, and subsequently, at a time of the distribution of the land in eastern Connecticut, he received his share of the territory of the town of Voluntown by grant from the General Court.

At what particular time Mr. Danielson left the Island for a permanent residence upon the mainland is not precisely known. In the course of his campaign he had been attracted by the aspect of the country, and in 1706, then in his fifty-eighth year, he bought a tract of 800 acres on the Quinebaug river with a mansion-house and barn, in what was afterward the town of Pomfret. In 1707 he purchased of Major Fitch, who seems to have been before hand with him in trading with the Indians, the neck of land between the Quinebaug and Assawaugu rivers, measuring about 2,000 acres. He is stated to have been the first settler south of Lake Mashapaug (now Alexander's) and is said to have "built a garrison-house at the Southern extremity of his purchase and was soon known as one of the most prominent men in the new settlement." not long after named Killingly. That Sergeant Danielson was a man of means is proved by the fact that for the former purchase he paid the sum of £155, and for the latter the sum of £170. He had a residence in each settlement. A portion of the property which he held in Killingly still remains in the possession of his descendants. He died Jan. 22, 1728, in the eightieth year of his age. In his declining years he "laid out a burial-ground between the rivers for the use of the inhabitants, and was the first to be interred in it." The headstone of his grave bore an inscription "in memory of the well beloved Mr. James Danielson, who after he had served God and his generation faithfully many years in his life, sweetly fell asleep in the cradle of death." Mr. Danielson had by his wife Abigail, a son James, born May 15, 1687, who afterward lived in Lebanon, Conn., but removed, according to one tradition, to western Massachusetts, and according to another, returned to Block Island. Two sons born to the second marriage, Samuel and William, the first inheriting the homestead and much of the landed property, succeeded to the good name and carried it forward unblemished to subsequent years.

The family thus founded furnished representatives in all the stirring movements of Colonial and National history. Samuel Danielson was moderator of Killingly in 1760, and selectman in 1785. William Danielson was constable, collector of taxes, and lieutenant in 1760; first major of Col. Williams' 11th Regiment in 1774; took 146 men from Killingly to Cambridge in 1775; became Colonel in 1776, and after the Revolution, General of militia; and in 1788 was a member of the State Convention called to ratify the National Constitution.

Samuel Danielson, son of the first settler, born in 1701 was graduated from Yale College. He married March 26, 1725, Sarah Douglas, of Plainfield, Conn. Both united with the Killingly Church in 1725. Their children were: Mary, baptized May 8, 1726; James, born in 1727, died Oct. 3, 1754; William, born Aug. 11, 1729; Sarah, born Feb. 22, 1731; Susanna, born Oct. 1, 1732; Elizabeth, born March 25, 1734; Priscilla, born Feb. 12, 1737; Sybil, born Feb. 8, 1738-39; Samuel, born March 27, 1740; and Sarah, born March 19, 1745.

Capt. Samuel Danielson, son of Samuel (1), was born March 27, 1740, in Killingly, and May 6, 1770, married Hannah Whitman, born Oct. 10, 1751, in Providence, R. I. Mrs. Danielson was a daughter of Jacob Whitman, a descendant in the fourth generation from John Whitman, (one of the first settlers of Weymouth, Mass., who was made a freeman in December, 1638), his lineage being through Zachariah and John. Mrs. Hannah Danielson died Oct. 3, 1787, Mr. Danielson June 13, 1817. Their children were: Elizabeth, Samuel, Martha and Susannah. Capt. Samuel Danielson marched to the relief of Boston at the Lexington alarm, under Gen. Israel Putnam.

Samuel Danielson (3), son of Capt. Samuel, was a farmer on the property now occupied by Albert Danielson, and for the time was prosperous and wealthy. He was a man of high moral courage. In religion he was a member of the Westfield Congregational Church, and in politics he was a Whig. He died July 22, 1845, at the age of seventy-two, and is buried in the Westfield cemetery. He married Sarah Beg, who was born June 13, 1773, and died Sept. 9, 1852. She was a daughter of Adam Beg, granddaughter of James Beg, and great-granddaughter of John Beg.

Adam Beg was born at Castle Hill, Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1740, and came to America when a young man. For a number of years he followed peddling, but a few years after his marriage, in Raynham, Mass., removed to Killingly to the farm now occupied by Simeon Danielson, where his death occurred Dec. 5, 1794. During the Revolutionary war it was hinted that Mr. Beg was a British sympathizer, and, while it is not known definitely that he ever gave expression to his preference, it is asserted with authority that he never personally identified himself with either side. He married Sarah Robinson, who was born July 15, 1743, and who survived him for over forty years, her death occurring Aug. 24, 1836. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Beg: Sarah, who married Samuel Danielson; Polly, wife of Robert Grosevenor, of North Killingly; and Phoebe, who died young. To Samuel and Sarah (Beg) Danielson were born four children, viz.: Adam Beg is mentioned below. Jacob W. was active in the affairs of Killingly, where he died; he married Maria Prince. Jane died unmarried July 14, 1876, at the age of seventy-four. Samuel S. married Esther Williams, and lived and died on the farm in Killingly now occupied by his nephew, Albert Danielson.

Deacon Adam Beg Danielson was born in Killingly Nov. 15, 1796, and was reared on his father's farm. When in his early teens he left home to live with his grandmother Beg, who occupied the farm now owned by Deacon Simeon Danielson. He remained on this farm, assisting in the management thereof, and after his grandmother's death bought out the other heirs and was engaged in farming until his death, April 14, 1872. He was hard working and thrifty, and managed to lay by a competence. He was a deacon in the Westfield Congregational Church for many years, and was a thoroughly temperate man, fond of his home, and devoted to his friends. A Whig, and later a Republican, he never allied himself with political agitations, devoting whatever leisure was his when the day's work was done to reading and study of the Scriptures. He married Melancy Williams Robinson, of Raynham, Mass., daughter of Seth and Sarah Robinson. She died Dec. 19, 1869, at the age of seventy-one. She was the mother of seven children: Mary, died Oct. 20, 1853, in her twenty-fifth year; Samuel, born March 31, 1831, died Sept. 22, 1836; Sarah, born June 28, 1833, died Sept. 12, 1836; Albert, born Oct. 17, 1835; Samuel D. is mentioned below; Deacon Simeon, born Nov. 15, 1840; Frances W., died July 1, 1853, at the age of nine years and ten months.

Samuel Douglass Danielson was born Feb. 20, 1838. While performing his share of work on the paternal farm he attended the district schools. Later he went to West Killingly Academy, and attended New Britain Normal School in 1860-61, thereafter teaching for a term in the Mashentuck District of Killingly. His first business experience was acquired as a clerk in the dry-goods store of Edwin Ely, at Danielson—the firm later becoming Edwin Ely & Co. During the seven years of his connection with this concern Mr. Danielson was for part of the time employed in driving a wagon laden with goods, and in this capacity visited every town in Windham county and in western Rhode Island. He then went to Providence, R. I., and was employed as a clerk by J. Kerns, who also had a store in Arcadia, and at the end of a year located in Greenwich, R. I., where he clerked in a general store and post office for nine years. He then bought a grocery store in the same town which he managed for a couple of years, removing then to the old homestead in Killingly, and assisting his father until the death of the latter. In the spring of 1873 Mr. Danielson built his home, No. 33 Reynolds street, Danielson. He was for twenty-two years employed as a clerk in the store of Edward Dexter, and during two years of that time was a collector for the Singer Sewing Machine Company. His association with Mr. Dexter and his successors was maintained until July, 1901, and in the meantime Mr. Danielson had won the fullest confidence of his employers and was entrusted with important responsibilities in regard to the internal management of the business, at times handling large sums of money.

The first marriage of Mr. Danielson occurred May 2, 1866, S. Ellen Kennedy, who was born July 3, 1836, in Plainfield, N. J., daughter of Abel and Achsah (Hill) Kennedy, becoming his wife. Mrs. Danielson died Sept. 16, 1885. She was the mother of two children: (1) Mary Louise, born March 7, 1867, attended the Danielson high school, from which she graduated in 1886. In 1887 she graduated from the Tilden Seminary at Lebanon, N. H., and still later from Wellesley College. Miss Danielson located at Portland, Oregon, and taught in an Episcopal parochial school and later in the public schools for six years. She is a woman of marked literary attainments. On Aug. 17, 1897, she was united in marriage with Levi J. Goodrich, a native of Maine, and a graduate of Amherst College. His professional training was received at the Columbia Law school, and he is now in an office in Portland, Oregon. (2) Harriet K., born June 15, 1872, died July 30, 1874. The second marriage of Mr. Danielson occurred Oct. 16, 1886, to Mrs. Amelia Alexander, widow of Luther D. Alexander.

Mr. Danielson was a Republican in politics, and had served as burgess of the borough for two years, and as assessor for one year. Fraternally he was connected with Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of which he had served as secretary. He was a member of the Westfield Congregational Church. Personally he was a man of sterling integrity, and his opinion upon any matter of public importance was accorded the most profound consideration. Mr.

Danielson's death, Jan. 11, 1903, was a distinct loss to the community in which he was an honored resident.

HENRY BUTTERFIELD (deceased). Among the old and well-known residents of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., was Henry Butterfield, who was born Nov. 18, 1827, in Springfield, Mass., where he spent his childhood. At the age of sixteen years Mr. Butterfield went to Philadelphia, Pa., where he was engaged in the seed business, and later conducted a hotel, coming to Stafford, Conn., in 1860.

After locating in Stafford Mr. Butterfield entered the employ of Howe & Converse, loom builders, remaining with this firm for about twenty years, and becoming identified with much of the growth and development of the town. In 1885 in association with his son, he purchased a hardware business, the firm style being H. Butterfield & Son. This business was successfully conducted for four years, when the father sold his interest to his son and bought some twenty acres of land and engaged in farming.

On Oct. 9, 1861, Mr. Butterfield enlisted for service in the Union army, entering Co. B, 11th C. V. I. He was mustered into service Oct. 24, 1861, and discharged April 29, 1862, having been located the greater part of the time at Newbern, North Carolina.

In politics Mr. Butterfield was a life-long member of the Democratic party, and he faithfully served in many offices of trust and responsibility, notably as tax collector for two years, as constable, and as grand juror, while in 1836 he most efficiently represented his town in the Legislature, serving on the committee on Railroads. His interests in all public affairs was constant, and his ripe judgment was often solicited by those who had learned its value.

The first marriage of Mr. Butterfield was to Ellen Quigley, a native of Philadelphia, whose death occurred in 1859. Her children were as follows: (1) William Jonas, who was born Feb. 23, 1847, lives in Stonington, Conn., an excellent machinist. He married Amelia Chaffee, of Stafford, and their children are Elmer, Arthur, Frederick, and Alice. (2) Mary Ann, who was born Dec. 26, 1849, married Charles Filbrook, deceased. She later married Charles Upton, and they live in Cambridge, Mass., her children being Frederick Filbrook and George Upton. (3) Henry Oliver, who was born Jan. 17, 1851, first married Emma Pinney, of Stafford. The daughter of this union, Gertrude, died in infancy. His second marriage was to Mary Olds, of Stafford, and their children were Gertrude and Ralph, who died in infancy, Helen, Harold, Ruth, Hazel and Baby.

The second marriage of Mr. Butterfield was to Mrs. Mary A. Nelson, the widow of Calvin H. Nelson, and the daughter of William and Mary (Thompson) Wheeler, there being no issue from this marriage.

Mr. Butterfield was socially connected with Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, F. & A. M., of Stafford, of which he had been Junior Warden, and he was also a member of Orient Chapter, R. A. M., of Stafford Springs. For many years he was one of the leading members and hearty supporters of the Methodist Church in Staffordville, and was one of the most highly esteemed residents of that locality.

DAVID EDMOND CLARK is a representative of one of the old and honored families of Connecticut, whose lineage is traced back to the Colonial epoch in our national history, so that it becomes all the more compatible that a genealogical and individual review be given place in a compilation of this nature. In these later days the migratory tendencies of the American people are so manifest in all sections of our national domain that it is gratifying to note those instances where one generation after another has been identified with the interests of a certain locality, and where the ancestral home represents something more than a mere name, as is true in the case at hand, since the subject of this sketch is residing in the same community and on the same farm where his birth occurred, while his character and efforts have been such as to well uphold the prestige of an honored name. Mr. Clark was born in East Putnam, Conn., April 2, 1835, a son of David Clark.

Jonathan Clark, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a native of Charlestown, R. I., where he was born Oct. 8, 1702, while his wife, Tabitha, was born June 17, 1715. Concerning their children the following data have been secured: Jonathan, born Dec. 17, 1739; Abraham, born March 30, 1741; Josiah, born July 14, 1742; Nathaniel, born Sept. 12, 1744; Tabitha, born March 21, 1746; Sarah, born Nov. 17, 1747; Benjamin, born March 10, 1749; Hannah, born Dec. 2, 1752; and David.

David Clark, son of Jonathan, was born Oct. 12, 1756. His wife, Mercy, was born June 13, 1750, and they became the parents of six children, whose names and dates of birth are as follows: Sarah, Nov. 8, 1780; Tabitha, Aug. 20, 1782; Benjamin, Aug. 26, 1784; Anna, Dec. 18, 1786; David, Dec. 20, 1789; and Benjamin (2), March 24, 1792. David Clark, the father of these children, was a weaver by trade, and was known as an expert workman. He died in Sterling, Connecticut.

David Clark was born in Sterling, Conn., Dec. 20, 1789, and his death occurred in East Putnam, Aug. 8, 1876, in the old homestead where his son now resides. He was married to Miss Mary Cole, who was born in Plainfield, Conn., April 24, 1794, and whose death occurred at the home in Putnam, Aug. 5, 1890. She was a daughter of Rev. Nathaniel and Ann (Cole) Cole, the former of whom was a clergyman of the Baptist Church, and the founder of this denomination in Moosup, Conn., where he held pastoral charge for more than half a century. Of the children of David and Mary (Cole) Clark we enter the following brief record: (1) Clarissa Adeline, born in Sterling, Dec. 3, 1825, was married Aug. 14, 1853, to Joseph Willard Pierce, of Putnam, a shoemaker by vocation in his earlier years, but now a successful farmer, and they have the following named children: C. Clark Pierce, who married Annie M. Chase, of Thompson, Conn., daughter of Nathan Chase, and has one son, Earl Clark; and Clarence Edward, who married Mirtus Jacobs, of Thompson, and has two children, Carl Willard and Ralph Clarence. The two elder sons born to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Pierce died in childhood. (2) Sarah Emily, born in South Killingly, Conn., Sept. 27, 1827, died unmarried in Putnam Aug. 5, 1867, at the age of forty years. (3) Julia Ann, born in South Killingly, March 6, 1830, is the widow of Stephen B. Place, of Putnam. (4) Rebecca, born in South Killingly, July 9, 1832, has never married and now makes her home with her sister, Mrs. Place, in Putnam. (5) David Edmond is the youngest of the children and figures as the immediate subject of this sketch.

In early days David Clark devoted his attention to the trade of wagon making, but in 1833 he came to Putnam and purchased the homestead farm, one-half of same having been bought of Joshua Clark and the remaining half of an Englishman, who had been the owner of the property for a number of years. David Clark was a man of indefatigable energy, progressive methods and mature judgment, while his absolute integrity in all the relations of life gained and retained to him the respect of all with whom he came in contact, while he became one of the prominent and influential citizens of the community. He was one of the founders and was for many years a deacon in the First Baptist Church of Putnam. In his political proclivities he was a staunch Democrat up to the time of the Civil war, having been strenuously opposed to the institution of slavery, and having been one of seven to indicate his antipathy by voting the anti-slavery ticket, in Putnam, while his convictions led him to espouse the cause of the Republican party at the time of its organization, and he thereafter was an adherent of this party until the time of his death. While residing in Killingly he was called upon to serve in various offices of local trust and responsibility, including those of selectman and assessor, this being antecedent to the time when the town of Putnam was set apart from Killingly. He was a man of genial nature, fully appreciating the blessings of life and ever striving to infuse contentment and brightness into the lives of those with whom he came in contact. He was essentially a self-made man, having worked his own way from the position of a poor boy, entirely dependent upon his own resources, to that of a man of influence and solid prosperity, his estate at the time of his death having been appraised at about thirteen thousand dollars.

David Clark

While he thus accumulated a competency his generosity and liberality were notable, and he was ever ready to extend a helping hand to those in "any ways afflicted in mind, body or estate."

David Edmond Clark was born in the same house which is his present place of residence, and his early years were passed on the homestead farm, to whose work he began to contribute his quota while a schoolboy. His education was acquired in the district schools, which he attended during the winter months, until he had attained the age of nineteen years, when he practically inaugurated his independent career. For a time he continued to devote his attention to agricultural pursuits, but for several years prior to the demise of his honored father he was engaged in general contracting in the neighborhood, the business growing to be one of considerable scope and importance and entailing the employment of a corps of about twenty men at various intervals. In this line of enterprise Mr. Clark continued for some time after his father's death, his identification with the same having covered a period of somewhat more than a decade. He then assumed control of the old homestead farm, comprising 150 acres, and this has since been the field of his eminently successful operations, the place being one of the best improved and most valuable rural estates in this section of the State, the land being exceptionally productive, while in connection with his general farming operations Mr. Clark also devotes particular attention to dairying, the products in this line finding a ready demand at the highest market prices.

In politics Mr. Clark is a staunch supporter of the generic principles of the Republican party, but he is firmly arrayed with the forces opposing the traffic in intoxicating liquors and is thus in sympathy with the efforts of the Prohibition party. The high place which he holds in the confidence and esteem of his home community has been signaled by his having been called upon to serve in offices of local trust and responsibility. He was incumbent of the office of selectman for a period of four years, and for more than fifteen years has rendered most effective service in the position of road commissioner, in which capacity he has done much to further the construction of new roads in the town and to bring about the best possible improvement of the older established highways. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church, and he has long been one of the influential members of the local organization of that denomination, having been for many years chairman of the Church committee, while at the present time he is a valued member of the board of trustees. His wife also is a devoted member of the church, and takes an active part in the beneficent work of the ladies' society and in the support of the collateral benevolences of the church.

On Nov. 13, 1861, Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Miss Mary Louise Covell, daughter of Samson and Esther (Elliott) Covell, of Putnam, and her death occurred in Worcester, Mass., where she was visiting at the time, on Nov. 13, 1892. The children of this union were as follows: Albert Elliott, born in Putnam, Aug. 2, 1862, is unmarried, and is associated with his father in the conducting of the homestead farm; and Herbert, born in 1864, died in infancy. On Dec. 13, 1893, Mr. Clark consummated a second marriage, being then united to Miss Gertrude B. Stites, daughter of Henry and Emeline (Corson) Stites, of southern New Jersey. No children have been born of this marriage. The family home is a center of gracious hospitality, and our subject and his wife are held in the highest esteem in the social circles of the community in which the name of Clark has long been one of prominence and one standing for the highest order of citizenship.

FRANK LEWIS SMITH, M. D. Among the prominent and successful physicians of Stafford, Tolland county, none are better known than Dr. Frank Lewis Smith, whose relationship through heredity and inter-marriage is with the leading families of New England.

The ancestral line of Dr. Smith's father's family stretches far back into the misty past. Robert, the third of the name, reared a large family, whose members have become leading citizens of this and other States.

Freeman Smith, son of Robert (3), married Miss Lillis Dickinson, of Palmer, Mass. He died at the old homestead, leaving eight children: Austin, Henry, Sarah, Hannah, Maria, Asenath, Harriet and Charles. Austin married Jane Sibley, of Palmer. Henry's wife, Susan, was a young lady of Iowa. Sarah remained unmarried. Hannah and Maria died young. Asenath married a member of the Gilchrist family, of Ovid, N. Y., who was the eldest of three brothers who took part in the Civil war. Their only child, Charles A., died young and was buried in the cemetery in Palmer, being the seventh generation in succession to have died at the old homestead, which is occupied by Charles Smith. Harriet married Willis Phelps, a clergyman, who resides in Independence, Iowa. Charles married Mary Ames and had three children, two daughters and a son.

Betsey Smith, daughter of Robert (3), married Gen. Rasmus Holbrook, of Sturbridge, Mass., and their ten children were: George, Eliza, William, Lucinda, Sarah, Freeman, Alvan, Lucy, Julia and Edward. Gen. Holbrook died at his residence in Sturbridge, Mass., March 5, 1849, at about fifty-six years of age. George resided on the old home place until his death. Eliza married Eli S. Smith and resided in Birmingham, Conn., until her death. She had several children. Dr. William married Clara Belknap, of Sturbridge; they have three children and reside in Palmer; the Doctor served for three years in the Union army. Lucy married Dr. Harvey D. Burlingham, for four years a surgeon in the Union navy, formerly of Galesburg, Ill. The others remained at the old home for varying periods.

Asenath Smith, daughter of Robert (3), married Thomas Mason, of Palmer, Mass., who died, leaving two children—Eliza and Linus, both of whom died young. After the death of Thomas Mason Asenath married David Lewis, of Ware, Mass. They had three children, (1) Mason L., who married Helen M. Preston, of Byron, Ill. Their one child is Frank F. (2) Juliet, who married Clark Strong, an adjutant in the Union army. They had four children, the survivors being Lester and Gertrude. (3) Abbie, who married Philetus Fales, who served at St. Louis in the Union army. Maud who married Fred Strong, of Winsted, Conn., is their surviving child.

Harvey Smith, son of Robert (3), married Annis Hunt, of Palmer, Mass., and they then moved to Brimfield, where he died Jan. 24, 1866, at the age of sixty-three years. They had four children: Marcus, who died in the Union army, in North Carolina, at the age of twenty-three, leaving his widow, Seraph (Newton) Smith, a son named Marcus, and a daughter named Carry. Mary, Martha and Moses died young.

John W. Smith, son of Robert (3), married Mary Ann Parks, of Palmer, and they had five children: Mary Jane, George Francis, who was in the Union army, Alice A., Annie Parks and James Arthur. Mary Jane married F. W. Seymour, of Ravenna, Ohio, who died about fifteen months after their marriage. Alice was drowned at the age of eighteen months, Sept. 29, 1846, by falling into a vessel of water in her father's house. George F. has been married twice, both wives being dead. Annie Parks married Harry Potwin, of Chicago, Ill., where she now resides. James Arthur married Helen Hallett, of Winsted, Connecticut.

Dr. Alvin Smith, father of Dr. Frank L. Smith, and son of Robert (3), married Miss Abigail G. Homer of Brimfield, Massachusetts.

Samuel Thompson Smith, son of Robert (3), emigrated to Michigan and there married Mary Bissell, their one daughter being named Eva.

Francis Adam Smith, son of Robert (3), emigrated to Illinois and located near Rockford, where he married Sarah Brown. Their nine children are: Hattie M., Albert and Alice F., twins, Alvan Homer, Nellie, William H., Harry Robert, Julia B. and Lena B. Smith.

The ancestral line of Dr. Smith on the maternal side reaches far back. The ancestor of the Hoar and Homer families of this country, according to family records, was a wealthy London banker, who came to America on account of his religious principles and died soon after locating in the city of Boston, Mass. Joanna Hoar, supposed to have been his widow, died in Braintree, Mass., in 1661, her children being: Joanna, who married Col. E.

Quincy; Margery, who married Rev. H. Flynt; David, who returned to England; Leonard and John.

Leonard Hoar graduated at Harvard College in 1650, preached in England and married a daughter of Lord Lisle, was later called to the old South Church, Boston, and in 1672 became the president of Harvard College. He held that exalted position until the time of his death, in 1675.

John Hoar, the youngest son of the emigrant, became a lawyer and is spoken of as "distinguished for his bold, independent mind and action." He lived in Scituate from 1643 to 1655, went to Concord in 1660, and died April 2, 1704. His children were: Elizabeth, who married Jonathan Prescott; Mary, who married Benjamin Grover; and Daniel, who was born in 1650.

Leonard Hoar, the third son of Daniel, who with his son Joseph, took part in the original distribution of the Brimfield lands, was the ancestor of the subsequent line in which we are concerned.

Leonard Hoar bought the forty-acre lot of land which was owned by Nathaniel Hitchcock on Tower Hill, but in 1830 some of the descendants removed from this locality to Homer, N. Y., and with the concurrence of the family remaining in Brimfield, adopted the name of Homer, the change being authorized by the Massachusetts Legislature of 1831, 1834 and 1838.

Daniel Hoar, born in 1650, was married July 19, 1677, to Mary Stratton (first) and (second) to Mary Lee, Oct. 16, 1717. His children were: John, born Oct. 2, 1678; Daniel, born in 1680; Leonard, born in 1682; Jonathan, died at The Castle in 1702; Joseph, died at sea in 1707; Mary, born March 14, 1689, died Jan. 10, 1703; Samuel, born April 5, 1691; Isaac, born May 18, 1695; David, born Nov. 19, 1698; and Elizabeth, born Feb. 2, 1701.

Capt. Leonard Hoar, born in 1682, died in April, 1771, married Esther Bowman and reared these children: Joseph, born Dec. 5, 1707; Daniel, born May 7, 1709, died July 9, 1738; Sarah (born Sept. 3, 1710; Leonard, Jr., born Dec. 17, 1711; David, born Feb. 23, 1713; Charles, born Dec. 25, 1714; Edmund, born July 19, 1716; Esther, born April 7, 1719; Mary, married Feb. 19, 1751, to Samuel Colton; and Nathan.

Deacon Joseph Hoar, born Dec. 5, 1707, died Nov. 7, 1797. On May 10, 1736, he married Deborah Colton, who died Jan. 8, 1800, and their children were: Lucy, born June 4, 1737, married Nov. 23, 1758, John Sherman, Jr.; Deborah, born Jan. 28, 1739, died Feb. 4, 1739; Joseph, Jr., born June 22, 1740; Esther, born April 20, 1742, married July 21, 1768, Simeon Keep; Deborah, born Sept. 19, 1744, married Jan. 10, 1765, James Stebbins; and Samuel, born July 24, 1746, married July 2, 1773, Dorothy Hitchcock.

Lieut. Joseph Hoar, Jr., born June 22, 1740, died Feb. 5, 1816, and married Dec. 3, 1763, Mary Hitchcock. His title was gained as an officer in Gates' Northern army in 1777, and he was also in command of a company against Shay's rebels in 1787. His children were: Asenath, born Nov. 21, 1764, married Samuel Thompson; Ruth, born Oct. 17, 1766, married March 1, 1787, Asa Patrick; David, born Jan. 19, 1769; Solomon, born March 17, 1771; Hannah, born June 1, 1773, married June 27, 1793, Robert Smith, Jr.; Emma, born July 8, 1775, married Jan. 26, 1796, Oliver Blair; Joseph, born Sept. 25, 1777; Mary, born Nov. 21, 1779, married Nov. 25, 1802, Samuel Brown; Linus, born April 4, 1782, died Dec. 21, 1853, married (first) in June, 1808, Lucy Brown, and (second), May 6, 1818, Elizabeth Bond; and Tirzah, born March 24, 1783, married (first) Rev. Alvin Toby, and (second) Rev. Philip Spaulding, Oct. 29, 1816, her death occurring Sept. 29, 1848.

Col. Solomon Homer, son of Lieut. Joseph, and the honored grandfather of Dr. Frank L. Smith, was born on March 17, 1771, and he died Dec. 11, 1844. He was (first) married, June 14, 1792, to Abigail Bishop, who died Nov. 3, 1833. His (second) marriage was in 1837 to Mrs. Lucina (Ayers) Rogers. Col. Solomon was commissioned cornet in a cavalry company Sept. 15, 1802, captain Sept. 28, 1808, lieutenant-col. June 15, 1815, and colonel, July 12, 1816. His children were: Amanda, born Sept. 10, 1792, married Sept. 28, 1820, Elijah C. Ferry; Lucia, born May 4, 1794, married Nov. 13, 1854, Col. Dauphin Brown; Alured, born Jan. 29, 1796, died Aug. 5, 1870, married Nov. 28, 1822, Ruth Bliss; Betsey, born Dec. 30, 1799, died July 1, 1816; Solomon, Jr., born Oct. 1, 1804, died Jan. 2, 1879, married (first) Nov. 24, 1831, Eleanor Converse, who died Aug. 4, 1853, and married (second), Feb. 28, 1855, Marionette Burchard, who died April 28, 1877; Jacob Goodell, born Dec. 19, 1808, died May 12, 1809; and Abigail Goodell, born Dec. 13, 1812, married, May 16, 1839, Dr. Alvan Smith.

Dr. Alvan Smith was born in Palmer, Mass., and died in August, 1882, in Monson, Mass., after a useful and beneficent life covering seventy-four years. The children born to Dr. Alvan and wife were: Adelaide A., born in 1840, married Dr. Frederick D. Morse, a practicing physician of Lawrence, Kan.; Robert H., died Sept. 11, 1852, at the age of six months; Homer A., born in 1844, for the past eighteen years has been a successful physician in Palmer, Mass. (he served in earlier years in the U. S. navy, and is unmarried); Mary E., born in 1848, married Charles F. Orcutt and now resides on the old homestead in Monson, Mass., where Mr. Orcutt is the manager of the Monson Steam Laundry; and Dr. Frank L., of this sketch.

Dr. Alvan Smith was a man of wide influence and liberal education. His early life was spent in attendance at school, and he took an academic course in the Monson Academy, preparing there for Dartmouth College, which he entered. However, he was not able to continue in college on account of failing eye sight. A long horse back trip was taken from Massachusetts to Illinois, in the hope of regaining health, and upon his return home, a year later, he entered Harvard Medical school, graduating in 1837. Selecting Brimfield, Mass., as the scene of his efforts, Dr. Smith was associated there for a short term with Dr. Knight, but later moved to Sturbridge, Mass., where he remained for a year. He then gave way to his old friends in Monson, Mass., who presented him with a petition soliciting him to locate with them. For forty-three years Dr. Smith remained the skillful physician and trusted friend among these worthy and appreciative people, who sadly missed his ministrations when death called him from their midst. Although always busy with the cares of a large practice he took time to show an interest in all educational and religious matters in the community. For a number of years Dr. Smith served as trustee of the Monson Academy, and he was a leading and active member of the Congregational Church.

The birth of Dr. Frank Lewis Smith, of this biography, occurred Oct. 3, 1849, in Monson, Mass. His early education was acquired in the common schools of Monson, and later he took a four years course in the Academy. About 1868 he left school and entered the employ of B. C. Grant, in Willimantic, Conn., in the hardware business, remaining two years. Upon his return home he became a medical student under his father's tuition, and entered the University of New York City. He graduated from this great institution in March, 1875, with distinction, being one of eight taking first rank in a class of 120, and winning the faculty prize in materia medica.

Dr. Smith began his professional career almost immediately in Wales, Mass., removing in 1877 to Stafford Springs, where he practiced continuously for a period of thirteen years. Then after a brief absence he engaged in the drug business as a member of the firm of Smith & Lathrop. Two years later, disposing of his interest in this business, he resumed the practice of medicine, which has always been crowned with gratifying success. In September, 1890, Dr. Smith opened an office in Springfield, Mass., where he continued until 1892, at which time he entered into the drug business as mentioned. When he first left Stafford he sold his practice to Dr. Bowker, of Bernardstown, Mass., but after disposing of his drug interests he found his old connections ready to welcome his return.

Dr. Smith was married Nov. 10, 1875, to Alice Jane Risley, who was a daughter of James and Emily (Foster) Risley, of Stafford. The children born to this union were: Katherine Risley, who is a graduate of the Monson Academy, at home; Gertrude Homer, who died at the age of twelve years; Florence Alice, graduate of the State Normal School at Willimantic, Conn., in the class of 1901; Mary Adelaide, who graduated from the high school in 1900 bearing off the honors of her class as valedictorian; Alvan James, who is a student in the high school in the class of 1903; and Frank Lewis, who died at the age of three months.

Dr. Smith has served as president of the Tolland Medical Society, is town physician and was acting school visitor for three years; he is a member of both county and State medical societies, and is on the board of U. S. pension examiners. The doctor is a staunch Republican, has served on the board of selectmen, also as town health officer for the past six years. Dr. Smith has been identified with many of the public enterprises of Stafford Springs and has advocated most of the advances in the locality in the direction of higher education. His interest in this direction has been marked. Dr. Smith has served as president of the Library association, in which he has been very zealous, and he was one of the original incorporators of the Stafford Springs cemetery association. Fraternally Dr. Smith is a member of Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., and also of the order A. O. U. W., in which he is the examining physician. For a long period he has been one of the vestrymen of the Episcopal Church.

HENRY HASKELL DAVENPORT, one of the leading and prominent citizens of Pomfret, Windham Co., Conn., and one of the most enterprising members of the community, is a self-made man in the truest sense of that much abused term.

Cyrus C. Davenport, grandfather of Henry Haskell, was born on what was then called "Davenport Hill," in Pomfret. When a young man he learned the trade of cabinet-maker, and soon after he went to Rome, N. Y., where he followed that calling for a number of years. Returning to Connecticut he located on Woodstock Hill, where he operated a cabinetmaking shop of his own, and also carried on a small farm. Here he began making the rakes and cradles which afterward made his name so well known. They were far superior to any others, and he soon had orders for them that kept him busy. He improved his products and obtained patents on them. The rakes were very durable, gaining a wide reputation, and their equal is not to be had to-day. Mr. Davenport continued in their manufacture until after the death of his wife, when he disposed of his property in Woodstock and removed to Newport, R. I., where he resided until his death in 1882. He is buried at Woodstock. After his death the patents on his rakes were sold to a resident of Pomfret, but very few manufactured. Mr. Davenport was a splendid and very ingenious mechanic. He was a member of the Congregational Church. His wife, whose maiden name was Tryphosa Kendall, died in Woodstock. Their children were: Cyrus C., who is mentioned below; Phoebe, widow of a Mr. Palmer, and residing in St. Paul, Minn.; William, who went South, fought with the Confederates during the Civil war, and died in Mississippi; Ann, who was a school teacher and died in Woodstock; George, a successful druggist in St. Paul, Minn.; and Fanny, who died unmarried.

Cyrus C. Davenport was born in Woodstock. He learned the trade of painter and was employed at it until he enlisted for the Civil war. He served in the war for three years, and after his return was located a number of years at Woodstock, whence he moved to Providence, R. I., where he now lives. He has been an invalid for some time. Cyrus C. Davenport married Mary A. Haskell, a native of Dudley, Mass., daughter of Henry and Nancy (Vinton) Haskell. She died May 20, 1891. The children of this marriage were: Ellen Louise, who married Edwin P. Allen, a blacksmith of Pomfret, and had four children, Ethel D., Merrill P. (deceased), Henry Haskell and Edward P.; Albert U., who died aged eleven years; Henry Haskell; Bertie R., who died in infancy; and Frank Edgar, who died at the age of six years.

Henry Haskell Davenport was born Dec. 11, 1859, in Woodstock. He left home at the age of eleven years, and was employed by Capt. Shubael Day, a farmer in Woodstock, with whom he remained until he reached the age of sixteen years, receiving as wages his board and clothes and a few short months of schooling each winter. His hours for work were from daylight until after dark, and his employer was a very close and exacting man, who kept a systematic account of his expenditures in behalf of our subject. Including the time charged up by his wife for serving and darning, and all the money spent for him apart from his boarding, they footed up the sum of $105 for the whole term of his service—some five years. From Capt. Day's young Davenport went to Henry T. Childs', a cousin, who was also a farmer of Woodstock, where he remained two years. The first year here he had $75 and attended school in winter, and the next year he had $50 and attended both the fall and winter terms of the Woodstock Academy, for which he paid $22.50 tuition. After this Mr. Davenport was employed by J. J. Williamson, of Woodstock, who was engaged in the butchering business. He assisted in the butchering, and ran the meat cart there. The following year, 1878, he came to Pomfret, and was employed by A. P. Dennis in the meat business, with headquarters at what is known as the "Haskell Stand." Mr. Davenport drove the meat cart for him for two years and four months, until June 19, 1881, when he bought out his employer, getting heavily into debt by the transaction. He moved the business to Pomfret street, and by hard work and hiring the least possible help, soon paid off his indebtedness. By his careful management the business increased quickly and soon demanded the running of another wagon. Mr. Davenport continued in the business until 1899, when he disposed of it, having in 1898 established a livery business to which he has added a growing trade, dealing in high-grade horses, harnesses and carriages. He is also a contractor, and has built most of the macadam roads in Pomfret. His fine modern residence was erected in 1896.

On Jan. 10, 1883, Mr. Davenport was married to Nellie E. Freeman, who was born in Pomfret, daughter of Samuel Freeman. Five children have blessed this union: Frank Freeman, born Dec. 3, 1883; Leroy Haskell, born May 31, 1885; Zillah E., born Dec. 13, 1888, died April 18, 1890; Hazel E., born Sept. 19, 1890; and Henry Haskell, born Aug. 15, 1895, died Sept. 23, 1895. Mr. Davenport is a Republican. He was a town constable in 1892, and in 1901 represented Pomfret in the State Legislature, serving also on the committee on Insurance. He is a member of the Woodstock Fair Association, served as its first vice-president in 1900, and in the fall of the same year was elected president and re-elected in the fall of 1901. He is also a vice-president of the Windham County Fair Association; a member of Putnam Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Putnam Chapter, R. A. M.; Putnam Council No. 340, Royal Arcanum, and a charter member of the Putnam lodge of Elks. Mr. Davenport is a very popular man of gentlemanly bearing and manners, and has a wide circle of acquaintances.

LUCIAN BASS, a successful farmer and fruit grower in the town of Scotland, Windham county, is a native of the place, having been born there March 15, 1830, on the old Bass homestead.

The Bass family is descended from Deacon Samuel Bass, who with his wife Ann, and probably two or three children, came to New England about 1632. He was one of the earliest members of the first church in Roxbury, being in that town in 1632. He removed to Braintree about 1640, settling in what is now Quincy. He was admitted to the church in Braintree in 1640, and was chosen and ordained the first deacon there, an office he retained until his death, a period of more than fifty years. He was one of the leading men of the town and was a deputy or representative in 1641, and for twelve years subsequently. According to Savage, by his wife Ann the children of Deacon Samuel Bass were: Samuel, Mary and Hannah, probably born in England, and John, Thomas, Joseph and Sarah, born here. According to the same authority Deacon Bass died Dec. 30, 1694, aged ninety-three; and his wife died Sept. 5, 1663.

(II) Deacon Thomas Bass settled in Medfield, resided there five or six years, then returned to Braintree, and was chosen a deacon in the church, residing there until his death. He married (first) Oct. 4, 1660, Sarah Wood, of Medfield, who died Dec. 29, 1678; and he married (second) in 1680, Susanna Blanchard. His children were: Abigail, Samuel, Mary, John, Mehitabel and probably two others.

(III) John Bass, born March 26, 1675, married March 7, 1695, Elizabeth Neale, of Braintree. He settled first in Braintree, was in Lebanon in 1708, and Feb. 21, 1710-11, purchased 110 acres of land in Windham of Rev. Samuel Whiting, upon which he settled. This land is now within the bounds of Scotland, and in 1864 it was believed that the original homestead was still in the family, being then owned by Deacon Waldo Bass. John Bass died Oct. 10, 1753. His wife survived him. His children were: Elizabeth; Sarah, Thomas, Henry and John, all born in Braintree, John (2), born in Lebanon, and Hannah, Priscilla, Priscilla (2), and Zebulon, all born in Windham.

(IV) Henry Bass, born May 29, 1704, married Dec. 10, 1735, Elizabeth Church, and it is thought lived on the homestead in what is now Scotland. Mr. Bass died in December, 1783, and his widow passed away in September, 1798. Their children were: Zebulon, Samuel, Nathan, Adonijah, Ebenezer, Sybil, Joseph and Tryphena.

(V) Capt. Ebenezer Bass, born Oct. 26, 1746, married Dec. 13, 1769, Ruth, daughter of Zacheus Waldo. Capt. Bass was a farmer and a respected citizen of Windham. He died March 6, 1814, and his widow passed away in December, 1834. Their children were: Eleazer, born Sept. 4, 1770; Joseph, born April 17, 1772; Bela, born Jan. 16, 1776; Talitha, born April 2, 1778; Eunice, born Aug. 9, 1780; Nathan, born April 15, 1782; Ebenezer, born July 1, 1784; John, born Oct. 22, 1786; Lydia, born Nov. 13, 1788; and Zacheus, born Feb. 18, 1791.

(VI) Ebenezer Bass (2) was born in Scotland, Conn., July 1, 1784, and was educated in the home circle. During the war of 1812 he served in the defense of New London, when it was threatened by the British. Having been given a tract of land by his father, the early representatives of the Bass family being very large land holders, he cultivated it successfully, and died a wealthy man. He was a strong Democrat, and took a deep interest in politics, although not an office seeker. On March 27, 1811, he was married in Scotland, Conn., to Sarah McCurdy, daughter of Neil and Ruth (Avery) McCurdy, who was born on the island of Campobello, off the coast of Maine, in the year 1789.

The father of Mrs. Sarah (McCurdy) Bass died when she was quite young, leaving, besides herself, several young children. One of her mother's sisters was the wife of Major Halliburton, known in the annals of the famous boys' preparatory school at Exeter, N. H. Having no children of their own, the Major and his wife wished to adopt this little girl as their own child, and she spent some very happy months with them. The sudden death of Mrs. Halliburton made new plans necessary and it was at this time, when she had reached the age of eleven years, that another sister of her mother, Abigail Avery Burnett, begged to take the little girl to her home in Connecticut as her own child, and as a companion for her little daughter who was an only child. This daughter, Nancy Burnett, afterwards married Ebenezer Young, of Killingly, Conn., and a daughter of theirs, Harriet Young, became the wife of the head and founder of the now famous jewelry and art establishment, "Tiffany's," of New York.

To Mr. and Mrs. Ebenezer Bass were born: (1) William McCurdy, born Jan. 10, 1812. He went West in 1838, locating first in Illinois, where he was married in Bureau county in 1864, later he went to Kansas, where he died. (2) Ruth, born Dec. 15, 1813, died unmarried. (3) George, a twin to Ruth, married (first) Mary Cary, and moved to Illinois in 1838. (4) Edwin, born Jan. 28, 1816, married Emeline Stannard, and was a wealthy resident of Malden, Bureau Co., Ill., where he died in 1901. Several sons located in and around Chicago survive him. (5) Henry, born Nov. 24, 1817, married a Miss Crandall (a niece of Prudence Crandall, who had so much trouble in establishing a school for colored children in Canterbury, Conn.). They lived in Atchison, Henry Co., Ill., where he died in 1900. (6) Susan, born Sept. 30, 1819, died Sept. 15, 1822. (7) Sarah Ann, born Dec. 1, 1821, is the widow of William S. Gager, of Scotland. (8) Nathan, born Feb. 14, 1824, served in the Civil war as an adjutant, taught school for a time in Kentucky, practiced law in Denver at one time, and is now a farmer and lawyer in Jasper county, Mo. (9) Harriet, born April 20, 1826, died in April, 1846. (10) Clinton, born March 14, 1828, is married and has been engaged, in farming in Missouri since 1852. (11) Lucian, born March 15, 1830. (12) Charlotte, born Aug. 2, 1833, married Charles W. Beckwith, of South Windham. Mrs. Beckwith died several years since and their daughters live in Willimantic with their father.

Lucian Bass was reared upon the old homestead and his education acquired wholly in the district schools of Scotland. In the spring of 1857 he went West. There he purchased land and later went to Minnesota, where he took up a quarter-section claim. Soon after he returned home and in time disposed of his western real estate. In 1865 he purchased the home farm where he had been born, and where his father spent the latter years of his life. This farm is situated in the western part of the town very near the Windham line. In 1897 the house and barn were destroyed by fire, and for a time the family made their home at Windham Centre. In 1897, Mr. Bass erected his present home.

When he first began farming Mr. Bass conceived the idea that fruit raising would prove a paying venture, and after a time started a peach orchard, which now covers more than thirty acres and yields good returns. In addition to his fruit raising and general farming Mr. Bass is an extensive sheep farmer, and his flocks are among the best in the county. In past years Mr. Bass was active in insurance work, being a representative of the Phoenix Life, Hartford Mutual and several other companies. During the years 1869 and 1870 he did quite a large business but lately his other duties claim the greater portion of his time.

The first wife of Mr. Bass was a Miss Nancy B. Gager, a daughter of John P. and Lucy Ann (Brumley) Gager, and she died in 1874. Mr. Bass was married again, Oct. 17, 1877, to Mercy Reynolds, a daughter of Stephen and Annie Bissell (Lillibridge) Reynolds, and a granddaughter of John and Phoebe (Swan) Lillibridge. Phoebe Swan was a native of Stonington, Conn., a member of one of the old families of the town, a branch of which settled in Middlesex county, where descendants of the name now reside. Stephen Reynolds was born in Exeter, R. I., and died in Scotland, Conn., and was a man of rare mechanical ability, inventing the self-binder that made the fortune of the Walter A. Wood Co. His entire life was spent in mechanical and manufacturing lines, and he was connected with mills at North Adams, Mass., Baltic, Conn., and other places. Several other inventions of his might be mentioned, but to the self-binder he devoted the best years of his life, and failing in his efforts to get his patent extended, he was deprived of his own. He and his wife had but two children: Mercy, wife of Mr. Bass, and Jennie R. Mrs. Bass was born July 2, 1850, graduated in 1869 from East Greenwich Academy, and in 1872 from the Rhode Island Normal School. Jennie R. was born Feb. 10, 1856, and married William R. Green, cashier of Atlantic National Bank of Providence, R. I. Their children are: Gertrude, died in 1892; Rebecca Russell; William Hunter and Marguerite Lillibridge.

To Mr. and Mrs. Bass were born: Clare Reynolds, born July 17, 1878, graduated at Willimantic high school in the class of 1896, Brown University in 1900. She taught in the Willimantic Normal school in 1900 and 1901, and is now Principal of the Wheeler high school, North Stonington, Conn. Anne McCurdy, born Jan. 1, 1885, graduated from the Willimantic high school in June, 1902, then entered Wellesley College in 1903. Eben Lucian, born Dec. 28, 1886, is attending the Connecticut Agricultural College.

In politics Mr. Bass is a Republican, although he admits that he once voted for an opposition candidate, Horace Greeley, because he admired the man. Mr. Bass has held nearly all of the local offices, including those of constable and collector, member of the board of relief, justice of the peace, member of the school committee. Mrs. Bass and daughters are members of the Windham Congregational Church, while Mr. Bass still holds membership in the church he attended when a boy, in Scotland, Conn. Mr. Bass is justly regarded as one of the substantial and representative men of this locality.

(I) Richard Swan, the emigrant ancestor and progenitor of the Swan family in Connecticut and Rhode Island, appears first on this side of the Atlantic in Boston, Mass., where he joined the church and had one child, John, probably his youngest, baptized the Sunday after his admission. His wife died in England before Mr. Swan came to New England. Upon application he was dismissed with many others from the Boston Church to join a church at Rowley, Mass., where he remained during life. He became a prominent citizen in that place, representing the town in the Massachusetts General Court in 1666, and many years after. He served in King Philip's war, and went on an expedition to Canada. On March 1, 1658, he married for his second wife, Mrs. Ann Trumbull, who had married for her first husband, Michael Hopkinson. Mr. Hopkinson was buried Feb. 28, 1648, and for her second husband she married in June, 1650, John Trumbull. Richard Swan was her third husband. He died May 14, 1678. His children were: Richard, Francis, Robert, Jonathan, Susan, Sarah and John.

(II) Robert Swan, son of Richard the emigrant settler, born in 1628, married Elizabeth Acie, and at that time both were residents of Rowley, Mass. He subsequently went to Andover, later to Haverhill, locating in that part of the town subsequently set off as Methuen. He was a soldier in the "Great Swamp fight," in King Philip's war, a member of Lieut. Benjamin Swett's company. His first wife died in 1689, and he married (second) April 1, 1690, Hannah Russ.

(III) John Swan, son of Robert, born Aug. 1, 1668, married Aug. 1, 1699, Susanna Wood, daughter of Philip Eastman, and widow of Thomas Wood, whom she married in 1693, and who with their child Susanna, was killed by the Indians March 15, 1697. Mr. and Mrs. Swan lived in Haverhill, Mass., until 1707, and there three of their children were born. In that year they came to Stonington, Conn., locating on what is now Swan Town Hill, North Stonington, where the rest of their children were born. Mr. Swan died May 1, 1743, and his wife died Dec. 20, 1772, in the one hundredth year of her age.

WARREN KIBBE, in his lifetime a prominent man and leading citizen of Somers, Tolland county, was engaged in business for sixty years as the proprietor of the "Somers Hotel."

Edward Kibbe, who came with his brother James from Enfield to settle in Somers in 1713, was born in 1670. He married Mehitable Felt, and died in 1756.

Elisha Kibbe, son of Edward, located on Somers street, where he reared the following children: Elisha, Jr., Peter, Zerah, Charles, Timothy, and Mehitable, who married General Fonclaire, an officer in the war of the Revolution.

Zerah Kibbe, son of Elisha, married a Miss Arnold, and kept a hotel at the east of Somers street. They had the following family: Peter; Jude; Simeon and Levi, twins; Aife, who married John Prentice, of Jefferson, N. Y.; Lavina, who married Luke Luce, of Somers; Lucy, who married Dr. David McClure, of Somers; and a daughter who married Eben Wardell, of Somers.

Levi Kibbe, son of Zerah, was born on the farm where his active life was spent. His declining days were spent in the home of his son Warren, where he died. At one time he was very prosperous, but lost his property by endorsing a note for a friend. He married (first) Sarah (Sally) Antrim, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, leaving the following children: Levi, who moved to Pennsylvania; William, who found a home in Georgia; and Warren, who resided in Somers. For his second wife Mr. Kibbe married Mrs. Mary Palmer, of New London, Conn. To this union were born Thomas and Emeline.

Warren Kibbe was born on the old homestead farm March 4, 1804, and was reared a farmer. After the custom of the times he attended the district school a short time each winter until he was fourteen years of age. At that time on account of domestic troubles resulting from his father's second marriage young Warren was bound out by his father to a farmer in the north part of Somers, where he had his board and clothes and $25 a year. For two years he remained with the farmer, and then becoming discontented ran away and located at Springfield, Vt., where he worked for a miller and then for a farmer. Saving his small wages he bought a small stock of Yankee notions, and with a small handtruck he peddled on his way home to Somers, where he rented a small farm near his birthplace. Before he became of age he married, and removed to Watertown, N. Y., where he resided two years. He then returned to Somers to a rented farm on Meacham hill, in the Seventh district, where he remained for several years. This proved a profitable enterprise, and with his savings Mr. Kibbe removed to Wilbraham, Mass., where he rented a farm, and for several years was engaged in its cultivation. Later he came back to Somers and rented a hotel, which he bought two years later of its owner, Jairus Kibbe, and there his active business career was spent. For some twenty years he had a general store on his hands in addition to his hotel. The fame of Mr. Kibbe as a genial host was widely known, and for many years his hotel was the scene of much gaiety, being the resort of the best citizens of Springfield, Mass., Rockville, and many other adjacent towns. The hotel was a large and fine building of the old colonial style, with a ball room on the top floor, and during many seasons a dance was held there for six nights in the week, though the revelers were never permitted to encroach on the Sabbath.

Mr. Kibbe was a well built man and capable of much sustained hard work, keeping his health until his last sickness. He died Aug. 29, 1892, and his remains were interred in the North Cemetery at Somers, where a beautiful monument marks his last resting place. In his political relations he was a Democrat, and was deputy sheriff for many years, also holding the office of postmaster under several administrations. He was a man much respected and had many friends.

Mr. Kibbe married Samantha Spencer, of Somers, who died at the age of thirty-six years, leaving the following family: Frank W., who married Ellen Pomeroy, and went West, but nothing is now known of him; Sarah S., who married Frank Gowdy, of Hartford, and has had four children: Frank, Ernest (deceased), Harold, and Warren; and CLARENCE L., who was born Aug. 1, 1846, and who assisted his father in his business, but now resides in the family home, which he is conducting at the present time. Mr. Kibbe married for his second wife, Harriet Hulburt, of Somers, who still resides at the old home. To them was born one daughter, Jennie S., who died in 1891, aged forty-one years.

ALBERT SEARLS FIELD, the efficient and popular jailer for Windham county at Brooklyn, Conn., and a skilled mechanic by trade, descends from one of the prominent families of New England, one which has given to American history several of her illustrious sons.

Mr. Field was born June 26, 1875, in Hope Valley, Washington Co., R. I., a son of Albert Franklin and Mary Eliza (Kenyon) Field, and he descends on both sides from ancestors of the Colonial period in Rhode Island's history. The Field family of this country traces its paternal lineage five generations back to the American ancestor in the Old World, and the subject of this article is in the tenth generation from the emigrant American settler, John Field. The latter was born probably in Thurnscoe, England, a son of William, a grandson of John, a great-grandson of Richard, a great-great-grandson of William (2), and a great-great-great-grandson of William Field.

John Field, the American ancestor, appears of record in New England at Providence, R. I., in 1637, where on Aug. 20th, of that year, he signed an agreement, or contract, pertaining to settlement, and on July 27, 1640, another for civil government. He was admitted a freeman of the Colony in 1655, and was deputy to the Colonial Assembly in 1676. Both he and his wife died in 1686.

From this American ancestor Jailer Field's lineage is through John, Capt. John, John, Deacon John, John, Capt. John, Albert Searls and Albert Franklin Field.

(II) John Field, born about 1645, in Providence, married there Elizabeth, daughter of Hon. Anthony Everden, and was a resident of Providence, R. I., and of Bridgewater, Mass. His death occurred in 1698, and his wife's before that year.

(III) Capt. John Field, born Feb. 20, 1671, in Providence, married, in November, 1697, Elizabeth, daughter of John Ames, of Bridgewater, Mass. He was a resident of both Providence and Bridgewater, and died in 1758. His wife passed away in 1739.

(IV) John Field (4), born Feb. 27, 1704, in Bridgewater, married, in 1726, Mary, daughter of Ephraim Howard, of Bridgewater.

(V) Deacon John Field, born in 1727, in Providence, married, April 6, 1747-48, in Plainfield, Conn., Lydia Warren, daughter of Joseph Warren, of Norwich, Conn., and said to have been a sister of Gen. Warren, who was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill in the Revolution. Mrs. Field was born in Norwich in 1724, and died in 1811. Deacon Field passed away March 10, 1794, a resident of Providence.

(VI) John Field (6), born March 22, 1748, in Providence, married, Oct. 28, 1770, Mary Searls, daughter of Solomon Searls, and resided in Providence. Mrs. Field was born in 1747, and died Sept. 28, 1813. Mr. Field died Dec. 11, 1811.

(VII) Capt. John Field, born Jan. 18, 1771, in Providence, married, Nov. 5, 1799, in Providence, Amey Lerken, born in Newport, R. I., in 1769. They resided in Providence. Capt. Field died Sept. 8, 1836, and Mrs. Field passed away Nov. 18, 1859. Their children were: John, Albert, Richard, Joanna, Martha, Emily L., Louisa, Albert Searls and Richard.

(VIII) Albert Searls Field, born Oct. 28, 1803, in Providence, married, at Valley Falls, Feb. 23, 1840 Deborah Kettle, born July 27, 1812. They resided in Providence, where Mr. Field was a cordwainer and farmer. He died Jan. 16, 1858, and Mrs. Field passed away May 11, 1877. Their children were: Sarah W., born March 22, 1841, died Nov. 12, 1855; Albert Franklin, born Aug. 11, 1842; and Jennie E., born July 18, 1844.

(IX) Albert Franklin Field was born Aug. 11, 1842, in Providence, R. I., where much of his life has been passed. In youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith and iron worker. In this line of mechanics he became skilled and proficient, and for years was in the employ of one of the extensive works in Providence. In 1897 he removed to the State of Illinois, and has since resided there. His political affiliations are with the Republican party, and his religious connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Field married Mary Eliza Kenyon, a daughter of William Kenyon, and to the union came five children, namely: Jennie and Minnie, both now deceased; Marion, now the wife of William Hobert, of Stonington, Conn.; a son that died in infancy; and Albert Searls. The mother of these children died in 1885.

Albert Searls Field, son of Albert Franklin, received his education in the district schools of Hope Valley, the Westerly (R. I.) High School, and the Stonington (Conn.) Academy. After his school days were over he learned the trade of tool-making at the Atwood Machine Shop, in Stonington, and followed such line of work until failing health compelled him to give it up in 1896. In 1899 he was appointed clerk and assistant jailer to Charles Osgood, then jailer for Windham county, Conn., at Brooklyn. Mr. Osgood died in June, 1902, and Mr. Field succeeded to the position of jailer by appointment of Sheriff Sibley. In his position Mr. Field has been most efficient and popular, giving satisfaction to all concerned. He has always been a Republican, but has never taken an active part in politics. He is the youngest jailer for Windham county; probably the youngest ever appointed. Mr. Fields is one of the rising young men of Windham county. He is unmarried.

ESEK JOHNSON SWEET. Among the well known and leading citizens of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., is Esek Johnson Sweet, a native of Gloucester, R. I., who was born there Nov. 29, 1833. The family is one of the old and respected ones of that State.

Jeremiah Sweet, the great-grandfather of Mr. Sweet of this biography, was a highly esteemed farmer in Rhode Island after his return from service in the Patriot army in the Revolutionary war, the tombstone over his remains in the old Sweet burying-ground testifying to the fact. His age was eighty-seven years when he died. His wife lived to the age of ninety-three years, their children being: Timothy, the grandfather of Esek J. Sweet; Mary, who married Darius Durfee; Anna, who married Mowry Peckham for her first husband, and for her second husband Duleus Blois; Dorcas, who died young; and Elizabeth, who married David Page.

Timothy Sweet, the grandfather, was born in 1781, in Gloucester, R. I., where he became an extensive farmer and was many years a deputy sheriff. He married Abigail Page, who died Jan. 28, 1845, at the age of sixty-four years, Mr. Sweet dying at the same age, Nov. 17, 1845. Their children were: Solomon; Jeremiah, who became a farmer and a lumberman, married Arvilla Irons; Joseph became a farmer and married Paulina Saunders; Frelove, married Robert Saunders; Stephen became a miller and conducted this business all his life (he married Fanny Farrow); Thomas became a lumberman and a farmer, and married Amy Wade; and Darling Eddy, married Hannah Wade, a sister of his brother's wife, and he also became a farmer and a lumberman.

The great-grandfather was six feet in stature and strongly built, and the grandfather was about five feet seven inches, with very broad shoulders and a man of great courage. They were both possessed of business ability and were the owners of almost all the business enterprises of the place, the store, the mill and almost all of the land. The grandfather was able to give each of his children a farm.

Solomon Sweet, the father of Mr. Sweet of this sketch, was born Feb. 10, 1804, in Gloucester, R. I. He became a blacksmith in addition to being a farmer and also engaged in lumbering to a considerable extent, as at that time the country was heavily timbered. His blacksmith business was very lucrative and he engaged in it for a long period. In 1842 he was a Dorrite in politics, later became a member of the Know Nothing party, but upon the establishment of the Republican party he adopted its principles and upheld them through life. Mr. Sweet was a leader among men, serving most faithfully in the offices to which he was elected. He was a justice of the peace for a long period, and for many years settled up estates, his character being such that every one reposed confidence in him. The Baptist Church was built on his farm; he was one of the four who furnished the greater portion of the funds for its establishment, and during life was one of the deacons, a man of piety.

The marriage of Deacon Solomon Sweet was (first) to Harriet Hopkins, who was a daughter of Esek Hopkins. She died at the early age of thirty-one, in 1835, in Gloucester, leaving these children: (1) Henry died at the age of thirteen years. (2) Timothy died in infancy. (3) Samuel Edwin, who died at the age of fifty-one, in Topeka, Kansas. By trade he was a brick mason, but later engaged in the ice business, in which he made a large fortune, and he was a resident of Topeka for eighteen years. Samuel E. Sweet married (first) Almira Williams, and after her death he married a western woman. (4) George H., who is a resident of San Marbal, New Mexico, where he carries on a coal and ice business, and is also a manufacturer of soft drinks. His marriage was to Emerline Hopkins. (5) Esek J. (6) Mowry Peckham, who went to California in 1858 and died in San Francisco, in 1899. He was by trade a carpenter, but on account of an injury went into the milk business. He never married. (7) A child which died in infancy.

The second marriage of Solomon Sweet was to Eliza Thurber, of Providence, R. I., the two children born of this marriage dying young, as did also Mrs. Sweet. The third marriage was to Sally Steere, of Gloucester, R. I., and the children of this union were: two infants who died; Ellen E., who died unmarried at the age of fifty years; and Solomon Steere, who resides on the old homestead in Foster, R. I. His marriage was to Alma Saunders. Mr. Sweet is extensively engaged in the lumber business.

Esek Johnson Sweet obtained his primary education in the common schools of his native place, and later enjoyed one year at Scituate Seminary, in Rhode Island, leaving home at the age of twenty. He first taught a winter school in Gloucester, then ran a saw mill and worked at farming through the summer, taught school the next winter in Scituate, R. I., and the next year was employed in a saw mill most of the season. For the two following years Mr. Sweet engaged in farming, during which time he took a business course at the Potter Hammond & Alvord Commercial College, at Providence, R. I., graduating in November, 1857. In the fall of 1858 he located in Dayville, Conn., where he became a partner of I. A. Randall, the firm style being Randall & Sweet, the business being dry goods and crockery. After six months Mr. Sweet sold his interest to Mr. Randall, and established a general store in Glocester, R. I., on the Providence & Hartford turnpike, the old toll road, where he continued for two years. He then removed his stock to East Putnam, Conn., where he conducted a good business through the Civil war time. In 1865 Mr. Sweet changed his stand to Pascoag, R. I., where for more than four years he was eminently successful as a merchant, afterward selling out to other parties in the locality. About this time Mr. Sweet encountered some ill luck, a partnership he had formed with William S. Jencks in wholesale fancy goods and notions not being successful on account of the unsettled trade conditions of the country and the depreciation of gold. After one year this business was discontinued. Mr. Sweet then became a traveling sewing machine agent through South Providence, and also conducted another dry goods store for two years, in 1870-71. Following this enterprise he conducted a meat market in South Providence for one year and engaged in various lines, having ability in all. In 1876 he came to Stafford and for one year was the very efficient clerk for L. W. Crane, and then removed to West Windsor, Conn., entering there the establishment of Wing & Hendrick, paper hangers, and dealers in dry goods. Later he went to Sterling, Conn., where he managed a store for Briggs & Bennett for some months, leaving that place on account of the death of a member of the firm.

A man of many acquirements Mr. Sweet was never at a loss to find employment, for if one thing failed his industry and ability soon enabled him to get interested in something else. After teaching one term of school in Sterling, he was engaged for a time in running a saw mill, but in June, 1878, he returned to Stafford. There he entered the store of John Brown and was his efficient clerk for a season and then started into the brick and plaster mason business. This trade he had learned under his brothers. Since that time Mr. Sweet has been continuously successful, and has done a vast amount of reliable and satisfactory work. Some of this may be noted, as, the library building, Johnson's Block, Baker's Block, and also the work on the Springs Hotel, in 1895.

The first marriage of Mr. Sweet of this record was May 6, 1857, to Eunice C. Page, who was a daughter of Stephen Page. Mrs. Sweet died July 15, 1865, at Pascoag, R. I., her children being: (1) Clifford A., born Sept. 15, 1858, who is a successful mason in Monson, Mass. He married Jessica Bucklin, and his children are Maude C., the valedictorian of her class in Monson Academy, in 1901; Annie B., also a graduate with her sister; Sarah L.; Alice K.; Carl and Marian. (2) Walter A., born Oct. 31, 1862, who is a shoe manufacturer in Worcester, Mass., the firm name being Bickford & Sweet. He married Annie Root, and (second) Lizzie Batcheder, the children being Ruth and Clifford.

The second marriage of Mr. Sweet was Jan. 18, 1868, to Mary Frances Hopkins, but there was no issue of this marriage. His third marriage was Oct. 26, 1876, to Sarah A. Kenyon, of Providence, R. I., who was a daughter of Hanson Kenyon. One son was born to this marriage, Frederick A., who was born March 12, 1879, and is a painter by trade.

Mr. Sweet has been prominent in public affairs ever since his location in Stafford, has served as assessor of the borough and has also served as one of the borough burgesses. In politics he was reared a Republican, but at the formation of the Prohibition party became attached to that, and he has worked faithfully in its ranks. Socially he is a member of the Masonic order, of Granite Lodge, No. 11, of Burrillville, R. I., and he is also a member of the Temple of Honor. In religious connection Mr. Sweet is a consistent and valued member of the Morning Star Free Will Baptist Church at North Foster, R. I., in which his father was a deacon. Mr. Sweet has always been identified with the Sunday-school work. He was Sunday-school superintendent while in Dayville, Conn., and for fourteen years was the tenor singer in the choir at Stafford Springs, possessing a voice of volume and sweetness.

DEACON F. L. CORBIN, of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., a representative of one of the oldest families in the State, as well as one of the most respected citizens of Windham county, was born May 13, 1838, in West Woodstock on the old family homestead.

Deacon Penuel Corbin, father of Deacon F. L., was born Aug. 12, 1802, in Woodstock, and was a farmer by occupation, but passed his winters in making shoes, although to some extent he engaged in lumbering. In politics he was a Whig, and was very popular with his party. In his later years he became a Republican, that party having succeeded the Whig party, which became extinct about the year 1854. Mr. Corbin in his active political years was called upon to fill several local offices, such as that of town selectman, assessor, and member of the board of relief. In religious matters he was very ardent, having when twenty years old become a member of the Baptist Church, in which he succeeded his father as a deacon, holding the position until his own death, which occurred Aug. 1, 1870. Deacon Penuel married, Nov. 22, 1827, Miss Mary Chamberlin, who was born in Woodstock in 1806, a daughter of Elisha and Sarah Chamberlin, and died about 1876. To this estimable couple were born six children, named in order of birth, as follows: Lucius Anson, Mary Jane, Sarah Ellen, Francis L., Milo Pliny and Viola Calista.

Lucius Anson Corbin was born Feb. 13, 1829, in West Woodstock, and married Dec. 17, 1856, Almira Sophia Chamberlin, who was born in Woodstock July 12, 1837, a daughter of Benjamin and Almira (Bugbee) Chamberlin, and died June 13, 1885, in Union, Conn. Lucius A. Corbin lived on his father's farm until twenty-one years old, and then learned the shoemaker's trade from his father, for whom he worked at that trade until he was twenty-seven years old. He then began farming, and at the age of twenty-nine, in the spring of 1858, settled in Union, on the Burt Crawford farm, which he had previously purchased. This farm comprises sixty-two acres, which Mr. Corbin has highly improved and where he raises general crops. He also keeps several cows, selling his butter in Southbridge, Mass.

In his political faith Mr. Corbin is a staunch Republican, and has served on the board of selectmen fifteen years, most of the time as first selectman; he has also served as assessor, and has been a member of the board of relief as well as registrar of voters. Mr. Corbin and family are all members of the Methodist Church at Mashapaug, having joined at its organization in 1867, since when at different times he has filled the positions of clerk, collector, secretary and treasurer.

The children born to Lucius A. and Almira Sophia Corbin are two in number, namely: (1) Bertha Lillian, born Aug. 18, 1864, in Union, married Robert E. Webster in 1886. (2) Ernest Elbert, born April 2, 1872, in Union, married June 15, 1898, Josephine Kinney, daughter of Milton H. and Martha (Moore) Kinney, of Mashapaug, mention of whom may be found elsewhere. Ernest Elbert and wife have had one child, Alta Almira, whose birth occurred April 26, 1899. Mr. Corbin was formerly connected with a grain and feed store at Southbridge, Mass., but is now a foreman in the sash, blind and door factory of J. L. & M. D. Clements, where he has been employed since May 1, 1901.

Mary Jane, the second child of Deacon Penuel and Mary (Chamberlin) Corbin, born March 14, 1831, in West Woodstock, married Jan. 5, 1864, Myron Kinney, of Putnam, Conn. She has borne five children, of whom four are still living, viz.: Emma Jane, Ellen Lucy, Etta and Elbert Corbin.

Sarah Ellen, the third of the family, born Oct. 8, 1833, married Feb. 25, 1861, Deacon Edwin H. Lawson, and died Dec. 31, 1885. She was the mother of four children, viz.: George N., Harvey M., Mary Eva and Susie Minerva.

Francis L., the fourth child of Deacon Penuel and Mary Chamberlin Corbin, is the subject proper of this sketch.

Milo Pliny, the fifth child, born Jan. 16, 1842, in West Woodstock, married Mary Corbin, daughter of Thomas E. Corbin of the same town. Milo and his wife are now living in Putnam.

Viola Calista, the sixth child, born Jan. 28, 1848, in West Woodstock, married William Alderman, a farmer of that town.

Deacon Penuel Corbin, Sr., grandfather of Francis Lathrop Corbin, was born in Woodstock, and there died Dec. 15, 1858, at the age of eighty-six, his remains being interred in the local Baptist Church burying-ground. He was an industrious and successful farmer, in politics a Whig, and in religion a Baptist, being first deacon of the local Baptist Church for many years. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannah Howard, was a native of Ashford, Conn.; she died July 28, 1854, at the age of eighty-one. She was the mother of six children, namely: Eunice, who married Wheeler Phillips, of West Woodstock; Lathrop, who married Almira Crawford, of Union, and died in New York while still young; Henry Howard, who went to Batavia, N. Y., and there passed the remainder of his life; Deacon Penuel, Jr.; Pliny, who married and settled in Michigan, where he cleared up a farm from the woods and there died (his wife's name was Sarah); and Hannah, who married Cheney Plimpton, of Sturbridge, Massachusetts.

William Corbin, great-grandfather of Deacon F. L. Corbin, was born in Woodstock, and died in West Woodstock at the age of eighty-one. His wife, Dorothy, died also in West Woodstock, Aug. 1, 1822, when seventy-seven years old. William Corbin was a descendant of Clement Corbin, who came from England and settled in the Muddy River grants, now a part of Boston, Mass., in 1637. In 1687 he removed to New Roxbury, now Woodstock, Conn., where he died Aug. 1, 1696. As far as can be ascertained Clement was the first of the name of Corbin to settle in this country and his descendants are now scattered all over the United States. He married Dorcas Buckminister, daughter of Thomas, of Roxbury, Mass., March 7, 1650, or 1655. This lady was born in 1629, and died in Woodstock, Conn., Jan. 22, 1721, at the age of ninety-two. She was the mother of eight children, born in the following order: Thomas, Mary, John, James, Jabez, Dorcas, Johanna and Margaret.

Deacon Francis L. Corbin was educated in the district schools of Woodstock, Conn., and at Nicholas Academy, in Dudley, Mass. When twenty-four years old Mr. Corbin returned to his childhood's home and purchased his father's farm of 155 acres, which he successfully conducted until June, 1880. He then removed to the eighty-five acre farm owned by George Bradford, his father-in-law, near Woodstock Center, which he conducts in conjunction with his own homestead, raising the usual crops and live stock.

Deacon Corbin is a staunch Republican and served as selectman of his town six years. In 1875 he represented Woodstock in the State Legislature, which convened at that time in Hartford, and in which he was Chairman of the committee on Roads and Bridges. Mr. Corbin has also filled the office of justice of the peace six years, assessor three years, and served three years also as a member of the board of relief. Deacon Corbin is an active and useful member of the Woodstock Agricultural Society, of which he is an influential worker on several committees. Mr. Corbin has been a deacon of the First Baptist Church of West Woodstock for over thirty years, and for several years was superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mrs. Corbin is also an active and devoted member of the church.

Deacon F. L. Corbin was joined in marriage Dec. 1, 1863, to Mary Bradford, a daughter of George and Phebe (Phillips) Bradford, of West Woodstock. This union has been blessed with three children, viz.: George Herman, born in West Woodstock Sept. 30, 1864, there died May 27, 1895. Susie May, born in the same town Nov. 14, 1868, married June 26, 1896, Dr. Charles Child Gildersleeve, of East Woodstock, and bore him two children, George Harold and Donald Child. William Bradford is deceased. Mrs. Corbin is a direct descendant from Gov. Bradford, whose record will be found on another page.

GEORGE M. PAULK (deceased), one of the most esteemed residents of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., was one of the pioneer citizens who watched the wonderful but healthy growth of that place, and materially contributed to its advancement. Mr. Paulk was identified with the leading business interests of Rockville as president of the People's Savings Bank for his last twenty-five years, a director in the First National Bank, and as president of the Rockville Hotel Co., which was incorporated in 1901 with a capital of $40,000.

John Paulk, the great-grandfather of George M. Paulk, was an early settler in Tolland county, and there married Keziah Benton, Dec. 22, 1736. Their children were: Dinah, John, Lydia, Keziah, Puhamah, David, Ephraim, Amri, and Jemima.

The father of George M. Paulk, Eliakim by name, was a son of Ephraim, of the above family, born in December, 1787. In 1816 he married Sally Crow, the children of this union being: (1) Laura, born in 1818, married Charles Curtiss, of Meriden, later a Mr. Dresser, lived in Meriden until 1853, returned then to Tolland, dying in Troy, N. Y., leaving one son, George A. (2) George M. (3) Julius, deceased. (4) James, born in 1825, resides in Chicago. (5) Sarah, born in 1827, deceased. (6) Julius A., born in 1828, lived a time in California, but returned to Connecticut and died in Tolland county. (7) Edwin. The death of George M. Paulk's father occurred in 1865. He was one of the pioneers in the business of framing by squaring, instead of fitting together, as was the old custom, and built frames for many of the factories put up in Rockville in his day. In politics he was formerly a Whig, later a Republican, and held many of the town offices.

The mother of George M. Paulk, Sally (Crow) Paulk, was a native of East Windsor, Conn., and she with three sisters remained in the old home when the rest of the family removed to "New Connecticut," as northern Ohio was then called. Her death occurred in her sixty-sixth year and with her husband she was laid to rest in the old South cemetery.

Our immediate subject, the well-known George M. Paulk, was born Feb. 8, 1820, in the old Paulk homestead, in the town of Tolland, where his ancestors had lived for generations. His educational advantages were confined to the common schools, at that day not to be compared with those of the present, and he remembered two of his teachers with regard, Miss Lucretia Gager and A. M. Raymond. As the oldest boy in the family he was called upon at an early age to make himself useful, and the industry that was necessary in those youthful days assisted in forming habits which advanced his interests later in life. Under his father he was initiated into the carpenter trade and in 1841 at the age of twenty-one came to Rockville to work for William A. Gager. When the American Mills were being built George M. Paulk was one of the workmen employed in construction, his wages being $16.00 per month, although he had not completed his education in the trade. It was in 1849 that Mr. Paulk began as a builder and contractor, sometimes alone, again with others. He either built or assisted in the building of nearly every mill in Rockville, and did a large portion of the important contract work of that character in the town. Mr. Paulk continued in business as a contractor until 1870, having in 1868 embarked in the lumber business, which he carried on extensively until 1888 when he sold out to Thomas A. Lake, and retired from active commercial life. Mr. Paulk had become a resident of Rockville when it was but a village with two streets between Main and Prospect, those being Elm and Park, and when there were but thirteen houses east of Park street towards Tolland.

In early days Mr. Paulk was a Whig, but later identified himself with the Republican party and in 1869 was elected sheriff of Tolland county, being re-elected in 1872 and again in 1875. For five years previously he had acted as deputy-sheriff under Col. Amos Pease, of Somers, Conn., and also held various town offices, being selectman for a number of terms.

On Jan. 5, 1848, Mr. Paulk married Miss Abby Smith, of Ellington, a daughter of Chester and Betsey (Holton) Smith, who was connected by intermarriages with the Holton and Walcott families, old and prominent people of Ellington. No children came to this home to perpetuate an honored parentage, but Mr. and Mrs. Paulk had a life of peace and happiness together for fifty-four years. In 1863 Mr. Paulk built his elegant home on Prospect street where he resided until his death, July 29, 1902.

When a Lodge of the I. O. O. F. was started in Rockville, Mr. Paulk joined it, but later it was abandoned. When the Rockville Hotel was not a very attractive hostelry, Mr. Paulk was one of a quartet and the prime mover in the project, to provide a creditable place of entertainment, from which enterprise has arisen the Rockville Hotel Company. Although nominally retired from business Mr. Paulk's temperament would not permit him to break all business connection, and he continued for many years to give his personal attention to large property interests. Identified for over sixty years with the business life of Rockville, Mr. Paulk's name stands before the public as a synonym for probity and uprightness.

STEPHEN HARRIS COLE, one of the best known hotel proprietors in eastern Connecticut, was born Sept. 8, 1837, in Foster, Rhode Island.

Although he has retired from active hotel life Mr. Cole still numbers his friends by the scores, not only among the traveling public but among all who know him as a generous, whole-souled, genial host. Mr. Cole was a son of Arnold and Lucinda (Andrews) Cole, and a descendant of the Cole family, the progenitor of which was among the early settlers of this country.

Ebenezer Cole, grandfather of Stephen Harris Cole, was of Peabody, Mass., and was married Feb. 9, 1799, by Jonathan Hopkins, a justice of the peace, to Anne Rounds, daughter of John Rounds, of Foster, R. I. Ebenezer Cole was born July 27, 1778, near Foster, R. I., where he later settled, and he died at the age of sixty-five. He was a farmer all his life, and of a quiet, unassuming disposition. His widow died in Woodstock, Conn., aged eighty-seven years. Their children, nine in all, were as follows: John, a farmer, died in Putnam; Simmons, a farmer, died in Foster, R. I.; Silas, a farmer and mechanic, died in Foster, R. I.; Naomi, married a Mr. Adams, and died in Killingly, Conn.; Lillie, also married a Mr. Adams, and died in Killingly, Conn.; Arnold, was the father of Stephen H. Cole; Johanna, married Otis Walker, of Killingly, where she died; Olive, married Olney Davis, and died in Woodstock, Conn.; Abbie, married Darius Ellsworth, and died in Foster, Rhode Island.

Arnold Cole was born in 1810, in Foster, R. I., and died in East Killingly, Conn. He was a cotton manufacturer in Williamsville, Conn., and in Elmville, and Rockland, R. I., and he also manufactured on a limited scale, carpet warps, twine, etc. A good mechanic, he was a man thoroughly conversant with machinery and manufacturing in his line. In disposition he was quiet and unostentatious, he was very religious, and was always a consistent member of the Baptist Church. In politics he was a staunch old line Democrat. In 1836 Arnold Cole married Lucinda Andrews, who was born in Foster, R. I., a daughter of Jeremiah Andrews, of Foster, R. I.; she died in East Killingly, Conn. Their children were: Stephen H.; Angeline, who died in infancy; Emily, who married (first) Crawford Gleason, and (second) Henry Chase (they live in Providence, R. I., where the latter is associated with the Providence Gas Co.); and twins, that died in infancy.

Stephen H. Cole was born in Foster, R. I., and when but an infant was taken by his parents to "Chestnut Hill," East Killingly, Conn., where his father was overseer in the carding room of one of the cotton mills. Stephen received his schooling in the "Chestnut Hill District," Dayville, and Williamsville district schools, but left the school room when about sixteen to go to work with his father in the cotton mills of Pray & Westcott, at East Killingly, Conn. At the age of seventeen he was made overseer of the carding room. After a few years there he went to Packerville, town of Plainfield, Conn., and was overseer of the carding room of the Packerville mill. He remained there, however, but a short time, when he came to Danielsonville, and became overseer in the Whittemore mill, where he was still employed when the war broke out. Mr. Cole responded to President Lincoln's call for volunteers, joining the first three years' regiment that went to the front from his section. Returning from the war he leased the Whittemore Mill at Danielsonville, and began manufacturing twine and wicking, so continuing for some time, employing from fifteen to twenty hands. The real estate was then sold to the Quinebaug Co., and Mr. Cole took charge of the mill during the change from a twine factory to a manufactory of cotton goods.

In 1865 Mr. Cole embarked in the horse dealing business on a large scale, and eventually had a large sale stable in Providence, R. I. This line of work he followed for several years, and even after embarking in the hotel business was more or less engaged in horse dealing. His first experience in the hotel business was in Danielsonville, Conn., when in 1875 he purchased the "Olive Branch Hotel," of Amos Peckham, which he ran for several years. He then sold out and purchased the "National Hotel" in Willimantic, Conn., which he conducted about a year, when he returned to the "Olive Branch," running the latter until 1892. That year he purchased the "Elm Street House" in Putnam, Conn., which he conducted until 1894, when he purchased the "Bailey Block," on South Main street, Putnam, Conn. This Mr. Cole remodeled into a hotel, adding 60 feet three stories high in the rear, and making a first-class hostelry, which he named the "City Hotel." Here he continued to serve the public in a capable manner, building up a lucrative trade by the excellence of his service.

In 1901 on account of failing health Mr. Cole was compelled to dispose of this hotel, which he leased to John Bromley and E. C. Rogers, and retired from active business.

Mr. Cole's war record is worthy of special mention. He enlisted May 22, 1861, in the 1st C. V. H. A., with which he served for three years, and was honorably discharged May 21, 1864, at the expiration of his term of service. He was sworn in as wagoner, and later had charge of the wagon train, and was on detached duty during his entire enlistment. At the battle of Cold Harbor his horse was shot from under him, falling upon him, but fortunately Mr. Cole was not seriously injured.

Fraternally Mr. Cole is a member of Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, F. & A. M., of Putnam, and also belongs to the B. P. O. E., of Putnam; to McGregor Post, No. 27, G. A. R., of Danielsonville; and to the Army and Navy Club, of Connecticut. Politically he is a Democrat but not an active politician.

On Dec. 25, 1865, Mr. Cole was married to Hattie Louise Griswold, daughter of Asa and Maranda (Pierce) Griswold, of Jewett City, Conn. They have no children. Mr. Cole is one of those men whose genial, magnetic personality win for them hosts of friends among all classes.

WILLIAM CALEB AVERY (deceased), who was noted as one of the enterprising and pushing business men of Stafford, Tolland county, was born in Groton, Conn., Feb. 4, 1836, and belonged to a family noted in the annals of New England.

Deacon Robert Austin Avery, the father of William C., was born in Groton, Conn., Aug. 3, 1803, and was a son of 'Squire Caleb Avery. The greater part of his life was spent as a farmer on the historic homestead of his progenitors. In early boyhood he became deeply interested in the Christian religion, which had been taught him by his parents and made a public profession of faith, being baptized into the Baptist Church of Groton Hill by the Rev. Mr. Roswell, of Burrows. Such was his exemplary life that at the early age of twenty-eight he was chosen a deacon. Noted as a devout and earnest Christian, it was through his untiring and persistent efforts that the Groton Heights Baptist Church was organized in 1843. Chosen as the senior deacon of this church he filled the office with honor to himself and good to the church. Throughout his remaining years he was a zealous worker in this religious organization, and when he died, Dec. 20, 1862, his departure to the better life was felt as a personal loss by the community in which his noble and beautiful career had been run.

Caleb Avery, the father of Robert A., was a man highly respected. He served as justice of the peace many years, and filled other town offices very acceptably. In his politics he was a Democrat, and in his religion a member of the Fort Hill Baptist Church. During the war of the Revolution he was a volunteer at the battle or massacre of Fort Griswold, Groton Heights, Sept. 6th, 1781. He saw Col. William Ledyard killed by his own surrendered sword in the hands of a British officer, and was himself taken prisoner, being taken to New York where he was confined in the old "sugar house." There he suffered much from cold and hunger, having no other clothing than what he was wearing that intensely hot day when he was taken prisoner. Late in the autumn he returned home in a pitiable condition.

James Avery (5), the father of Caleb, married Elizabeth Allyn, a daughter of Robert Allyn and Abigail Avery. She was a daughter of Col. Christopher Avery. Robert Allyn was a son of John and Elizabeth (Gager) Allyn. Elizabeth Gager was a daughter of John Gager, who was a son of John Gager, and a grandson of William Gager.

The mother of James Avery (5) was Elizabeth Smith, the daughter of Nehemiah Smith and Dorathy Wheeler, who was a daughter of Isaac Wheeler and Martha Parke. Martha Parke was a daughter of Thomas Parke and Dorathy Thompson. Dorathy Thompson was a daughter of the Rev. William Thompson. Isaac Wheeler was a son of Thomas and Mary Wheeler. Nehemiah Smith was a son of Nehemiah and Lydia (Winchester) Smith, and a grandson of Nehemiah and Anna (Bourne) Smith.

The ancestors of Robert A. Avery were named James back through five generations to James the first. They were men of character and valor, holding high positions both in church and State, and were faithful friends to the Indians, though the first James was known as an Indian fighter. This Avery was twelve times deputy townsman, twenty years assistant judge of county court, ensign, lieutenant and captain, serving in King Philip's war. He came from Lancashire, England, to Boston in 1640, making the voyage in the ship "Ara-bella," with his father, Christopher Avery, and Gov. John Winthrop, of Connecticut, who was a son of Gov. Winthrop, of Massachusetts. Gov. Winthrop became interested in the young man, and induced him to locate at New London, Conn., with his wife and two children, who were both born at Gloucester, Mass. Christopher Avery remained in Boston, where he had a tannery at the present site of the post office. Avery street was named for him. Through Gov. Winthrop James Avery secured a large tract of land in what is now Groton, and his name and that of his wife are the first on the roll of the First Church of Christ in the town of Groton. His descendants are eligible for membership in the Sons of Colonial Wars, Colonial Dames, and the Patriots and Founders of America, and most of those now living may become members of the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution.

Robert Austin Avery was born in Groton, Conn., and was married Oct. 6, 1822, to Nancy Eldridge Avery, who was born May 30, 1803, and died Sept.

William C. Avery.

19, 1845. Caleb Avery, who died Jan. 16, 1836, married Mary Avery, who was born Dec. 25, 1769. Capt. James Avery, who was born July 27, 1724, and died Dec. 3, 1796, married Elizabeth Allyn, who was born in 1731, and died Feb. 22, 1819. Deacon James Avery was born May 27, 1697, and died July 11, 1759. He married Elizabeth Smith, who was born Dec. 13, 1719, and died April 4, 1761. Lieut. James Avery, who was born April 20, 1673, and died Sept. 18, 1754, married Mary Griswold. Capt. James Avery, who was born Dec. 16, 1646, and died Aug. 22, 1748, married Deborah Stallyon, a daughter of Edward Stallyon, of New London, Conn. Capt. James Avery (1) was born in England in 1620, and died April 18, 1700. In Boston, Mass., he was married Nov. 10, 1643, to Joanna Greenlade, who was born in England in 1622.

Nancy Eldridge Avery, the wife of Robert Austin Avery, was the daughter of Elihu Avery, and the granddaughter of Lieut. Elihu Avery, who served in the Revolutionary war at Bunker Hill, and was with Gen. Washington in New York. His father, Col. Ebenezer Avery, a son of the third James Avery, was a man of high honor and fine character, who died July 11, 1780. An obituary, in which his virtues as a devoted Christian and his patriotic services to his native country were warmly attested, appeared in the Connecticut Gazette, which was published in New London by Timothy Green.

The mother of Mrs. Robert A. Avery was Nancy Eldridge, who was a daughter of Daniel Eldridge, who was born in 1718, and of Betsy Turner, who was born in 1730. Betsy Turner was a daughter of Capt. Hawkins and Lucy (Starr) Turner. Benjamin Turner, who was born in 1650, married Elizabeth Hawkins. John Turner was a son of Humphrey, and a grandson of Jonathan and Lucretia (Oldham) Brewster, all of whom were born in England. Lucy Starr, whose name appears above, was a daughter of Jonathan Starr and Elizabeth Morgan, and a granddaughter of Samuel Starr and Hannah Brewster. Hannah Brewster was a daughter of Jonathan Brewster and Lucretia Oldham, and a granddaughter of Elder William Brewster, who came to America in 1620, making the voyage in the "Mayflower" with his wife Mary.

Among the progenitors of William Caleb Avery figure the names of many distinguished families in old New England annals, such as William Denison, the father of Sarah Denison, who married Benjamin Avery, Capt. George Denison, who married Lady Ann Bodell, William Chesebrough, the father of Abigail, who married John Avery, founder of the town of Stoughton, Thomas Stanton, Dr. Thomas Lord, and others, who bore a prominent part in the old days.

Daniel Eldridge, the great-grandfather of William C. Avery, was a sergeant in the Company of Capt. William Latham, and fought at Fort Griswold in 1781, where he was wounded and left for dead. A British soldier took off his new boots and left him as he supposed, dead. The Avery descendants have an eligibility to the Revolutionary Societies by five different ancestors: Col. Ebenezer Avery, Capt. John Avery, Lieut. Elihu Avery, Sergeant Daniel Eldridge, and Caleb Avery.

William C. Avery was born in Groton, Conn., where he attended school until he was seventeen years of age. On Jan. 1, 1854, he left home to begin work in the weave room of the Hydeville Woolen Mills at Stafford Hollow. His success was marked as he was a natural born mechanic. He had been clerk in a dry goods store at New London, owned by Smith & Haven, where he remained but a short time, and for a while he was employed in the printing office of Paddock & Jackson, New London. In Rockville Mr. Avery later became overseer of the weave room of the Springville Mill. On April 1, 1858, he was made overseer of the weave room at the Hockanum mill, where he remained until Feb. 1, 1863, being largely employed as a designer. He then became designer for the New England Mill, continuing thus until Dec. 1, 1864, becoming at that time superintendent and designer of the mill, on the death of Capt. Allen Hammond. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Avery became superintendent of the North Adams Woolen Company, at North Adams, Mass., and in thirteen months constructed the buildings, installed the machinery, and had the goods on the market, which was regarded as a remarkable feat. In the fall of 1866 he took a place as superintendent of the Middlesex Woolen Company, at Lowell, Mass., and there he had charge of the entire plant until 1874, when he became agent of the mill. He served in this position until 1881, when he made a trip to California for his health. There he purchased a ranch of 100 acres and remained a year and a half. For another year and a half he lived retired in Providence, and late in the fall of 1884 leased a woolen mill in Dedham, Mass., which he conducted for four years under the firm name of Avery & Thayer. A large measure of success attended the business. In 1890, after being out of business a short time Mr. Avery came to Stafford to take a position as president of the Warren Woolen Company.

To a thoroughly practical knowledge of the business Mr. Avery added a large measure of executive ability and progressive spirit. His foresight was shrewd, and his conservatism unusually great. Under his management the plant was remodeled and supplied with new machinery. Very quickly its kersey and worsted coatings business was brought to a pitch of development never before attained in its history. In connection with the mills was run a separate varn plant, and its worsted yarns were sold all over New England. Some 400 hands were employed by the Company.

Mr. Avery was a member of the Congregational Church, and was of a very retiring and modest disposition. In politics he always held to the Republican faith, though he would never accept office.

Mr. Avery was married May 2, 1858, to Miss Adeline Antoinette Sparks, the daughter of John Evans and Clarinda (Green) Sparks and a great-granddaughter of Col. Nathaniel Green of Revolutionary fame. The Sparks lived in Rockville. To this union were born: George William, born Jan. 12, 1861; Robert Austin, born Oct. 26, 1862, died Jan. 8, 1864; Frank Austin, born Jan. 30, 1864, died July 23, 1865; Bert Arling, born April 6, 1869, died April 21, 1869; Arthur Robert, born May 13, 1872, died June 7, 1873. Mr. Avery died March 26, 1897, in Stafford Springs, and was buried in Rockville, leaving behind him tender memories of a loving husband and a devoted father.

George William Avery, the oldest member of the family of William C. and Adeline A. (Sparks) Avery, married Marie G. Segar, Feb. 8, 1883, and to this union were born: William Clarence, born Sept. 11, 1884, died Nov. 12, 1885; Marion Antoinette, born March 9, 1886; Alice Celestia, born in August, 1888, died the month of her birth. Mr. Avery is a broker in New York with E. H. Norton & Co., at No. 33 Wall street.

Many of the improvements made in the last thirty years on looms were effected by Mr. Avery, who had a most remarkable knowledge of all phases of practical mechanics. He was well known to all makers of machinery, and his advice was often sought by them. He knew every loom made. He was able to draft machinery from his memory, and the entire woolen business was at his command. A great reader, he was well posted, and though he never took a drawing lesson, was an expert draughtsman.

William Caleb Avery during his long and active business career gave himself to his work with an enthusiasm and ability that foreordained success. No outside matters were allowed to interfere with the task he had on hand. Wherever he was located he came into contact with the enterprising and intelligent classes of the community, who were quick to recognize his own character and moral worth as well as his intelligence and general grasp of affairs. Success may come of genius or intelligence, or hard work, or character, and the success which Mr. Avery achieved came of all these. He was a man of whom nothing but good can truthfully be said. His domestic ideals were high, he was a model husband and a most devoted father. His entire life was of the manliest character, and his influence for good most marked.

GEORGE ERSKINE ELLIOTT, selectman, lumber dealer and general farmer of Grosvenor Dale, was born in the Elliott homestead, in that District, Aug. 22, 1851, a son of the late Marcus A. Elliott, whose genealogy appears in the biography of John Elliott, postmaster and merchant of Grosvenor Dale.

The youth of Mr. Elliott was passed uneventfully on the paternal farm, and he was reared to an appreciation of the dignity and utility of an agricultural life. The same old homestead, associated with the working life of his sire, and his special pride during his ownership, has long been the property of his son, whose interest has been no less keen and resourceful. For more than thirty years he has been extensively engaged in the lumber business, having a large tract of timber land, and in connection therewith a sawmill. He has made many improvements on the farm, which contains about a hundred acres, and among other additions has erected a modern barn, and model out-houses. He has various other interests in the town and county, and is engaged in teaming to a considerable extent. Mr. Elliott has built a pleasant and commodious home in the village of Grosvenor Dale, where he spends a portion of his time. He is known as one of the most scientific and successful farmers in his section of the county, and the condition of his property bespeaks a world of enterprise and thrift.

In North Grosvenor Dale, in 1882, Mr. Elliott married Mary Briggs, eldest child of George Washington and Mary Anna (Arnold) Briggs. Mr. and Mrs. Briggs are also the parents of two other living children: Justus; and Elizabeth Warner, wife of Andrew Parsons, of New Britain, Conn. Ezra Justin, their second child, died in infancy. To Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have been born two children: Ruth F., a student at the Putnam high school; and Rose, who died at the age of twelve years. Mrs. Elliott is a member of Elizabeth Porter Putnam Chapter, D. A. R., and religiously is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Politically, Mr. Elliott is a Jeffersonian Democrat, and is a staunch supporter of that party. He was elected selectman in 1888 and served two terms, was again elected in 1901 and is the present incumbent, and he has served as assessor. In 1901 he was nominated a candidate for the State Legislature, but the Republican majority was too overwhelming, although he made a good showing. In 1902, he was again defeated for that position by only three votes. He was appointed postmaster of Grosvenor Dale in 1893, under Cleveland's administration, and filled the position four years. He is a member of Corner Stone Lodge, No. 122, A. F. & A. M., of North Grosvenor Dale, and has other social connections with the institutions which abound in his town. Mr. Elliott is active and enterprising, and wields an influence for progress in the affairs of Thompson. He was among the most active in securing a trolley line through the town, whose opponents are now among the most elated over its introduction.

JOSEPH M. MORSE (deceased). Out of the depths of his mature wisdom Carlyle wrote: "History is the essence of innumerable biographies." Farther than this what propriety can there be in advancing reasons for the compilation of such a work as the one on hand?

George E. Elliott

The section of Connecticut here considered has sustained within its confines men who have been prominent in the history of the State and the nation. Its annals teem with the records of strong and noble manhood and gentle womanhood, and as Sumner has well said, "The true grandeur of nations is in those qualities which constitute the true greatness of the individual." The final causes which shape the fortunes of individual men and the destinies of States are often the same. They are usually remote and obscure, their influence wholly unexpected until declared by results. When they inspire men to the exercise of courage, self-denial, enterprise, industry, and call into play the higher moral elements; when they lead men to risk all upon conviction and faith—such causes lead to the planting of great States, great nations, great peoples. That nation is greatest which produces the greatest and most manly men, and its intrinsic safety depends not so much upon methods and measures as upon that true manhood from whose deep sources all that is precious and permanent in life must at last proceed. Such a result may not consciously be contemplated by the individuals instrumental in the production of a great nation. Pursuing each his personal good by exalted means, they work this out as a logical result. They have wrought along the line of the greatest good. The name borne by the subject of this memoir is one upon whose escutcheon rests no shadow or blot, while its intimate association with the annals of the State of Connecticut from the early Colonial epoch to the present time has been such as to grant honor and dignity to the citizenship of the State, and it is peculiarly consistent that in this compilation specific mention be made of this well known and honored family.

Leonard Morse, father of Joseph M. Morse, was of the seventh generation of the family in America, and this fact indicates that the name became identified with the history of the new world in the early Colonial period. Leonard Morse was born in East Woodstock, Conn., Oct. 27, 1770, and in the same town his death occurred May 11, 1845. In the year 1813, his marriage to Remembrance Meacham, daughter of Joseph Meacham, of Windham, was solemnized, and her death occurred Nov. 27, 1857. Of the children of this union we enter the following record: Albert, born in Woodstock, March 20, 1814, died in his native place May 9, 1888; Nathan, born in Woodstock, Dec. 24, 1815; Nelson, born May 3, 1818; Stephen born June 25, 1820; Joseph M., our honored subject; and Charles D., born Nov. 1, 1827, in Woodstock.

Joseph M. Morse, the fifth of the children of Leonard and Remembrance (Meacham) Morse, was born on the old homestead farm in Woodstock, April 1, 1823. He died in East Woodstock, April 17, 1898, at the venerable age of seventy-five years, honored as one of the strong and noble characters and worthy citizens of the locality where his long and useful life had been passed. Such educational advantages as were afforded by the common schools of the locality and period were his in his youth and he continued his studies until he had attained the age of seventeen, meanwhile contributing his quota to the work of the homestead farm. At seventeen he entered upon an apprenticeship at the trade of carriagemaking, being thus associated with his brother Nelson. After devoting four years to acquiring a thorough knowledge of all details of this line of industry Mr. Morse entered the employ of L. M. Dean, a leading manufacturer of vehicles in Woodstock, and was thus engaged for several years, at the expiration of which he went to Springfield, Mass., while later he was employed at his trade in Hartford, Conn., Wilmington, N. C., and Bowling Green, Kentucky.

The intrinsic loyalty and patriotism of Mr. Morse's nature found distinctive manifestation in the crucial epoch when the integrity of the Union was menaced by armed rebellion. On Aug. 22, 1862, Mr. Morse enlisted as private in Co. F, 26th C. V. I., which was assigned to the Department of the Gulf. This Company participated in General Banks' Red river expedition, in which connection it took an active part in the memorable engagements at Port Hudson, May 27 and June 14, 1862, the regiment doing gallant service in these contests with the Confederate forces. At the expiration of his one year's term of enlistment Mr. Morse received his honorable discharge, being mustered out at Norwich, Aug. 17, 1863. On the close of his military service Mr. Morse returned to Woodstock where he took up farming with his brother Stephen on the old homestead farm. In 1873 Mr. Morse took up the Abiel May farm, which he afterwards conducted, becoming prominently identified with agricultural industry in his native town, and passing the residue of his life on the fine farm in East Woodstock where his widow still maintains her home, the place being endeared and hallowed to her by the memories and associations of the past. The farm comprises 100 acres and is one of the most highly improved and most attractive rural estates in the country.

While he was energetic and progressive in his business methods, and took great interest in the improvement and cultivation of his farm, Mr. Morse was ever mindful of the duties of citizenship and his influence was exerted in a most helpful and beneficial way in the promotion of local interests and the advancement of the material prosperity of the community. As a staunch adherent of the Republican party from the time of its organization, he was an active worker in its ranks, and through his well directed efforts did much to further its cause in a local way. Such was the public appreciation of the sterling character and ability of Mr. Morse that he was naturally called upon to serve in various offices of trust, while his faithful and zealous discharge of all duties thus involved gained him uniform endorsement, regardless of strict partisan affiliations. Mr. Morse was incumbent of the offices of selectman and assessor, and for several years held membership in the board of relief, while in the year 1871 still more distinguished evidence of his popular esteem was accorded him when he was chosen to represent his town in the lower house of the State Legislature. In this connection he proved a valued working member of the legislative body, while his efforts redounded not only to his personal credit but also proved prolific in the furtherance of the best interests of his constituents and the people of the State at large. Although his early educational advantages were limited in scope Mr. Morse was a man of alert mentality and distinctive intellectual proclivities, and thus he profited in full measure from his well-directed reading and personal application, his discerning judgment and keen powers of observation enabling him to add much to his wide store of knowledge in the course of the active affairs of his busy and useful life.

Mr. Morse was a man of distinct and forceful individuality, strong in his convictions and yet tolerant of the opinions of others, being invariably gracious and courteous in his intercourse with his fellow men, and winning unequivocal good will and esteem on the part of all with whom he came in contact. Calm and deliberate in judgment, and asking the approval of a very sensitive conscience for every thought and action, he was in many respects well adapted for leadership and for the tenure of public office as was exemplified in the ability and fidelity which ever marked his public career. He was a notable exception to the ordinary officeholder, in that his manifest desire and determination were to faithfully perform his duties with no thought of personal aggrandizement or future preferment. His reputation for ability, prudence and fidelity to public trusts is of unassailable order, and his memory is most revered by those who knew him best and who thus had the fullest appreciation of his noble and earnest character. His fund of knowledge was broad and exact and his interest in all that touched local affairs insistent and vital, so that his counsel and advice were frequently sought in connection with matters of public policy as well as those of individual business concern.

In addition to his homestead Mr. Morse had numerous other business and financial interests of importance in his home place. At the time of his death he was a member of the directorate of the National Bank of Webster, Mass., having for many years held that position. He was also one of the principal stockholders of that institution of which he was one of the organizers and incorporators, as was he also of the Putnam Savings Bank and the Thompson Savings Bank. Mr. Morse was one of the prominent and influential promoters of the Woodstock Agricultural Society, of which he was one of the organizers and a lifelong member, while for many years he was a member of its board of directors. He was a regular and appreciative attendant of the Congregational Church in East Woodstock, of which his wife is a devoted member, and he contributed liberally to the support of the church and its collateral benevolences.

On Dec. 11, 1873, Mr. Morse was united in marriage to Miss Lucy May, an estimable woman who was born in Woodstock where she still resides with her children. Mrs. Morse was a daughter of Abiel and Dolly (Day) May, representatives of old and prominent families of Connecticut. The original American progenitors of

THE MAY FAMILY, of which the grandfather of Mrs. Morse was a representative in the seventh generation, was John May, who emigrated to the new world from England in the early part of the seventeenth century, and from him the direct line is traced through John (2), John (3), Capt. John (4), Thomas, and Capt. William, to Abiel, the father of Mrs. Morse. Concerning the genealogy ample data is incorporated in the sketch of Chester E. May, appearing on other pages of this work.

Abiel May was born in Woodstock, Conn., May 18, 1794, and there he passed his entire life which was one of signal usefulness and honor, his death occurring May 3, 1880. On June 18, 1835, he was united in marriage to Miss Dolly Day, who was born in Webster, Mass., daughter of Jabez Day, a native of Webster. Of this union were born the following named children: George, born Dec. 13, 1837, died in Woodstock Sept. 8, 1839; Lucy, born Jan. 21, 1840, is the widow of the subject of this memoir; George Abiel, born Feb. 9, 1844, died unmarried March 23, 1868. The last named was one of the loyal sons of Connecticut who went forth in defense of the Union at the time of the war of the Rebellion, enlisting as a private Aug. 12, 1862, in Co. D, 18th C. V. I. He was compelled however to retire from the service on account of ill health, receiving his honorable discharge May 15, 1864, by reason of physical disability, which soon resulted in his untimely death at the age of twenty-four years. Abiel May was one of Woodstock's prosperous and influential farmers, owning and conducting the fine homestead farm where his daughter, Mrs. Morse now lives. The farm is most picturesquely situated, being located on an elevation near the village of East Woodstock and commanding a fine view of the surrounding country and beautiful valley.

Capt. William May, the paternal grandfather of Mrs. Morse, was likewise a native of Woodstock where he was born in the year 1760, and where his death occurred Dec. 12, 1849. On Dec. 15, 1791 was solemnized his marriage to Sarah Paine, of Woodstock, and they became the parents of several children, namely: George, who died in childhood; Abiel, the father of Mrs. Morse; Sally Ann, who married Moses Lyon; Dorothy, who became the second wife of Moses Lyon; Almira, who died at the age of twenty years; Thomas, who married Ruth Witter; and Lucy, who became the wife of Elisha Lyon. Capt. William May, who received his title by reason of his having been an officer in the State Militia, was the son of Thomas May, who was born in Woodstock, Feb. 14, 1723, where he died Aug. 7, 1803. In the year 1751 was solemnized the marriage of Thomas May to Lucy Goddard, whose death occurred Dec. 17, 1790. They were the parents of eight children, namely: Silas, who married Dorothy Morse; William, the grandfather of Mrs. Joseph M. Morse, of this sketch; Abel, who died at the age of five years; Chloe, who died when three years of age; Prudence; Jonathan; Abigail, who married Cyril Carpenter; and Thomas, who removed to Vermont, where he passed the remainder of his life.

Concerning the children of Joseph M. and Lucy (May) Morse, we have the following record: (1) Florence May, born in East Woodstock Oct. 12, 1874, was graduated from Woodstock Academy in June, 1893, and then put her scholastic acquirements to practical test by engaging in teaching in the public schools. She was a teacher in the East Woodstock schools, Chandler District, for three terms, and thereafter became a successful and popular teacher in the schools of New Boston for nine terms, resigning her pedagogic work at the time of her father's death and returning to the parental home. She married Oct. 21, 1902, Matthew T. Dartt, station agent, of the N. Y., N. H., & H. Railroad at Quinebaug, Conn. (2) Arthur George, born in East Woodstock, Feb. 5, 1883, was graduated from the Woodstock Academy as a member of the class of 1900, and has since had charge of the homestead farm, being a young man of ability and sterling character.

Joseph M. Morse died April 17, 1898, and the large concourse of citizens who assembled to pay a last mark of respect to this honored citizen at his funeral testified in no uncertain terms to the position he had occupied in the regard of the people of the community. He passed the evening of his life under the surroundings and influences which his earnest and indefatigable endeavors had made possible, and he passed to his reward rich in the honors and respect which follow an upright life. While he never lacked the courage of his convictions, the dominating elements in his individuality were a lively human sympathy and abiding charity, which taken in connection with the sterling integrity and honor of his character naturally gained him the regard and confidence of all. His kindness was unvarying and to those in affliction and distress his aid was extended without reservation and without ostentation. Those who have been the recipients of his favors, as well as those of his wife who was ever his ready coadjutor in all works of charity and deeds of kindness, have been the only ones who have given public evidence of his benefactions, for he ever seemed to follow the admo-nition to "let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth." Mr. Morse leaves to his children the priceless heritage of a good name, and his memory will be held in lasting regard by all who know him and appreciated his noble and kindly life.

Mr. Morse retained a lively interest in his old comrades in arms, and perpetuated the more grateful association of his army days by retaining membership in A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., of Putnam. He was also affiliated with the time-honored order of Freemasons, having been a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., of Woodstock. Standing in the light of a life and character like this, a life full of purpose and appreciative of the responsibilities involved, we may derive both lesson and incentive, and this brief record may prove of no uncertain value in the years to come when all who knew him in person may have passed onward to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

GEORGE PINNEY ANDREWS (deceased). The Andrews family of Stafford, Tolland Co., Conn., have a clear ancestral record back to the year 1672, when one John Andrus, was one of the early settlers and one of the eighty-four proprietors of the ancient town of Tunxis, named "Farmington-towne."

Tunxis then was as much a name of a tribe of Indians as it was of the river and lands they claimed and occupied as proprietors. John Andrews, so spelled on the early land records, was a plain farmer with common intelligence, and had his farm homestead on the east side of the river, near where the canal aqueduct was made in 1825, and about two miles north of the village of Farmington.

The name of the wife of this early John was Mary, who united with the Farmington church April 2, 1654, with her sons, then under the age of thirteen years, viz: Abraham, six years and three months old; Daniel, three years and ten months old, and one daughter, Rachel, who was baptized on the ninth of the same month. John, the father, joined the Congregational Church at Farmington May 9, 1658, and May 16, 1658, the church records show that Mary was baptized, in her fourteenth year, John, in his thirteenth year, and Hannah, in her eleventh year. The will of John Andrus or Andrews was dated Jan. 14, 1681, and gave as his inventory £321, 19 s. His children were: Mary, born in 1643; John, in 1645; Hannah, in 1647; Abraham, in 1648; Daniel, in 1650; Joseph, in 1651; Rachel, in 1654; Stephen, in 1656; and Benjamin, in 1659.

John Andrews (2), eldest son of John the settler, lived in Hartford, Conn., and owned lands along the Connecticut river. He is named on the records as John Andrus, son of John Andrus, of Farmington, March 20, 1676-77. He also bought a tract of land from Gregory Winterton, lying in the ox pasture, ten acres or more, Feb. 15, 1698-99, and he was administrator of the insolvent estate of his deceased son Joseph, who is spoken of in his grandfather's will as living then, in 1681, with him in Farmington. Joseph's estate was only £9, 11 s, 11 d, and his father was allowed by the probate court the fee of ten shillings for his services. His death occurred prior to the year 1713. In consequence of very imperfect records in the town of Hartford, at that early period, very little that is authentic can be learned concerning its early residents. In this connection the name of the wife of John Andrus does not appear, but it is certain that his children bore these names: John, Hannah, Joseph, Esther, Stephen.

Stephen Andrews, the youngest son of John (2), was married, March 29, 1705, to Sarah Gillett, at Hartford. The next record of him is found at Glastonbury, Conn., where in 1713 he gave a quitclaim deed, for a valuable consideration, of all his interests in his father's estate to his brother John. In 1716 he is known to have owned land in Glastonbury, and is said to have come to that town from "Poke Hill" Ferry, near "Wethersfield Folly." His farm was the same owned and occupied by Chauncy Andrews, in the eastern part of the town. In 1745, Stephen Andrews was a school teacher, and had a portion of the common land set off to him in 1757. It is recorded that he had land deeded to him in 1723, consisting of forty-seven acres, "next to Hebron." It is evident that Stephen Andrews was a man of responsibility, for he was made the first clerk of the Eastbury school society from 1731 to 1743, when his son Elisha succeeded him. The second wife of Stephen Andrews was Prudence Scott. South Glastonbury, called "Shingle Hollow" at that time, was his first home in the vicinity, but in 1724 he removed to Nipsic, or East Glastonbury and taught the school there in 1742. The Glastonbury records give the name both Andrus and Andrews. His children were: Elisha, born July 10, 1706, according to Hartford town records; Dinah, born Aug. 10, 1708; Charles, born Oct. 3, 1710; and Eli.

Elisha Andrews, the eldest son of Stephen, lived in East Glastonbury, Conn., and succeeded his father as clerk of the school society. He was both a farmer and a mechanic, this not being unusual with our early fathers. On Feb. 9, 1726, he was married, and his wife's Christian name was Ruth. He was the first Elisha, the name later appearing in four generations. Rev. A. B. Chapin, D. D., in his valuable History of Glastonbury, says: "Elisha Andrews, as clerk from 1743 to 1749 had few peculiarities of spelling, and wrote a respectable hand." His death occurred Jan. 29, 1750, at the age of forty-three years, and from the above notice, he appears to have been a teacher in 1747. His children were: Benjamin, born Nov. 7, 1727, died July 23, 1750; Stephen, born Feb. 25, 1728;

Elisha, born May 4, 1730; Robert, born June 19, 1735; Ruth, born July 15, 1737.

Lieut. Robert Andrews, son of Elisha Andrews, was born June 19, 1735, at East Glastonbury, Conn. and married March 4, 1756, at Colchester, Conn. Delight, the daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Williams) Kellogg; she was born on Oct. 5, 1733. They lived for a time at Windsor and at Coventry Conn., where some of their children were born but later they located at Brimfield, Mass., where other children were born, and finally the town of Pittsford, Vt., became their home. Robert Andrews was at the Battle of Lexington as a lieutenant of the militia, and he lived to the age of seventy-six years, dying in 1811. His widow survived until May 3, 1817, when she died at the age of seventy-two years, both dying at Pittsford, Vt. Their children were: Ludim, born Oct. 17, 1756; Robert, born March 17, 1759; Delight, born Feb. 26, 1761; Appleton, born March 11, 1763; Kellogg born July 19, 1766; Zelots, born Nov. 25, 1768 and Ladocia, born April 6, 1777.

Robert Andrews (2) son of Lieut. Robert, and the great-grandfather of George Pinney Andrews, was born March 17, 1759, in Coventry, Conn., and was married in 1782, to Eunice Needham, of Brimfield, Mass., who was born in 1766, and who was daughter of Nehemiah Needham. They settled at South Brimfield Mass., which is now known as Wales, where they became farmers. There Robert died Feb. 13, 1838, and his widow Nov. 13, 1837, his age being seventy-nine years and hers one year less. Their children were: Alanson, born in 1784; Robert, born March 20, 1785, married Lucy Needham; Betsey, married Elijah Foskett; Alvin, born Nov. 10, 1788, married Mary Brown of Stafford Conn.; Eunice, born in March, 1793, married Elam Munger; and Annis, born July 21, 1798, married April 16, 1818, Othniel Brown, of Union, Connecticut.

Alanson Andrews, the grandfather of George Pinney Andrews, and son of Robert (2), was born April 1, 1784, at South Brimfield, Mass., and Nov. 29, 1804, married Phebe Green of Wales, Mass. They had five children born in Brimfield. In 1811 they removed to Ohio, and they were divorced. She was a daughter of Daniel and Rebecca (Bond) Green, of Wales, was born May 5, 1781, and died Jan. 31, 1863.

The second marriage of Alanson Andrews was to Mrs. Sally Needham, who was the widow of Harvey Needham, and they resided in Ashland, Ohio, until his death, May 11, 1850, at the age of sixty-six years. His widow, whose maiden name was Sarah H. Gates, was born July 22, 1795, at Charlton, Mass., and she died in Geneseo, Ill. The children of the first marriage were: Deloisa, born in Wales, Mass., May 5, 1806, married Otis Eager John Bond, born July 18, 1808, at Wales, married Hannah Walbridge; Willard Green, born Aug. 14, 1811, in Wales, married Cornelia Brockway; Rob ert Warren, born May 19, 1814, in Wales; and Sally Howe, born May 28, 1816, at Wales, married Henry Otis Shaw, of Monson, Mass. The children of the second marriage were: Lorin, born April 1, 1819, married Sarah R. Gates; Mary, born March 24, 1821, married John Anderson; Lucy, born July 29, 1823, married James Sloan; Tacy, born June 25, 1825, married Simeon G. Woodruff; Lyman Needham, born Feb. 21, 1827, married Margaret Ann Fulton; Annis, born March 27, 1829, married Frank Jenkins; Harriet, born Aug. 2, 1831, married D. L. Perry; Levi Gates, born Aug. 27, 1833, resides in California; Sarah, born Oct. 29, 1835, married Henry A. Ainsworth; and Lewis, born Aug. 24, 1837, died June 22, 1842.

Robert Warren Andrews, father of George Pinney Andrews, was born in Wales, Mass., May 19, 1814. He was reared on a farm and enjoyed only a limited schooling. When he was four years old he was taken by his grandfather, Alvin Andrews, and remained a member of his family until he was nineteen, coming then to Staffordville. There he entered the employ of Fredice Ruggles who was the inventor of a pistol. Mr. Andrews was a born machinist and it was not long before he was able to make so many improvements on this article that at his death Mr. Ruggles left the business to him, having confidence in his ability. It was successfully conducted for two years, with several men employed, in the building located near the present site of the grocery store of W. V. Odell, but the failure of Mr. Andrews' commission merchant in Hartford brought this business to a close.

Mr. Andrews then went to Stafford Hollow and for six years was employed on woolen machinery by Moses B. Harvey, and during this time he invented the first rotary flock cutter that was ever on the market. Other inventions proved useful, and Mr. Andrews was soon offered a partnership with the firm of Howe & Converse, the style then being, Howe, Andrews & Converse, manufacturers of looms, at Staffordville, the business being located on the site of Amidon's shop. Five years later Mr. Andrews sold his interest. His inventive genius had been at work, and he now took out a patent on a coffee pot, which he then sold to the Rogers Silverplate Co., of Hartford. His next patent was on a useful little machine for putting down carpets, and this he sold to Henry Whiton, of West Stafford. Although still busy on various ingenious inventions Mr. Andrews spent some three or four years in travel through Connecticut selling sewing machines. At the end of this period in 1897, he obtained a patent on a loom picker check, and on the day of his death he was working to improve this valuable invention. Perhaps the most valuable of all Mr. Andrews' many inventions was that of the Stafford loom, made while in the employ of Howe & Converse, after he had sold his business interests to them. It was the fate of Mr. Andrews as it has been that of many a genius in his line, to receive compensation in no way adequate for the children of his brain. The royalty he obtained on this famous loom was but two dollars per loom. In 1892 he invented a fancy harness motion for looms and this was bought by Knowles & Co., of Worcester, Mass., for $4,000.

A man of more than ordinary talent in many directions, Mr. Andrews greatest delight was in puzzling out some intricate question of machinery. Few of his inventions were without commercial value and many of them are still in constant use, and to their possessors almost invaluable. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and in 1869 was sent to the Legislature from Stafford, but he would never accept local office.

The marriage of Mr. Andrews was on May 14, 1835, to Nancy Bocker, of Florida, N. Y., who was a daughter of Zacharia and Lois Bocker. Mrs. Andrews died March 10, 1882, at the age of seventy-six. Mr. Andrews passed away in his eighty-third year, Feb. 26, 1898. The children of this marriage were: (1) George Pinney, of this sketch, born March 29, 1836. (2) Sarah Jane, born June 16, 1838, married May 31, 1857, Henry Edgar Chamberlin, of Stafford, a machinist and also a merchant of that place. Mr. Chamberlin later removed to Westerly, R. I., where he was in the dry-goods business for a number of years. He then lived retired for some time and died Sept. 28, 1902. Their two children are—Robert E. and Harry A., born in Stafford. (3) Nancy Maria, born Aug. 24, 1841, died in Stafford, Jan. 11, 1843.

George Pinney Andrews attended school in his birthplace and in Monson, Mass. At the age of sixteen he entered the employ of Howe & Converse and remained with them for a period of ten years, becoming foreman in their factory which employed from fifteen to twenty men. After the fire of 1869 in the Stafford Loom Co. works, Mr. Andrews went to Middlebury, Ohio, and there became foreman for Kent Baldwin & Co. as loom builder, remaining there two and one-half years, going with the same firm to South Chicago, Ill., for the same period. Then Mr. Andrews accepted a position in Westerly, R. I., with the White Rock Co., as their foreman, and continued with that firm for five years, when he went back to Stafford and worked for a year at his father's fancy loom. The following five years were spent by Mr. Andrews in Thompsonville with G. H. Bushwell & Co., and in traveling all over the South putting up their hydraulic machines. After 1899 Mr. Andrews was in the employ of S. B. Amidon, of Stafford. Mr. Andrews inherited much of his talented father's inventive genius and spent much of his leisure in like pursuits. One of his late patents was on fish rod loom handles.

The marriage of Mr. Andrews, on March 16, 1862, was to Miss Marion V. White, who was a daughter of Charles and Lois (Cushman) White, of Stafford. Their children were (1) John Franklin, born June 19, 1863, died March 17, 1864. (2) Charles Robert, born Nov. 23, 1864, a machinist with the firm of D. E. Whiton, of New London, Conn. He married May Washburn, a daughter of John R. Washburn, and they have four children—George Randolph, Avery Wilber, Adelaide Marion, Belva May. (3) Madge Nancy, born in 1876, married Herbert West of Stafford, who is a machinist with the Blake Pump Co., at Cambridge, Mass. They have two children—Sanford, and Oliver Andrews West.

George Pinney Andrews passed away Nov. 20, 1902, aged sixty-six years. His widow resides in Staffordville. Mr. Andrews was fraternally connected with Middlebury, Ohio, Lodge of I. O. O. F., in which he was an active member for a long period. The religious connection of the family is with the Congregational Church, although Mr. Andrews was reared in the Methodist Church of which his father was a consistent member. Although a thorough Republican Mr. Andrews was no politician and led too busy a life to care for political honors.

HORATIO R. BAKER, a prominent farmer residing at North Somers, Tolland county, enjoys an enviable reputation as a man of character and action.

Israel Baker, grandfather of Horatio R., was first a resident of Burrillville, R. I., and then he came to Connecticut, locating in Ellington, in the country northwest of Crystal Lake where he carried on farming for half a century. Late in life he sold this farm and bought a small place on the east side of Snipsic Lake, where he died at an advanced age. His remains were laid away in the old cemetery in Ellington, which was south of the site of the present home of Alfred U. Charter. Mr. Baker's religious affiliations were with the Methodist Church, to which he belonged many years. His wife lived to a good old age. They had the following children: (1) Anson, was a farmer in Ellington, but he died in Wales, Mass. After his death his widow removed to Stafford, Conn., where she lived with a daughter and there died. (2) Orrin married Elizabeth Talcott; he was a farmer and spent the earlier part of his life in Tolland, later moving to Windsor where he died. (3) William, was the father of Horatio R. (4) Israel, was a physician, married Ann Royce of Tolland, and removed to Ohio. (5) Delia, married a Mr. Saulsbury, and died in early life. After her death Mr. Saulsbury removed to the West, where he again married. (6) Zelpha, married a Mr. Pease, and died in the West. (7) Ruby married George Taft and died in the town of Ellington.

William Baker, noted above as the father of Horatio R., was born in Rhode Island. He came to Connecticut when he was about thirty years of age, locating in the west part of Stafford where he resided on a farm for several years. Selling out this first farm he purchased a place in the northern part of Tolland county where he carried on farming for a number of years. In his later days he owned two farms, the other being on the east side of Snipsic Lake. While living on his second farm Mr. Baker lost his buildings by fire. These he rebuilt and shortly traded this place for a tract of forty acres on New England hill in Rockville—now mostly covered with buildings—and there he lived until his death. While in Tolland he was quite extensively engaged in farming and stock raising, being also interested in lumber. He owned a sawmill and sold his lumber in Rockville. Mr. Baker represented Tolland in the General Assembly one term. Mr. Baker died in March, 1892.

William Baker married Naomi Congdon, a native of Blackstone, Mass., and a daughter of William Congdon. She died in 1888, at the age of sixty-seven. To them were born: Rachel Jane, who has her home near Providence, R. I.; Horatio R.; Horace, who married Cornelia Allen, and lives in Pawtucket, R. I., where he has been a member of the fire department for many years; Orlando, who married Alpha Bacon and lives in Providence, R. I. where he is engaged in business as a marketman; Harriet, who is the widow of Rev. Albert Clark, a Baptist minister, and lives in New York State; Andrew, who married Louise Newell and has his home in East Windsor, Conn., where he owns a cider mill, and follows the trade of a joiner; Francis, who died young; Elbert, who is a farmer in Somers.

Horatio R. Baker was born Dec. 28, 1838, in Stafford, and spent his early life in Tolland, where his parents had made a home, and there he attended the district school. When his school days were ended at the age of seventeen, he worked on the farm for several years. In 1860 he went West and for some four years worked in various parts of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri; he then returned to Connecticut, spending two years in Rockville. At the end of that time Mr. Baker rented a farm in Somers, which he cultivated for three years, and then bought his present farm of Mrs. Seymour Kibbe. At that time the tract consisted of thirty-four acres but under his wise management he has been enabled to add to the original purchase, and now has eighty-three acres. Her Mr. Baker has been engaged quite steadily and successfully in farming and stock raising. He has prepared himself for veterinary work and is in frequent demand for aid in cases of trouble such as domestic animals develop. When his farm buildings were destroyed in 1891 by an incendiary fire his friends rejoiced to see him able to replace them with better ones.

On April 5, 1871, Mr. Baker married in Rockville, Mary Ann Brown who was born in Windham, Conn., Sept. 21, 1833. She was a daughter of Washington and Lovisa Brown, the former a far mer first in Mansfield and later in Rockville. The other children of Mr. and Mrs. Brown were: Lucinda, deceased wife of Ebenezer Whitney; Avery (deceased), who married Harriet Reed; and George, who lives in Rochelle. Mr. Baker is a Republican and belongs to Mt. Vernon Council, O. U. A. M., of Somers, where he is highly respected as an honest and hard-working man.

CHARLES H. RUSSELL. Probably few families in Connecticut possess more lasting memorials to the distinguished patriotism of their ancestry than does the Russell family, whose worthy representative is found in Charles Henry Russell, of Stafford, Tolland Co., Connecticut.

Far back in the past the records of this family tell of one William Russell and his wife Martha, who had dared the dangers of the ocean and emigrated with their children to America. Like many others of that day they did not at once fix upon a location, but it is certain that in 1645 they lived in Cambridge, Mass., and were members of the church there, and there it is recorded that William Russell died, Feb. 14, 1662. He was the father of nine children: Joseph, born in 1636, died June 26, 1691; Benjamin, born probably in England; Rebecca Phebe, born probably in England, died July 8, 1642; John, born Sept. 11, 1645; Martha; Philip, born in 1650; William, born April 28, 1655; Jason, born Nov. 16, 1658, married June 27, 1684, Mary Hubbard; and Joyce, born March 31, 1660.

Jason Russell, the distinguished great-grandfather of Mr. Russell of this sketch, was born in West Cambridge in 1716 and was the son of Hubbard. During the early excitement of the Revolutionary war he became prominent, with other patriots in Cambridge, and being a man of wealth and influence was a shining mark for the foul death that latter was his undeserved portion. When the struggle was going on at Concord, on the memorable April 19, 1775, and the British soldiery overran the hitherto peaceful town, Mr. Russell took his wife and child and hid them behind a fortification back of a hill near his house. He then returned to his eleven brave associates who had gathered in his house, and here all were murdered by the enemy. The citizens of Cambridge fittingly reared a monument to commemorate this event and to perpetuate the memory and services of their distinguished fellow-townsmen.

The inscription on the monument reads thus: "Erected by the inhabitants of West Cambridge, A. D., 1848, over the common grave of Jason Russell, Jason Winship, Jabez Wyman, and nine others, who were slain in this town by the British Troops on their retreat from the Battle of Lexington and Concord, April 19, 1775, being among the first to lay down their lives in the struggle for American Independence."

The house in which this tragedy occurred is still standing in West Cambridge in a very good state of preservation, and is occupied by one of the descendants of its noble owner. On a stone in front of the house is written, that all may read, these commemorative words: "Site of the house of Jason Russell, where he and eleven others were captured, disarmed and killed by the retreating British, on April 19, 1775."

Noah Russell, the son of Jason of renown, was born in the historic home in West Cambridge, was an esteemed member of the Baptist Church, and enjoyed the companionship of a most worthy wife for sixty years. Their children were: Jason; Josiah; Lydi, who married Thomas H. Teel; Abigail; and Eunice, who married Alpheus Leach.

Jason Russell, son of Noah, and the father of Charles H. Russell, was born March 2, 1785, in Arlington, Mass., and died in Stafford Hollow, Feb. 23, 1869, at the age of eighty-four years. Previous to moving to Stafford he was a merchant in Arlington, but he purchased a farm in the former place and spent his later years in agriculture. In his earlier days Mr. Russell was a Whig, but later became identified with the Republican party. The Baptist Church in Stafford Hollow was very dear to him and for many years he was one of the leading members and most active supporters.

The mother of Charles H. Russell was Elizabeth Thorp, of Acton, Mass., a daughter of Thomas and Sabrina (Emmerson) Thorp. The father of Mrs. Russell served through the Revolutionary war, under Gen. Washington and Gen. Putnam, and one of the family heirlooms is a pin worn by the latter. The mother survived the father a few years, dying July 5, 1874, at the age of eighty-seven years. Their children were: (1) Jason, who for a time was engaged in the grocery business in Albany, later became a foundryman in Chicago, married Amanda Allen, and died in Chicago; (2) William, who became a foundryman, married Louisa Converse, and later died in Stafford Hollow; (3) Elizabeth, who married Amasa Converse, a carpenter in this locality; (4) Emerson, who was also a foundryman, went to California in 1849 and died there, unmarried; (5) Benjamin Franklin, who became wealthy in the foundry business, at one time operating foundries in Chicago and in Ontario, manufacturing 150 car wheels a day. He married Elizabeth Colby, and died in Chicago; (6) Adeline married Thomas W. Weaver, who died in Illinois, and she died in South Dakota; (7) Abigail, who married George Parsons, a shoemaker by trade, lives a widow, in Worcester, Mass.; her husband died during the Civil war and was buried at Alexandria, Va.; (8) George P., who was formerly like his brothers a foundryman, but who is now a teacher and resides in Chicago, married Elizabeth Shoutwell; (9) Charles H., of this sketch; (10) Jane, who is the widow of John P. Kline, a tailor by trade, who died in Germany; she lives in Wales, Massachusetts.

The birth of Charles H. Russell occurred in Stafford and there he was educated, remaining in school until he was seventeen years old. Following the example of his older brothers, he then learned the trade of foundryman, under the instruction of Horatio Bolton at Stafford Hollow. With Mr. Bolton he remained until 1848, then worked at South Orange, Mass., for a while, then went to Rockville, Conn., and then to East Brookfield, Mass. For fourteen years after this he worked for A. C. Corpe, at Stafford Hollow, Conn. Mr. Russell then purchased the farm known as the Deacon Lyon farm on what is now Stafford street, his house standing where the first platting and laying out of the street took place. Here Mr. Russell has since resided, owning seventy-five acres of this very valuable land and raising great harvests of general products of the soil.

Mr. Russell was united in marriage April 23, 1854, to Mrs. Lenora B. Ruby, who was the widow of William Ruby of Union, and two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Russell—William Emerson, born March 13, 1855, residing at home; and Ada Louisa, born July 1, 1857, who died unmarried March 5, 1885.

Mrs. Russell died Feb. 23, 1901, in the home on Stafford street. The children of her previous marriage were: Melissa Lenora, born in Wales, Mass., Jan. 20, 1847, married May 14, 1873, Joseph Burley, of Stafford, who was a son of Joseph and Anna (Irons) Burley, of England. By trade Mr. Burley was a woolen worker. They have no children. Clemmie J., born April 21, 1849, married April 20, 1880, Warren H. Stevens, of Cordaville, Mass., and died in Stafford.

Mr. Russell has long been an active member of the Republican party in his section, has been the chosen representative of the party at numerous conventions, a very efficient member of the school committee for several years, and he gave much satisfaction as road supervisor. In the Baptist Church of Stafford Hollow Mr. Russell has taken an interest since childhood, and has been a deacon in this religious body for many years. Mr. Russell is a man very highly esteemed in his vicinity and is one of the representative citizens.

CHARLES HERBERT FITTS, a substantial citizen and leading farmer of Woodstock, Windham county, traces his ancestry back in direct line to Robert Fitts, one of the original settlers of Salisbury, Massachusetts.

Robert Fitts (or Fitz, as the name was sometimes spelled) together with his wife, Grace D., was one of the original settlers of Salisbury, Mass. Well authenticated tradition says that they came from England in the year 1635, settling first in Ipswich, Mass. His death is recorded as having occurred May 9, 1665, in Salisbury; his widow passed away in Ipswich April 25, 1684. Their only child was Abraham.

Abraham Fitts, son of the emigrant, married May 16, 1665, Sarah Thomson, daughter of Simon Thomson. They settled in Ipswich, her birthplace.

Abraham Fitts (2) first married Margaret Choat, daughter of Sergeant John and Anne Choat, who was the emigrant ancestor of that distinguished family in the United States, of which the present minister to England is a member. The family lived out their lives in Ipswich, the date of the death of Mrs. Fitts being recorded there Feb. 28, 1692.

Abraham Fitts (3), son of Abraham (2), was married first about March, 1722 (his intentions being published March 2, 1722), and lived in Ipswich. His wife Phoebe died Aug. 25, 1739. He married second Nov. 18, 1739, the widow Elizabeth Cross, and he died in June, 1763.

Daniel Fitts, son of Abraham (3), was baptized May 2, 1725. His intentions of marriage to Christiana Smith bear the date of Dec. 15, 1750.

Daniel Fitts (2), was born Nov. 29, 1776, in Ashford, and died Feb. 16, 1875, in Pomfret at the remarkable age of ninety-nine years, retaining his faculties undimmed to the last. He was a tanner by trade, and also cultivated a farm. It is learned of him that when a lad of sixteen years he was bound out to service in Pomfret. He was in religious practices a very strict Baptist, and a very active church worker. Politically he voted the Whig ticket, and later was a Republican, and was a man of much influence in the community. His wife's name was Abigail Slade, and their children were as follows: Reuben Slade, born April 13, 1808, died unmarried April 8, 1899, in Pomfret; he was a shoemaker by trade, and being of thrifty disposition left quite a competence at his death. Lucius was the second child. Lyman is mentioned below. Emily, born Feb. 7, 1822, married James W. Manning, of Putnam.

Lyman Fitts, the father of Charles H., was born Jan. 22, 1815, in Pomfret, and died in the same place Sept. 22, 1900. He was a farmer in that town during his entire life, and was very successful in the cultivation of his farm. In disposition he was reserved and quiet, but always had an opinion, which he had the courage to express, on all important topics of the day. One of his characteristics was the close attention which he paid to his own affairs, allowing others to do the same. In church work he was very active, and engaged enthusiastically in all the movements that were calculated to benefit society in his community. His family was noted for its longevity, four golden weddings having been celebrated among its members. He was of the same politics as his father. His marriage occurred June 2, 1847, to Harriet Maria Richards, who was born Oct. 16, 1820, in Ashford, a daughter of Moses and Betsy (Bicknell) Richards. She now makes her home with her children. To Lyman Fitts and wife were born the following children: Charles Herbert; Ella Eliza, born Dec. 14, 1851, married May 5, 1875, Henry T.

Charles H. Fitts

Child, of Woodstock; Arthur L., is mentioned elsewhere; and George Lyman, born Aug. 18, 1857, a traveling man connected with the Grand Union Tea Co., of Providence, married Loretta Akers, of Granby, Mass., and they have one child, Helen Louise, born Oct. 10, 1894.

Charles H. Fitts, whose name introduces this sketch, was born in Pomfret, Conn., Aug. 1, 1848. He received his education in the district school of his native village, and at the age of seventeen began active work with his father on the home farm, where he remained until April 1, 1883, when he purchased the Buxton homestead in the extreme northeastern part of Woodstock, near the Thompson Line. This farm contains seventy-five acres which he has since cultivated and now has in a fine condition. He devotes it to the general products of a farm, and, as is usual in that section, has a small dairy, the product of which he ships to the Boston market. Mr. Fitts is in disposition like his father and grandfather before him, and has led a quiet, though an upright life, never seeking public office, but preferring to devote his time to looking after his own affairs. He supports by his vote the same party which received the suffrage of his father. Mr. Fitts and his wife are consistent members and supporters of the Congregational Church of East Woodstock. On March 10, 1880, Mr. Fitts was married to Ellen Farrows, a daughter of Paine Farrows, of Thompson, Conn. The children born to this marriage were two in number: Mary Emily, born in March, 1882, in Pomfret; and Louis James, born in East Woodstock, Jan. 16, 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Fitts and their family are counted among the solid and substantial farming element of their community, where their hospitality is extended to a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM NELSON HERINDEEN, a prominent farmer of Woodstock, Windham Co., Conn., and a representative of one of the leading families of that locality, was born April 3, 1848, in West Woodstock, Conn., in the same house in which he now resides.

The great-grandfather of William N. Herindeen was Laban Herindeen, who was born in Rhode Island in 1770, and came to Woodstock. There he married Mary Marcy, also of Woodstock. His death occurred in 1850. Six children were born to Laban and Mary Herindeen: Wilbur, born in 1795; Levi, born in 1807; Laban; Simeon, Mary and Hannah, all of whom were born in Woodstock and are now deceased.

The grandfather of William N. Herindeen, Wilbur Herindeen, born in 1795 in Woodstock, Conn., married Mary Esterbrooks, born in 1795 in Woodstock, where she died Jan. 28, 1862. They had ten children, as follows: Wilbur, Jr., Alfred, Fidelia, Sarah Jane, all died in infancy; Nelson, born in Woodstock in 1819, died in 1844; James M., father of William N. Herindeen; Levi, born in 1825, now resides in Willimantic; Mary Ann, born in 1829, died in 1844; Hannah, born in 1840, now makes her home in Union, Conn.; Emeline, born in 1843, now resides in Willimantic, Connecticut.

The father, James Monroe Herindeen, born May 16, 1823, in Providence, R. I., died Jan. 15, 1894, in West Woodstock. On May 30, 1847, James M. Herindeen married as his first wife, Emily Chamberlin, daughter of Benjamin Chamberlin, of West Woodstock, Conn., where she died. The children born of this union were: (1) William N. (2) Sarah Jane, born May 9, 1850, in West Woodstock, married Jan. 4, 1868, Alonzo T. Decker, of New York City, where she is now living, her husband having died. Mr. and Mrs. Decker had five children. (3) Addie J., born Nov. 6, 1857, in West Woodstock, married April 17, 1883, Edgar E. Buck, of Putnam, Conn.; they have one child—James L. Buck, born in 1886. They are now living in Worcester, Mass., where Mr. Buck is successfully engaged in the coal and wood business.

The second wife of James M. Herindeen was Mrs. Melissa (Mowry) Converse, widow of Ralph Converse, and daughter of Stanford Mowry, of East Douglass, Mass. The date of this marriage was March 20, 1867. Mrs. Herindeen died in West Woodstock, without issue. On July 12, 1877, James M. Herindeen married (third) Susan M. Church, daughter of Henry Church, of Warren, R. I.; she is now residing in Washington, District of Columbia.

The life occupation of James M. Herindeen was that of farming and lumbering. When a young man he came to Woodstock, and operated a water power sawmill for a number of years. Early in life he purchased the Corbin farm of 210 acres, where he lived until his death. All his life he was a very hard-working man, energetic and persevering in his habits. In politics he was a staunch Republican but never sought office. In his religious views he was a Baptist and long a member of the North Ashford Baptist Church.

William Nelson Herindeen was born in Woodstock, received his education in the common schools and attended for one term the West Woodstock high school. When he finished his education the young man began farming with his father, and also engaged in lumbering. Thoroughly understanding his calling he pursues it with intelligent industry, and although a man of means he is quiet and unostentatious in his manner, preferring his home and family to the stress of a public career. During his life among his neighbors he has rightfully won their highest esteem and respect. Fraternally Mr. Herindeen is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M., of Woodstock; of the American Order of Fraternal Helpers of Woodstock. His church connections are with the North Ashford Baptist Church, of which his wife is also a member, and he has served most acceptably on the committee. While he has always been a staunch Republican he has never sought office nor consented to accept nomination.

On Jan. 30, 1895, Mr. Herindeen married Hattie Emeline Bellows, of Willimantic, Conn., daughter of Hiram and Emeline (Herindeen) Bellows, Hiram Bellows having been a carpenter by calling, and a most worthy and respected man. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Herindeen are as follows: Robert Dewey, born July 4, 1898, in Woodstock; Hazel Emily, born Aug. 10, 1900, in Woodstock; James Hiram, born Sept. 8, 1902, charming little ones who make lively the pleasant home of their parents.

CARLOS TILDEN was born Aug. 31, 1847, in Tolland, Tolland Co., Conn., in the same house in which he is now living. He is a son of Joseph Tilden, who was born in 1812, in Coventry, Conn., and died Sept. 17, 1888, in Tolland. Mary Spencer, who became his wife in 1837, was born in Rhode Island in 1813, and was a daughter of Allen Spencer.

Joseph Tilden lived in Coventry where he was engaged in school teaching until about 1837, when he removed to Rockville and engaged in a mercantile business for the next two years. In 1839 he settled on the farm where his son Carlos is now living in Tolland, and there the remainder of his life was spent. This was then known as the "Griggs farm" and it consisted of 150 acres. Mr. Tilden was interested in real estate matters and built the "American House" at Stafford Springs. In his earlier days he taught school in Tolland. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and served in various local positions of trust and honor. At different times he was selectman, an assessor, and a member of the board of relief. For many years he filled the office of justice of the peace, and was constable for a long period of service. In his legal affairs he always pleaded his own cases, and was a shrewd business man. He was the father of the following children: (1) Thomas, born in 1838, in Rockville, married Nettie Risley, of Hartford, and is now a retired merchant in West Hartford. (2) Lydia, born in 1839, in Tolland, married William Pearce, of Ware, Mass., and died in Wareham, in 1875. (3) Harriet, born Aug. 31, 1843, had her education in No. 7 and No. 9, district schools, and when seventeen years old entered Wilbraham Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where she prepared for teaching. Her first school was on Spring Hill, Mansfield, Conn. After a time she embarked in a millinery business with an elder sister in Willimantic. After suffering some reverses the business became prosperous and in 1863 a branch was established at Stafford Springs. Here the business was concentrated in 1866 under the name of H. & J. Tilden. The store was closed in 1876 on account of the failing health of the parents of the partners. Many of the later years of Harriet Tilden's life were devoted to helping care for her sisters' children, and she has lived a good and unselfish life. She spent the winter of 1890-1891 in Florida. (4) Osellus, born in 1844, in Tolland, is a carpenter in Freetown, Mass. He married Emma Tyler. (5) Carlos. (6) Joseph Pinkney, born in Tolland, in 1845, is now living in Lancaster, Cal. He is an expert in separating gold and silver in the mines. (7) Jennie Eliza, born in 1846, in Tolland, married James R. Jewett, of Tolland.

Ebenezer Tilden, the grandfather of Carlos, was born Sept. 18, 1778, in Coventry, where he was a life-long farmer. His wife, Halek, was the daughter of Ebenezer and Eunice Carpenter. Her father was the first English child born in Coventry, and was the youngest in a large family. He afterwards became a lieutenant in the State militia.

Joshua Tilden, the great-grandfather of Carlos, married Eunice Carpenter in 1768, who was born Oct. 16, 1748. Their children were: Esther, Eunice, Grace, Joshua, Clarissa, Ebenezar, Polly, Fanny, Walter, Betsy.

Joshua Tilden, the great-great-grandfather of Carlos, died in 1755, when only forty years old. The tradition of the Tilden family is that three of their ancestors, who were brothers, came over in the "Mayflower." One settled in Massachusetts, one in Lebanon, Conn. They were wealthy in England and left that country on account of religious persecutions.

Carlos Tilden spent the earlier part of his life in attendance at the 7th and 9th district schools. Leaving school at the age of eighteen, in company with his father he purchased the farm adjoining the home farm. This consisted of ninety acres, and was cultivated by father and son for some three years, when they exchanged it for a grocery store in Rockville owned by Henry Clifford. This the two conducted for about two years, when they sold it and Carlos Tilden bought the ground on which the "American House" at Stafford Springs now stands. In company with his father he built the hotel and conducted it for some time, when he retired in favor of his father. Carlos Tilden then bought the Taft saw and grist mill, which he operated for two years and then sold it to A. L. Anderson. In 1878 he removed to Coventry and bought the Bradbery farm. This farm consisted of 132½ acres and was cultivated by Mr. Tilden until 1887, when he sold it and purchased a home in South Manchester, expecting to remove there. He changed his mind about locating at Manchester and leased a farm in South Coventry, with the intention of going to Kansas. The health of his parents, however, caused him to alter his plans still more, and coming to the old homestead he bought out the interest of the other heirs, and has since made this fine estate of 175 acres his home. Here he devotes himself rather extensively to fruit culture, and at the present time has about 3000 peach trees in a bearing state. He has a vineyard of two acres. Mr.

Tilden belongs to the Grange, and is a member and trustee of the Methodist Church. His wife also is a member of the church and ladies' aid society.

Mr. Tilden has never taken very active sides in political matters but has served as assessor and grand juror. Mr. Tilden was married July 4, 1878, to Emma Jane Dutton, who was born Aug. 13, 1858, in East Hampton, Conn., and is a daughter of James and Mary (Archer) Dutton, of East Hampton. To this union were born the following children: Samuel J., born May 19, 1879, in Tolland, is now in California where he is engaged in the insurance business. Louie, born Jan. 8, 1880, is at home; Jennie E., born Aug. 20, 1883, is at home; Bessie Lelia, born March 8, 1888, is at home; Milton Carlos, born May 14, 1892, in Tolland, is at home.

EDWIN JOSEPH CARPENTER, of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., is descended through a long ancestral line from William Carpenter, once a resident of London, England.

The early family records tell that William Carpenter, the founder of the American branch of this honored family, was born in 1605, and was a son of William Carpenter of London. The former married Abigail and with wife and several children came to New England in the ship "Bevis," in 1638. His father accompanied him but returned to England in the same ship. The son was admitted a freeman in Weymouth, Mass., in 1640, was a representative of that town in 1641 and 1643, and of Rehoboth, in 1645, also holding other public offices. He died in Rehoboth, Feb. 7, 1659, and his wife Feb. 22, 1687.

(II) William Carpenter (2), son of William the settler, was born in England about 1631 and married (first) Oct. 5, 1651, Priscilla Bennett, who died Oct. 20, 1663. Like his father he was a farmer. He was chosen town clerk of Rehoboth in 1668, and held the office, excepting one year, throughout his lifetime. In 1668 he was a deputy to the General Court at Plymouth, was chosen a deacon of the church in the same year, and occupied other important positions in the town. His death occurred Jan. 26, 1703, in Rehoboth.

(III) John Carpenter, son of William (2), was born Oct. 19, 1652, and married (first) Rebecca Readaway, and (second) Widow Sarah Day. Mr. Carpenter removed to what is now Woodstock, Conn., about 1690. He served in King Philip's war, was in the Narragansett expedition in 1675, and was made a captain in the French and Indian war.

(IV) Eliphalet Carpenter, son of John, was born Aug. 17, 1679, and married (first) Rebecca and (second) Abigail Bacon. Mr. Carpenter bought land in Woodstock, in 1708 and 1712, and sold land in 1715, and it is supposed that he died about that time.

(V) Eliphalet Carpenter (2), son of Eliphalet, born Feb. 21, 1709, married Aug. 22, 1730, Mary Bacon of Hekamoochaug.

(VI) Elijah Carpenter, son of Eliphalet (2), was born Nov. 27, 1742, and married (first) Oct. 10, 1765, Hannah Carey, who died Jan. 26, 1782, and he married (second) Jemima Robins, who died Dec. 16, 1809. He resided in Sturbridge, Mass., enlisted as a private at the Lexington Alarm, in Capt. Perkins' Company, serving fourteen days, enlisted again in Capt. Martin's Company in Col. Leonard's regiment and served as a substitute for Simeon Fish. Mr. Carpenter died May 12, 1808.

(VII) Elijah Carpenter (2), son of Elijah, born Dec. 12, 1780, married in March, 1806, Abigail Pratt. He removed to Cumberland, R. I., where he was occupied in farming. His twelve children were all born in Rhode Island, and were as follows: (1) Nelson, a brickmaker, born May 1, 1810, married (first), July 13, 1834, Mercy Brayton, who died Aug. 7, 1843; married (second) Nov. 16, 1845, Harriet Adams, widow of Luke Curtis; she died Feb. 28, 1875. They resided in Stonington, Conn., but his last place of residence was Putnam, Conn. (2) Mary Ann, born Sept. 21, 1811, in Johnston, R. I., married Stephen Brown, and resided in Scituate, where he was engaged in farming. (3) Cynthia, born Feb. 28, 1813, married Olney Mathewson, and resided in Johnston, R. I., where he was a stone-cutter. (4) George was born Sept. 3, 1814, in Smithfield, R. I. (5) Elijah, born Oct. 31, 1817, in Cranston, R. I., married April 26, 1839, Mary Ann Greene, and his last residence was in Putnam, Conn. (6) Kingsley, born June 5, 1819, married Aug. 5, 1838, Huldah A. Luke, who died Nov. 14, 1895; they resided in Cumberland, but Mr. Carpenter now lives in Woonsocket. (7) Joseph White was born May 2, 1821, at Scituate. (8) Clarissa, twin sister of Joseph, born May 2, 1821, married Samuel Cole. (9) Francis was born Feb. 2, 1825, at Scituate. (10) Phebe, born May 12, 1826, at Scituate, R. I., married (first) in November, 1845, John Hathaway, and (second) Andrew Angle, of Scituate, a mariner, who resided in Cumberland, R. I. (11) Abbie was born May 12, 1826, at Scituate. (12) Emeline, born April 12, 1828, at Scituate, died Jan. 5, 1843.

(VIII) Joseph White Carpenter, son of Elijah (2), and father of Edwin Joseph Carpenter, of Putnam, was born May 2, 1821, with his twin sister Clarissa, at Scituate, R. I. By trade he was a mason and was acknowledged to be one of the most skilled men in that line in his vicinity. The firm of J. W. Carpenter & Son was long recognized as a leading and reliable one, engaging in brick and stone mason work and plastering. Mr. Carpenter died March 29, 1894, in Putnam, Conn.; where his widow makes her home with her son, Edwin J. Carpenter.

On Oct. 31, 1843, Mr. Carpenter was united in marriage with Elizabeth Fisher Whipple, born Jan. 6, 1818, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Fisher) Whipple, of Putnam. Their children were as follows: (1) Sarah Fisher, born May 13, 1846, married July 25, 1878, John Tatman, of Worcester, Mass., and died Jan. 14, 1833, in Worcester; (2) Benjamin Whipple, born Nov. 10, 1847, married May 23, 1869, Christie Bartlett, of Killingly, and died Feb. 11, 1875, in Putnam, where he followed the trade of mason; (3) Abbie Elizabeth, born Sept. 8, 1850, on July 25, 1878, married Frank D. Perry, of Worcester, who is a prominent business man of that place in the wood and coal line; (4) Martha Emeline, born March 8, 1851, married Nov. 23, 1870, Charles A. Paine, a railroad employee of Worcester; (5) Edwin Joseph, of Putnam; (6) Mary Persis, born Feb. 25, 1853, married April 3, 1885; Albert L. Litchfield, of Woodstock, and both are now deceased, she dying June 13, 1885; (7) Harriet Adams, born June 22, 1857, married May 13, 1880, H. Edson Jacobs, of Providence, R. I., who died May 15, 1896, in Providence; (8) Sabin Sayles, born April 27, 1858, married June 22, 1887, Stella F. Kenyon, of Woodstock (they now reside in Putnam, where he is a mason); (9) Annie Morse, born June 20, 1860, died Aug. 13, 1860; (10) Howard Everett, born Feb. 17, 1865, died Dec. 17, 1867.

Edwin Joseph Carpenter, son of Joseph White, was born Sept. 13, 1854, in East Putnam, Conn., and after passing through the preparatory schools entered a private institution which was under the scholarly care of Joseph Lippett and William Allen. Continuing at school and enjoying advantages until he was twenty-two years of age, Mr. Carpenter then began actively to follow the mason business which he had learned of his father. At the age of thirty-one he was taken into partnership by his father and the firm of J. W. Carpenter & Son was formed, which soon became identified with all of the great contracts in the locality. The young partner was soon given charge of all the outside work for the Grosvenor Dale mills, and there he remained for fourteen years. His father was widely known in mill mason work, for it was he who built the Sayles' mill at Dayville, the Mechanicsville mills, the Grosvenor Dale mills, the J. O. Inman woolen mills at Pascoag, R. I., and many smaller structures in this and other sections. Mr. Carpenter still actively carries on the work of the firm, employing continually from six to ten men.

Although he is a staunch Republican, Mr. Carpenter contents himself with taking an intelligent interest in public matters and carefully voting, permitting those who have fewer business enterprises to fill the offices and perform party work. Like his parents he is a member and liberal supporter of the Baptist Church of Putnam. His pleasant residence is located about a mile from Putnam, near the old Carpenter homestead.

On Aug. 10, 1892, Mr. Carpenter was married to Emma Jane Vaughan, daughter of Clark D. and Elmira (Gardner) Vaughan, the former of whom was a very prominent farmer and lumberman of Sterling, Conn., where he was a well-known Republican officeholder. Mr. Vaughan was born Oct. 7, 1818, in Killingly, son of Abel and Tabitha (Clark)

Vaughan. One son, Frederick Vaughan, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, Aug. 25, 1896.

As a representative of an old and honorable family Mr. Carpenter enjoys distinction, while his thorough-going business habits, his public spirit and his estimable personal attributes place him among Putnam's representative and respected citizens.

MADAME JOSEPH CYR, whose high standing in the business world is but the natural outgrowth of her clear judgment, wise foresight and upright methods in the display of her marvelous creations of esthetic taste in the line of millinery, is a charming representative of the vivacious and capable French-Canadian. Madame Cyr was born in Iberville, Province of Quebec, Canada, March 4, 1859, a daughter of Benoit Goyette, who was born at Ste. Brigide, in the same Province. In her maidenhood she was known as Valerie Goyette.

Benoit Goyette was the son of a farmer, and was given a liberal education for the day. For some time he engaged in teaching, but after his marriage, he entered the grocery trade in partnership with his brother-in-law Julien Benoit. After a few years he sold out and opened a hotel in Iberville, which he successfully conducted for more than forty years, winning great popularity by the high order of his entertainment. He was prosperous in his business always, but his generous nature so laid him open to the wiles of those less careful in their methods, that he suffered large losses through indorsing notes. In 1872 he and his wife, Marguerite Benoit, came to the United States, stopping for a short time in Grosvenor Dale, Conn., then locating in Wauregan, same State. After a sojourn of four years they returned to Canada, but after a few years among old friends and neighbors there, they returned to Connecticut, and made their home at Danielson with their daughter, Mme. Cyr. The mother died March 28, 1900, aged seventy-nine years, and the father passed away April 21st, following, aged eighty-one years. They were the parents of eighteen children, eleven of whom grew to adult age, and of whom are named: Josephine; Benoit, who has traveled extensively in foreign lands and is highly educated, is general financial and business agent for the Christian Brothers school in New York City; Pontien is a successful miner in British Columbia; Rosalie; Napoleon; Moises; Louis is one of the best educated of the family, and he now resides in Montana; Azilda; Valerie; Julien died at the age of twenty-one when he had barely completed his apprenticeship at the cabinet making trade in Boston, and he left some beautiful specimens of his handicraft in inlaid work and carving that are now in the possession of Mme. Cyr; Eugenie and Emma.

Madame Cyr received her education in a convent in Canada, and to a limited extent in the public schools at Iberville. She was but thirteen years of age when she accompanied her parents to Connecticut, and in Wauregan she attended a night school for a short time. Her course of instruction in the convent had included Latin, French and English, so that she had some knowledge of the language when she came to make her home in the States. In spite of her tender years she began working in a factory, first at Grosvenor Dale, and then at Wauregan. This employment she followed until she was twenty-one, when she began to learn the milliner's trade. In 1880 she engaged as an apprentice to Madame Breault, then a milliner at Danielson. After six years of careful instruction on the part of the teacher, and painstaking effort on the part of the apprentice, Mme. Cyr was able to enter the business arena for herself. She opened her stock in the Ely Building, and four weeks later suffered loss by fire, but saved a good share of her stock of goods. Nothing daunted, this determined little French woman borrowed a small sum from her brother, and again started in business. When she first opened, her total capital stock was fifty-nine dollars, the savings from her earnings. One assistant was all she needed at the first, but her patronage has become so extended that now six girls are kept all the year, and during the busy season ten are employed. This is now the largest establishment of its kind in northeastern Connecticut. Mme. Cyr has all the love of the beautiful so characteristic of her race, and with it the ability to put her ideas into practical use. The creations of her art are noted for their exquisite beauty and refined taste. From a financial standpoint Mme. Cyr's success has been almost phenomenal. She owns one of the finest as well as one of the largest buildings in the town, and has been able to meet all the demands of her rapidly increasing business, as well as to assist her family. She has been devoted to her people, and has given them the attention and aid a generous woman bestows upon those she loves.

It was in 1888 that Mlle. Valerie Goyette became Mme. Cyr, wife of Joseph Cyr, a well known and highly respected citizen of Danielson.

HOMER N. KIRBE, an enterprising and successful farmer now residing at North Somers, Tolland county, belongs to an old and honored family.

Daniel Kibbe, the great-great-grandfather of Homer N., was born in 1717, and served as a soldier in the war of the Revolution. He was married in 1741 to Mary Pratt, and their children were: Amariah; Daniel; Abner; Lemuel; Frederick; Molly; Sarah and Jerusha.

Lemuel Kibbe, son of Daniel, and great-grandfather of Homer N., was born in 1752. His children were: Justus; Calvin; Orrin; Lemuel; Daniel, who died in Vermont; and Erastus.

Erastus Kibbe, the grandfather of Homer N., was born in 1777, in North Somers, where he followed farming on the farm now occupied by Homer N. Kibbe. He died there Aug. 11, 1848. His death was the result of an accident. Coming in from a hard forenoon's work he had seated himself on the top stairs at the doorway to rest after his dinner; he suddenly fell from the top to the bottom step and almost immediately expired, never speaking after his fall. The house which is the home of Homer N. Kibbe, was built by Erastus Kibbe. His wife, Esther Kibbe, who was born in 1784, was the daughter of Peter and Esther (Pomeroy) Kibbe; she died in 1853. To them were born: Erastus (2), born Oct. 2, 1808, who followed the water in early life, was a farmer in later life on the home place, where he died unmarried Nov. 8, 1895; Norman, the father of Homer N.; Oscar, a soldier in the war of 1812; Lovey married Isaac Keeney, a farmer in Long Meadow, Mass., where they died; Harmon left home when a young man, and entirely disappeared from the knowledge of his family; Dorothy married Henry H. Wolcott, and died in Somers, where they lived an agricultural life.

Norman Kibbe was born Jan. 29, 1811, in the old house on his father's farm. He was educated in the district school, and spent all his life on the home farm, devoting himself to the care and comfort of his parents. In his later years he had the assistance of his brother Erastus. Norman Kibbe died May 31, 1884, and was buried in the north cemetery at Somers, his death resulting from a paralytic stroke which he survived some two weeks. In his politics he was a Democrat, and he was a man with no enemies, a kind, honest and hard-working man. Maria R. Pease, his wife, was born in Monson, Mass., Jan. 13, 1820, a daughter of Abraham and Mary (Davis) Pease; she is still living and makes her home with her son, Homer N. To Mr. and Mrs. Norman Kibbe were born: (1) Homer N. (2) Clifford P., born in Somers, Dec. 1857, educated in the district schools and Somers high school. Leaving home he removed to Springfield, Mass., where he has been engaged in business for twenty-six years. For ten years he was in the employ of E. C. Sheldon, grocer and meat dealer, on Bridge street. Severing his relations with Mr. Sheldon, Mr. Kibbe began business for himself, opening and successfully running the Warwick market on Main street for four years. He then removed to his present location, Nos. 8-10 Main street, where he does a large and profitable business in the line of groceries and meats. Mr. Kibbe is a Republican and was a member of the City Council three terms, 1900-01 and 1902, representing the First ward. He has been a member of De Soto Lodge, No. 155, I. O. O. F., for seventeen years. He and his family are attendants at the Memorial Church of Springfield. Clifford P. was married June 20, 1885, to Nettie Pinney, born in Brookfield, Mass., daughter of Albert and Harriet Augusta (Ruby) Pinney, of Stafford, Conn. Their children were: Harold Warren; Corinne Ruby; Norman, who died when nine months old; Donald Clifford; Dorothy Annette; Stuart Allen and Stanley Johnson, twins. (3) Elbert W., born

May 21, 1862, was a farmer and laborer, and met his death at Poquonock, in the town of Windsor, Conn., where he was instantly killed, June 19, 1896, by being carried over and falling twenty feet on the rocks below the dam of the Hartford Power Co., in whose employ he was at that time. (4) Hattie E., born Oct. 29, 1859, died Feb. 11, 1864, at the age of four years. (5) Corwin L., born March 21, 1865, married Nellie Morrison, and lives in Turner Falls, Mass., where he is engaged in handling produce. They have two children, Russell and Helen.

Homer N. Kibbe was born Sept. 18, 1855, in the house in which he is now living. He attended district and select schools a short time, Miss Harriet L. Pomeroy being his teacher on Somers street. For a little time after reaching manhood he worked for various farmers, but the rest of his life has been spent on the home farm. Mr. Kibbe deals in stock, and also handles much lumber, ties and wood. In Somers he has a farm of seventy-five acres, and considerable timberland in Massachusetts.

Mr. Kibbe is a Republican in national politics, and though he is no office-seeker he has been constable. He prefers, however, to devote himself to his own business interests, in which he takes much satisfaction, and delights to push things after an approved hustling habit which has already marked him as a competent and thoroughly successful man.

HON. WILLIAM RUSSELL BARBER, the popular Mayor of Putnam, was elected to his present position in 1901, for a term of two years, by a large Republican majority; but he scarcely needed that honor to augment his wide popularity. As an educator, a progressive business man, and especially as superintendent of one of the largest corporations in the city, the Putnam Foundry and Machine Co., Mr. Barber has been prominently known to the general public for many years. He was born in Thompson, May 8, 1850, and comes of a family well-known in Windham county.

Mr. Barber's grandfather, William Barber, was born in Woodstock, May 1, 1798, and resided in that town for many years. Later he moved to Thompson, where he died, June 2, 1869. In early manhood he worked at shoe bottoming, but afterwards engaged in farming, a pursuit which he followed with much success for the rest of his life. On March 5, 1823, he married Azubah Spaulding, who was born Sept. 27, 1805, daughter of Newell Spaulding, of Eastford. She died Dec. 30, 1889. To Mr. and Mrs. Barber were born six children: Joseph R., the first, is mentioned below. Paraclete and William died in infancy. Andrew W., born March 6, 1832, married Elizabeth Sheldon. As a merchant, a livery man, and an overseer of town farms in Rhode Island for many years, the last named was well-known. He died Jan. 29, 1891. Sarah D., born March 25, 1839, married Stephen Ballard, of Thompson. Emma Jane, born Feb. 13, 1847, married Jesse Bowen, of Thompson. Mr. Barber, though a small man, was always healthy and energetic. As a member of the Baptist Church he was one of its most active workers. A staunch Whig, he evinced the keenest interest in politics and public affairs generally. Both as constable and tax collector he served Thompson very efficiently for many years.

Hon. Joseph Russell Barber, son of William, is now living quietly at the pleasant home which he erected late in life, on School street, Putnam. He has, however, long been prominent in that section, both as an agriculturist and as an able politician. Born in Woodstock, May 4, 1824, he moved, when about six years old, with his parents, to Thompson. Here he attended school until he was seventeen years old, receiving a practical rudimentary education. Office work then appealing to him, he secured a position as clerk in a hotel in Thompson, and giving the best of satisfaction remained there five years. By this time considering himself competent to conduct a business of his own, he engaged in shoemaking, a trade which he had learned in his boyhood. For seven years he continued in this line with much success. On April 6, 1847, Mr. Barber married Judith Hunt Perry, daughter of John and Arabelle (Smith) Perry, of Woodstock, Conn. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Barber: Ella Josephine, born April 17, 1848, in Thompson, Conn., married, in 1871, Frank A. Hopkins, of West Woodstock, and they now reside in Putnam. (He is mentioned more fully elsewhere in this volume.) William R. is mentioned below. John Perry, a West Woodstock farmer, born May 31, 1852, in Thompson, married Anna Arnold, of West Woodstock.

Mr. Barber after discontinuing his shoemaking business went to Oxford, Mass., and worked as overseer of the poor farm there for three years. Having saved considerable money by this time he next went to West Woodstock, and purchased the splendid 200 acre "John Perry Farm." Here he spent the busiest and most successful period of his life, remaining twenty-three years. Later he purchased the Dr. Spaulding eighty-acre place on Woodstock Hill which he carried on for five years, and then selling this property went to farming in South Woodstock for some time. In 1897 he went to Putnam, where he has since resided. Mr. Barber has always been a perfectly loyal Republican, never voting any other ticket in his life. While living in Woodstock he served his community very acceptably as assessor for nine years; and also, in 1873, as representative to the State Legislature, where as a man of acknowledged business ability he served on the Railroad Committee.

William Russell Barber was about three years old when his parents went to Oxford, Mass., and seven when they moved to Woodstock. Here he received the greater part of his education, attending the common schools until about eighteen years old.

Desiring to follow teaching he later took a course in the historic academy at Woodstock. During his early school days Mr. Barber had spent four summers with David Clark of Worcester learning the carpenter's trade. Being fairly equipped for life, at the age of eighteen he began teaching, working at his trade in summer. Eastford, where he taught for one term and Thompson where he taught for a year, were the scenes of his first activities. After four years' successful professional work in Thompson, Woodstock, and Eastford, he engaged as principal of the Fifth District Grammar school in Putnam, taking up his work in September, 1880. There he remained four years, giving eminent satisfaction. On April 7, 1884, the Putnam Foundry and Machine Corporation was formed, with which Mr. Barber cast his lot, being one of the original stockholders. This enterprise was successful from the start. It was originally backed by forty stockholders, possessing a capital of $20,000. In 1889 this capital had increased to $30,000, and in 1891 to $40,000. From year to year the plant has also greatly increased in value and now covers an area of five or six acres. It has four large, commodious buildings, admirably adapted to the business in progress; and its work is distributed among three different departments, the foundry, machine shop and model departments. For the different branches of work about fifty men are employed, most of whom are skilled workmen. The "Plummer" steam heater, the "Leader," a hot water heater; the Putnam sectional boiler; and a new and popular furnace, the "Nutmeg State," are among the manufactured articles. During the first year of the corporation's existence Mr. Barber acted as secretary and treasurer. Then he rose to the position of manager, and later to that of superintendent. Here his remarkable executive ability at once manifested itself; and no small portion of the eminent success of the corporation has been due to his efficient enterprise and conservative management. In addition to his foundry interest Mr. Barber has become prominently identified with other business enterprises in Putnam, and is a director of the First National Bank and of the Putnam Box Corporation. The first named company carries on a very extensive business, sending its products, small castings of all kinds, to all parts of the United States and even across the water. They have branch offices at Providence, R. I., and at Mount Vernon, N. Y. The patents on the articles sent out by this company have been procured by Putnam inventors in its service, and are its property.

On Nov. 14, 1894, Mr. Barber married Mary Louise May, daughter of Carlo and Sarah (Child) May, of East Woodstock, Conn. Mrs. Barber died on May 1, 1897, in Woodstock; and Sept. 27, 1899, Mr. Barber married Elvira Andrews, daughter of Alfred and Sarah (Carpenter) Andrews, of Shelburne, Mass. By the first marriage there were no children. By the second there are two—Russell Andrews, who was born in Putnam, July 27, 1900, and John Alfred, June 1, 1902. The mother of these children is a lady of much mental force, who makes a most competent helpmeet for her husband and contributes no little to the refined and hospitable atmosphere of his home. She is a graduate of Wellesley College and, after teaching two years in Arms' Academy at Shelburne Falls, Mass., was four years an efficient member of the faculty of the Putnam High School. While the duties of her pleasant home find first place in her mind, she does not shirk those duties to society which pertain to her station, and among her public cares are those attendant upon the Ladies' Board of the Day-Kimball Hospital, of Putnam.

Mr. Barber has throughout his mature life, prominently identified himself with educational, religious and public affairs of all kinds. While in Woodstock he was elected secretary, treasurer and trustee of the academy, and afterward held those offices for eleven years resigning on account of more pressing duties in 1896. He also served as game warden at that place. In Putnam he has been an active school visiting member of the board of education for twelve years, and its secretary since 1899. As a church worker he was superintendent of the West Woodstock Sunday-school for some time, and, as member of the Putnam Congregational Church, is now chairman of its Society Committee, and assistant superintendent of its Sunday-school. As to political work, Mr. Barber has been a member of the Republican Town Committee for over eight years, and its chairman four years. In 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898 he represented Putnam in the State Legislature, giving eminent satisfaction. During the first two terms he served on the committee on Humane Institutions, acting as clerk during the second period. As a promoter of its future welfare Putnam has no more keenly interested citizen than Mr. Barber.

Mr. Barber, in 1894, built a very fine residence on School street, and here he and his family reside.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS COSGROVE. It is the dream of many men actively engaged in industrial pursuits, to retire when the shadows of life grow long to the quiet of the farm, there to enjoy comparative peace and rest. Happy is he whose dream is thus realized. George A. Cosgrove since 1893 has dwelt among the picturesque hills of Willington, Tolland county, where he is rounding out a career that has been of more than ordinary activity.

Mr. Cosgrove is the descendant of an old New Jersey family. His great-great-grandfather was Lieut. Joseph Cosgrove, a Monmouth County farmer who served in the Revolutionary army under Gen. Washington. His son, the great-grandfather of George A. Cosgrove, was William Cosgrove, and Isaac, the son of the latter and grandfather of George Augustus, was born in Hanover, N. J., Aug. 5, 1791, and became a blacksmith. He married May 28, 1811, Lydia Glover who died Aug. 8, 1826, leaving two children, James T., father of George A. Cosgrove, and Mary, who was born May 20, 1816, and died in Afton, N. J., in 1887.

James Thomas Cosgrove, the father, was born in Hanover, N. J., Aug. 28, 1814. He became a carriage spring manufacturer, acquiring the trade in Heidenburg's factory, Newark, N. J., and working there until 1844, when he removed to New Haven, Conn. In the latter city he continued to work at his trade for some years, then started in business for himself in which he continued for many years and finally sold out to W. & E. T. Fitch. Mr. Cosgrove was not only a superior mechanic but a manager of men and he remained in the shop as superintendent until his death, which occurred Feb. 17, 1867. In manner he was quiet and unassuming but his noble character made him universally beloved and respected. He was a member of the M. E. Church and in politics first a Whig and then a Republican. He was twice married, first in 1836 to Elizabeth M. Tichenor, who was born in Lyons Farms, N. J., and died in Newark, N. J., Feb. 14, 1840. The first Mrs. Cosgrove left three small children—George A., subject of this sketch; James Luther, born Aug. 23, 1838, and died in February, 1859; and Sarah E., born Feb. 5, 1840 and died in Springfield, Mo., in 1888. For his second wife the father married Sarah Ferris, of Newark, N. J., who died in Manchester, Conn., in 1892. By this second marriage there were five children, none of whom are living.

George Augustus Cosgrove was born in Newark, N. J., Feb. 6, 1837. He began his education in that city but when he was seven years old his father removed to New Haven and there for six years George A. attended the public schools. At the age of thirteen he began feeding presses in the office of the New Haven Palladium, where he remained four years. He then served an apprenticeship at the carriage body making trade with Lewis E. Shelley, of New Haven, remaining two and a half years. His employer failing in business young Cosgrove went to Davenport, Iowa, where he was employed by the firm of Andrews & Shelley, the junior member of the firm being his former employer. Illness at the expiration of nine months induced him to return to his old home in Connecticut, but later he again made the western journey and for two years worked at his trade at Quincy, Ill. Returning to New Haven, Mr. Cosgrove worked at his trade for George T. Newhall until the factory closed in 1861 at the breaking out of the Civil war. Previous to that time Eli Whitney, of cotton gin fame, had established the Whitney armory at Whitneyville, New Haven, and there Mr. Cosgrove was employed for twenty years. He was rapidly promoted and three years before he resigned he had been given full charge of inspection in the pistol department. Resigning in 1881 he went to New York and there made a one year's contract with the United States Electric Light Co., for making the lamps for arc lights which employed about thirty men. The plant then removed to Newark, N. J., and Mr. Cosgrove was appointed foreman of the electrical appliance department, employing from thirty to forty hands. He filled that position until the company sold out about eight years later to the Westinghouse Company, when Mr. Cosgrove resigned. Two years previously he had been appointed head inspector and tester of all the electrical appliances. He was a machinist of fine ability, quick to grasp an idea or apply a principle and skilled in the mechanical part of the trade. Mr. Cosgrove was then connected for five years with the Excelsior Electric Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., first for a few months as purchasing agent, then as shipping and receiving clerk. The financial panic of 1893 closed the doors of the factory and Mr. Cosgrove, who had then reached the age of fifty-five, decided to become a farmer. Coming to Willington, he purchased the Cortis farm of eighty acres on Willington Hill, where he has since resided. He makes a specialty of fine poultry, keeping only fine broods, Wyandots and White Leghorns principally, from 200 to 300 chickens in all. He also engages quite extensively in raising small fruits, including peaches.

Mr. Cosgrove married May 10, 1857, at Quincy, Ill., Mary Alice Linney, a native of Manchester, England, daughter of James Alfred and Mary Alice (Lee) Linney. To Mr. and Mrs. Cosgrove have been born three children as follows: (1) Ida Matilda, born May 30, 1858, married (first) May 10, 1876, Frank Bronson of New Haven. Their only child, Ethel Elberta, born June 9, 1879, married Benjamin E. Benton of South Willington. (2) Ida Matilda married (second) Rev. Charles H. Brown, of Boston, a Baptist minister, who in 1899-1900 served as state representative from Willington and was also school visitor. He had been pastor of the Willington church for about ten years. (3) Anna Belle, born March 3, 1861, married Benj. Sleight, of New York. After the death of her husband in Panama, of yellow fever, she became a trained nurse. (4) Frank Howard born May 26, 1863, is a machinist and tool maker in New York City. He married (first) Katie Vanderbilt who died May 16, 1893. By this marriage there was one daughter, Alice Vanderbilt Cosgrove, born Sept. 3, 1887. For his second wife Frank Howard married Lizzie Mansfield.

Mr. Cosgrove is a member of the Bellville Avenue Congregational Church of Newark, N. J., and has always taken an active part in church work. He has been for many years teacher of the Bible class in the Baptist church of Willington. Among the fraternal orders he is prominent. He is a veteran Odd Fellow, his membership dating back prior to the Civil war. He is a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 5, of New Haven. He is also a member of the Masonic order and of the Knights and Ladies of the Golden Star, Newark, N. J. In politics he is a staunch Republican. During the Greenback campaign he was a candidate of that party for State senator. Since his residence in Willington he has served as justice of the peace, health officer, and as agent of the town deposit fund. Mr. Cosgrove is deeply interested in public affairs and is one of the leading citizens of the town of Willington.

MASON W. HALE (deceased). The Hale family was at one time one of the representative families of the town of Plainfield, and was widely represented, but at present but one of its numerous membership remains. The first of this family came from County Kent, England, and made a home in Massachusetts. The coat-of-arms of the family is a red shield with three white arrows pointing downward; the crest is an arm in armor holding an arrow. Mason Waterman Hale descended from an old New England family, early members of whom settled in Swansea, Massachusetts.

Job Hale, his grandfather, was born Feb. 26, 1748, and he lived for a time at Swansea, and later in life came to Plainfield, Conn., where he was the first of the family to make a home. He purchased property near "Squaw Rocks," and there engaged in farming. He died May 8, 1834, and his wife, Mary Mason, born June 6, 1754, died Dec. 6, 1827. To Job and Mary (Mason) Hale were born: Job, born Sept. 5, 1773; Polly, born Jan. 25, 1775; Arise, born Dec. 26, 1781; Stephen, the father of Mason W. Hale, born Dec. 18, 1783; Coomer, born May 28, 1785; James and John (twins), born June 13, 1788; Ezra, born March 4, 1792; Elisha, born June 12, 1794; and Dilly and Bethir (twins), born Aug. 12, 1796.

Stephen Hale, son of Job, was a native of Swansea, Mass., and when a boy came to Plainfield, Conn. It is related of him that while on the way to the home farm, he stopped to ask the way at the home of Meshach Potter, where he first met Hannah Potter, who afterward became his wife. She was born June 22, 1786, and was a granddaughter of Benjamin and Jemima (Williams) Potter. Jemima Williams was a daughter of Joseph Williams, Jr., and a granddaughter of Roger Williams, the founder of Providence. Stephen Hale lived on the home farm, and there devoted himself to tilling the soil, and became one of the substantial men of the town. He attended the Baptist Church, and led an honorable and useful life. To Stephen and Hannah (Potter) Hale were born six children: Mason Waterman. Lydia Ann, born Nov. 9, 1818, married Daniel Hubbard, and had children, Ida Olive and Henry C.; at her death her remains were laid to rest in the Westfield Cemetery. James Wilson, born April 12, 1820, died in California; a stone to his memory was placed in the Union Cemetery, at Moosup, Conn. Elisha Potter, born March 4, 1822, lived on the home farm until a short time prior to his death, when he moved to Danielson, Conn.; he married Abby Ann Hill and left no descendants. Mary Esther, born Dec. 19, 1824, died unmarried in June, 1902, at her home in Providence, R. I. Archibald Kneeland, born Oct. 3, 1826, died in Rhode Island, Sept. 5, 1849. All of the above generation were born on the old Hale homestead, the place now owned and occupied by Albert Pierce.

Mason Waterman Hale was reared on the old home farm and he attended the schools of the neighborhood. When a young man Mr. Hale went to Phoenix, R. I., where he had charge of weaving. For a number of years he was superintendent of the Lippitt and the Phoenix Mills, and later still of the Georgeville, Fisherville, and Jackson Mills, all in Rhode Island.

Mr. Hale was married in 1840, to Miss Marcy Rice, a daughter of Nathan and Betsy (Gardner) Bowen. She died Aug. 22, 1856, and some two years later Mr. Hale was united in marriage with Mary C. Bowen, a sister of his first wife. She died Feb. 17, 1870, and on May 7, 1873, he married Mrs. Betsy A. (Bailey) Moredock, who survived him about four years. His death occurred April 8, 1889. Mary Emma Hale, the only child of Mason W. Hale, was born of his first marriage, Feb. 25, 1846, and has her home in Almyville, where her father died, and where he devoted himself for several years to farming more for recreation than for profit. Miss Hale is well versed in family lore, and among her valued possessions is a letter from Rev. Edward Everett Hale. She is in the seventh generation from Roger Williams (through her grandmother, Hannah Potter), and belongs to the Roger Williams Society.

Mr. Hale united with the Baptist Church at Phoenix, R. I., where he became a zealous church worker. He was a teacher in the Sunday-school, and a member of the choir for many years. The church was always the dearest thing to him, and his life squared well with his profession, his integrity and high principles not being questioned. Like nearly all the Hale family, he was a staunch Republican, and while living in Rhode Island represented the town of Coventry in the State Legislature, and acceptably filled various town offices. While a member of the Legislature he was offered $1,000 for his vote, but he was true to his principles and refused. After leaving Phoenix Mr. Hale moved to Bowens Hill, R. I., where he lived for many years engaged in farming. In 1870, he returned to Plainfield, the town of his birth, where he became associated in mercantile affairs with E. E. Hill. When this partnership was dissolved, he became superintendent of the Kishwaukee Mill, which was afterwards renamed the Cranska Mill, which was then owned by Hale & Miller, the former being a brother of Mr. Hale. In 1878 he bought the Caleb Tillinghast place, where he resided at the time of his death. After returning to Plainfield Mr. Hale united with the Union Plainfield Baptist Church, where he was very active in both church and Sunday-school. For a number of years Mr. Hale was a member of the board of selectmen.

NORMAN BRUCE REAM. In considering the prominent and representative men of Windham county whose past endeavors and present activities place them in a conspicuous position Norman Bruce Ream is entitled to special mention.

Born in a State noted for its production of the highest types of citizenship, the old "Keystone" has never had cause to blush for this devoted son. Norman Bruce Ream was born Nov. 5, 1844, in Somerset county, Pa., son of prosperous farming people, Levi and Highly (King) Ream, who were respectively of German and Scottish extraction. Upon his father's farm Mr. Ream learned thoroughly all the details of agriculture, his summers until he was fourteen years of age being devoted to farming, while he passed the winters in attendance upon the district school. One term in a local normal school fitted him to become a teacher, which profession he followed one term, when he gave it up to engage in portrait painting, the ambrotype process just at that time coming into favor.

Although the breaking out of the Civil war sadly interfered with his business, it became a turning point in the career of Mr. Ream. On Sept. 1, 1861, he enlisted, becoming a private in Company H, 85th P. V. I., although he had been offered a commission. On Feb. 22, 1864, at Whitmarsh Island, Ga., Mr. Ream received his first wound, and June 17, following, at Wearbottom Church, Va., was wounded a second time so severely as to incapacitate him. For this cause, in August, 1864, he was honorably discharged by the Government and returned home.

After recuperating young Mr. Ream entered a business college in Pittsburg, where he was commercially instructed, and went from there to a clerkship in a general store at Harnedsville where he remained until September, 1866. This village life did not satisfy the ambitions of the future multi-millionaire, and with that foresight which has been such an element in his success he turned his attention to the great West, securing a clerical position at Princeton, Ill., and later becoming the proprietor of the business. Ten months later the store was burned, resulting in a large loss to Mr. Ream. A few months later he sold out his business in Princeton, and in 1868 located in Osceola, Iowa, where he embarked in a grain, livestock and agricultural implement business, in connection with farming operations. On account of poor crop seasons and bad debts Mr. Ream was three years later obliged to close out this business. His reputation for integrity was such that none doubted a final satisfactory settlement of all claims, which in a comparatively short time he accomplished. In April, 1871, he removed to Chicago and became a member of the live stock commission firm of Coffman & Ream, his extensive acquaintance with stock raisers in some of the best cattle sections of the West contributing materially to the success of this business. Until 1878 Mr. Ream continued a member of the firm, although he had been but a silent partner from 1875, when he became an operator on the Chicago Board of Trade. For one year he was the silent partner of George C. Ball & Co., from which concern he withdrew, to establish in 1877, the well known board of trade firm of N. B. Ream & Co. This was changed in 1880 to R. W. Clark & Co., when Mr. Clark bought an interest, Mr. Ream at that time becoming a special partner. As a shrewd and reliable trader he soon established a reputation on the board.

Mr. Ream became interested in railroad stocks many years ago, his connection not only proving profitable to himself, but through his judicious management and advice to many Chicago capitalists. He has made many investments in Chicago realty, and also in property outside the city and State, these investments leading to the building of that magnificent structure, the Rookery, in Chicago, and the "Midland Hotel," in Kansas City. He is a heavy stockholder in city railways, has large interests in western cattle ranches, and owns large tracts of agricultural and timber land. One of his great enterprises in which the residents of Thompson, Conn., are more particularly interested, was the purchase by him of what was known as the Perrin tract, and also a part of the old Doane homestead, adding to this a woodland tract owned formerly by George V. Nichols, and erecting there one of the most magnificent summer homes along the Atlantic coast. In 1900 Mr. Ream with a view to still greater improvement purchased two more tracts, those belonging to George Hawkins and Judge George Flint, near Thompson Center. His summer home promises to rival those of any other section of the country, neither labor, taste nor money being spared to obtain results.

In this connection it is but meet to state that Mr. Ream finds one drawback to his perfect enjoyment of this most charming home, and that is the absence of his long-time dear friend, the late John W. Doane. It was through the warm friendship existing between himself and Mr. Doane that Mr. Ream turned his attention to the landscape possibilities of Thompson, Conn. This was the old home of Mr. Doane, to which he returned after a business career of forty-three years as a merchant, banker and capitalist, his death occurring shortly after his return.

In financial circles Mr. Ream is rated at a very high figure, and he is connected with some of the leading financial enterprises and corporations of the country. For many years he has belonged to the

New York Stock Exchange; is a director of the First National Bank of Chicago; and of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway; the Colorado Southern Railway; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; the Chicago & Alton Railroad; the Pullman Company; the United States Steel Company; and many other corporations. Although an interested Republican, Mr. Ream has never taken a very active part in politics, but has long been prominently identified with the Masonic fraternity. In club life he holds membership with the Union Club, Metropolitan Club and Yacht Club of New York City, and the Chicago, Washington Park, Athletic, Commercial and Union League Clubs of Chicago.

On February 17, 1876, in Madison, N. Y., Mr. Ream was married to Miss Carrie T. Putnam, of Revolutionary stock, daughter of Dr. John Putnam, of Madison, and a family of nine children has been born to them—five sons and four daughters. Three died young, Norman Putnam, Katherine and Harry. The living are Marion B., Frances M., Norman P., Robert C., Edward K. and Louis M.

JOSIAH B. SLADE, who holds the responsible position of collector for the town of Sterling, Windham county, was born in Valley Falls, R. I., June 22, 1832, but from his tenth year has made his home among the surroundings which are now profiting by his enterprising citizenship.

Charles Slade, the paternal grandfather of Josiah B., was a resident of Somerset, Mass., where he farmed during his years of activity, and where he reared his children to years of usefulness. Through his marriage with Susannah Sweet four children were born, of whom Polly, married Mr. Perry Gardner, and lived in Somerset; Thomas C. spent the greater part of his life, and died, in Connecticut; Charles Jr., was the father of Josiah B.; Waity died unmarried in Somerset.

Charles Slade, Jr., was born in Somerset, Jan. 28, 1802, and when a young man of eighteen or nineteen entered a mill and learned the trade of dresser tender, which he subsequently followed in different parts of Rhode Island and Connecticut, notably in Apponaug, Natick, and Valley Falls, R. I., and in Sterling, Conn. He married in Centerville, R. I., Ann Emeline Gardner, born in Rhode Island, Dec. 28, 1802. For a second husband Mrs. Slade married Alfred Kenyon, and lived in Sterling, where her death occurred March 19, 1878. To Charles Slade, Jr., and his wife were born three children: Darius, born in 1830, died at the age of four years; Josiah Baker; and Charles E., born April 5, 1834, at present lives at Central Falls, Rhode Island.

After the death of his father, and when about ten years of age, Josiah B. Slade removed with his mother from Rhode Island to Sterling, Conn. He soon found employment with Azel Cole, Esq., where he worked on the farm during the summer time and was permitted to attend the district school in the winter season. At the end of four years he was employed for a couple of years on the Alvin Park farm in the Flat Rock district, Plainfield, and for the following nine months he clerked in a store at Harrisville, R. I. He then entered a shop and learned the carpenter's trade, following the same in Arctic and Quidnick, R. I., for two and a half years. For a time also Mr. Slade worked in the car repair shops at Providence, R. I., and in the spring of 1857 returned to Sterling, and for nine years executed the repair work for the Oneco Manufacturing Company, then owned and managed by George W. Chapin. For three years he did outside carpenter work for A. & W. Sprague, at Cranston, R. I. Since 1878 Mr. Slade has made his home in the town of Sterling, where he owns a farm and in connection with the management of which he still carries on carpenter work. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, and has held many important offices in the town, including that of town clerk for one year, a member of the board of relief for eight or ten years; justice of the peace since 1888; collector for the town from the year 1888 to the present time with the exception of the years 1895-96. Fraternally Mr. Slade is identified with Moriah Lodge No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of Danielson, having joined that organization in 1867; he is a member of Royal Arch Chapter No. 1, of Providence, R. I., which he joined in 1871; and the Calvary Commandery of Providence, with which he became identified in 1872.

On Nov. 3, 1852, Mr. Slade married Lydia Knowles Dawley, a native of Providence, and daughter of Royal V. Dawley. To Mr. and Mrs. Slade has been born one child, who died in infancy. Mr. Slade is one of the prominent and highly esteemed citizens of Sterling, and his many fine personal attributes have won and kept through many years a host of desirable and appreciative friends.

WALDO L. BRADFORD. This representative of one of the oldest families in the State of Connecticut, a family mentioned frequently in this volume, is a resident of Woodstock, Windham county, and was born in North Woodstock, Feb. 11, 1843. He is a son of Samuel Bradford, who was born in the same town June 13, 1818, and died May 13, 1900.

Samuel Bradford, father of Waldo L., married April 3, 1842, Cordelia Brown, who was born in Woodstock, Jan. 11, 1822, and died May 15, 1901, her only child being Waldo L., whose name opens this biographical sketch. Samuel Bradford was a remarkably robust man, was never sick, always genial and good-natured, and always a hard worker. Although an active worker in the Democratic party he would never accept a nomination for office, and his religious sympathies tended toward Universalism.

Benjamin Bradford, grandfather of Waldo L. was also a native of Woodstock, where he lived and died. He was twice married, first to a Miss Lyon, who bore him one child, Samuel; and second, to a Miss Healey, who bore him three children—Benjamin, Sarah and Hannah.

Waldo L. Bradford attended the common schools of North Woodstock until seventeen years old. He then went to work for Calvin Arnold, a wheelwright in Woodstock, for whom he worked two years making wheel rims. He next went to Union, Conn., worked in Herindeen & Phillips saw-mill about two years, and then purchased a farm of seventy-five acres from Luke Morse on which he lived twelve years. Mr. Bradford was next employed in teaming for a year in Charlton, Mass., and then worked for Ekers & Taylor for a year as foreman on a farm, after which he entered their satinette mill, in which he was given charge of the mixing room for a year, and afterward was foreman of the mill repairs. On April 3, 1894, Mr. Bradford returned to Woodstock, took possession of the home farm and also engaged in carpentering. His farm comprises 100 acres, on which he keeps about twenty head of cattle and also conducts a dairy, disposing of the milk in the Boston, Mass., market.

Religiously Mr. Bradford is in sympathy with the Universalists and politically he is neutral, although he was reared a Democrat. Mr. Bradford was united in marriage Feb. 11, 1863, with Miss Lucy Webster, daughter of William Charles and Eliza (Chamberlin) Webster, of Thompson, Conn. This union has been favored with four children, viz.: (1) Effie Eliza, born May 8, 1864, is the wife of William Thomas Hayes, a blacksmith of Charlton, Mass., but now living in Brookfield, Mass., and the mother of one child—Harry William, born Dec. 16, 1890. (2) Irving Eugene, born April 5, 1866, in Woodstock, engaged in farming and carpentering with his father, married Ellen Berry of Charlton, who died in Uxbridge, Mass., Dec. 17, 1890, leaving two children, viz.: Irving, born Sept. 13, 1889, and George Abram, born Nov. 18, 1890. (3) Ada Cordelia, born May 31, 1868, in Union, married William Lyman Knight of Charlton, Mass., and died in Greenville, Mass., July 2, 1891, the mother of one child—Mabel Nellie born July 8, 1890, in Charlton. (4) Mabel Sarah, born March 12, 1875, in Union, died Dec. 18, 1875.

Waldo L. Bradford and family are greatly respected in Woodstock, being quiet, steady-going people, whose walk through life has been one of rectitude and industry and consistent with all that could be expected from the descendants of so reputable a personage as Gov. Bradford, the colonist.

EDWIN HARRISON HALL. The largest and oldest of North Windham's industries is the cotton thread manufactory of E. H. Hall & Son, which is located near the bridge on the north side of the Natchaug river, in Windham county. A wheel of 91-horse power gives the required motion to some 4,000 spindles, and about 3,000 pounds of yarn a week are produced. Some forty people are employed, and dull times is something not found in the history of this enterprise. The land on which the factory is located has been used for manufacturing purposes for more than a century. Here paper was made in the early part of the nineteenth century, but that gave way to cotton making in 1831. In 1860 the buildings were destroyed by fire, and the new structures were leased to Merrick Brothers for thread making. In 1871 the property was bought by E. H. Hall & Son, both members of this firm having been associated with the Merrick industries. The elder Hall died in 1884, and now his son, Edwin H., is the sole proprietor, though retaining the name of the old firm.

Nathan Hall, the grandfather of Edwin H. Hall, was born in June, 1781, and he died Dec. 6, 1841. Philomela, his wife, was born May 30, 1785, and died April 13, 1838. To them were born the following children: Stephen F., born in 1804, died in 1879; Origen B., born in 1806, died in 1888; Philomela, born in 1808, died in 1890; Gardiner, born in 1809, died in 1879; Lurancy, born Nov. 12, 1811, died in 1887; Eleazer B., born in 1813, died in 1850; Norman B., born in 1815, died in 1891; Deborah, born in 1816, died in 1883; Lyman, born in 1818, died the following year; Egbert, born in 1820, died in 1878; Edwin H., Sr., the father of the subject of this article; Nathan Lyman, born in 1823, died in Willington; Lovisa, born in 1827, died the following year. Nathan Hall is remembered in the city as a man of great physical power and steady endurance. He lived for a time in the Yellow Row, belonging to the Windham Co., and afterward built the Moynaham block, on Main street.

Edwin H. Hall, Sr., was a life-long resident of the town of Windham, with the exception of a very brief period, and died at his residence on High street, Willimantic, Dec. 12, 1884. He was born in Mansfield, Conn., May 26, 1821, and his father removed to Willimantic when he was a young boy. He received his education in the public school, and in March, 1842, was married to Miss Sophia Prentice, a daughter of Major Henry Prentice, prominent in the State militia. She died in April, 1899, at the age of eighty years. Shortly after their marriage Mr. Hall removed to Vernon, but in less than a year came back to Willimantic to enter the employ of Whiting Hayden in the old Duck Mill, then standing on land now belonging to the Linen Company, between their spool shop, and Mill No. 1. With Mr. Hayden his services were continuous until after the erection of the Smithville Company's factories, where he ran the first hand mules set up in the new part, between 1850 and 1855. About this time he built the home on High Street, which was sold at auction by the borough in 1883. This house was sold by him to his brother Egbert, on account of poor health, and Mr. Hall gave up his job at the Windham Company to his brother, spending the next year at Greenville, Uncasville, Danielsonville and Plainfield, and, returning to Willimantic at the suggestion of Col. Jillson, became one of the overseers of the Duck Mill. When the Linen Company's Mill No. 1 was finished, in 1857, he became the overseer of the twisting room, with his brother Gardiner as superintendent, serving in this capacity some nine years. During this period he bought of his employers the land on Pleasant Street, now owned by George Lincoln, and built the house now standing there. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Hall formed a business co-partnership with Harry Wilson, of Wauregan, and bought of George W. Burnham a retail grocery business, being engaged in a very profitable trade near the spool shop. Two years later he took the position of superintendent of the mill of Timothy Merrick at North Windham, removing immediately to that point with his family and five years later bought the property, formed a co-partnership with his son, Edwin H., Jr., and began business under the name of E. H. Hall & Son, making cotton yarn as long as he lived. Many reverses attended this somewhat doubtful enterprise, but Mr. Hall made it a decided success.

E. H. Hall

Edwin H. Hall, Sr., was a candidate on the Republican ticket for the office of representative, and was defeated by John L. Hunter, who had only a margin of two votes in his favor. This was in 1878, and the following year Mr. Hall was chosen a commissioner of Windham county, a position he held until failing health compelled his retirement in January, 1884. During 1883 and 1884 he was the committee of the First School District, and for many years was one of the trustees of the Willimantic Camp Meeting Association. About the time of his return to Willimantic, during the pastorate of Rev. J. A. Robinson, he became a member of the Methodist Church. In every position of life his zeal for the public welfare, and his fidelity to the duties of every trust, and his steadfast conviction of right commanded the admiration of his associates. Twice in his life time, as he was wont to tell his friends, did he come near to a violent death: Once in March, 1876, when the bridge at North Windham gave way before a flood, carrying himself and others with it. Mr. Hall leaped from the whirling ruin, and clutching the branches of a little tree, clung till holding was no longer possible, when he was rescued by J. G. Davoll, as he was about to fall back into the whirling flood. Again, in 1880, at Phelps' Crossing between Willimantic and North Windham, a fast train tore off the upper half of both wheels on one side of his buggy, leaving him uninjured. As the trainmen rushed to his assistance, he said, "Go on, I am all right." His perfect composure in both these trying experiences was marked, and doubtless saved his life.

Of the children born to Edwin H. Hall, Sr., and his wife, Edwin Harrison is mentioned below; Luthera, wife of Charles S. Lyman, lives at Holyoke, Mass.; Alice A., is the wife of P. H. Foland, of Boston; and Ella M. and Francois P. are both deceased.

Edwin Harrison Hall, the subject of this writing, was born in Willimantic, Dec. 29, 1848, in the family home on High Street, and with the exception of five years passed in South Willington and in Holyoke, Mass., has spent his life in his native community. His education was obtained from the public schools, and his special business training secured at Bryant & Stratton's Business College in Hartford, in 1865. For two years he was successfully engaged in mercantile business with his father, but preferring manufacturing, he entered the employ of the Willimantic Linen Co., remaining with that corporation several years. His next engagement was with Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., of South Willington, which continued three years, and which he gave up to go with the Merrick Thread Company, of Holyoke, Mass. After spending two years with them he entered into business relations with his father as narrated above, and since 1872 his life has been passed in North Windham. His manufacturing career has been identified with the thread business and several of the thread mills of New England have been planned and started in one way or another by the Hall family and their connections.

Mr. Hall has always been a staunch Republican, and has creditably filled several local positions, having refused those of larger importance on account of the necessity of keeping in the closest possible touch with his large and growing business. In 1884 when his father resigned from the board of county commissioners, on account of ill health, Mr. Hall was chosen as his successor, a position, with the exception of three years, he has held to the present time. His quiet disposition, his administrative faculty, and his attention to detail, make him one of the most desirable men in the service of the county.

On Dec. 29, 1869, Edwin H. Hall was married to Maria A. Avers, a native of Coventry, and a daughter of Wolcott H. and Lydia S. (Fargo) Avers, the former of whom is deceased, but the latter is still living in South Coventry. To this marriage was born one son, Louis, who married Queeny, a daughter of Anderson J. Greenslit, of Hampton, and is now the superintendent of his father's factory at North Windham; he has grown up in the business, and knows it from start to finish. There is also an adopted daughter, Nettie L., now at home.

Mr. Hall united with Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, F. & A. M., at Willimantic, Nov. 5, 1879, and also belongs to the A. O. U. W., at Willimantic. Framed and hanging in his office is a picture in which Mr. Hall takes much pride. It is of nine young men who formed the Willimantic Base Ball Club of 1866. Several of these young men have since become widely known, and four are now deceased. From a newspaper clipping it appears that they won the most of the games they played, defeating Rockville, South Coventry, Danielsonville, and clubs of other towns. In that year an experienced ball player came to work in Willimantic, and was given a position on the team. The first curved pitcher Willimantic had known, he proved a valuable acquisition to the club, and a wonder to the spectators.

GEORGE S. CROSBY, judge of probate for the town of Thompson, Windham county, and a citizen who has held an honored place among the respected business men of that locality for many years, comes from an ancestry to which undoubtedly he owes many of his sterling characteristics. However he deserves the sole credit for their development, and his fellow citizens esteem him accordingly.

(I) Simon Crosby, the founder of this family in the new world, settled in Cambridge in 1635, with his wife, Ann, and one son, Thomas. At his death, in 1639, he left three sons, of whom the eldest, Thomas, was graduated from Harvard in 1653, and entered the ministry. Simon, born in August, 1637, is the next in line of descent. Joseph, the third son, was born in February, 1639. The estate of Simon Crosby, the settler, after several conveyances passed in 1707 to Rev. William Brattle. This land is now partly occupied by the "Brattle House."

(II) Simon Crosby (2), son of Simon, born in August, 1637, married July 15, 1659, Rachel, daughter of Richard Brackett. Their children were: Rachel, born Aug. 20, 1660; Simon; Thomas, March 10, 1666; Joseph, March 5, 1669; Hannah, March 30, 1672; Nathan, Feb. 9, 1675; Josiah, Nov. 11, 1677; Mary, Nov. 23, 1680; Sarah, July 27, 1684.

(III) Nathan Crosby, son of Simon (2), born Feb. 9, 1675, was the next in line of descent.

(IV) Nathaniel Crosby, son of Nathan, born Aug. 31, 1699, died in 1770. In February, 1721, he married. His wife, Hepzibah, was born in Feb., 1699, and died in Oct., 1771. Their children, according to record of birth or baptism, were as follows: Jean, born Dec. 26, 1723, died unmarried in 1788. Nathaniel, born in 1729, died unmarried in 1774. Richard, baptized March 14, 1731, died young. Stephen, born Jan. 5, 1734, died Sept. 15, 1776. Jonathan was baptized May 8, 1737. Richard was baptized July 17, 1740. Soon after his marriage Nathaniel Crosby removed to Connecticut, buying land of Sampson Howe on each side of French river near the present site of Grosvenor Dale. Mrs. Crosby united with the Killingly Church in 1728. Mr. Crosby assisted in building the meeting-house in Thompson parish, and united with the church in 1731. He was not active in town or church affairs but was nevertheless reckoned among the substantial inhabitants. The first school district of that section, "both sides of French river from Nathaniel Mills' to Ebenezer Prince's," was known as Nathaniel Crosby's. Only one of his children married—a remarkable record for those days. All were intelligent and active in the community. Jean Crosby was one of the thirteen young women who begged the privilege of building "a pew upon the women's side gallery" for their own accommodation. Stephen also joined in building a pew "where the hind seat is in the men's side gallery." The mechanical ingenuity for which this family has been noted was manifested in Nathaniel, specimens of whose handiwork are still in evidence. Richard, the youngest, was in active service during the Revolutionary war, first enlisting in 1775 in Capt. Elliott's Company; Putnam's Regiment. He was on duty at Bunker Hill, in 1776 he was a private in his brother's company, New York; and in 1780 served six months in the Connecticut line.

(V) Stephen Crosby, son of Nathaniel, born Jan. 5, 1734, was the ancestor of all the Thompson Crosbys. On Feb. 16, 1755, he married Hannah, daughter of Francis Carroll, and their children were: (1) Elijah, born May 19, 1756, died Aug. 16, 1831. (2) Sarah, born Dec. 4, 1758, died Aug. 24, 1758. (3) Sybil, born March 8, 1760, married Capt. William Russel, and died in 1829; (4) Pearson, born Feb. 14, 1763, died Sept. 19, 1829; (5) Betty, born Oct. 16, 1765, married David White in 1781, and died April 27, 1785; they had one child. (6) Hannah, born Aug. 16, 1768, married Jotham Johnson Oct. 4, 1787, and died in 1843. (7) Stephen, born Oct. 9, 1772, married Susanna Johnson, and died Sept. 15, 1849. (8) Sarah, born Nov. 20, 1776, married Capt. Wyman Carroll, and died in 1854.

Stephen Crosby went out as a sergeant of Capt. Elliott's Company at the Lexington alarm in 1775. That he was a man of unquestioned standing in the town is indicated by the fact that he was elected first representative of the town of Killingly in 1776—at a crisis when only the strongest men were placed in responsible positions. In June, 1776, he was commissioned captain in Wadsworth's Brigade, 3d Regiment, Comfort Sage, Colonel, and after three months' arduous service he died, at the head of his company, on the retreat from New York, Sept. 15, 1776. His widow married, May 8, 1783, Jacob Mascraft, of Woodstock. She died at the home of her son Pearson, Dec. 27, 1813.

(VI) Elijah Crosby, eldest son of Stephen, assumed the care of the farm and family after the death of his father. He went out with the militia after the New London Alarm. Like his father he was active in public affairs, and he was one of seventy-eight citizens to whom the freeman's oath was administered June 21, 1785, at Thompson's first town meeting. He was one of the first to take advantage of the "Thompson Land," in 1803, buying 300 acres for $4,461. This land was east of Fort Hill, extending from the land of John and Nathaniel Mills to Alpheus Russell's (the Horace Bixby farm). Mr. Crosby's house, which occupied what is now the site of the residence of Joseph Mills, was one of the original "Thompson Houses," built by the English proprietor for whom Thompson was named. Elijah Crosby was very active in promoting the Providence turnpike, which passed through his farm, and served as chairman of the Thompson Turnpike Company which had the enterprise in hand and carried it through to completion. Mr. Crosby was also deeply interested in church affairs, serving on the building committee of the meeting-house, which was completed in 1817. On Dec. 27, 1781, Elijah Crosby married Celia, daughter of Capt. Isaacher Bates. Of their children, Charles is mentioned below. Stephen served in the ministry at Penn Yan, N. Y. (his son Elijah studied medicine and moved to Ohio). Caleb married in Thompson, and his son, Deacon Elijah Crosby, lived there until a few years ago. Susea, Mrs. Barber, also lived in the village of Thompson, and with her the mother passed her closing years.

(VII) Charles Crosby, the eldest son of Elijah, became the head of the family in his declining years. He bought a part of his father's land and farmed what is now known as the David Day farm which he occupied for thirty years. He assumed the care of the Crosby interests in the Providence Turnpike, was prominent in church affairs, assisted his younger brothers Stephen and Elijah to gain a professional education, and reared five daughters and one son. He served in the war of 1812. In March, 1805, he married (first) Hannah Elliott, who died leaving one daughter, who married John Thayer, and is now living in Hammond, Wis. In February, 1810, Charles Crosby married Abigail Fairbanks, who became the mother of six children: The two eldest daughters, Rachel and Abigail, married two brothers, Hiram and Dennis Wakefield, of Thompson, and moved to Morenci, Mich. Rachel left one daughter, and Abigail left a son, Charles Crosby Wakefield, a well-known landowner and banker of southern Michigan. Simeon, the only son of Charles, died at the age of twenty-seven, two years after the family removed to the West. Jane, the third daughter, married Thomas Sweet, of Fredonia. Two children survive her, Crosby and Jane Sweet, now living in Pioneer, Ohio. Susan, the fourth daughter, married Alexander Blake, and settled in Grand Rapids, Mich. They had four daughters, three of whom are still living there. Mary, the youngest, is the wife of George H. Nichols, of Thompson. In 1837 Charles Crosby sold his farm to David Day, Sr., and moved West with his family, locating in Ypsilanti, Mich., where he and his son, Simeon, died in August, 1839.

(VI) Pearson Crosby, second son of Capt. Stephen, served with the militia during the Revolution. He was converted at an early age uniting with the Baptist congregation centering at Brandy Hill, served as deacon and clerk of that society, and was ordained as its pastor Nov. 8, 1798. He has left a very interesting report of the great revival of 1815. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and eloquence, and had the reputation of being especially gifted on the occasion of funerals. After a successful pastorate of twenty years he followed his children to Fredonia, N. Y. On Dec. 10, 1782, Rev. Pearson Crosby married Hannah, daughter of Capt. Isaacher Bates. Their sons, Nathaniel and Pearson, moved West, and left numerous descendants. Their daughters also removed from the town. Their daughter Betsey married a Mr. Hill.

(VI) Stephen Crosby, son of Capt. Stephen, born Oct. 9, 1772, removed with his mother to Woodstock, where he learned the clothiers' business with his stepfather. Thence removing to Masonville, he carried on fulling and gristmills; and became a well known man in that community, held in the highest esteem. He was prominently identified with the Baptist Church, with which he united during the great revival in 1815, and was chosen deacon, which office he filled until his death with great fidelity and general acceptance. In 1836 he assisted in the erection of the Central Baptist Church. On Nov. 29, 1792, Mr. Crosby married Susanna Johnson and they had three sons: Talcott, born June 23, 1794, died Nov. 16, 1795; Talcott, born Aug. 24, 1796, died Dec. 8, 1870; and Stephen, born April 27, 1802, died Nov. 29, 1884.

(VII) Stephen Crosby, son of Stephen, born April 27, 1802, in Masonville, passed his boyhood at Grosvenor Dale, and was twenty-four or twenty-five years of age when he moved to Thompson. He had no advantages but those afforded by the district schools of his time. He taught school in New Boston, and one or two terms elsewhere. He was a man well informed on all current events. When he moved to Thompson Hill he engaged in farming with his father, and there remained until the spring of 1844, when he purchased the Alpheus Russel farm on which he lived for ten years. He then came back to the hill and for three or four years was not engaged in any business. In 1858 he bought the old "Styles Tavern," which is one of the most interesting buildings in Thompson. In August, 1859, Mr. Crosby opened this hotel, having in the meantime bought the mail route of Mortimer Cook, and continued at these two occupations until his death, which occurred Nov. 29, 1884. The mail route was to West Thompson depot, the New England Railroad not being built. Mr. Crosby was a successful man in business. Politically he was a Democrat, and as such was elected to a number of town offices which he filled with rare fidelity. He was a justice of the peace and selectman in the year that Putnam was set off—in 1855 or 1856—and also assessor. The settlement of estates was often intrusted to him, and he settled many.

Stephen Crosby married, in 1829, Susan Mason Larned, daughter of George Larned, whose wife's maiden name was Brown. She died April 18, 1849, the mother of three children as follows: Anna D. B., who died March 13, 1889, married Jonathan Nichols. John, died when five years of age. George Stephen is mentioned below.

(VIII) George Stephen Crosby was born Feb. 17, 1844, in what is now the Lewis house, located in Thompson village. He acquired most of his education in the public schools of Thompson, attending part of the time in Quaddick and then for four years in Thompson Village, and in the private school of Mr. Rawson, Henry Parker being the principal. He attended school regularly until he was fifteen years old, and then after his father went into the hotel business he went only two winters. He was an apt pupil and gained a good education for his time. From 1859 to 1865 Mr. Crosby worked for his father, receiving only his board and clothes. After he was twenty-one his father took him into the business and the partnership continued until the father's death in 1884. This partnership was an equal one, George S. having a half ownership. During the time of the partnership he and his father built up a large summer boarding business, in which they were very successful. In April, 1886, Mr. Crosby sold the hotel to Mr. Chapin. In 1884 he purchased one half of the Talcott Crosby farm from the estate of Jerome Crosby and erected upon it the present buildings. On Jan. 27, 1894, he bought the last half, from the estate of Joseph Crosby, a brother of Jerome and son of Talcott. The farm consists of fifty acres, and Mr. Crosby has another tract of twelve acres.

Judge Crosby has been a Democrat, but not a Bryan man, and he is not zealously partisan. In 1902 he was elected judge of probate of the town of Thompson, receiving a nice majority in a Republican town. In this instance it was literally a case of the office seeking the man. In a town like Thompson the office is a responsible one because of the large estates to be settled. Judge Crosby was assessor for one year, and has always taken quite an active interest in public affairs. Judge Crosby was a director in the Thompson National Bank for a number of years, and he was an incorporator of the Thompson Dime Savings Bank.

On Oct. 29, 1879, George Stephen Crosby married Mary Bailey Jacobs, daughter of Joseph D. and Sarah (Carroll) Jacobs, of Thompson. This union was blessed with two children, viz.: Sarah Carroll, born Feb. 16, 1882; and Mary Larned, born Nov. 8, 1884, who died April 7, 1885. Sarah Carroll graduated from the Boston high school and the Boston Normal School of Gymnastics, and is now engaged as a teacher of physical culture in the public schools of Northampton, Mass. Judge Crosby is a member of the Congregational Church of Thompson and for many years has been quite active in church work. He was made a deacon in the church in 1892.

HON. WHITING HAYDEN (deceased) filled a very prominent place in the industrial activities of Willimantic, and in his life time contributed very largely to its growth. Few of its people have been more successful in their operations.

Mr. Hayden was born in Wrentham, Mass., June 21, 1808, a son of Ephraim and Dorcas (Whiting) Hayden. The mother died April 23, 1834. Ephraim Hayden was a farmer, and in 1825 moved his family to Smithfield, R. I., where he was employed on the Blackstone Canal construction. At this time the Albion Company was erecting its first cotton mill, and there young Whiting Hayden was employed in setting up and operating the machinery. Here began that career in cotton manufacturing which presently came to such brilliant results. His progress was steady and rapid, and in 1834 he formed a partnership with George Morse, to manufacture cotton cloth in the village of Albion, R. I. Three years later the mill was destroyed by fire, and Mr. Hayden formed a colony which he accompanied to Logan county, Ill., where he built the first grist and sawmill in the county. The country was wild and new, and the colonists were so seriously affected by the prevailing disorders, particularly by fever and ague, that Mr. Hayden became discouraged and returned East, leaving however, the foundations of what afterward became the prosperous city of Lincoln, Ill. In the autumn of 1838 Mr. Hayden was engaged as superintendent of the mill at East Greenwich, R. I., where he remained until the mill was destroyed by fire. On Jan. 1, 1843, Mr. Hayden came to Willimantic to enter the employ of A. D. & J. Y. Smith, and the management of the mill which stood on the present site of the Linen Company's No. 1 machine shop, and remembered by many as the Jillson Duck Mill.

For some three years Mr. Hayden worked for the Smith Brothers, and then entered into a partnership with them to form the Smithville Manufacturing Co. Mills were erected on property purchased from Thomas J. Hill, of Providence, R. I., in 1846, and for some thirty years a very successful business was transacted. Additions to the works were made from time to time until the plant became the largest in the State. In 1857 the manufacture of fine goods was begun, and its profits were so satisfactory that it became a specialty with the company. Mr. Hayden retired from active business cares, and six years later sold his interests in the mill to the other stockholders, reserving some of the unimproved land, which, with his other real estate, he conveyed to his son in May, 1886.

James E. Hayden

Whitney Hayden

Mr. Hayden was an active and public-spirited citizen, taking a part in local affairs highly creditable to his ability and responsibility as a citizen. For nearly forty years he was an officer in the Willimantic Savings Bank, and filled many positions of trust and responsibility in town and borough. He represented the Willimantic District in the State Senate, where he served on the Cemetery committee. All the positions to which he was called were filled by him with a strict fidelity to the trust imposed in him. A man of good judgment, positive convictions, persistent and of great industry, he amassed a large fortune, and was known as the wealthiest man in town.

In 1885 Mr. Hayden purchased the land on which he erected the beautiful homestead occupied by himself and family, and more recently by his son James E., and still later by the family of that gentleman, hardly less distinguished in business and commercial circles than his father. The most enduring monument to the memory of Mr. Hayden, aside from the great Smithville cotton plant, is the Hayden Block on Main Street, which was erected by him in 1879. Its ground floor is devoted to commercial purposes, while in the upper part are town offices, as well as one of the finest Superior Court rooms in the State. In politics Mr. Hayden was a Republican, and in religion a broad and progressive man, holding liberal views. In his social life he was frank and outspoken, despising deceit, trickery and every kind of dishonesty.

Mr. Hayden was married in 1829, to Miss Hannah Carpenter, of Attleboro, Mass., and to this union was born a son, James E., whose personal history immediately follows. The wife, a constant and beloved companion, passed away April 5, 1889, at the age of eighty-four years. For some years prior to his death, which occurred June 20, 1886, Mr. Hayden's health had gradually failed, and when the end came, it closed a life that had been singularly pure and useful.

Mrs. Hannah (Carpenter) Hayden, whose beautiful and unselfish life deserves commemoration, was born Dec. 26, 1805, at Attleboro, Mass., a daughter of John and Nancy (Bishop) Carpenter, and a descendant in the seventh generation from William Carpenter, the emigrant ancestor of the family in this country.

William Carpenter was born in England in 1605 and there married his wife, Abigail. In 1638, he came to New England in the ship "Bevis," settling in Weymouth, Mass., where he followed farming, and became prominent in local affairs. In 1641, and again in 1643, he was a deputy to the General Court from Weymouth; and in 1645 served in the same capacity from Rehoboth, to which town he had been admitted as a freeman that year. His death occurred in 1659, and his wife Abigail died in 1687.

William Carpenter (2), son of the emigrant, was born in England about 1631, and his second marriage, by which Miriam Searles became his wife, occurred in 1663. Mr. Carpenter was a man of ability, serving for many years as town clerk of Rehoboth, representative to the General Court, deacon of the Church, and in other capacities. His death occurred in Rehoboth in 1703, where his widow died in 1722.

Noah Carpenter, son of William (2), was born in 1672, in Rehoboth, where he married Sarah Johnson in 1700. She was born in 1677, a daughter of Matthew Johnson, and a granddaughter of Edward Johnson, who came to New England with the fleet of Winthrop in 1630. Mr. Carpenter contracted a second marriage with Mrs. Ruth (Follett) Talbott, in 1727. This Mrs. Carpenter was the widow of Abraham Talbott, and died in 1753. Mr. Carpenter married for his third wife, Tabitha Bishop, of Attleboro, Mass. He died in 1756, having outlived his third wife, who died the year of her marriage.

Stephen Carpenter, son of Noah, was born in Attleboro in 1706, and in 1734 was married to Dorothy Whittaker, who died in 1761. He was a carpenter and shoemaker.

Asa Carpenter, son of Stephen, was born in 1736. In 1760 he married Abigail, daughter of John Follett. They resided in Cumberland, R. I., where he engaged in farming. His death occurred in 1810.

John Carpenter, son of Asa, was born in Cumberland, R. I., in 1774, and was married in 1805, to Nancy Bishop, born in 1780. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer, and died in Attleboro, May 18, 1851, his widow surviving until Oct. 20, 1863. Their oldest daughter, Hannah, is noted above as the wife of Whiting Hayden.

JAMES EDWARD HAYDEN (deceased), in his life time numbered among the most prominent and extensive manufacturers of Willimantic, was born at Albion, R. I., Aug. 11, 1830, the only child of Whiting and Hannah (Carpenter) Hayden, and he came of a family long identified with the trade and commerce of that busy center of business activities.

Mr. Hayden received a common school education which was supplemented by a course in civil engineering. He then began a career that was in the highest degree honorable and creditable to his character and ability, as an engineer in the construction of the New London & Willimantic Railroad. Early in life he learned the cotton manufacturing business under the instruction of his father, and removed with him to Willimantic in 1843, where he subsequently became the superintendent of the Smithville Manufacturing Co., which is now the Willimantic Cotton Mills Corporation, a business in which his father was very largely interested. This position was given up by Mr. Hayden in 1876, when he and his father retired from the active management of the company, disposing of their interest to the other stockholders, and devoting their time and attention to the extensive property which they had developed outside this institution. At the death of the father in 1886, the entire estate passed into the hands of our subject.

James E. Hayden developed remarkable gifts in executive and administrative lines in business, and when the Natchaug Silk Manufacturing Co. went into bankruptcy he was selected as receiver by the court. His record in this connection was in every way satisfactory, the affairs of the concern being wound up in a manner that attested Mr. Hayden's knowledge of business and manufacturing, as far beyond the ordinary. He was largely interested in the produce firm of J. H. Preston & Co., of Providence, R. I., a noted wholesale house of that city, and he was a heavy owner in the Manatee Lemon Co., whose plantations are near Tampa, Fla. Mr. Hayden was also a director in the Windham National Bank, and a trustee of the Willimantic Savings Institute.

Socially Mr. Hayden was frank and genial, and despite his years felt and acted like a young man. In politics, with the exception of the Greeley campaign, he was always a Republican, and until within a few years of his death had always been active in his party's interests. In religion he was in his early years a Universalist, but some twenty years prior to his death became a Spiritualist, and remained a firm supporter of that faith to the last. It was while he was in Providence, looking after his investments in that city, that the heart trouble from which he died March 12, 1898, became pronounced.

Mr. Hayden was twice married, his first wife, formerly Marietta Young, dying in 1857. In 1859 he married Miss Sarah Martin, youngest daughter of the late Erastus Martin, of Chaplin. She is a woman of strict integrity and great activity. She is a Daughter of the American Revolution, and has held several prominent positions in Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, of which she is a member, also on the town school and public library boards. By her marriage with Mr. Hayden, she became the mother of two children: Mary Maria, born July 12, 1860, married Walter L. Preston, of Providence, and has three children: Marion Hayden, Whiting Hayden and James Hayden; and Willard Whiting, born Feb. 21, 1862, is now a resident of Willimantic.

The Hayden family, of which the subject of this article was an honored representative, has long been counted among the most honorable and progressive in this section of the State. For more than half a century it has been known in the manufacturing circles of Connecticut.

WILLARD B. CLARKE, one of the prosperous farmers of Columbia, Tolland county, and a well-known and highly respected citizen of that town, was born May 15, 1834, in Columbia, on Clarke Hill.

Grandfather Joseph Clarke was a resident and probably a native of Charlestown, R. I., where he died, having been a farmer and fisherman. The maiden name of his wife was Nichols, and to these two were born: Joseph, father of Willard B. Clarke; Mumford, lived at Carolina Mills, R. I.; Mary married a Mr. Whitford of Providence, R. I.; William went to California; Nancy married a Mr. Whitford; Maxon, who lived in Willimantic; Matilda married Samuel Stanton, of Stonington.

The father, Joseph Clarke, was born in Charlestown, R. I., and died July 2, 1881, aged eighty-four. When a young man he came to Connecticut, locating in Lebanon, and later in Columbia. There he resided sixty years or more, engaged in farming and lumbering, owning at one time two saw-mills, one in Columbia and one in Lebanon. His death occurred in Columbia. His marriage took place in Rhode Island to Margaret Crandall, whose grandfather was a cousin of Benjamin Franklin, and who died in December, 1880, aged eighty-eight. The father was very successful in his undertakings and in addition to his other callings, was a teacher and fine tenor singer and led the choir of the Congregational Church for many years. When over seventy years of age he sang in public the affecting ballad, "The Dying Christian." In early years he was a Democrat, but later became a Republican and represented the town on the Republican ticket in the Legislature. Both he and his excellent wife were members of the Congregational Church. To Joseph and Margaret Crandall Clarke were born: Lyman C., deceased, who was united in marriage with Cynthia Yeomans; Mary died young; Alfred, died in Decatur, Ga., when but twenty-four; Henry C.; Mary (2), deceased, married Justin Holbrook; George L. died at the age of thirteen; Charles Franklin, died aged fifty-seven, a resident of Iowa City, Iowa; James M., of Liberty Hill, Lebanon, Conn.; Willard Benjamin.

Willard B. Clarke attended the district school of his vicinity, and remained upon the home farm engaged in farming and lumbering, operating one of the sawmills of his father. For twelve years after his marriage Mr. Clarke remained upon his father's farm, but in April, 1871, he purchased a farm near the Centre. There he engaged in active farm work until 1893, when on account of failing health he spent a winter in Florida leaving his farm in charge of his son Joseph. On his return he rented a small place at the Centre. The well cultivated acres of his farm demonstrate Mr. Clarke's ability as a farmer and his abundant crops well repay him for his labor. On Jan. 1, 1858, Mr. Clarke was married to Lucy Ford, a daughter of Lester Ford and Lucy (Burnham) Ford, the latter being a daughter of Dr. Henry Burnham.

Grandfather Ford, a native of Mansfield, resided in Lebanon, Conn., where he was a carpenter.

Lester Ford, father of Mrs. Clarke, was twice married, first to Eliza Burnham, by whom he had: Gordon L., the father of Paul Leicester Ford, the author; Henry, who died young; Marcia, deceased; Eliza, deceased. His second marriage was to Lucy Burnham, who lives with her daughter in Lebanon, and to this union were born: William C., of Norwich, Conn.; Lucy, wife of Mr. Clarke, born Jan. 26, 1838; Gertrude M., of Columbia, widow of John Hutchins, who has five children; Abbie, married to Edward Hinckley, of Norwich and has three children; Henry B., conductor on the Air Line Railroad, resides in Willimantic, Conn.; Ella G., deceased wife of Daniel T. Fuller, a merchant of Lebanon (see sketch of George B. Fuller of Columbia).

To Mr. and Mrs. Clarke were born: Charles Franklin; Eliza Ford; Edith Lester; Joseph Nichols; Emily Marcia; Mary Belle; and Willard Burnham. The Rev. Charles F. Clarke was born Feb. 6, 1859, and at the age of sixteen began teaching school, and graduated from the Willimantic high school. Later he entered Yale, from which he graduated in 1886; attended the Yale divinity school for the three following years; then had temporary charge of the Congregational Church at Prescott, Wis., for a short time. At Machias, Maine, he was ordained and installed pastor, and for the past eight years has been pastor of the Congregational Church at Whitneyville, Conn. He married Sarah Andrew of Willimantic (see sketch of A. C. Andrew of Willimantic), by whom he has had three children: Charles F., deceased; Helen May and Rachel Margaret. The second child of Mr. and Mrs. Willard Clarke, Eliza F., was born June 27, 1860, died Jan. 4, 1895, was the wife of Prescott P. Little and had three children: Herman C., Joseph P., and Edith L. Edith Lester was born June 28, 1862, and married Wilton E. Little by whom she had four children: Lenore M.; Lester C., deceased; Walter E. and Donald C. Joseph Nichols, born Dec. 10, 1865, now of Columbia, married Lillian Townsend and has one son, Raymond Ellsworth. Emily Marcia, born Aug. 26, 1871, married Wm. N. Randall of Rocky Ford, Col., and has two children,—Harold C. and Marion E. Mary Belle, born May 11, 1873, married George Burton, resides at Whitneyville, Conn., and has three children,—Dorothy May, Gordon Lester and Lucy C. Willard B., born Sept. 8, 1875, is in the grocery business in East Haven, Conn., and married Edith Latham of Manchester, Connecticut.

Throughout his political life Mr. Clarke has been a Republican; he cast his first vote for John C. Fremont, and has always taken an active part in civic affairs. In addition to holding almost all of the minor town offices, Mr. Clarke has been selectman three years, assessor a number of times, justice of the peace four years, and is now holding that office. Both Mr. and Mrs. Clarke are members of the Congregational Church, in which they take an active part, and to which they have belonged for forty years. Mr. Clarke has served on church committees, and for fifteen years has been clerk and treasurer of the church society, while Mrs. Clarke is equally active in good works. They were also charter members of the Columbia Grange.

All of his life Mr. Clarke has been a hard worker, an upright man, a kind father and husband and a good friend, and the universal esteem in which he is held, not only in his immediate vicinity but throughout the county, testifies to his excellence of character and practical Christianity.

LOUIS JUNO, the well-known proprietor of "Highland Farm," and one of the thrifty agriculturists of Tolland county, Conn., is a man who has come up the hard road of toil to a prominence and position which entitles him to the respect of the community. Born of parents in limited circumstances he had few educational advantages, but early in life principles of honesty and integrity were taught him from which he has never departed. These, aided by an unbounded energy, have enabled him to surmount every obstacle and reach a position of influence and substantial regard.

Mr. Juno was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, near Lake Champlain, Jan. 8, 1846, a son of Stephen and Julia Juno. He was one of a family of ten children, eight of whom were boys. Five of this family survive and are thrifty citizens, four of whom live in Southbridge, Mass., where they are successful mechanics. In 1863 the parents moved to Southbridge from Canada where the father had been a farmer, and there Louis Juno remained a short time, but later left home, having been from the age of twelve self-supporting. Going to Springfield Mr. Juno obtained employment from a Mr. King in driving a team, but remained with him but a short time. He returned to Southbridge where an attack of typhoid fever incapacitated him for almost a year. When sufficiently recovered to be able to resume work, Mr. Juno was employed by a Mr. Newton of Worcester, Mass., in getting out timber for ship building. In this way Mr. Juno drifted to Connecticut as this business was carried on wherever good timber could be found.

While thus engaged Mr. Juno came to Rockville from Hebron in 1867, and engaged his services to Park Hammond, as a farm hand on the New England farm. Later he entered the employ of the Carlisle Thread Co., and was engaged in spool making at Walker's Reservoir. At this time his pleasant personality and evident industry attracted the attention of Cyrus White, who engaged him as his coachman and as overseer of many of Mr. White's interests, among which was the care of the Opera House which Mr. White owned. In the fall of 1890, Mr. Juno was given charge of what was then known as the "Cyrus White Farm" and his pleasant connection with this exceptional man ended only with the death of Mr. White in 1891, after an association of twenty-three years. In June 1891, Mr. Juno purchased "Highland Farm" and removed to it, having for the previous fourteen years occupied an excellent house which he had built on High street. This farm is very valuable and cost Mr. Juno a large sum, its location in the borough and immediately adjoining the built up portion of the city making it most desirable property. After this purchase Mr. Juno laid out Reed street and sold off a number of building lots and his present plans include Hale street, Avenue A and Avenue B, while meantime Highland Farm is considered one of the choicest outlying homes around Rockville.

In Rockville, on Nov. 25, 1868, Mr. Juno was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Sullivan, a native of County Limerick, Ireland, born Sept. 28, 1848. She came to the United States when she was ten years old, with her parents, Timothy and Mary Sullivan, who located at Portland, Conn., where the former was employed in the brownstone quarries and there the remainder of their lives was passed. Mrs. Juno was employed in the silk mill in Rockville when a young lady and was thus engaged at the time of her marriage. The family born to Louis Juno and wife was: Edward, born Aug. 30, 1869, died July 27, 1871; Mable F., born Jan. 17, 1877, now Mrs. James Breen, of Rockville; Louis A., born in 1880, in the employ of the White Corbin Co. division of the U. S. Envelope Co., of Rockville, a graduate of the Rockville high school and later of Morse's Business College of Hartford; George A., born in 1882, drowned Feb. 1, 1903; and Gertrude B., born in 1884, a graduate of the high school, class of 1902, now teaching in Belknap. The death of Mrs. Juno took place March 22, 1900, and she lies at rest in St. Bernard's cemetery at Rockville.

Louis Juno now conducts the Highland Farm dairy, in connection with his farming business, since 1894 he has been agent of the Osborne farming implements, and at one time was also engaged in the sale of fertilizers.

Since locating in Rockville, Mr. Juno has become a valued member of Court Snipsic, No. 32, of Foresters, and is also a member of the Vernon Grange and St. Bernard Temperance society. In politics he has never taken any interest. He has been anxious that his children should have every educational advantage possible and his care has been repaid by the most creditable family which has grown up around him. Progressive in his methods Mr. Juno has watched with pleasure the growth of his city which he has materially assisted. He is an example of temperance and industry and is considered one of the most desirable and esteemed of Rockville's citizens.

FREDERICK AUGUSTUS MORRELL, M. D., is one of the leading physicians, as well as prominent and influential citizens of Putnam, Windham county. He is a descendant of one of the early settlers of New England, and the name wherever found has been associated with lives of industry and integrity, while in numerous cases it has been borne by those who have become conspicuous members of the councils of State and Nation.

The Morrell (also written Morrill) family in America was founded by John Morrell, who in 1668 and again in 1669 was granted land in Kittery, Maine. He married Sarah, daughter of Nicholas Hodson, of Kittery, and in 1674 his father-in-law deeded him Birch Point, which is in South Berwick, near the bridge which spans the river at that place. Morrill's Corner, Deering, was named for Rufus and Levi Morrill, descendants of Peter of Berwick.

Stephen Morrell, the grandfather of Dr. Morrell of Putnam, was born Feb. 6, 1790, in Portland, Maine, and died Aug. 29, 1845, in Strong, Maine. On Oct. 1, 1815, he married Miss Lydia Jordan, who was born Nov. 16, 1796, in Portland, Maine, and died Jan. 19, 1859, in Strong. She was a daughter of James and Lydia (Barnes) Jordan, of Portland and a descendant of Rev. Robert Jordon, an Episcopal clergyman of an ancient family of Dorsetshire, who came to America from England in 1640. To Stephen Morrell and his wife were born nine children, the eldest, James J., being Dr. Morrell's father; Helen M., was next in the family; Nathaniel died while on his way to California, in 1849; Susan died in 1834; the others were Melissa, Stephen, Lieut. George, Susan C., and Lydia B. Morrell.

Stephen Morrell conducted a large stone quarry in the vicinity of Portland, which was a very successful business enterprise. He was known as Lieut. Stephen Morrell because of his services in the war of 1812, in which he served under Gen. Hampton, participating in the battles of Stone Mills and Plattsburg. Later he became a man of prominence in town and State, was a justice of the peace and for years an able member of the Maine Legislature.

Dr. Morrell is a descendant of Kenelm Winslow, (brother of Gov. Edward Winslow) through Elizabeth Winslow, who was born March 10, 1745, in Falmouth, Maine, and died March, 1785. She was married in October, 1761, to Stephen Morrell, son of Peter and Sarah (Peaslee) Morrell, of Berwick, Maine. Through his maternal grandfather Dr. Morrell also comes of old Pilgrim stock. David Harlow, Esq., of Strong, Maine, was born in Minot, Maine, and was a direct descendant of William Harlow of Plymouth. His mother was Patience Howland, a direct descendant of John Howland, John Tilley, Elizabeth Tilley and William Warren of the "Mayflower." Mr. Harlow took great interest in public affairs and for twenty-five years was town treasurer of Strong, Maine.

James Jordan Morrell, father of Dr. Morrell of Putnam, was born Aug. 8, 1817, in Westbrook, Maine, and died in Strong, Maine, in 1878. On Dec. 17, 1851, he married Hannah Harlow, (who still survives) born July 19, 1823, in Salem, Maine, daughter of David and Lydia (Murbock) Harlow, of Strong, Maine. A family of five children were born to them, as follows: Gertrude Fletcher, married Winslow A. Record, of Hebron, Maine, and they reside in Malden, Mass.; James Edgar, died in 1855; Frederick Augustus of Putnam, is mentioned below; Miss Lilla H. is a teacher; David Harlow, born Jan. 31, 1862, died July 14, 1880.

James Jordan Morrell was a leading citizen and held many positions of trust and responsibility. A lifelong Democrat, he served in the Maine Legislature in 1859. During his latter days feeble health limited his activities but throughout life he was a man who commanded the respect of all who knew him.

Frederick Augustus Morrell was born Oct. 26, 1857, at Strong, Franklin county, Maine, where he obtained his preparatory education in the public schools, later becoming a student in the Waterville Classical Institute, at Waterville, Maine. The young man then entered upon a special course of study with Dr. Phineas Dyer, a physician of note, in Farmington, remaining under this instructor for two years. In 1882 he entered Long Island College Hospital, at Brooklyn, N. Y., from which he graduated three years later, spending the succeeding year in surgical practice in the Brooklyn City Hospital. In December, 1886, Dr. Morrell came to Putnam, and in association with Dr. J. B. Kent opened an office for the practice of his profession, the firm name being Kent & Morrell. This pleasant connection lasted until 1893, when each physician took a private office. Dr. Morrell has been unusually successful in his work, his patrons are scattered over wide territory, making him a leading practitioner in Windham county.

Dr. Morrell is a staunch Democrat and has served the town of Putnam on the school board for several years. His interest in educational matters has been sincere and continued, and he was a valuable member of the building committee of the Israel Putnam school, dedicated in February, 1902, which was recently erected in Putnam at a cost of $40,000. In connection with political matters it may be mentioned that Dr. Morrell was one of the delegates from the State of Connecticut to the National Democratic Convention held in Chicago in 1896, but could not support its nominee. He served four years as pension examiner by appointment of President Cleveland. His religious interest is in the Episcopal Church, in which Mrs. Morrell is a devoted worker. Dr. Morrell has been prominently identified with a number of fraternal organizations, holding membership with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam, of which he is past master; with Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M., of Putnam; Columbia Council;

the Knights Templar, at Norwich, Conn.; Sphinx Temple, of the Mystic Shrine, Hartford; Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, of Putnam; Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of Putnam; and he is a charter member of Putnam Lodge, No. 574, B. P. O. E., of Putnam. His relations with the medical profession are of the most cordial character, he has served both as secretary and as president of the Windham County Medical Society, and has been a member for several years of the visiting staff of physicians attached to the Day-Kimball Hospital of Putnam. Dr. Morrell is a zealous and useful member also of the State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a man who bends every energy to the perfection of his work and keeps thoroughly posted on the latest discoveries in medicine and surgery.

On Sept. 2, 1886, Dr. Morrell was married, at St. Mary's Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., to Miss Edith Isabel Body, born in Ashburnham, Sussex, England, in 1864, daughter of George Augustus and Isabella (Smith) Body, both of whom were born in Sussex, England, the former in Northiam, and the latter in Robertsbridge. Mrs. Morrell was educated at Beckley, Sussex, and Lewisham College. To Dr. and Mrs. Morrell have come one son and one daughter, namely: Frederick A., born June 3, 1887, in Putnam, a student in the high school; Edith Isabel, born March 6, 1890.

In 1896 Dr. Morrell erected a very attractive modern home on South Main street, where his hosts of friends are always hospitably welcomed. His affable manner and pleasing personality, combined with his medical and surgical skill, have done much to make him a popular man, while his public spirit and adherence to principles which he believes right and important contribute to his reputation as a representative citizen.

DANIEL NEWTON MEDBURY. Savage, in his Genealogical Dictionary, refers to only one early settler in New England of the name of Medbury, and that one, John, of Swansea. "Book A, Records of the Town of Swansea 1662 to 1705" (published 1900,) sets forth that Hannah, daughter of John Medbury, was born Sept. 9, 1680, and that John, son of John Medbury was born Nov. 13, 1680. It also sets forth that the following named five children of John and Sarah Medbury were born between 1685 and 1691 inclusive: Mary, Ebenezer (died May 12, 1689), Thomas, Sarah, and Nathaniel. And further that John Medbury died April 27, 1694.

In the Vital Record of Rhode Island by Arnold, the earliest family which we have found of the name of Medbury of this State is the one of record in Warwick, where were married, March 27, 1718, Nathaniel Medbury and Dorothy Brown, both of Barrington. The names of their children were: Mary, Nathaniel, Isaac, Benjamin, Benjamin (again), Ann, and Sarah.

The ancestors of Daniel Newton Medbury of this sketch were from Rhode Island, among them his grandfather, Daniel Medbury, a tanner, who was born in that State, March 5, 1781. In 1802, upon attaining his majority, he came to Pomfret and purchased a fifty acre tract—part of what is now the Daniel Newton Medbury farm—where he carried on general agriculture. Here he made many improvements, among them the remodeling of the house; and he erected a tannery within a few rods of the dwelling which he operated for many years. No trace of this building is to be seen at present, since it was torn down about twenty-five years ago. In connection with the tannery Mr. Medbury opened a shoe and saddlery establishment which furnished employment for several men, and which he conducted the rest of his life. Mr. Medbury was a man of means and of considerable prominence in Pomfret. As an earnest member of the Baptist Church he was also highly respected. His death occurred Dec. 16, 1853, and he is buried in the Grove Street Cemetery at Putnam.

Mr. Medbury was married twice: first, to Sally Brown, who was born Oct. 3, 1782; and, after her death, to Candice Irons, in May, 1816. Mrs. Candice (Irons) Medbury was born in Rhode Island, July 20, 1782. As a woman she possessed a remarkable constitution, retaining her youthfulness till late in life. She died at the home of her grandson, Daniel Newton, at the advanced age of ninety-seven. By the first marriage there were six children, born as follows: Susan, Dec. 8, 1803; died young. Phebe Ann, Nov. 3, 1806; married Augustus Steere; died in Rhode Island. Arnold, July 8, 1808: a tanner, married Louisa Young and resided at different places, dying at New London, Conn. Elizabeth, June 3, 1810; Aug. 16, 1830, she married Hezekiah Congdon, a wheelwright, and they resided in Pomfret; she died May 3, 1837. Andrew, born April 17, 1812, married Mary H. Congdon. He was a tanner in early life and later ran a sawmill in Wilmington, Vermont, where he died. Sarah, Dec. 13, 1813. In March, 1836, she married William Sabin, a farmer; he died in Pomfret. By his second marriage Mr. Medbury had three children: Huldah, born May 17, 1817, married, Feb. 18, 1839, Lester Underwood, a carpenter, and they resided for several years in Putnam, and later in Peoria, Ill., where he died. Daniel is mentioned below. Mary, born Nov. 20, 1821, married, Nov. 10, 1842, Calvin N. Hicks, a farmer; they died in Pomfret.

Daniel Medbury, born on the home farm in Pomfret, July 2, 1819, was like his father a tanner and farmer. In the district school of his neighborhood he obtained his education, and in his father's tannery thorough training for one important business in life. In this establishment, upon leaving school, he became assistant manager, and continued as such till about the age of thirty-four. Then upon the death of his father the tannery with the home farm came into his possession, and he took full charge of the business. For many years it was highly remunerative; but, later, the improved apparatus introduced into similar modern establishments, and the consequently new methods of tanning hides lessened his chances of successful competition; and in the early sixties he discontinued this business.

On April 15, 1840, Mr. Medbury married Sarah L. Sawyer, who was born in Pomfret, Dec. 24, 1820, daughter of James and Huldah (Holmes) Sawyer. Mrs. Medbury died Jan. 5, 1899, at the home of her son Daniel N. She was the mother of twelve children: (1) Harriet E., born Jan. 20, 1841, married, July 4, 1857, Lebbeus A. Kinney, deceased, a grain dealer in Chebanse, Ill., where she still lives. (2) and (3) Twins, born March 10, 1842, lived but a few hours. (4) Amelia S., born Jan. 19, 1845, married, in Jan., 1867, Albert Hicks (deceased), a carpenter. For many years he conducted a restaurant in Providence, R. I., where his widow still resides. (5) George C., born Jan. 25, 1847, married, Nov. 23, 1869, Emma E. Grant; he was a real estate dealer in Kansas City, Mo., dying there March 6, 1900. (6) Edgar E., born Jan. 16, 1850, married Estella Reading, in February, 1879, and was a stationary engineer in Chicago, Ill. He died April 21, 1893. (7) Serena H., born July 11, 1852, married, Oct. 6, 1875, George W. Burns, a druggist, in Morrison, Ill., where they still reside. (8) Lucian H., born April 4, 1853, never married. He was a slate roofer, and was killed Nov. 32, 1867, by falling from a roof in Worcester, Mass. (9) Susan, born July 24, 1854, married, Aug. 23, 1882, L. Frank Eaton, a photo-engraver, in Detroit, Mich. (10) Alice S., born April 17, 1857, married William Tufts, general agent for the Wabash Railroad, at Moberly, Mo. (11) Ada E., born June 16, 1859, married, March 30, 1881, Frank Miller, a farmer, at Plainfield, Conn. (12) Daniel Newton is mentioned below.

After closing his tannery Mr. Medbury increased his farm by an additional purchase of a 100-acre tract, and afterward confined his business exclusively to agriculture. Though ill health rendered him unable to do any manual work for the last thirty years of his life, he managed his farm with success. He died March 28, 1876. Mr. Medbury was a highly respected citizen. In political sentiment he was an unwavering Republican and filled several town offices with marked ability. Reared in the Baptist faith he attended that church in Putnam. Sound judgment and a steady aim ever characterized his business management.

Daniel Newton Medbury, who succeeded to his father's farm in Pomfret, has the rare faculty of keeping several lines of business going at once without slighting any one of them. Born on the homestead, May 25, 1861, he received his education in the district school of his neighborhood and in the Putnam high school. The ill health of the elder Mr. Medbury forced Daniel, Jr., at a very early age into the school of farm labor. Upon the death of the father, which occurred when the son was only fifteen years old, a heavy weight fell to the youthful shoulders—the management of the homestead and the care of the widowed mother. These responsibilities he bore for over twenty years, when his mother died, leaving him in full possession of the farm. On April 9, 1884, Mr. Medbury married Caroline Perrin Randall, who was born in Putnam, May 11, 1864, daughter of Sanford and Caroline E. (Holmes) Randall. Mr. and Mrs. Medbury have four children, born as follows: S. Elizabeth, March 19, 1885; she graduated from the Putnam high school; Gertrude R., Sept. 21, 1888; Daniel S., March 20, 1890; and Raymond S., April 9, 1893.

In 1887, while still working the home farm Mr. Medbury started the ice business in Pomfret, where he fortunately had no competitors and has carried on a profitable industry. Another business in which he is at present actively engaged is the selling of fertilizers and the Walter A. Wood farm machinery. Under his management the old Medbury homestead is kept thoroughly intact, and he still carries on general farming and dairying there with marked success.

Mr. Medbury's conscientious application to business has won him the unqualified esteem of his townsmen. He and his wife are members in good standing of General Putnam Commandery No. 348, United Order of Golden Cross. In politics a Republican, Mr. Medbury has served his town two years (1892-1893 inclusive) on the board of selectmen. So much efficiency did he display during the first year that for the second he was elected chairman of the board. Declining the responsibility, however, he acted as second member. Mr. Medbury's business interests have won for him a large circle of acquaintances among whom he has many warm friends.

CHASE. A prominent representative of one of the old and distinguished families of New England is O'Meara G. Chase, who for many years was the leading merchant and the popular postmaster of Mechanicsville, Windham Co., Conn. On both paternal and maternal sides Mr. Chase has an ancestry which has for generations reflected credit not only upon New England, but in some cases upon the whole nation. It numbers among its members those who have become noted in military, educational, religious and political life.

The name of Chase is first made note of when three brothers came from Cornwall, England, about 1639, to what is now Hampton, N. H., and were among the town's first settlers. Aquila John Chase, whose posterity reside in Windham county, Conn., married Anne Wheeler, daughter of John Wheeler, who came from Salisbury, England. About 1646

Mr. Chase removed to Newbury, where he received several grants of land, and died Dec. 27, 1670. His sons were: Thomas, Aquila, John, Daniel and Moses.

Joseph Chase, a son of Aquila (2), about 1726 settled in Littleton, Mass., and the latter's son Stephen, a graduate of Harvard College, became a theologian of note, distinguished for his scholastic attainments.

Moses Chase, the youngest son of the emigrant settler, born Dec. 26, 1663, married Nov. 10, 1684, Anne or Anna, daughter of Thomas Follansby, and settled in what is now West Newbury, where he died Sept. 6, 1743. Their children were: Moses and Daniel, twins, Moses (2), Samuel, Elizabeth, Stephen, Hannah, Joseph and Benoni, all born between 1685 and 1708.

Daniel Chase, son of Moses, born in 1685, in 1725, removed to Littleton (once a part of Groton), and soon after to Sutton, Mass., and he was the progenitor of the branch of the Chase family there.

Samuel Chase, son of Daniel and Sarah Chase, married Mary Dudley, and with his family removed to Cornish, N. H., being one of the founders of that town.

Dudley Chase, son of Samuel, married Alice Corbet, and reared a family of distinguished sons, among them being: Salmon, who became an eminent lawyer of Portland; Ithamar, a prominent citizen of Vermont in his own right, who was the father of the distinguished Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio, United States senator, governor, Secretary of the Treasury and Chief Justice of the United States; and Philander, bishop in the Protestant Episcopal Church of Ohio and Illinois, and president of Kenyon College, Ohio.

The name of Seth Chase appears among the settlers who came into the town of Pomfret, Conn., during or about the close of the Revolution; and in the beginning of the century following David Chase of Killingly, a justice of the peace, was becoming prominent in military affairs. This David was the grandfather of O'Meara G. Chase, of Mechanicsville, Conn., and David Chase, of Dayville.

A similarity in these Christian names with those of the Sutton Chases and other evidences indicate that town as the source of the foregoing Windham county family.

Judge David Chase, born in 1779, was long a distinguished citizen of Killingly, and was chosen its first probate judge. He owned and occupied a farm in East Killingly, situated one mile west of Chestnut Hill, and was the first probate judge in the town of Killingly. He died in 1866, after a long life of distinguished service rendered to his native town. It was largely through his efforts that the town of Killingly was set off as a separate probate district, and as a recognition of his public-spirited efforts Mr. Chase was chosen the first probate judge, serving two years as such, and also serving two years as county judge. He was also a surveyor.

Judge Chase married Amy, daughter of Whitney Graves, and their children were: (1) Alva married a Miss Burgess. He was a surveyor, and lived and died in Killingly. His son Riley resides in East Killingly. (2) Roxana married Uriah Coman, lived in Painesville, Lake Co., Ohio, and had two children, Lowell and Alma. (3) Giles became the father of O'Meara G. and David Chase, of Killingly. (4) Esther married William Mason, of Providence, R. I., where his sons still live. (5) Almira married William Gleason and lived in Killingly. (6) Chloe married Turner Miller, and lived in Olneyville, R. I. Their children were Giles, Preston, Patience and David. (7) Lewis lives on Chestnut Hill in East Killingly. (8) Dudley living in Taunton, Mass., married Lucy Hopkins, and their children are—Imogene, Marcus B. (of Ohio), Walter, Noyes D. and Eliza.

Giles Chase, the father of O'Meara G. and David Chase, was born in Killingly, Conn., Aug. 23, 1810. His education was the best afforded by the home schools, and he learned surveying and engineering under his father's instruction. After acquiring a thorough knowledge of these arts Mr. Chase used the instruments belonging to his father, and these are still preserved in the family among their prized possessions. Giles Chase was a man of great natural ability and the possessor of many gifts. Early in his young manhood he became a teacher, following this profession during the winter seasons and occupying himself with surveying in the summers, teaching thirty successive winters in Hopkins Mills, R. I., Windham county, Conn., and also in Lackawanna county, Pa. As a surveyor he did much in the way of laying out plats, for manufacturing plants, making surveys for roads, etc., and later he devoted his entire attention to civil engineering until he located on the farm situated northeast of the one belonging to his father.

In 1868 Mr. Chase removed to Mechanicsville, Conn., where he lived until he returned to his native town, in 1888, where he lived until his death, Oct. 28, 1902. On May 1, 1842, Giles Chase married Orpha D. Spalding, who was born Sept. 16, 1822, and who died March 24, 1898. This marriage united two historic and honorable families.

Edward Spalding came to New England probably between 1630 and 1633, first appearing on record at Braintree, Mass., where Margaret, his wife, died in 1640. He and two of his sons, Edward and John, were among the original proprietors of Chelmsford, and removed thither at or immediately after the first settlement of that town in 1653. For several years he was selectman, and in other ways was an important man of the town. Edward Spalding died Feb. 26, 1670, and his wife Rachel died soon after him.

John Spalding, son of Edward the settler, born about 1633, married at Concord, May 18, 1658, Hannah Hale. He went to Chelmsford with his father, and died there Oct. 3, 1721.

Edward Spalding, son of John, born Sept. 16, 1663, married (first) Nov. 27, 1683, Mary, daughter of John Brockett, of Billerica, who died Dec. 8, 1704, and he married (second) Oct. 23, 1705, Dorothy Barker, of Concord. Mr. Spalding removed to Plainfield, Conn., about 1697.

Jacob Spalding, son of Edward (2), born May 14, 1696, in 1715 removed with the first settlers to the South Parish, Killingly, Conn. His death occurred Sept. 24, 1728. His wife's name was Hannah.

Simeon Spalding, son of Jacob, born about 1719, married June 23, 1744, Hannah Paine, of Pomfret, Conn., and resided in Killingly, where all their children were born. He died Sept. 15, 1801, and his wife Sept. 8, 1771.

Jacob Spalding (2), son of Simeon, born Nov. 1, 1745, in Killingly, married April 11, 1775, Lydia Low. He died June 29, 1828. She passed away Feb. 9, 1817. They resided in Killingly, and their children were all born between 1776 and 1801: John Wilson, Simeon, Paine, Lydia, Jacob, Seth, Amy, Joshua, Hannah and Laura.

Joshua Spalding, son of Jacob (2), born Dec. 4, 1793, married about 1817, Achsah Mowry, and resided in Killingly, Conn. Mr. Spalding died there Dec. 1, 1839. His children were as follows: Laura, born Sept. 23, 1818; Orpha Danforth, Sept. 16, 1822; Celah, March 27, 1825; Jacob Leonidas, Sept. 8, 1827; Harriet, April 12, 1830; and Marie Antoinette, Aug. 24, 1832.

In early life Giles Chase was identified with the old Whig party, but at the birth of the Republican party heartily adopted its principles. To him and his wife were born six children, namely: O'Meara G., born Jan. 11, 1844, is mentioned below; Canova M., born May 14, 1846, a farmer in Killingly married Anna M. Alton, of Dudley, Mass., and has one daughter, Laura, born Oct. 25, 1893; David is mentioned later; Charles D., born April 29, 1852, is a woolen manufacturer of Killingly, in 1871 married Eliza J. Doty, and had these children born to him—Warren D., Marion E., Herbert G., Alice B., and Charles E. and Harry S., deceased; Cassius S., born April 23, 1854, is a manufacturer in Danielson and resides at Elmville, Conn. (he married Cora M. Alton, of Dudley, Mass., in 1885, and their children are—Harold Alton, Gladebis C., Clayton C., and Carleton); Emma F., born Nov. 14, 1860, lives at Roxbury, Massachusetts.

O'MEARA G. CHASE was born Jan. 11, 1844, in Killingly, Conn., where he resided until the summer of 1862, when he entered the service of the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railway Co. On Jan. 1, 1866, he was made an engineer, running an engine between Hartford and Providence. In the fall of 1871 he entered the employ of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Co., running the fast express between the cities of New York and Springfield. On Feb. 1, 1886, Mr. Chase left the railroad and came to Mechanicsville, where he associated himself with his brother David Chase in the grocery business. On March 1, 1890, he bought his brother's interest and for a long period carried the business on individually. On June 20, 1898, his stock of goods was destroyed by fire, but he soon resumed business and continued a leader in the grocery line until April, 1902, when he disposed of the business to Michael J. Kenney, who still operates it.

Mr. Chase like all his family is an unusually well-informed man. His early education was acquired in the common schools of Killingly, and this was supplemented by an academic course at Danielson and in a select school conducted by Clinton L. Young. In politics Mr. Chase has been a straightforward advocate of Republican principles, and was selected to be the standard-bearer in the General Assembly in 1899-1900, representing the town of Thompson. He served efficiently on the committees on Constitutional Amendments, House and Public Health and Safety, and gained the respect and esteem of his colleagues at the capitol, while he retained the confidence of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Chase has filled a number of local offices, for a considerable period being the town assessor. Since 1868 he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, of Danielson, Conn., and Adoniram Chapter.

On Aug. 10, 1865, Mr. Chase was united in marriage with Evelyn M., daughter of Rufus and Rosanna (Usher) Fitch, of Rockville, Conn., who died April 17, 1900, and was buried in West Thompson cemetery. She was a consistent member of the Second Congregational Church of Putnam, Conn. Two children were born to this union, Rosa E. and Henri O'Meara, both of whom died young.

Mr. Chase is a man of upright life and character, public-spirited and liberal, and worthily represents the honorable ancestry from which he came.

DAVID CHASE, a retired merchant and resident of Dayville, was born April 3, 1848, in East Killingly, Conn., and enjoyed the educational advantages afforded by the excellent home schools. After teaching for one term in the Valley School he accompanied his parents to Mechanicsville, Conn., where for a period of two years he was employed in a woolen mill. For several succeeding years he held a clerical position in the store of A. M. Paine, at Mechanicsville, leaving there to embark in the mercantile business for himself. He purchased the stock of what was known as the Bugbee store at West Thompson Station and operated it for three years during which time he served both as station agent and as postmaster. Mr. Chase's next business venture was in the line of expansion. In company with Clovis S. Sayles he bought out a large general store at Mechanicsville, where he continued from 1874 to 1890, Mr. Sayles retiring from the business some six years after the beginning of the partnership. Mr. Chase remained alone for a year and then took in as partner his brother Cassius, this association continuing until 1886 when another brother, O'Meara G., purchased the interest of Cassius. In 1890 David Chase retired from business and removed to Dayville, O'Meara G. Chase being the sole proprietor of the large establishment which the energies of its founder had made so important in the commercial life of Mechanicsville and vicinity.

During his years of activity Mr. Chase was a leading factor in many business enterprises as well as in political life. For a number of years he was financially interested with his brothers Charles D. and Cassius in manufacturing at Elmville; and through a long period was one of the directors of the Thompson Savings Bank and also of the Thompson National Bank. In politics Mr. Chase has been a life-long active Republican and has been honored by election to various local offices, including that of selectman of Thompson for three years. He ably represented the town of Thompson in the State Legislature in 1881, and again in 1884, serving during his first term on the Insurance committee and during his second term on the committee on Banks. In 1884 David Chase was married to Miss Annie H. Bartholomew, daughter of William I. Bartholomew, of Pomfret (more extended mention being found elsewhere). Two children were born to this union, namely: Lillian Frances, born Dec. 16, 1885, and Julian David, born Dec. 16, 1886.

DR. SAMUEL C. CHASE (deceased) was a grandson of Reuben Chase, who was the eldest son in a family of six children, four sons and two daughters. He was an extensive farmer, a quiet, law-abiding citizen and a consistent member of the Baptist Church.

Danford Chase, son of Reuben and father of Dr. Chase, was born in Killingly, Conn., where his life was spent. His first marriage was to Lucy Covell, born in Killingly, where she died. Their children were Samuel C. and Hannah, the latter of whom married John Drown, of Killingly. She had three children, all deceased, and she died in Killingly in 1870. The second marriage of Danforth Chase was to Lucy Davis.

Samuel Covell Chase was born Aug. 23, 1817, in Killingly, Conn., and was educated in the district schools of his native town. Being a close student he acquired an excellent education. Until 1856 he remained on the farm with his father, and on the death of the latter took entire charge of the same, it then becoming his own property. It was about this time that he began to seriously turn his attention to the practice of medicine. His tastes and talents had always led in this direction and he had attained local success before he really took up the study of theory and practice. Dr. Chase was one of the pioneers in magnetic healing and became very celebrated on account of his marvelous cures. His practice grew to such an extent that he found it necessary to open offices in Providence, Norwich and Putnam, his patronage coming from every grade of society. Kind, sympathetic and charitable, he never turned the worthy aside, giving his services freely to those who could not afford to pay. Dr. Chase was opposed to all advertisement of his wonderful power, but so numerous were his patients that his fame became known all over the State. Aside from his prominence as a successful physician Dr. Chase was notable as a man of affairs in his town and district. In politics a Republican, he was sent as his town's representative to the State Legislature in 1859. He had most efficiently filled the offices of selectman and judge of probate, and acted in the capacity of constable for fifteen years. In June, 1892, having an office in Putnam, he made that city his home and soon became a representative citizen. Dr. Chase belonged to no secret organizations. Early in life he had connected himself with the Baptist Church, in which he was clerk and a leading member in East Killingly.

The first marriage of Dr. Chase was Sept. 28, 1836, in East Killingly, to Emily Fuller, who died in Killingly May 12, 1851. Three children came to this union, namely: Lucy Ann, born July 1, 1837, married James Brainard, a machinist, and they now reside in Kennett Square, Pa.; Samuel Oscar, born Dec. 2, 1842, who married Emeline Bowen, died at the age of forty-two years; and Emily Josephine, born Aug. 8, 1850, married, William Edson and died in Putnam in 1896. The second marriage of Dr. Chase was Aug. 27, 1851, to Mary Melissa Burlingham, who died, without issue, about one year later. The third marriage of Dr. Chase occurred Jan. 4, 1854, to Tamison Copeland Rich, daughter of Rufus and Abigail (Grout) Rich, the former of whom was an extensive farmer of Spencer, Mass. One son was born to this union, Rufus Rich, March 8, 1858.

The death of Dr. Chase occurred June 15, 1900, in his home in Putnam, after some two years of impaired health. Until that time he had maintained unusual vigor both of body and intellect. He lived to see his healing methods accepted by almost every school of medicine as a necessary part of the healing art. He will long be recalled as one of the strong men of his part of Connecticut.

RUFUS RICH CHASE, the youngest son of Dr. Samuel Chase, was born in Killingly, Conn., and received his schooling there. When seventeen years of age he took charge of the operation of the home farm, on Chestnut Hill, Killingly, and still retains its management, although in 1892 he removed to Putnam. In politics he is a staunch Republican, but objects to holding office.

On March 8, 1876, Mr. Chase was united in marriage with Sarah Elizabeth Covell, daughter of Sampson B. and Sarah H. (Elliott) Covell, of Putnam. One daughter, Alice Rich, was born Nov. 12, 1877, in Killingly. For twenty beautiful years she was the center of her parents' affection, but death claimed her Feb. 25, 1898, in Putnam.

HON. WILLIAM BUELL SPRAGUE, of Andover, Tolland county, judge of probate for the district embracing Andover, Bolton and Columbia and deputy collector of Internal Revenue, is a son of Benjamin Sprague, and a grandson of Benjamin Sprague.

It is a family tradition that Benjamin Sprague, the grandfather, when eleven years of age, came with his parents from Lebanon, Conn., to that part of the town of Hebron which is now Andover. It is a tradition, too, that the ancestors of Benjamin Sprague came to Lebanon from Providence, R. I. In support of this tradition from "Early Lebanon" it is learned that a Benjamin Sprague (first) married Mary Woodworth in 1707, and had children as follows: John, born in 1709; Eliakim (ancestor of Mrs. E. D. White, of Andover), born in 1711; Mary, born in 1713; William, born in 1715; Phineas, born in 1717; Jonathan, born in 1720; and Benjamin (2), born Jan. 5, 1725, who died about 1814, grandfather of William B. Sprague. Benjamin Sprague (1) married for his second wife Widow Abigail Tisdale, of Taunton, and they had: Silas, born in 1727; Abigail, born in 1729; Elkanah, born in 1732; Minor, born in 1734; Lydia, born in 1736; Esther, born in 1738; and Mary, born in 1740. From the same source is derived the information that John Sprague married (first) in 1711, Mary Braddock, and after her death married again, his second wife being named Hannah. To the first union were born: Ebenezer, in 1711; Hannah, in 1714; and Jonathan in 1716; and to the second union came John, born in 1723; Thomas, in 1725; Huldah, in 1734; and Rachel, in 1737. It is also shown by the Lebanon records that Ephraim and his wife Deborah Sprague had children as follows: Peres, born in 1705; Peleg, born in 1707; Ephraim, born in 1709; Deborah, born in 1712; Betty, born in 1714; Irene, born in 1717; Mary, born in 1721; and Mary (2), born in 1725. The town of Hebron, Conn. was formed in 1707 and the Ecclesiastical Society of Andover was set off from the town of Hebron in 1747, and among the householders of Andover Society at that time were: John, Peres, Lieut. Ephraim, Peleg, and Eliakim Sprague. The last named, born in 1710-11, died in 1786.

So much for the Lebanon and early Andover Spragues. Now, following the family tradition still farther, William Sprague and his brothers, Ralph and Richard, sons of Edward, of England, were the first comers and settlers in Massachusetts Colony, in 1628 or 1629, at Charlestown. In 1635, William married Milcent, daughter of Anthony Eames, and settled in Hingham, Mass., in 1636. Mrs. Sprague died in 1696, outliving her husband. Of their children, William Sprague (2), born in 1650, married (first), in 1674, Deborah Lane, who was born in 1652, daughter of Andrew and Triphany Lane, and removed to Providence, R. I. between 1709 and 1711. His death occurred in 1723. His children, as given in the history of Hingham, were: William, born in 1675; Deborah, born in 1678; Joanna, born in 1680; David, born in 1683; Jonathan, born in 1686, who married Lydia Leavitt, and settled in Bridgewater (one of his sons also Jonathan by name, born in 1720, settled in Stafford, Conn.); Abijah, born in 1689; John, born in 1692; and Benjamin, born in 1695, who married in 1716, Alice Bucklin. In a genealogical work on Providence it is stated that the second marriage of William Sprague was to a Miss Towers, and their children were: Mary, born in 1712; Peter, born in 1714; Rowland, born in 1716; and Judith.

Benjamin Sprague, the grandfather of William B., was born Jan. 5, 1725, and died in 1814. He was reared to manhood in Andover, where he married Sybil Buell, a native of that town, and there his entire married life was spent in farming. In political faith he was a Democrat though not an active party worker. To Benjamin and Sybil Sprague were born: John, who lived and died in his native town; Benjamin, the father of the Hon. William B.; Mary, who married a Mr. Skinner, of Genesee, N. Y.; William B., a Presbyterian minister, for ten years located in Springfield, Mass., and who was for forty-one years pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church in Albany, N. Y. (his death took place at Flushing, L. I.).

Benjamin Sprague, father of Judge Sprague, was born in what is now the town of Andover, in March, 1791, and died Aug. 20, 1865. He married Sarah Buckland, of Bolton, who was born Jan. 9, 1810, a daughter of Erastus and Lydia Buckland. She passed away April 19, 1901, at the home of her daughter Mrs. A. G. Tuttle, at the great age of ninety-one years. She had made her home with her daughter for twenty-seven years, and until within a brief period before her demise enjoyed good health. Mrs. Sprague was a member of the South Congregational Church of Hartford, which she attended very steadily until an accident which occurred about two years before her death. She is survived by her three brothers and a sister: Charles, of Massachusetts; William, of Hartford, Conn.; Henry, of Glastonbury; and Mrs. W. H. Sumner, of Hartford—all over eighty. Her two children survive: William B., whose name opens this sketch; and Julia, wife of A. G. Tuttle, of Hartford, Conn., who has one child, Alice Gratia.

Mr. Sprague grew up and remained at the old homestead, though for a number of years he was "booking," his territory being in New York where he proved quite successful. Originally his political affiliations were with the Democrats, but later he became a Whig, and still later a Republican. In 1857 he represented the town of Andover in the General Assembly, but he was not particularly active in public affairs. He was a regular attendant and supporter of the Congregational Church.

Hon. William Buell Sprague was born May 6, 1849, in Andover, where he was reared and where he attended the southeast district school, which is now discontinued, the building having been recently purchased by Judge Sprague. He also attended the Willimantic high school. After leaving school he went on the road as a salesman, first representing L. W. Warner & Co., of New York City, for ten years. For a time he had charge of the newspaper advertising of J. C. Ayer & Co., of Lowell, Mass., of proprietary medicine fame. In 1888 Mr. Sprague retired from the road and located in his native town on land owned by his father, engaging temporarily in farming on a small scale. For four or five years he managed the Andover Creamery in connection with his farming. He served on the board of trustees of Storrs Agricultural College, which is now the Connecticut Agricultural College, and superintended the erection of the building. For two years he was State cattle commissioner. In politics Mr. Sprague is a Republican; he represented his district in the State Senate in 1889 and 1890 and later became a member of the State Central Committee for his district, and is at present serving as such. As deputy collector of Internal Revenue he has been serving since September, 1899, and for the past three terms has been judge of probate for the Andover probate district. In August, 1902, Judge Sprague was made chairman of the First Congressional Committee.

Judge Sprague was married Nov. 19, 1872, to Elizabeth Lathrop, who was born in Lebanon, daughter of Leonard and Susan (Brown) Lathrop. They have no children. The Judge and his wife are members of the Andover Grange, organized Feb. 6, 1888, and he was its first master, which office he held for eight years in all. For two years he was master of the East Central Pomona Grange.

POST. This family, to which Mrs. Julia S. Ellis, of Rockville, Tolland county, belongs, came from England to America at an early day and settled at Saybrook, Conn., and descendants of these pioneer settlers are still to be found in that part of the State. One of them located at Hebron and from him descend the Posts of Tolland county.

Stephen Post, the founder of the family in America, was born in Chelmsford, County of Essex, England. He crossed the ocean with his wife and four children in the ship "Griffin," in September, 1633, landing in Boston. He was a devout Puritan, and was one of the devoted flock which Rev. Mr. Hooker led through the wilderness in June, 1636, to found the Colony of Connecticut. His name is inscribed on the monument erected by the citizens of Hartford in honor of the city's founders, in the ancient burying ground of Center Church. Mr. Post, however, did not remain in Hartford, but removed to Saybrook where he built a house at the place called Oyster River some two miles from the fort. There he died Aug. 16, 1659, his wife, Eleanor, surviving him until Nov. 13, 1670. To Stephen and Eleanor Post were born four children:

John, 1626; Thomas, 1628; Abraham, 1629; and Catherine, 1631. All were born in England.

Abraham Post, son of Stephen, became the father of ten children all born in Saybrook, as follows: Stephen, Dec. 3, 1664; Ann, May 4, 1667; Abraham, June 9, 1669; James, March 14, 1671; Esther, Dec. 14, 1672; Daniel, Nov. 28, 1673; Gurdon, May 29, 1676; Joseph, Feb. 6, 1678; Mary, Feb. 21, 1680; and Eleanor, Feb. 10, 1682.

Gurdon Post, grew to manhood and like his predecessors of the name held an honorable place in the estimation of his fellowmen.

Jedediah Post, son of Gurdon, was the next in direct line. He lived and died in Hebron.

David Post, son of Jedediah, was born in Hebron Nov. 25, 1752. He made his home in Gilead Society in Hebron, where he extensively engaged in farming and in shipping beef and pork to the South. On May 20, 1784, he married Martha Warner, daughter of Dr. A. I. Warner, of Bolton. Mrs. Post died Aug. 14, 1846, aged eighty-five years, preceded by her husband, who passed away Oct. 5, 1840. Their children were as follows: David Warner, born March 4, 1785, died Feb. 11, 1824; Diodate, is mentioned below; Jedediah, born July 18, 1788, lived in South Glastonbury, and died Aug. 20, 1866; Elijah, born July 31, 1792, lived in Hebron, Gilead Society, and died April 20, 1869; John Henry, born July 19, 1794, made his home in Hebron, and died there Oct. 17, 1825; and Ichabod, born March 4, 1798, died at the age of fifteen.

Diodate Post, son of David, was born in Gilead Society, Hebron, Aug. 31, 1786, and he became a successful farmer in his native community. He was a very active man and was of a decided character. In his political views he was originally a Democrat, but on the formation of the Republican party cast his ballot in its support. In his religious views he was broad and liberal with a firm belief in the universal brotherhood of man. On May 29, 1810, he was united in marriage with Permelia Birge, who was born in Bolton, Sept. 3, 1792, a daughter of Isaac Birge (born March 1, 1764) and his wife, Permelia (Warner) Birge (born Feb. 26, 1768). Diodate Post died April 11, 1860, and his wife passed away July 30 of the same year. Their children were: William Alfred, born July 17, 1811, died unmarried June 13, 1856; Mary Ann, born Aug. 17, 1813, married William Buell, and lived on the old homestead, where she died Aug. 30, 1883; Ichabod, born Aug. 29, 1815.

ICHABOD POST, son of Diodate, was born on the old homestead in Hebron, where he was reared. After his marriage he resided there until 1862 when he sold the farm to his sister and moved to Vernon, buying property near Rockville. Two years later Mr. Post bought a farm at the Center where he successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. All his life he was a hard worker, and being a man of unusual physical endowments, (standing six feet, four inches in height, with a frame in good proportion), he was able to accomplish much. Politically he was a Democrat, and religiously a Congregationalist. Ichabod Post married Lovina Dickinson, who was born Nov. 28, 1816, a daughter of Abner and Abigail (Curtis) Dickinson, of Glastonbury. He died April 8, 1895, and his widow lives in Vernon Center with her son Albert Warner. Their children were: Subura, who died at the age of ten months; Julia Sprague, who became Mrs. Ellis; and Albert Warner, born June 1, 1849, who is a farmer at Vernon Center, and is much interested in church and town affairs. Albert Warner Post was married Aug. 23, 1876, to Fannie Morris by whom he has had the following children: Elizabeth, Dora C., Truman Morris, Julia Louise, Fanny MacBell and Russell Albert.

Julia Sprague Post was born in Gilead Society, March 25, 1842. Her youth was passed in her native town and she accompanied her parents on their removal to Vernon. On Jan. 20, 1864, she was married to Harvey S. Ellis, who was born in Hampden, Mass., May 11, 1841, a son of Benjamin F. and Emeline (Kimball) Ellis, of the town of Somers, Mass. Benjamin F. Ellis died Oct. 9, 1887, at the age of seventy-six years. Harvey S. Ellis and wife had one child, Gilbert H., born Feb. 20, 1868. Harvey S. Ellis passed the greater part of his early life in Somers, Mass., and in young manhood came to Connecticut, locating first at Tolland where he spent two years and then located in Vernon. He was a farmer by occupation, and in 1868 he bought a farm at Vernon Center and engaged assiduously in the cultivation of tobacco. In political faith Mr. Ellis was a Democrat, but was never active in party work although he filled several local offices very satisfactorily. His first thought was ever for his home, and there he spent all his time. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and in the faith of that denomination he died March 2, 1895. He was highly esteemed in the town and his death caused universal regret.

Gilbert H. Ellis, only child of Harvey S. and Julia S. (Post) Ellis, resides on the old homestead, and its well tilled fields and neat buildings attest his industrious and progressive spirit. He married Estella Andrews, and they have had seven children as follows: Luther H. born Dec. 16, 1891, died March 16, 1892; Harold G., born May 19, 1893; Elton H., born Sept. 25, 1895; Mildred L., born June 13, 1898; Raymond L., born June 4, 1899; Dora Estella, born Dec. 11, 1900; and Clifford R., born Jan. 3, 1903.

LEONARD HOLMES HEALEY, one of the enterprising and progressive representatives of the agricultural interests of Woodstock, a prominent worker in the Grange, has been a director of the Windham County Fair Association, and is one of the neatest and most up-to-date farmers in Windham county. His sterling integrity and genial disposition make him popular and esteemed in Woodstock society. Mr. Healey is a native of Des Moines, Iowa, born Oct. 9, 1865, but when very young was adopted by his uncle, John Bacon Healey, of Woodstock, where he was reared and educated.

The family history of our honored subject, so far as it can be authenticated, runs back to Benjamin Child, who was of the eighth generation back from Mr. Healey. This member of the family was a native of England, and during the Puritan emigration in the early part of the seventeenth century settled in Roxbury, Mass. The early records show him to have been a man of prominence in his day, and highly esteemed and respected in the community. His wife's first name was Mary. The records show that he died Oct. 14, 1678, in Roxbury, the father of the following children: Ephraim; Benjamin; Joshua; Mary; an infant that died unnamed; Elizabeth; Margaret; John; Mehitable; John (2); Joseph; Joseph (2). Of this family Benjamin became the progenitor of Leonard H. Healey.

(II) Benjamin Child was born in 1656 in Roxbury and married March 7, 1683, Grace Morris, daughter of Deacon Edward Morris, who was one of the projectors and early settlers of the town of Woodstock. Benjamin Child died Jan. 24, 1724, and his wife Dec. 10, 1723. Their family consisted of Ephraim; Benjamin, Jr.; Edward; Grace; Mary; Ebenezer; Mehitable; William; Pennel; Richard; Thomas; and Margaret.

(III) Ephraim Child, the next in line, born Dec. 18, 1683, in Roxbury, married in 1710 Priscilla Harris, daughter of Daniel Harris, of Brookline, Mass. The date of his death was Nov. 22, 1759. He was the eldest of seven brothers who migrated from Roxbury to New Roxbury, Conn., afterward called Woodstock, and settled in what was anciently known as Muddy Brook. He was a prominent man in his day, intelligent, patriotic, generous, and self-sacrificing. Tradition writes him as being exceedingly loyal, and one of the first to counsel throwing off the English yoke. In 1753 he held a commission as lieutenant in the 17th Company, 11th Regiment, Connecticut Infantry, and was active in all the exciting work of that time. He was the father of Ephraim; Daniel; Priscilla; Henry; Mehitable; Mary; Esther; Elisha; Peter; and Joanna.

(IV) Henry Child, a native of Woodstock, born May 28, 1717, married in 1742 Rebecca Bacon, and for his second wife Dorothy Child, daughter of Nathaniel Child, of Thompson, Conn. His death occurred Jan. 17, 1795. He was one of the ten of the name who took the Freeman's Oath on the transfer of the town of Woodstock from the Colony of Massachusetts to the Colony of Connecticut. The children born to him were: An infant that died unnamed; Amasa; Levi; Cynthia; Dina; Capt. Willard; Ephraim; Joanna; and Rebecca.

(V) Amasa Child, born Jan. 13, 1745, in Woodstock, married Feb. 1, 1770, Joanna Carpenter, and died Sept. 8, 1820. Their children were: Royal, Dorothy, Aaron, Sallie, Levi, Levi (2), Polly, Betsey, Irene, and Persis.

(VI) Capt. Aaron Child was born June 19, 1794. He married for his first wife, in 1804, Lucy, daughter of Capt. Jotham Burnham, of Ashford, Conn. His second wife, whom he married in 1814, was Mary Spring, of Petersham, Mass. She died in Woodstock, June 1, 1857, and his death occurred April 18, 1851. He held a captain's commission in a company of infantry during much of his lifetime. In nature he was kindly, full of good humor, and given to great hospitality. His political preferences were with the Whigs, and he was a warm advocate of the emancipation of the enslaved colored race. The children born to him were: Hiram Burnham, who married Fannie Nye; Lucy Burnham, whose first husband was Ralph Russell and second Charles T. Wortley; George Washington, who died aged twenty-five years; Levi Lincoln, who married Charlotte Sheldon; Caroline Amanda, Mrs. George Baillies; Amasa, father of Leonard H.; Aaron, Jr., who married Mary Carpenter.

(VII) Amasa Child, born Dec. 16, 1825, in Woodstock, was married Feb. 28, 1851, to Sarah Lucinda Child, daughter of Charles and Almira Child. Amasa Child has passed a life as an industrious farmer, having at an early age, in 1839, removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and later to Jefferson, that State. His children are: Mary Ella, born June 14, 1852; Emma Almira, Dec. 9, 1857; Eva Floretta, Feb. 15, 1859; Charles Freeman, Feb. 9, 1863; Leonard Holmes, Oct. 9, 1865. The mother of this family was born May 14, 1829, in Woodstock, daughter of Charles and Almira (Holmes) Child, who were married March 17, 1817; Almira Holmes was a full cousin of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the famous poet-physician of Cambridge. Charles Child was a thrifty and successful farmer of East Woodstock. He was of stalwart physical frame, of somewhat florid complexion, and a man of very correct and sober habits. His children were: Leonard Holmes, who died in infancy; Abiel, who died young; Sarah Temperance, who died in girlhood; Mary Elizabeth, born June 25, 1826, in Woodstock, who married Feb. 25, 1851, John Bacon Healey, of Mansfield, Mass. (Leonard H. Healey became their son by adoption); Sarah Lucinda, born May 14, 1829, wife of Amasa Child; Hannah Almira, born Feb. 28, 1831, who married April 15, 1851, Edward Killam, of Woodstock; Emma Maria, born June 23, 1833, who married Dec. 18, 1867, George Child Phillips, of Woodstock; Susan Ellen, born April 4, 1836, who married Francis X. Rivers, of Woodstock; and Annette Matilda, born Nov. 8, 1838, who married Samuel Gildersleeve, of New York City, May 10, 1865.

John Bacon Healey was a successful farmer in Woodstock, living upon the farm now occupied by the son. He was the son of Jedediah Healey, born July 14, 1796, and Abigail Bacon, both of Brimfield, Mass. Stephen Healey, father of Jedediah, born Aug. 23, 1762, married in 1781 Rhoda Marcy, born May 4, 1762. They became the parents of Mary, born June 29, 1783; Joshua, Nov. 5, 1784; Abigail, Feb. 24, 1787; Charles, March 24, 1789 (died young); Charles (2), Oct. 4, 1791; Mercy, May 5, 1792; Jedediah, July 14, 1796; Betsey, Feb. 8, 1801; George, June 5, 1805.

While on a visit to Woodstock Mr. Healey's parents yielded to the earnest plea of the childless John B. Healey for a son and heir and consented to his adoption, the legal papers being made out later. In his new home the lad received the pentup affection of years, and as he passed to manhood was treated with the consideration of an own son. He was given an excellent preliminary training in the district schools, attended a select school in Woodstock, and was a student of Woodstock Academy for seven years. This fitted him for the duties of life in any field he cared to enter, but his uncle's failing health and the consequent devolving on him of the care of the farm made it advisable to engage in some occupation that would keep him near home. He therefore entered the school-room as an instructor, and for the following fifteen years was engaged as a successful teacher in the schools about Woodstock and Pomfret. He finally gave up teaching entirely, and followed the life of a farmer exclusively, succeeding to the farm on the death of his foster-parents. This place consists of seventy-eight acres, which Mr. Healey keeps under a high state of cultivation, so that it is one of the finest farm properties in the county. It is devoted to general products, and the milk of twenty-five cows is shipped to the Boston market. Mr. Healey uses up-to-date methods of farming and aims to keep abreast of the times in farm machinery. He was the first farmer in Woodstock to use the "United States Separator" in the production of butter, in which he was for long years the leader in the county.

On June 13, 1889, Mr. Healey married Miss Carrie Blackmar, daughter of Capt. Erastus and Sarah (Bigelow) Blackmar, of Woodstock, and they have had the following children: Maude Elizabeth, born April 18, 1890; John Blackmar, Aug. 3, 1892; Leonard Holmes, Jr., Jan. 9, 1894; Ewart Gladstone, May 13, 1898; Merrill Loring, Feb. 1, 1900. The mother of this family is a lady of great culture and superior attainments. She was given a thorough scholastic training in Woodstock Academy, and spent the five years following her graduation in successful school work in her native town. Since her marriage she has been helpfully prominent in the social and religious life of the community, being especially active in Grange work, having been one of the charter members of Woodstock Grange, No. 150, and had the honor of serving as the first master. In this she enjoys the distinction of being one of the five Connecticut women who have been masters of their respective Granges.

In fraternal affiliation Mr. Healey is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M., and is also a prominent worker in the Grange. Politically he votes the Republican ticket, and is now serving his third term as town tax collector. Mr. Healey is a man of engaging personality, resourceful, and with much firmness of character and purpose, and has wielded a shaping power in public affairs in Windham county. In the early history of the Grange Mr. Healey was very active as a member of that excellent organization, first of Senexet Grange, of Woodstock, in which he was master for two years, and filled various other offices. He was later active in the organization of the Woodstock Grange, No. 150, but has refused all office in that body, believing he could be of more service as a worker in the ranks. He was also a charter member of Quinebaug Pomona, of which he was master for three years, lecturer for two years, and secretary for three years. Mr. Healey's ready faculties and sterling personal worth cause him to be selected for much public preferment. He has served as director of the Windham County Fair Association, and for fifteen years has been a director of the Woodstock Agricultural Society, of which he for several years has also served as secretary. The foregoing will serve to give a good idea of the standing of this excellent family in Windham county, where they number their friends by the score.

EDWARD B. HARRIS is a descendant of one of those New England families whose ancestral lines run back through the group of godly men who "for conscience sake" gave the world the first exhibition of the workings of a republic on American soil—the Providence "planters." Since that time the individual members of the family have been found in the forefront of the battle for liberty of conscience and of person, and Edward B. Harris is in "all things careful" to follow closely in the footsteps of his illustrious ancestry. The genealogical tree unfolds somewhat after this fashion:

Thomas and William Harris, brothers, came to America in company with Roger Williams from Bristol, England, in 1630, sailing in the good ship "Lyon," William Pierce master. Thomas Harris is of record in Providence, R. I., in 1637. He was one of the thirty-nine signers of the famous agreement for civil government in 1640, and was prominent in town affairs, being for many years a Commissioner, a deputy to the General Court, and assistant. The Christian name of his wife was Elizabeth. His death occurred in 1686.

William Harris became the ancestor of Edward B. Harris. He settled at Salem, Mass., and later was one of the six persons who came to Providence as "first settlers" before July, 1636. He was one of the twelve original members of the First Baptist Church there, and was also one of the signers of the agreement for civil government in 1640.

He died in 1681. His wife's name was Susannah.

Andrew Harris was the son of William. He married Dec. 8, 1670, Mary Teno, of Newport, R. I., who became the mother of: Mary, born Oct. 17, 1671; Anna, Sept. 22, 1673; Andrew, Dec. 4, 1676; Hope, Oct. 14, 1679, died young; Patience, April 21, 1682; Toleration, June 10, 1685.

Toleration Harris, the youngest of this family, became the progenitor. He was born in Cranston, R. I., where he died at a date unrecorded. He married Sarah Foster, whose children were: Anna, born Dec. 31, 1709; William, July 22, 1711; Joseph, June 15, 1713, the date of his death being given as Aug. 3, 1786; Andrew, Nov. 18, 1715; Mary, Dec. 18, 1718; Sarah, June 9, 1722; John, Aug. 19, 1724, who died Nov. 9, 1725; John (second) and Phoebe, twins, Sept. 7, 1726.

Joseph Harris was next in line. Born at Cranston, he married Susannah Bates July 8, 1733. This lady was the daughter of Ebenezer Bates, of Cranston, and became the mother of Ebenezer and Elisha.

Elisha Harris was born June 29, 1744, and died March 16, 1825. He was the great-grandfather of Edward B. He married in 1767, Frelove Dyer, daughter of John and Frelove (Williams) Dyer. Her mother was Frelove Williams, who was the great-granddaughter of Rev. Roger Williams of immortal fame. The children of Elisha and Frelove Harris were: Susannah, born June 15, 1768, married Rowland Greene, March 31, 1791, and died June 21, 1851; Joseph, born June 15, 1770, married Catherine Greene, Nov. 25, 1790; Bates, born July 5, 1773, married Sarah Lockwood, Nov. 19, 1795, and died Sept. 20, 1858; Elisha, born Jan. 20, 1777, remained a bachelor, and died Aug. 19, 1790.

Bates Harris was the grandfather of Edward B. Harris. He was born, married, and died as stated above; his wife, Sarah Lockwood, was born April 24, 1773, and died Sept. 15, 1832. Grandfather Harris was a farmer, as his ancestors had been before him in Cranston, cultivating a farm where are now the Fair Grounds. He was a large land owner and very prosperous, a man of great influence in his community. To him were born the following children: Edward Bates, born Aug. 13, 1797, Benoni, Sept. 12, 1800, died in Providence, R. I. He was a manufacturer of thread during his life time. He married Adeline Harris, and died June 1, 1880. Avis, born Oct. 5, 1802, died a spinster in Providence. Phoebe, May 29, 1804, also a spinster, died in Providence. Moses, Jan. 26, 1806, died Sept. 24, 1807. Elisha, June 19, 1807, died in Providence. William J., Sept. 6, 1808, passed his life in Providence, married a Miss Williams, and died in Scituate. Charles J., April 29, 1810, died Sept. 4, 1881, in Warren, R. I.; he married Mary Ann Bugbee, of Killingly, and was in the machinery business. Moses B., Dec. 31, 1811, died March 24, 1882, in Providence—he was a bachelor, a draughtsman, and carried on a real estate business in Philadelphia.

Edward Bates Harris, the father of Edward B. Harris, was born Aug. 13, 1797, in Cranston, R. I., and died in Woodstock Sept. 19, 1881. Early in life he took up the manufacture of machinery, having developed a natural talent in that line. He and his brother Elisha invented a loom but it proved a failure because of its very success. It was too much of a labor saver and became very unpopular. Edward Bates Harris removed to Woodstock when quite young and there remained the rest of his life. He was interested in a cotton factory of fifty looms in Woodstock and later engaged in manufacturing twines and carpet warps. He retired several years before his death. In disposition Edward Bates Harris was quiet and reserved but withal genial and pleasant, and very much of a student of the immediate matter in which he was interested. He was greatly devoted to business and cared little for public preferment. He voted the Republican ticket, and in religious belief was a Quaker. Mr. Harris was twice married. On Sept. 24, 1818 he wedded Mariah A. Green. This lady was a native of Rhode Island, born Oct. 6, 1800, the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Green. She died in Woodstock June 5, 1829. Her children were: Edwin Green, born July 22, 1819, in Cranston, married Sarah Ann Cutler, of Providence, R. I. He was a farmer early in life and later a manufacturer of twine in Phoenixville, where he died in 1893. Mary Ann, born Aug. 30, 1821, died April 15, 1828. Avis L., Oct. 9, 1823, died Dec. 19, 1843. Sarah E., born Nov. 6, 1825, married George H. Nichols of New York, a manufacturer of chemicals, both now deceased. Phoebe W., born May 7, 1829, died May 13, 1839. On March 27, 1831, Mr. Harris was married to Eliza A., daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Arnold) Chandler, of Pomfret, Conn., who bore him the following children: Mary C., born Oct. 3, 1832 in Woodstock, died in Providence Nov. 2, 1870. She first married Samuel D. Allen of Wilmington, N. C., who died in Woodstock of consumption; second she married Jeremiah Parrish of Providence, president of the Atlantic Insurance Company. Anna E., born June 14, 1838, died Oct. 5, 1873, married Henry J. Gilbert of Pomfret, lived in Sterling, Ill. George E., April 14, 1835, died Sept. 27, 1836. William H., see sketch below. Edward B., Jr., see below. James R., born Jan. 12, 1848, living in Southbridge, Mass., grocer; married Hattie Truesdall of Putnam, Conn., and they have two sons.

Edward B. Harris was born in Woodstock May 20, 1844. He passed his boyhood days in acquiring an education in the common schools of the village, and at nineteen entered his father's mill as an overseer in the spinning and carding department, where he remained until his father retired. He then, in company with his father, brother and others formed a stock company with the firm name of the Harris Twine & Warp Co. Of this company Edward B. Harris, Sr., was president, William H.

Chandler, secretary and treasurer, and Edward B. Harris in the same position he had previously held. The company operated the mill for a period of twelve years when they closed it and later sold the plant to the Putnam Water Company. Since that time Mr. Harris has been engaged in farming on the old homestead.

Mr. Harris like his father before him is a Republican, but is satisfied to vote the ticket, caring nothing for office. He is an attendant on the services of the Universalist Church of Putnam, and is a man who is thoroughly respected in the community where he has passed a lifetime. Anna Arnold, daughter of William W. and Amy A. (Alton) Arnold, of South Woodstock, became Mrs. Edward B. Harris Oct. 28, 1868. She is the mother of Maude Chandler, born Jan. 25, 1876, and died Aug. 17, 1877; Robert Earle, Feb. 23, 1879, graduated at the Putnam high school in 1898 and has been for the past two years in the Sawyer district, Putnam.

WILLIAM H. HARRIS is another son of Edward B. Harris, born Aug. 23, 1841. His preliminary education in the common school was supplemented by a year's work in the Friends Academy in Providence. At eighteen he returned home and having become thoroughly conversant with his father's mill during his boyhood was taken into the firm as a partner. The business of buying and selling devolved upon William, while Edward looked after the inside work. After ten years the firm name was changed to that of William H. Harris & Co. They were also interested in a mill which they leased from James Manning in South Woodstock for several years. The activity of the South in the cotton business gradually encroached on the market until the mill business became unprofitable and the firm closed. In 1896 William purchased the Elm Street Bakery in Putnam, and under the firm name of Harris & Dudley operated it for three years, then was alone for two years when he sold out, and is now living in retirement in a pleasant and commodious home which he built in 1885 one and a half miles from Putnam Centre. Mr. Harris takes an active interest in the local affairs of his community. He is staunchly Republican in his political views, and has served as justice of the peace. He is a member of Putnam Lodge, No. 46, F. & A. M., of which he has served as secretary and treasurer for a number of years. In church affairs he is an attendant and liberal supporter of the Universalist organization in Putnam.

The marriage of William H. Harris and Mary Harkness Green was solemnized Dec. 31, 1873. Mrs. Harris is a daughter of Samuel H. and Judith (Rounds) Green, and was born in Tolland, Conn., and later lived in Stafford Springs. Her father was in earlier life a division master on the railroad, but is now engaged at farming.

The foregoing constitutes the history of the Harris family which is of such a nature as to elicit the encomiums of all. The earlier members of the family were men of probity of character who built "wiser than they knew" in aiding in the establishment of freedom of religious action. The later members are also of the same mettle, should occasion arise, and are worthy members of a community noted for its high moral and intellectual standards.

ALEXANDER AUGUSTUS HOUGHTON, a prominent and representative citizen of Putnam, Windham county, was born Sept. 2, 1850, at West Gloucester, R. I., of Massachusetts ancestry.

Abel Houghton, his grandfather, was born in Princeton, Mass., and died at Holden, same State. He married Lucretia Phelps, a native of Leominster, Mass., who died in Putnam, Conn., and they had the following children: Ostrander, Rebecca, Nancy, Julia Ann, Augustus, Alexander and Servilon, the latter of Woonsocket, R. I. Mr. Houghton was a farmer.

Augustus Houghton, son of Abel, was born Nov. 18, 1822, in Princeton, Worcester Co., Mass., and died July 14, 1899, in Putnam, Conn. The intervening years record an eventful and busy life. His education was obtained in the district schools of Princeton, and later at Uxbridge, whither his parents removed while he was still young, and until he was twelve years of age he remained assisting his father on the farm. At that age he entered a cotton factory located at West Boylston, Mass., and six years later, with a few hundred dollars capital which he had earned and prudently saved, leased a small mill at Holden, Mass., and commenced manufacturing for himself, the venture proving a successful one, although it was started at a time of great business depression. Three years later he associated himself with the Smithville Manufacturing Co., where he remained four years, subsequently going to Worcester, where for seventeen years he was superintendent of the Harts-horn, Trumbull & Waters Co., envelope makers.

In the fall of 1864 Mr. Houghton removed to Putnam and purchased what is now the C. M. Fisher Co. shoe factory, intending to enter the envelope manufacturing business. About that time the small yarn mill and water privilege at East Putnam, started in 1860 by Calvin and William Randall, were put upon the market for sale, and Mr. Houghton, in company with G. A. Hawkins, bought the entire plant and equipment. They immediately doubled the capacity of the mill, put up new buildings and made many improvements. About ten years later Mr. Hawkins sold his interest to C. J. Allton, and the new firm continued in business until 1882, when the entire plant was sold to Norwich parties.

Mr. Houghton was a staunch Republican, and took an active interest in politics for many years, serving one term in the Legislature, for several years as chairman of the board of selectmen and also as justice of the peace. At the time of his death he was one of the trustees of the Putnam Savings Bank, of which he had been one of the incorporators. In religious profession he was a member of the Methodist Church, and one of the trustees. To quote the words of one who knew him intimately: "Mr. Houghton was an honest, upright, Christian gentleman, and while being involved in many large transactions, was never known to take a dishonest advantage of a fellowman. His standard of honor was high; his love for his faithful helpmate and counselor for nearly half a century was a glittering reflection of his purity of soul; his fatherly solicitude and wise admonitions created a bond of filial love and esteem." He died as he lived, a sincere and worthy Christian, and his remains were reverently interred in Grove Street cemetery, the spot being marked by a beautiful monument of Quincy granite.

Augustus Houghton was married (first) Oct. 30, 1844, to Eliza Roper, born Dec. 17, 1821, in Princeton, Mass., who died Feb. 5, 1848, in Holden, Mass. The only child of this union, Cora Eliza, was born Aug. 3, 1845, in Sutton, Mass., and married Albert Whiting, of Barre, Mass., a worker in cotton goods; their daughter, Gertrude, was born in Smithville, Mass. The second marriage of Augustus Houghton, on Sept. 22, 1849, was to Elizabeth Hawkins, born Dec. 14, 1826, in Gloucester, R. I., a daughter of Allen and Phebe (Thornton) Hawkins, the former of whom was engaged in the lumber trade. The children of this marriage were: Alexander A., mentioned below; Addie Elizabeth, born Sept. 17, 1859, in Worcester, Mass., who married May 10, 1876, Dewitt C. Parks, of Putnam, and has children—Elizabeth A., Clinton A. (who died at the age of five years), and Daisy H. Mrs. Elizabeth Houghton is now a resident of Putnam.

Alexander A. Houghton was but six months old when his parents removed from Rhode Island to Worcester, Mass., where he was given excellent educational advantages, finally graduating from B. G. Howe's Business College, at Worcester. When he was sixteen years old his parents removed to Putnam, where he entered school again, and completed a commercial course at Wilbraham Academy. His school days over, at the age of nineteen he entered the mill, it being best, in his father's judgment, that he begin at the bottom and learn every detail of the business. Promoted from one department to another, his natural ability hastened the process, and for three years he was superintendent of the whole plant, which employed fifty hands. Later Mr. Houghton took a sawmill in West Gloucester, R. I., fitted it up and later erected on its site a three-story stone mill, and under the firm name of Hawkins & Houghton an extensive business was there carried on in the manufacture of cotton yarns. Mr. Houghton continued in the successful management of this business for fourteen years, at the end of which time he leased his interest to James Stockard. The mill was destroyed by fire in January, 1902. Since that time Mr. Houghton has been engaged in settling up his father's large estate and looking after his many business interests.

In politics Mr. Houghton is a strong Republican, has served on the town Republican committee a long period, for three years has been selectman, and in 1902 was elected representative to the State Legislature from Putnam. A reliable and substantial man, he was selected a director of the First National Bank July 1, 1888, and is serving at the present time. Like his father he has been identified with religious work, and is a valued member and supporter of the Baptist Church in East Putnam. Mr. Houghton has long been active in fraternal life, and belongs to Quinebaug Lodge, No. 106, A. F. & A. M., of Putnam; Putnam Chapter, No. 41, R. A. M.; Israel Putnam Lodge, No. 33, I. O. O. F., of Putnam; Putnam Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W., of Putnam; Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum; and Putnam Lodge, No. 574, B. P. O. E.

On July 4, 1868, Mr. Houghton was united in marriage with Miss Anna Mary Cady, daughter of James and Caroline E. (Bailey) Cady, and to this union have been born three sons, namely: (1) James Elbert, born Sept. 26, 1871, in Putnam, graduated from Worcester Academy, and is a decorator engaged in business in Putnam. He was married April 20, 1890, to Gertrude Bradway, daughter of Charles W. Bradway, and has one son, Charles Alexander, born Nov. 9, 1897. (2) Winfred Augustus, born Jan. 5, 1875, in Putnam, also graduated from the Worcester Academy, and is a machinist with the American Optical Works, at Southbridge, Mass. On July 24, 1894, he married Minnie Mills, daughter of James Mills, of Thompson, Conn. (3) Harry Alexander, born July 27, 1884, graduated from the Putnam high school in the class of 1902, and is a student at the Philadelphia Dental College.

Mr. Houghton has shown himself a true captain of industry in the management of the great plants and interests over which he so long had control. He is public-spirited, and participates in the affairs which promise to benefit his community, and possesses in an unusual degree those qualities which make a valuable citizen, neighbor, friend—sturdy integrity, manly honor and fixed standards of personal responsibility.

LEBBEUS ENSWORTH SMITH, one of the leading citizens and successful business men of Putnam, Windham county, and who had the honor of being the first mayor of that city, is a native son of Windham county, born Oct. 17, 1849, in Canterbury. Mr. Smith traces his lineage from an old and highly respected family of Putnam, being a descendant of Joseph and Elizabeth (Burnap) Smith, who were married April 25, 1716-17, and had four children: Jonathan, born Jan. 31, 1718-19; David, born April 8, 1721; Mary, born Dec. 8, 1723; and John, who is mentioned below.

(II) John Smith, born Feb. 28, 1725-26, married Mary Jewett, of Norwich, Jan. 16, 1754, and they had eight children: Joannah, born Sept. 13, 1754; Susannah, October 30, 1756; Zedekiah, Feb. 23, 1759; Sibbel, July 17, 1760; Benjamin, Dec. 31, 1761; Roger, born Oct. 16, 17—; Walter, Sept. 4, 1773 (who married Lydia Mudge); and Esther, born Dec. 5, 1777.

(III) Roger Smith was a life long resident of Canterbury, and a man of considerable importance in that place: he followed farming and the cooper's trade. He also owned and operated a grist mill located in the Baldwin district, near what is now the David P. Parks Home. In politics he was a Democrat. His wife, Alice Bingham, born in Scotland, Conn., died at the advanced age of ninety-two. By her he had children: (1) Jeremiah was the eldest. (2) Mary, born June 25, 1796, never married. (3) Albert, born July 17, 1798, married a Miss Tracey, and resided in Norwich, where he carried on a foundry; (4) John, born July 29, 1800, married Dec. 10, 1829, Emeline Williams, daughter of Walter Williams, and they had three children—Harriet, born in 1831, married D. C. Bugby; Edmund, born in 1833, died in 1895; and John Orven, born in 1840. (5) Esther, born Nov. 16, 1802, married Pearley Fuller, and resided first in Hanover and later in Scotland, Conn., where she died. (6) Alice and (7) Annis, born May 8, 1805, were twins; the first never married and died at the age of thirty-four; the second married a Mr. Reed, and lived in Rhode Island. (8) Marshall, mentioned below. (9) Esther Palmer, born July 1, 1811.

(IV) Marshall Smith, son of Roger, was born Aug. 13, 1808, in Scotland, Conn., and died in Canterbury Feb. 28, 1880. He married Nov. 21, 1836, Clarissa Ensworth, who was born Aug. 14, 1808, at Jamestown, on Conanicut Island, R. I., daughter of Lebbeus and Thankful (Congdon) Ensworth, and died at Canterbury, Conn., Dec. 12, 1887.

Lebbeus E. Smith received his early education in the district schools of his native town. For two years he was a pupil at a high school at Northampton, Mass., taught by Miss Mary Bond (sister of Judge Bond), and he also studied at Burnham's Business College, Springfield, Mass., from which he was graduated when seventeen years of age. He remained with his parents on the farm from the time of his return to Canterbury from college, until 1876, and during that period became quite active and prominent in the affairs of the locality, representing his town in the State Legislature in the session of 1876; he being the youngest member of that body. During his term he did important committee work. Mr. Smith had previously served efficiently in various town affairs, holding the offices of collector (1873-74-75) and constable for several years. In August, 1876, he purchased a controlling interest in the furniture and undertaking establishment of Parker & James, at Rockville, Tolland county, the firm becoming Parker & Smith. Mr. Smith continued in this business four years, at the end of that time selling out his share to John Silcox, who carried on the enterprise with Mr. Parker under the style of Parker & Silcox. Mr. Smith now returned to Canterbury with the intention of locating there, and his father dying he remained at the old home for a time settling up the estate. In August, 1881, he established himself in Putnam, embarking in the business which he has so successfully carried on up to the present time. As a reliable dealer in furniture, carpets, stoves, wall paper, etc., and also as an undertaker, Mr. Smith has become widely known throughout the surrounding county as "L. E. Smith, the Furniture Man." He ranks among the largest dealers in his line in eastern Connecticut, and deservedly, for he is a wide-awake, progressive merchant. The extensive and constantly growing patronage which he enjoys is the surest testimony to his ability as a manager and to the confidence he has earned by honorable dealing and uprightness in all his transactions. He neglects no detail which will advance his business or meet the wants of his patrons whom he endeavors to please not only by the quality and reliability of his goods but by courteous treatment on all occasions.

Mr. Smith however, has not been so immersed in business as to preclude his taking a lively interest in the progress and welfare of the community with which he is identified, and he has given both his time and his influence for the public good. In 1888 and 1891 he was a member of the Putnam town board of relief; in 1892 he was grand juror; and from 1892 to 1895 he served as town assessor. In 1895 Putnam became a city, and at the first city election, in December of that year, Mr. Smith was elected mayor by a majority of twenty-three votes, although he has always been a Democrat, and Putnam is Republican by an average of two hundred majority. He filled the office for two years, discharging the duties of same with the acumen and efficiency which have characterized the conduct of his own affairs. In 1899 he was elected alderman at large of the city. He is one of the original trustees of the Day Kimball Hospital, and has been chairman of the finance committee of that institution since its organization.

Mr. Smith was married, Dec. 17, 1878, at Rockville, Conn., to Miss Sarah M. James, daughter of Elisha Benjamin Reynolds and Mary Ann (Thomas) James, of Rockville. Two children have blessed this union: Clara Thomas, born Feb. 26, 1881, in Canterbury, graduated from the Putnam high school, and is now attending Rogers Hall, Lowell, Mass. Herbert James, born Dec. 9, 1883, in Putnam, graduated from the high school of his native place in 1900, and is now attending Dr. Holbrooks Military school at Sing Sing, N. Y., where he is preparing to take up the profession of civil engineer. The family home is on Church street, in what is known as the Lanyon Gilbert Phillips' place, which Mr. Smith purchased and remodeled in 1896. Mr. Smith attends the Congregational Church, of which his wife is a member, and takes a deep interest in its work and welfare, being a member of the Congregational Ecclesiastical Society. Fraternally Mr. Smith is a Freemason, being enrolled in the Blue Lodge, and also an Odd Fellow, holding membership in Israel Putnam Lodge. He is a representative, well-known, prosperous citizen of the locality in which he has passed all his life, and enjoys the well merited respect of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

ALBERT B. SPRAGUE (deceased). On account of its prominence from earliest times the Sprague family is easily traced directly back to its fountain head in the County of Dorset, England.

Edward Sprague, who was a resident of Dorset county, died there in 1614, leaving a family of six children, three of whom, Ralph, Richard and William came to Salem, Mass., in 1629. In the summer of the same year they removed to Charlestown and with others began the settlement of that town.

(I) William Sprague, the youngest of the brothers, was probably not far from twenty years of age when he came to New England, and he remained at Charlestown, Mass., until 1636 when he removed to Hingham in company with his father-in-law, Anthony Eames. Early in 1635 William Sprague married Millicent Eames. In 1646 William Sprague served as selectman of the town, and in 1662 as constable and collector of rates. At the time of his death in 1675 he was possessed of a large estate. His widow died in 1696. They had a family of eleven children.

(II) William Sprague (2), son of William the settler, was baptized July 2, 1650 and married (first) in 1674, Deborah, daughter of Andrew Lane. During his residence in Hingham, he served as selectman in 1690, 1699 and 1708. In 1713 he removed to Providence, R. I., and married (second) Mary Towers, who died in 1731, his death having occurred in 1723. His children were: William; Joanna; David; Jonathan, who married Lydia Leavitt and had children—Lydia, Hannah, Jonathan, Mary, Sarah, John, Content, Betty and Benjamin; Abiah, who married a Miss West and had children—Deborah, William, John and Abiah; John, who had no issue; Benjamin, who married Alice Bucklin, in 1716; Mary; Peter, who married (his wife's Christian name was Hannah) and had children—William and Amy; Rowland, who in 1745 married Lydia Hearnden and had children—William (born in 1748) and Judith. From this Providence family of Spragues descended those of the name now resident in Moosup, Connecticut.

Col. George Sprague, father of the late Albert B. Sprague, was born in Exeter, R. I., in 1810, and died in 1870, in Voluntown, Conn. His boyhood and young manhood were spent in Exeter, where he engaged in farming and cattle raising, becoming also a large jobber in lumber. In April, 1865, he removed to Voluntown, Conn., where he purchased a farm and followed an agricultural life until the time of his death. In political views he was a Democrat and represented the town of Voluntown in the State Legislature. In Exeter, R. I., Col. Sprague was united in marriage with Comfort Barber, who was born there in 1818 and died in November, 1887. Their children were as follows: (1) Comfort Loretta, who died at the age of sixteen years; (2) Mary, who married A. T. Palmer, of Smethport, Pa.; (3) Sarah, who married A. W. Dean, of Phoenix, R. I.; (4) George W., born April 18, 1841, who married Edith G. Boss (deceased), and they had children—Susie B., who married Fred. Cass, and Georgia E., who married George T. Griffin; (5) an infant; (6) Albert B.; (7) John Franklin, who died young; (8) John Burmington, born Nov. 22, 1849, who married in Randolph, N. Y., Edna D. Brink, and their son, who is a druggist at Buffalo, N. Y., was born Sept. 4, 1875; (9) Amos Palmer, who resides in Salamanca, N. Y., married (first) Alice Harard, and (second) Eva Palmer; (10) Carrie, who died in childhood, at Phoenix, R. I.; (11) Bertha, who married Stephen Hazard, has three children, and resides in Providence; (12) Marcia, who died young; (13) William, who is associated with his brother John in the operation of the Sprague Stables in Moosup.

One of Moosup's most enterprising and useful citizens was the late Albert B. Sprague, who was born Oct. 16, 1845, in Warwick, R. I., and died July 17, 1901, in Moosup, Conn. His parents were Col. George and Comfort (Barber) Sprague, the former of whom was not only a man of means and prominence in local affairs but was also known in military operations, being a colonel in the Rhode Island State militia and taking an active part as such in the suppression of Dorr's Rebellion.

Daniel Barber Jr., Mr. Sprague's maternal grandfather, was a captain in the Revolutionary struggle. Daniel Barber, Sr., represented the town of Exeter, R. I., in the Colonial Assembly a number of times and was prominently identified with the affairs of the Colonies.

Albert B. Sprague was educated in the best schools the town of Warwick, R. I., afforded at that time, and his early life was spent on a farm. When he was about twenty-two years of age he went to western New York, and there engaged quite extensively in the dairy business for about four years, sometimes keeping as many as thirty-five cows and doing much in the upbuilding of the reputation of dairy products which that section still enjoys. He also dealt largely in live stock, shipping horses and cattle to Buffalo, N. Y., and had also business connections of this kind in Moosup. In the winter of 1872, Mr. Sprague came to Moosup and embarked in a livery stable business in what was then known as the Burgess barn, but in the following spring he bought the stable which was conducted by Theron R. Salisbury, near the depot. For thirteen years he carried on a successful livery business using the Burgess building as a sale stable, but in the fall of 1885 he sold the Salisbury property and after that time carried on his large business at the old location, its rapid increase necessitating additional buildings. Probably few men in eastern Connecticut have handled so many horses. Much of the buying was done by his brother John in Iowa and other sections, although Mr. Sprague kept his finger on the public pulse and as demanded shipped many horses from Canada, Prince Edward Island and a number of the western States, doing considerable buying in Nebraska and Kansas. In connection with the sale stable Mr. Sprague had a carriage repository and carried a large and complete line of carriage and sportsmen's goods. During the dull times of 1878 in Moosup, when there was "not a spindle turning on the stream," Mr. Sprague in company with Ephraim Prentice opened a carriage repository in Norwich and did a thriving business, but when business picked up again at his home this business was closed and in 1879 he centered his attention on his stables in Moosup. The Sprague sale stable has always been a busy place and a very easy solution of the success of the business is to be found in the well-earned reputation of this firm for square and honorable dealing with the public. It is now carried on by William Sprague, a brother, who continues the methods in use during the life of the founder of the business.

In business as well as social and fraternal circles Albert B. Sprague is missed by his friends and associates in Moosup. Fraternally he was a member of A. F. & A. M., Moosup Lodge, Warren Chapter, and Montgomery Council of Danielson; of Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, of Norwich; of Rhode Island Consistory; of Scottish Rite bodies, and Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine of Providence. He was also a member of Protection Lodge and Unity Encampment, I. O. O. F., of Central Village, and Hope Council, O. U. A. M. In politics Mr. Sprague was an independent Democrat, seeking always to endorse the best men for public office and ever putting principle before mere partisanship. He ably represented his town in the Legislature in 1883.

On Nov. 17, 1866, Mr. Sprague was married to Miss Julia M. Lyon, daughter of Christopher and Mary (Whitman) Lyon, of old Rhode Island families. Two daughters were born to this union, namely: Bertha Lyon, born Jan. 26, 1870, who was married Nov. 4, 1900, to John C. Gallup, a resident of Moosup; and Marcia Hattie, born March 7, 1872, who married June 29, 1898, to Dr. W. W. Adams, of Moosup.

THE BARBER FAMILY. Comfort (Barber) Sprague, grandmother of the two ladies mentioned above, belonged to a notable New England family. She was a daughter of Sheffield Barber, of Exeter, R. I., whose first marriage was to Comfort Larkham; his third wife was Mary Palmer Geer.

From Rhode Island records we gather the following details relative to this branch of the Barber family. Moses Barber who was born in 1652 and died in 1733, was early in South Kingston, R. I. Prior to this he resided in North Kingston where is recorded his marriage to Susannah Wait, March 19 or 20, 1691-92, and also the births of a number of his children. His wife was a daughter of Samuel and Hannah Wait, of South Kingston. They had a family of sixteen children. These sons attained prominence: William, who died in 1748; Moses; Samuel, born in 1695, resided in Richmond, R. I., and died in 1760; Thomas, born Oct. 19, 1699, died in 1762, his wife Anis dying in the same year; Joseph, born Oct. 13, 1701, died in 1779, married Rebecca Potter in 1774 and lived in Exeter, R. I.; Daniel, born April 22, 1715, was a resident of Exeter, R. I., and was quite prominent in Colonial affairs; was a deputy to the General Court from Exeter in 1762, and again in 1770.

Daniel Barber (2), son of Daniel, born in 1748, was married (first) Aug. 11, 1769, to Charity Rathbun, daughter of John Rathbun, and married (second) Lucy Babcock. During the Revolution a company was formed on the east side of the river (town of Exeter) and in May, 1776, Daniel Barber was commissioned captain. Owing to ill health he resigned at the end of one year, but in August, 1778, he re-enlisted as a private and served three months. This Daniel Barber was the father of Sheffield Barber.

HOYLE. The Hoyle family of East Thompson, Windham county, is a branch of one of the oldest families of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Rinaldo Hoyle, late of Apponaug, town of Warwick, Kent Co., R. I., and his wife both traced their descent from John (better known as Dr. John) Hoyle, of Providence, R. I., who was married July 10, 1727, by Gov. Jenckes, to Lucy Taylor, of Roxbury, Massachusetts.

James Hoyle, son of Dr. John and Lucy (Taylor) Hoyle, married Mary Field. He was a hotel-keeper in Providence, and one of the well-known citizens of that place.

Joseph Hoyle, son of James, was married at North Providence, R. I., July 8, 1784, to Mrs. Patience Manchester, a widow, and they became the parents of the following named children: Joseph, born Dec. 7, 1786; James Rogers, Feb. 27, 1788;

Henry Ward, Feb. 5, 1790; Susanna, Nov. 20, 1791; John Singer Dexter, April 3, 1798. The father of this family was, like his father, engaged in the hotel business, and he was a well-known citizen.

Henry Ward Hoyle, son of Joseph, was married April 22, 1819, to Mary Brown, who was born Feb. 14, 1798, and died Jan. 27, 1865, at Dover, Cuyahoga Co., Ohio. Mr. Hoyle died Dec. 15, 1834, at Johnston, R. I. Their children were: Patience Rogers, born April 3, 1820; Mary Brown, April 20, 1821; Elizabeth Stewart, Dec. 7, 1822; Henry Ward, Jr., March 7, 1824; Ann Celia, Jan. 17, 1826; William, April 26, 1828; Henry, April 24, 1830; Joseph, March 7, 1832; Ruth, Jan. 17, 1834.

Joseph Hoyle, son of Henry Ward, born March 7, 1832, in Providence county, R. I., was married Dec. 26, 1848, in Thompson, to Susan Atwood King, who was born Oct. 1, 1829, daughter of Andrew and Sybil (Talgue) King. Both the contracting parties were residents of Natick. To this union came five children, namely: Ella Augusta, born Oct. 9, 1849, in Natick, R. I., was married April 24, 1874, to John Quincy Adams, and died Jan. 27, 1886, in West Natick, leaving three children. Claraette, born Oct. 28, 1852, was married Oct. 23, 1879, to Thomas F. Herrick, and died Nov. 2, 1880, in Providence, leaving an infant son. Rinaldo is the subject proper of these lines. Susan Jane and Josephine, twins, born March 28, 1859, both died young, Josephine passing away March 31, 1861, in Cleveland, Ohio, and Susan Jane on Sept. 8, 1865, in Natick, R. I. The family resided at various times in New Bedford, Mass.; in Cleveland, Ohio: in New York City (where they were during the draft riots of the Civil war); and finally returned to Natick, R. I., about the time of President Lincoln's assassination.

RINALDO HOYLE was born Jan. 12, 1855, in New Bedford, Mass., and died Nov. 17, 1886, at his residence in the village of Apponaug, town of Warwick, Kent Co., R. I., where at the time he was serving as town clerk. Probably no man of his age had ever made so deep an impression upon the life of the community or had taken a stronger hold upon the affections of his fellow-citizens. His career, though it might have been called quiet and uneventful in many respects, was an extraordinary one.

Mr. Hoyle received his education in the public schools, attending at the various places in which the family resided, and was well grounded in the common branches at the time of his parents' return to Natick, where he was under the instruction of Miss M. Louise Bishop, Stephen O. Benton and John Q. Adams, later his brother-in-law. He was a most satisfactory pupil, for in addition to displaying unusual intelligence he early gave promise of the application and perseverance which afterward characterized his work. These traits were especially noticeable in his work in history, geography and mathematics. His maps were the admiration of his teachers and the superintendents, and called forth many deserved praises for neatness and accuracy, displaying, as they did, not only carefulness in the execution but a thorough knowledge of all the details involved in such work. He was always among the leaders in his class during his school life. His knowledge of mathematics was thorough, and surprising for one of his years and advantages, having been acquired mainly from pure love of study. Mr. Hoyle last attended school during the winter term of 1872-73, but his education did not end with his attendance. He read and studied all his life, and the results were apparent in his work and attainments. In the spring of 1873 he became connected with the office wherein he was employed for the most part until his death, commencing as assistant to Samuel W. Clarke, at that time town clerk of Apponaug, a man well fitted to give shape and direction to his impulses, especially in that line of work. At the office, as in school, he gave himself entirely to the work in hand, was punctual, industrious, accurate and obliging—everything one in such a position should be. After working two years under Mr. Clarke he was for a time entry clerk in the store of the A. & W. Sprague Manufacturing Co., Natick, and held a similar position at Cranston. Returning to the town clerk's office, he was again Mr. Clarke's assistant for a time, and for the two years' term of that gentleman's successor, Mr. Thornton, continued to serve as assistant. In June, 1880, he himself was elected town clerk, and so satisfactory did his services prove that his term was only ended by his untimely decease, on Nov. 17, 1886, after a brief illness.

Mr. Hoyle was generally spoken of as the model town clerk, and it is no disparagement to either his predecessors or his successors to say that no incumbent of that office ever discharged its duties more creditably or acceptably. It was not enough that he fulfilled every official obligation with a degree of accuracy and dispatch which left no room for criticism. That fact alone would have won his approbation. But it was the ready courtesy, the geniality of manner, the ever-obliging disposition he manifested, that won the hearts of all, for he was no respecter of persons, treating all alike and all well. Rev. E. G. Eastman, who conducted his funeral services, said: "No man is perfect, but few I am sure possess less faults than did our lamented friend, Rinaldo Hoyle. He was not only a true man, but special adaptabilities to the office which he filled were manifest on every hand. Whoever had occasion to visit that office, it mattered not what their circumstances or complexion of skin or character, they were sure not only of a courteous and gentlemanly greeting but that in whatever their need consisted a helping hand would be proffered. He never counted the cost of helping another. He loved to do it, and his straightforwardness and gentle manners were living attestations of his hatred of all dissimulations and meanness."

Such, indeed, was the general opinion. It is not often that a man so lives as to win such unstinted admiration from his fellows at so early an age. It was the universal feeling that in his death Warwick lost one of its best citizens, from any standpoint. One of his friends wrote: "He possessed a union of excellent qualities, most happily blended for practical life. With the sure foundation of sterling integrity and sound judgment, he also had a quick perception in reading men and their motives that made him an effective power for good. He was courteous to all, but thoroughly independent; and sham and pretense had no power to deceive him. Seldom has so young a man had such implicit reliance placed on his sincerity and good judgment as was given to him, and often by his seniors in years and experience. The honest and heartfelt tributes of his neighbors, and a wider circle of acquaintances, is a better monument to his memory than any preferment in public life that may have awaited him, and that he was so well qualified to honor."

Another expresses himself thus: "He was a gentleman in every sense of the word, without an enemy. Everybody loved him. He was pleasant and kind to everybody. He had the whole of the records on the end of his tongue, and could give you all the information you wished at a moment's notice. The Rinaldo Hoyles in the town of Warwick are scarce, and his place will not easily be filled."

Mr. Hoyle's interests, however, were not bounded by the limitations of his office. Absolutely unselfish and pure in every way, he was always ready to lend his aid to any good object. At the time of his death he was serving as treasurer of the library association and as president of the Orion Chautauqua Circle, who adopted the following set of resolutions at his decease:

WHEREAS, God in his infinite wisdom has deemed it best to permit the removal of our honored and beloved President, Rinaldo Hoyle, by death, therefore Resolved, That the members of Orion Circle, class of 1889, C. L. S. C., would remember with deep gratitude his self-sacrificing efforts for the highest good of the class, even when heavily pressed by other causes.

Resolved, That in his death this Circle has lost a wise counselor, a highly esteemed member and a faithful friend, and that as individual members we feel profoundly grateful for the example of a life so broadened by experience, mellowed by sympathy and free from guile.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the sad wife and aged mother who have been so sorely bereaved, with the little children who have lost so worthy a father, and with all the friends who have honored and loved him who has passed away.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed on our records and that a copy of the same be forwarded to the bereaved family.

Though not a member of any church, Mr. Hoyle was an earnest student of the Scriptures, and was universally recognized as the type of a true Christian gentleman. In his earlier years he was quite active in Sunday-school work, and he always took a deep interest in the promotion of all religious and benevolent enterprises. Thus he was missed in many of the relations of life, but in none so much as in the domestic circle. There all the qualities which endeared him to his friends were best exemplified, for he was an ideal son, husband and father, ever on the alert to give pleasure to those of his household, wherein he was looked up to as he deserved to be. Mr. Hoyle was a great lover of music, and, under the instruction of Prof. Albert Webb, of Providence, R. I., became more than an ordinary performer on the violin. Physically he was a large man, six feet, three and one-quarter inches in height, muscular and well proportioned, and at one time weighed 225 pounds. Enjoying good health and living temperately, he had every prospect of a long and active life—a fact which gave double emphasis to the sudden termination of his career.

Mr. Hoyle's funeral was held the Sunday following his death, at the Central Baptist Church in Apponaug, Rev. Mr. Eastman officiating; and the sincerity of the grief of his fellow-citizens was proven by the large number who came to pay their last respects. After the service the remains were borne to the office, where the principal part of his active life had been passed, and placed in the vault until the day following, when they were taken to East Thompson, and laid to rest in the Hoyle lot in the cemetery there. A beautiful granite monument, simply inscribed, with the dates of birth and death, marks his last resting place.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the town council:

The town council of Warwick, desiring to perpetuate an expression of their esteem for the late Town Clerk, Rinaldo Hoyle, it is by said Council hereby

Resolved, That by the death of Rinaldo Hoyle the town has lost a most excellent and capable official, the community in which he lived a worthy and most estimable member, and the circle in which he moved an esteemed and valued friend. He was a young man of exemplary character and much promise.

Resolved, That we tender to the relatives and friends of the deceased this expression of our sincere sympathy in their bereavement, as well as declaring our high sense of the public loss.

Resolved, That this memorial be spread upon the records of the town of Warwick, and that a copy hereof be transmitted by the Town Clerk to the widow of the deceased.

On June 22, 1882, Mr. Hoyle was united in marriage with Miss Ella Louise Hoyle, daughter of Moses and Caroline M. (Joslin) Hoyle, of East Thompson, who are mentioned farther on. Two children blessed this union: Ethel May, born June 11, 1884; and Rinaldo, Jr., born Dec. 17, 1885. The daughter graduated from the Webster high school in the spring class of 1902. Mr. Hoyle moved from the Baker place to the home where he passed the remainder of his life prior to 1880; and at the time of his death he had in contemplation the erection of a fine residence, which would have been an ornament to the village in which he lived. Since his decease his widow and children have resided at her old home, in East Thompson, Windham Co., Connecticut.

MOSES HOYLE, father of Mrs. Rinaldo Hoyle, was also descended from Dr. John Hoyle, of Providence, one of the first of the name in Rhode Island. Richard Hoyle (2), son of Richard, and grandfather of Moses, came from Rhode Island to East Thompson, where he bought a tract of land and resided for some time. However, he returned to Rhode Island, and died there. Richard Hoyle (3), son of Richard (2), and father of Moses, was born in Burrsville, R. I., and came thence to East Thompson, where he built a home, and where he carried on farming and stock raising. He was also engaged in the manufacture of lumber, owning and operating a sawmill, and he also owned a carding-mill and a hat factory, which were operated by others. The carding-mill he subsequently converted into a church, he having been one of the founders of the Reformed M. E. Church. After the congregation built a new church he made dwelling-houses for his men out of the old structure. He was always active in church matters. Mr. Hoyle was one of the largest landowners in Thompson, and he devoted the latter part of his life to general farming. His death occurred in 1855, and he was buried in East Thompson cemetery. Mr. Hoyle in political sentiment was a Federalist, and later a Whig. He served in the war of 1812. He was especially noted for his honest and upright character, and was known to all as "Honest Richard Hoyle." Richard Hoyle married Tryphena Brown, and they had children as follows: Moses is mentioned below. Mary married Daniel Barrett. George was the father of Richard Monroe Hoyle, of Putnam. Olney married Malora Joslin. Lydia died unmarried. The mother of this family also died on the farm at East Thompson, and was buried in the East Thompson cemetery. Like her husband she was an active member of the M. E. Church, and she was recognized by all as a good Christian woman.

Moses Hoyle was born June 22, 1805, in East Thompson, was reared in his native town, and received his education in the district schools of Thompson. He was engaged with his father on the farm and in the sawmill until of age, when he went West. He first went to New York City, thence to Baltimore, being one of the first to travel from New York to the latter city on the steamship "Fulton." Having learned the trade of stone-cutting, he engaged in bridgebuilding on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He was a strong and active man, temperate in all his habits, always industrious, and always managed to save something out of his earnings. Returning to the homestead, Mr. Hoyle engaged in general farming and stock raising, and spent the remainder of his life there, becoming, like his father, one of the well-known citizens of the town. He was the owner of some 700 acres, including timber land, and was, all in all, a successful business man, and one of the most substantial citizens of his town.

On June 18, 1835, Mr. Hoyle married Caroline M. Joslin, daughter of Jesse and Sybil (Bates) Joslin, and this union was blessed with ten children: Lydia married Marvin E. Bixby, of East Thompson. Olney died young. Luther died young. Augusta married Adelbert Kemp, and, for her second husband, Frank Gale, of Webster, Mass. Ann S. resides on the homestead, which has been occupied by four generations—Richard, Moses, Burton and Clayton S. Irving J. is mentioned below. Ella Louise married Rinaldo Hoyle. Cassius married Nettie Porter. Cora died young. Burton married Jennie Snyder. The father of this family passed away Jan. 12, 1883, and the mother followed him to the grave Feb. 16, 1892, at the age of seventy-four. Both died on the farm at East Thompson, and are buried in the East Thompson cemetery. Mr. Hoyle was a man of domestic habits, his principal activity outside of his home being in the church. He was one of the founders of the M. E. Church at East Thompson, ever zealous for its welfare, and served as trustee. Mrs. Hoyle was a member of the Brandy Hill Baptist Church, and the family has placed a memorial window in the M. E. Church at East Thompson to the memory of herself and husband. Mrs. Hoyle was always ready to do all in her power to assist in church work, and the M. E. Church, which was nearest her home, was often the recipient of her favors. Though a public-spirited citizen, and ever regarded as a valuable member of the community. Mr. Hoyle took an active part in public affairs, especially during the period of the Civil war. His political support was given to the Republican party. While Mr. Hoyle never sought office, he served his town as assessor in 1865, was a member of the Legislature in 1856, and selectman. He was one of the directors of the Thompson Bank.

IRVING J. HOYLE, son of Moses, was born March 1, 1850, in East Thompson, and his early education was acquired in the public schools of the locality. He also attended Nicholas Academy, at Dudley, Mass., and Wilbraham (Mass.) Academy. After leaving home he went to Worcester, Mass., where he was engaged as clerk in the dry-goods business, and thence to Malden, where he has ever since remained. He is now successfully engaged in the real-estate business. Like his father, he is a Republican in political sentiment, and he also follows in his father's footsteps in many other ways, possessing many of the traits which characterized that gentleman. He is respected by all with whom he has been associated, whether in business or social life.

In 1892 Mr. Hoyle married Katherine Burridge Teele, of Malden, a lady of intellect and refinement. Mrs. Hoyle is a member of the M. E. Church.

WASHINGTON IRVING SWIFT, a highly respected, industrious and well-known farmer of Mansfield, Tolland county, traces his ancestry to Roland Swift who came to Connecticut from Wareham, Mass., about 1745, and settled at Lebanon, Conn. The names of his children, taken from his will were: Barzillai; Abigail; Roland; Zephaniah; William; Thankful, who married Lathrop Davis.

Barzillai Swift, the grandfather of Washington Irving Swift was born Jan. 29, 1747, and was the first of the family to locate in Mansfield. Locating at Mansfield Hollow, he there operated both a grist and saw mill and for a time was engaged in the manufacture of silk, and also linseed oil. His death occurred Jan. 10, 1817. His wife had been Sarah Fearing, and these children were born to them: Hannah, who married James Cushman; Lucy, who married Dr. Jabez Adams; Cynthia; Sarah, who died in infancy; George, who married Eunice Storrs; Washington, the father of Washington Irving Swift; Earl, a physician in Mansfield; and Fearing, who operated a grist mill in Mansfield.

Washington Swift was born in October, 1781, in Mansfield, and in early life he taught school. After his first marriage he moved to the farm which is located immediately east of his son's farm, the property being inherited by his wife. There he resided during the remainder of his life, engaged in farming and also butchering, and died there March 11, 1871, and was laid to rest at Mount Hope. His political connection was with the Democratic party, although he never sought any party recognition in the way of office. Possessed of rugged health he enjoyed life and his death was due to old age. The first marriage of Washington Swift, was to Hannah, daughter of Peter Aspinwall, and their family of children consisted of: Madison, who died when he had reached young manhood; Delia, who married Chester Storrs who was a farmer and died in Portland, Conn.; Harriet, who married Lucius Cross, a farmer, and died in Mansfield; Mary, who married William Cross, a farmer, died at Cobalt, Conn.; and Nabby, who was first married to Julius Royce, and second to Ephraim Herrick, and died in Willimantic. The mother died Nov. 26, 1835, at the age of fifty-six. The second marriage of Mr. Swift was to Mrs. Polly Barrows, who was born Sept. 16, 1802, a daughter of Jonathan Storrs and the widow of a Mr. Barrows; she died Dec. 10, 1891. The children of this marriage were: Christina, who married William B. Swift and resides at Stonington, Conn.; Washington Irving; and Polly M., who (first) married Edward Newcomb and (second) James Picknell and resides at Willimantic.

Washington Irving Swift was born Oct. 23,

1840, in the house that stands south-east of his present home, and attended the district schools and also assisted his father on the farm. From 1871 to 1876 he was overseer of the farm of O. S. Chaffee, at Chaffeeville. At the age of eighteen with a little assistance from his father he purchased of Nabby Royce what is now a portion of his present farm, and paid for it by hard work and strict economy. His father had confidence in his son's ability and showed it by his assistance. While in the employ of Mr. Chaffee Mr. Swift rented the farm to other parties, but in 1876 he located upon it and in 1881 erected the comfortable residence. The property consists of 220 acres and he is engaged at farming and dairying and has been unusually successful in his operations. The improvements he has added make the place of more value beside adding to its attractiveness.

Mr. Swift was first married to Mary D. Miller, a daughter of Augustus Miller, of Woodstock, Conn. Her life ended early, she dying May 28, 1877, at the age of twenty-eight years. The children born to this marriage were: George W., born in April, 1872, died Aug. 3, 1872; and Freddie, born in June, 1874, died Oct. 21, 1876. The second marriage of Mr. Swift was April 13, 1878, to Cleona Sophia Dunham, who was born April 9, 1855. She was a daughter of Jefferson and Sophia (Cady) Dunham. (Both Dunham and Cady families are mentioned in other parts of this volume). The children born of this marriage were: Florence Sophia, born Sept. 18, 1879, died Jan. 29, 1903; Mary Blanche, born May 22, 1881 died Oct. 23, 1902; Fremont Dunham, born Feb. 23, 1884, died April 16, 1885; and Theron Dunham, born Dec. 18, 1886.

Mr. Swift belongs to the liberal wing of the Democratic party, but is not always bound by party ties, using his own judgment as to the aspect of public affairs. In 1896 he cast his vote for President McKinley. In local affairs he votes for the man he considers best fitted for the office. During 1886 he was the representative in the State Legislature from Mansfield and was a member of the committee on Finance, his handling of the affairs which came under his notice at this time reflecting great credit upon the administration. During 1887, 1888 and also in 1899 and 1900 he served efficiently on the board of selectmen. For many years he has been a leading member of the Methodist Church, to which he contributes in a liberal manner.

HENRY T. CHILD is a leading farmer of Windham county, and operates one of the largest farm holdings in Woodstock. He comes of a very old New England family whose individual members have been men of the greatest integrity of character. He is the last of the line and a gentleman of the highest repute in his community.

Henry Child, the great-great-grandfather of Henry T. Child, was born May 28, 1717, in the town of Woodstock. His first marriage occurred in 1742, to Rebecca Bacon, born Oct. 9, 1722, and who died Nov. 17, 1753. Mr. Child again married, July 6, 1757, Dorothy Child, daughter of Nathaniel, of Thompson, Conn. Her birth occurred Sept. 18, 1730, her death April 17, 1794. Henry Child died Jan. 17, 1795. He was one of ten of the name of Child who took the freeman's oath on the transfer of the town of Woodstock from the colony of Massachusetts to the colony of Connecticut. He was esteemed as a man of solid character and of great influence in the town of Woodstock. Little is known concerning him, but the character of his descendants will justify the opinion that physically and intellectually he ranked among the best class of citizens. Immediately on his marriage Henry Child went with his brother Peter from Muddybrook to the northeastern part of Woodstock, which afterward became known as the "English neighborhood." Henry and Peter located adjoining lots; the former after spending a number of years in a small cabin in 1760 erected a commodious house which still stands in good condition. This house Mr. Child kept as an inn for a number of years. Often it became the resting place of the patriotic soldier in his marches to and from the battlefield during the Revolutionary struggle, at which times the hospitalities of the patriotic landlord were unstintedly dealt out. The old house was also frequently used as a hall of justice. The children of Henry Child were: an unnamed infant; Amasa; Levi, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, who died in the Army at Newcastle, N. Y., in the year 1776; Cynthia; Dinah; Captain Willard; Ephraim; Joanna and Rebecca, twins.

Capt. Willard Child was the great-grandfather of Henry T., and was born May 7, 1758, in the "English neighborhood." On Jan. 10, 1781, he married Lydia Morse, who was a daughter of Deacon Jedediah and Sarah (Child) Morse. The wife was born in Woodstock June 22, 1759, and died Dec. 9, 1792. After her death Mr. Child married, in 1795, Sylvia Child, daughter of Capt. Elisha and Alice (Manning) Child, of East Woodstock. Sylvia Child was born Oct. 28, 1762, and died in 1824. Capt. Willard Child died Nov. 1, 1844. Capt. Willard Child was descended from a stock both intelligent and enterprising. He was also allied by marriage with intelligence and moral worth; consequently his surroundings were of a healthful and elevating tone. He belonged to a class of thoughtful and substantial men who gave character and dignity to the age in which they lived. He was prominent and influential in private and public life. His opinions were sought in determining difficult matters in church and state. He lived in warlike times, and at an early age his surroundings were such as to awaken patriotic feelings. In the ardor of robust youth he enlisted in the service of his country, and, serving through the Revolutionary war; he returned to Woodstock and became one of the stalwart and honored citizens of that town. Capt. Willard's first wife was a sister of Rev. Jedediah Morse, the father of the inventor of the Morse telegraph. The children of the marriage, all born in Woodstock, were: Nancy, born Dec. 3, 1782, married, 1802, Elisha Child, and after his death, Deacon Dudley Child, in 1831; Hannah, April 2, 1785, married, 1804, David Morse, Jr.; Clarissa, March 5, 1787, married, 1808, Charles Thompson Child; Henry, Jan. 3, 1789, first married, in 1813, Lucretia Child, in 1818 Henrietta May, in 1823 Lucy May, and for his fourth wife married Betsy Buell; Luther, March 19, 1791, Henry T.'s grandfather. The children of the second union were: Willard, Jr., born Nov. 14, 1796, married, 1827, Katherine Griswold Kent; Lydia, July 29, 1798, married, 1821, Erastus May; Sylvia, Jan. 28, 1800, married Elisha Walker; Cynthia, April 2, 1804, married, 1828, Trenck May.

Grandfather Deacon Luther Child was a native of Woodstock, where he was born March 19, 1791. His death occurred Jan. 30, 1860, at the old homestead. His first marriage was Jan. 25, 1815, to Pamela Child, daughter of Col. Chester and Sarah (May) Child, of Woodstock. She was born in 1790, and her death occurred April 15, 1851. His second wife was Susan Walker, who was born May 22, 1792, and lived to the advanced age of over ninety years, dying in Stafford, Vt. She was a daughter of Leonard and Chloe (Child) Walker, of that place. Deacon Luther Child was a man of much intelligence and quite active in the affairs of life. His candor, amiable disposition and clear judgment rendered him a safe and reliable counselor. In 1824 he was elected deacon of the Congregational Church, which office he held until his death. His cheerful hospitality rendered his home a place of pleasant resort for kindred and friends, while the stranger was always treated with consideration and kindness. He was a Whig politically, and later voted with the Republican party. He is remembered as being quite a fine singer and led the choir in church for many years. The children born to him were: Clinton, May 3, 1817, died unmarried; he farmed the homestead; Sarah May, Oct. 18, 1818, married Rev. Henry Morse, and died in Union City, Mich., without issue; Asa Thurston, the father of Henry T.; Edward Morse, April 15, 1822, died in youth; Luther S., May 12, 1824, died in youth; Mary Ann, May 16, 1826, married, March 12, 1852, Jeremiah W. Leavitt, of North Woodstock; Pamela Harris, July 12, 1829, spinster, died 1899; Ezra, April 6, 1830, died in youth; Susan A., Oct. 3, 1831, married Albert Day, of Brooklyn, Conn.; Lydia Morse, the youngest of the family, was born April 4, 1834, and died in girlhood.

The father of Henry T. Child, Deacon Asa Thurston Child, was born June 7, 1820, and passed from this life Feb. 10, 1860, a comparatively young man. His marriage occurred March 11, 1845, the wife's maiden name being Roxanna Lyon.

The wife was born Nov. 13, 1823, in South Woodstock, and died April 21, 1896, in South Woodstock. She was a daughter of Deacon Moses and Tryphena (Kendall) Lyon, of Woodstock. The substantial characteristics of an honored father seem to have been the inheritance of his worthy son. After his marriage Mr. Child settled as a farmer in South Woodstock and identified himself with the moral and material interests of the parish. The wisdom of his counsels was manifest by the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his fellow-citizens. He was an officer in the Congregational Church, having been a deacon nearly all his life. A Whig in his earlier life, he became interested in the Know Nothing party and finally gave his support to the Republican party. He was for many years a member of the school board, was a justice of the peace, and did a great deal of work in that line. He was a successful farmer and cultivated one of the best farms in Woodstock. Whatever he had learned by study and experience he was always ready to communicate to his neighbors, and he therefore became one of the most active supporters of the different agricultural societies. In his earlier life he was connected with the Windham Agricultural Society and later was one of the chief promoters of the Woodstock Agricultural Society. Deacon Child was a very active and zealous Christian, ever mindful of the precept, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord." In his various duties as deacon in the Congregational Church, superintendent of the Sunday-school and leader of the weekly prayer meetings he seemed blessed with a peculiar unction from on high. In the management of ecclesiastical affairs his judgment and influence were esteemed of the highest value. The children born to him were: (1) Henry T. (2) Mary Elizabeth, born March 26, 1849, married, Nov. 29, 1875, John Newton Greene, of Thompson, Conn. Early in life Mr. Greene was a railroad operative in Goldsboro, N. C., where he was assistant postmaster and later treasurer of a savings bank. He now lives in Brookline, Mass. Their children were Henry and Florence. (3) Edward Moses, born Aug. 24, 1851. He graduated from the Medical Department of the University of New York and is a practicing physician in Brooklyn, N. Y. He married Caroline Nichols and has one son, Bradley Lyon. (4) Florence Augusta, born Oct. 31, 1858, married John Merrick Paine, of Woodstock, a survivor of Andersonville Prison, now a farmer of East Woodstock.

*Henry T. Child, one of the honorable representatives of this family, was born in South Woodstock June 26, 1846. His early schooling was received in the district schools, and was supplemented by advanced work in Woodstock Academy and later at Wilbraham Academy. His school life ended at the age of eighteen, and he returned home and took up the duties of the farm with his mother on the old homestead built by his grandfather

Lyon. At this place Mr. Child has passed his entire life, having a farm of 200 acres, which he keeps in a very high state of cultivation. He has of late years added many improvements, his home being a commodious one, with steam heat and other modern conveniences. Like his ancestors before him, he took up the duties of life and has borne his share of the burden of the day. He takes intelligent interest in any movement that looks to the betterment of agricultural conditions and served for years as secretary and later as president of the Woodstock Agricultural Society. In religious matters Mr. Child follows in the footsteps of his revered father, being a member of the Congregational Church, of which he has served as clerk and treasurer for a number of years. He was also a deacon of the church for six years. In political matters Mr. Child is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. In 1888 and 1889 he served on the Humane Committee. He was also a member of the body of selectmen for three years, and has for years been justice of the peace for his district. He has also served as constable, and has been a grand juror many times. In disposition Mr. Child is a kindly, cultured man, a good neighbor and an ever ready friend in time of need. Mr. and Mrs. Child are very charitably disposed and have the utmost respect and esteem of the entire community. Mr. Child has for several years been prominently identified in various capacities with the famous Fourth of July celebrations originated by the late honorable Henry C. Bowens, of Woodstock. He is also one of the trustees of the Academy since its reorganization, taking the place of his revered father, and acting as secretary and treasurer of the board of trustees.

Mr. Child married, May 5, 1875, Miss Ella Eliza, daughter of Lyman and Harriett Fitts, of Pomfret, Conn., for sketch of which family see elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Child have had the following children: Alfred Thurston, born March 10, 1876, graduated at Amherst College, 1898, taught one year at Tarrytown, N. Y., attended Columbia University one year, graduated in 1900 with degree of master of arts, was at Perth Amboy Smelting Works, and is now in Pueblo as assayist in the American Smelting and Refining Co., the largest of its kind in the world; Edward Lyman, the second son, born Oct. 6, 1877, a graduate of the Woodstock Academy and of Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., now has charge of the lace department in Barnard & Sumner's department store, Worcester, Mass.; Richard Lyon, born March 3, 1879, was educated at Woodstock Academy, became shipping clerk in optical works at Southbridge, and later at Worcester, and is now at Perth Amboy, N. J., as manager of the electric lighting department of the Underground Cable Co.; William Chapin, born Sept. 12, 1880, a graduate of Woodstock Academy, took a course in Amherst Agricultural College, and is now engaged with his father on the farm; Sarah Elizabeth, born March 9, 1883, died April 9, 1883; Henry Fitts, born Jan. 19, 1885, graduated in 1902 from Woodstock Academy.

MINOR HUDSON WHITE, a well-known manufacturer in the town of Vernon, Tolland county, comes of a prominent family, and is one of the leading citizens of the town.

Minor White, grandfather of Minor Hudson White, was a lifetime resident of Manchester, where he was born and where he married Nancy Fitch. He died at Manchester at the age of eighty-four years. Their children were: Henry Hudson, father of Minor H.; William, who is a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.; and Harriet, widow of Hubbard Griswold, of East Hartford.

Henry Hudson White was born in February, 1822, and died May 9, 1898, at Manchester, where his life was spent and where he obtained his early education in the common schools, supplemented by a course at the academy in Wilbraham, Conn. In Windsor, Conn., he was married to Cordelia Howlett, who died in 1869, when her son Minor H. was eight years old. Henry H. White was engaged in farming in early life, for many years quite extensively. In later years he became a manufacturer of paper at Manchester, had a cotton warp mill in Manchester and a paper mill at Boston Neck, in the town of Suffield, Hartford Co., Conn. A strong Republican, Mr. White never failed to take an active and discriminating interest in local affairs, and for three terms represented the town of Manchester in the General Assembly. He was an active member of the Congregational Church. By his first marriage he was the father of three children: Henry Kirk, now a merchant at Chester, Conn.; Alice Cordelia, wife of E. C. Hilliard, of Hartford; and Minor Hudson. Henry H. White married for his second wife Elizabeth Hilliard, by whom he had two children: Charlotte Florence, of Manchester, Conn., and Harland Hilliard, of the same place.

Minor Hudson White was born in Manchester Nov. 4, 1860, and obtained his education in the local public schools and in the high school at Hartford. His school days over he went into his father's paper factory at Manchester as a machine tender, in which occupation he continued for some two years, thoroughly learning the trade, and then making a prolonged trip through the west. Returning home he engaged in a paper factory in company with his brother and father at Suffield, where he continued for about a year, and then came to Vernon to take the position of superintendent in the factory of E. C. Hilliard & Co. In 1888, when this company was merged in the Vernon Woolen Company, Mr. White acquired an interest, and became superintendent of the new firm's factory. He holds the position of secretary and treasurer in the management of the firm, and is noted as one of the most efficient factory men of the town, having in his connection with this concern displayed qualities that demonstrate beyond doubt his push, energy and ability. Since he assumed management it has been developed from a non-prosperous business to a paying one, the plant has been greatly improved, the capacity increased and the output more than quadrupled. The surroundings of the factory have also been much improved; in fact, every beneficial change possible has been made.

Mr. White was married Sept. 22, 1887, to Annie K. McCormick, a native of Manchester, and to this union were born: Henry Hudson, Aug. 12, 1892; Mary Cordelia, Nov. 11, 1894; Minor, Sept. 30, 1897. In 1895 Mr. White erected the excellent residence at Dobsonville which he and his family now occupy. Mr. White is a strong Republican, and is interested in political affairs, though he has never had any aspiration for political honors. Mrs. White is a member of the Congregational Church at Manchester, and both are highly respected people.

HENRY JACKSON, one of the highly respected citizens of Mansfield Center, Tolland Co., Conn., was born Aug. 9, 1834, in Hampton, Conn., and was the son of Josiah C. and Lucy (Dennison) Jackson, and a grandson of Josiah Jackson, who was a most highly respected farmer citizen of Hampton.

Grandfather Jackson lived to be almost ninety-two years of age, and was a man of remarkable vigor. It is remembered that at the age of ninety years he was able to assist his son in mowing a lot, using the scythe with the strength and skill of a much younger man. His first marriage resulted in the birth of one daughter. His second marriage was to Esther Burnham, whom he survived. Their children were: Josiah C., father of Henry; Sophia, who died unmarried; Nathan, who died unmarried; Esther, who died young; Almira, who married Jared Badger, and died in Hampton; and a daughter, who married Eleazer Bingham, and died in Chaplin, Connecticut.

Josiah C. Jackson, the father of Henry Jackson, resided in Hampton during his earlier life, engaged in farming, later managed a sawmill in Chaplin, and still later located on a farm in the eastern part of Hampton, where he remained the rest of his life. His death, which occurred at Clark's tannery in Brooklyn, Conn., Aug. 31, 1855, at the age of fifty-two years, was caused by accident, his horse running away and throwing him to the ground, fracturing his skull. He was buried in Hampton, Conn. In his political belief Mr. Jackson was a Democrat, filled a number of town offices and was sent to the Legislature from Hampton, in 1850. Mr. Jackson was a member of the Ecclesiastical Society of the Congregational Church and was active in its affairs.

Mr. Jackson was united in marriage to Lucy Dennison, who was a native of Hampton, Conn., and was a daughter of Daniel Dennison, and her death occurred at the age of seventy-nine years, in October, 1876. Their children were: Horace, a farmer in Hampton, Conn., married Jeanetta Fox; Edward, a brewer, married Adelaide Mandeville, and was located at Jersey City, N. J., where he died; Henry, of this sketch; Helen, died in infancy; Dwight, married Helen Rogers, and is a wholesale merchant in Hartford, Wisconsin.

The early years of Henry Jackson were spent at school, and he attended the Hampton high school when Mr. Woodman was in charge, the latter being a noted teacher in his day. After finishing the course in school, Mr. Jackson assisted on the farm and also worked as a farm hand in the neighborhood. In those days agricultural labor was very hard, as many of the present implements were not yet invented nor even thought of, and Mr. Jackson did his full share of work. When he reached his majority he left home to earn wages for himself, and was employed by the month, spending one year with a farmer in Hamden, Conn., on a dairy farm.

On Sept. 21, 1862, Mr. Jackson was married in Windham, Conn., and on Sept. 6, he had enlisted in the service of his country, entering Co. G, 26th C. V. I., for nine months' service. The regiment was mustered in at Norwich, Conn., and was then sent to Long Island where it remained in camp for a couple of weeks, going from there to Louisiana, to assist Gen. Banks in the siege of Port Hudson. The regiment sailed from New York on the "Empire City," bound for New Orleans, and was three weeks en route, Mr. Jackson being one of the unfortunates who were sea-sick. A few days were spent in the great southern city and then the regiment went by boat to Carrollton, Miss., and took a prominent part in the siege of Port Hudson. After the surrender of that point, July 8, 1863, the regiment was engaged in garrison duty there until it was relieved by other troops, and its term of enlistment had expired. The regiment returned north to Cairo by boat, and from there by rail to New York city, thence to Norwich, Conn., and there they were mustered out a few days later. Mr. Jackson then returned to Hampton where his bride was anxiously awaiting him, and they began domestic life, he securing plenty of farm work in the vicinity. Until 1876 Mr. Jackson remained in Hampton but then moved to Willimantic where he was employed on a farm owned by E. A. Buck and Allen Lincoln. In 1877 he purchased the Dr. Swift place from Charles Southworth, a tract then consisting of thirty acres, though since that time he has disposed of part of it. He from that time has engaged in general farming.

The marriage of Mr. Jackson was to Miss Louise G. Thompson, who was born Oct. 23, 1831, and was a native of Vermont. She came to Connecticut with her parents, John and Lora (Slate) Thompson, the former of whom was a farmer and laborer, who died in Exeter, Conn. They located in Willimantic, but Mrs. Jackson lived in Hampton at the time of her marriage. One daughter, Lillie Louise, was born to this union, April 21, 1866, in Hampton, and Jan. 6, 1892, she was united in marriage to John W.

Yeomans, a draughtsman employed in the office of the Prudential Insurance Co., in Newark, N. J. Their children are, Helen Adell, born Jan. 24, 1893; Olive Hanks, born April 12, 1894; and Lucy Gertrude, born Jan. 24, 1898.

Since 1878 Mr. Jackson has been sexton of the Mansfield cemetery, and both he and his wife are regular attendants of the Congregational Church. In his political views he is very liberal and is bound by no party rules, supporting the man he judges to be best fitted for the position. Mr. Jackson is no office-seeker but is interested in all public affairs as a good citizen. His service during the war was faithful and he draws a small pension.

WILLIAM RUFUS MAY is a well-known and industrious farmer residing in the eastern part of the town of Pomfret, Windham county. His father was a son of William Pitt and Anna (Cook) Bean, and until the age of four years bore the name of Smith Bean. He was born Nov. 27, 1825, at Harrisville, in the town of Putnam. He lost his parents when he was quite young, and at the age of four years was adopted by Capt. Rufus May, of Pomfret.

Capt. Rufus May was supposed to have been born in Boston, Mass. He was a sea-faring man, captain of a whaling vessel, and followed whaling until 1824, when he came to Pomfret, purchased the farm now occupied by William Rufus May, and resided there until his death, Feb. 9, 1844. He was well-to-do, and is buried at Putnam. He was married Oct. 4, 1824, to Lucy May, of Pomfret, born Jan. 29, 1795. She died June 24, 1881, at the home of the present Mr. May's father. The marriage was without issue.

William Rufus May's father was adopted and came to the present farm in 1829. Here he was brought up to farm work, cared for his adopted mother, and remained all his life, dying June 27, 1886. He is buried at Putnam. His business was general farming, in which he was successful. He was a Republican, and held the office of town constable, and a few other minor offices. He was a member of the Baptist Church at Pomfret, and later when the church was transferred to Putnam worshipped in the new place, and was always active in church work. He was married Nov. 27, 1846, to Elizabeth H. Clark, daughter of Palmer Clark, a farmer of New York State, who died in Eastford, Conn. She was born Aug. 30, 1829, and died Feb. 4, 1877, on the farm in Pomfret now owned by her son. There were nine children by this union: (1) Lucy Elizabeth, born Oct. 28, 1847, died Feb. 4, 1858. (2) William Rufus, born Aug. 1, 1850, died Feb. 8, 1858. (3) Horace Palmer, born April 5, 1852, died March 1, 1855. (4) Harriet Anna, born Feb. 21, 1855, died Feb. 5, 1858. (5) Mary Augusta, born Aug. 17, 1857, is now the widow of Arthur M. Dodge. She resides in Spencer, Mass. Her husband was a school teacher, a civil engineer, and later a farmer. He died in Charlton, Mass., leaving no children. (6) Lucy Ann, born March 31, 1859, married Frank M. Moore. She died April 18, 1893, in Putnam, leaving the following children: Bessie Elizabeth, Sydney Dexter, Forest Frank and Wilfred Rufus. The last makes his home with his uncle, William Rufus May. (7) William Rufus was born July 30, 1860. (8) Harriet Elizabeth, born April 24, 1863, died Dec. 27, 1883. (9) Horace Constant, born Feb. 3, 1867, died March 15, 1868.

Wm R. May

William Rufus May was born on the farm he now owns and occupies. He was educated in the district school, and has always resided on the farm. He assisted his father in the management of the farm, and after his father's death bought out the interests of the other heirs. He has a good farm of 123 acres, mostly in Pomfret, but a small portion of it is in the town of Putnam. He has made many improvements on the place, including the remodeling of the house. He devoted considerable attention to dairying in time past, and for nine years, in company with E. E. Sanderson, operated a successful milk route in Putnam, Mr. May selling out to Mr. Sanderson, who still continues it. He is a Republican, but has never sought nor cared for office. He attends the Baptist Church. On Sept. 22, 1886, he was married to Mary E. White, a native of Ashford, Conn., daughter of David M. and Jane E. (Squire) White.

Peter White, the grandfather of Mrs. May, was a blacksmith by trade, as well as a farmer. He came from Douglass, Mass., to Ashford, Conn.; where he spent the most of his active life, finally moving to Putnam, to live retired the rest of his days. He died at the home of his son, David M., the father of Mrs. May, who was then residing in Westville, Mass. He married Lydia Trumbull.

David M. White, the father of Mrs. May, was born Dec. 30, 1831, in Douglass, Mass., and was an infant when his father removed to Ashford, Conn. He had limited educational advantages and when a young man was employed in the making of pocket-books, an industry which was carried on in Willington, Conn. Later he worked at the shoemaker's trade in Willington, and still later took up the trade of blacksmith in Ashford. He has worked at this trade in Ashford, Willington, Union, Westville, Mass., Woodstock, New Boston and Pomfret. His family purchased a farm in West Woodstock, on which he resided until 1889, when he disposed of it, and has since made his home with his son-in-law, Mr. May. He married Jane E. Squire, who bore him the following children: (1) Mary Eva, the present Mrs. May; (2) Harriet Emma, wife of Chester E. May, a farmer residing in East Woodstock, Conn.; (3) Burdette John, now a machinist residing in Westfield, Mass., and who married Mary Burdick; (4) Burdelle James, now residing in Westfield, Mass. Mrs. White died Aug. 1, 1902.

Mr. May is an honest, hardworking man, and is esteemed and respected by all. He has no children.

JOHN OLIVE is one of the prosperous farmers of Ellington, Tolland county, and own a fine place not far from the city limits of Rockville. He was born in Little Lever, Lancashire, England, where John Olive, his father spent his entire life in cultivating a small farm which had been in the possession of the family for many generations. Alice Hollis, wife of John Olive, died some years before him. She was the mother of these children: Samuel, a teamster, lived in Lancashire, where he died. Adam, a manufacturer of terra cotta in his native county, died there. Ann married Samuel Fletcher and has her home in Rockville. John; Ellen, who lives in England.

John Olive was born April 29, 1838, and had a limited schooling. At eight years of age his school days ended, and he was taken into the terra cotta works near his home where he was employed as an errand boy and received four shillings a week. When he was twelve years of age he found another situation in which he was able to earn twelve shillings a week. By this time he had become a strong and sturdy lad, and during the summer was employed in a brick yard and during the winter worked on a farm for his board. Several years passed in this way, when he was employed for three years as section hand on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railroad, then being built. When he left the railroad he went into the brickyard where he was employed until coming to the United States in September, 1873. The voyage was made in the "Adriatic," and Mr. Olive landed in New York after a twelve-days' trip from Liverpool with but little money in his pocket. The young voyager came directly to Ellington, where his brothers-in-law John and William Bond were living. They were employed in the mills at Windermere. Mr. Olive found employment with Robert Manock, the veteran soap manufacturer of Ellington, with whom he remained for four years. Mr. Olive had a profound desire to own a home, so he purchased a place of sixteen acres which was owned by William Bond, and is part of his present home. The farm was without buildings and he at once began the erection of a house. The skilled work on the building was done by others, but the painting and many of the details of the construction were done by Mr. Olive and his wife and children after his day's work was done, all working by lamp light. The lumber he secured on credit, and it was paid for promptly. In the early spring the family moved into the incomplete house. One night a driving snow was drifted into the house through the incomplete walls and covered the occupants with snow. At a later period Mr. Olive bought sixteen acres from the late Churchill Palmer, and there he has since been engaged in market gardening, dairying, and farming, and for a number of years ran a milk wagon in Rockville.

Mr. Olive was married Sept. 11, 1861, in Blackburn, Lancashire, England, to Jane Bond, born Oct. 10, 1833, the daughter of William Bond, a shoemaker. She was a good wife and mother, and died July 7, 1897. Their children were: Alice Ann, born Oct. 7, 1864, in England, is living at home; Mary, born and died in England; Martha, born in England, Oct. 11, 1870, is living at home; William J., born Oct. 29, 1874, is still under the parental roof. The daughters are members of the Union Congregational Church, and the son belongs to the Baptist Church. Mr. Olive is a good citizen, stands high in the estimation of his neighbors, and has reared a good family.

DEACON ABEL CHILD. The Child family is one of the oldest in New England, and its representatives have always been men of influence and prominence in the several communities in which they have made their homes. Deacon Abel Child, one of the leading citizens of Woodstock, Conn., traces his descent back in a direct line to Benjamin Child, Sr., as follows: (VII) Deacon Abel Child, (VI) Stephen Child, (V) Abel Child, (IV) Daniel Child, (III) Ephraim Child, (II) Benjamin Child, Jr., (I) Benjamin Child, Sr.

The great-great-great-great-grandfather of Deacon Abel Child, Benjamin, Sr., emigrated from Great Britain, becoming the head of the family in America. From strong presumptive evidence he was the nephew of Ephraim Child, who was born in England in 1593, and came to America in 1630, accompanied, as seems probable, by his nephew, Benjamin (I). He occupied a leading position in Watertown, Mass., and became a man of property, and is known to have been the personal friend of Gov. John Winthrop, of Massachusetts. Patriarchal in the best sense, we find Benjamin Child, Sr., to have been earnest in character, and in the promotion of that Puritan stamp of piety for which the Massachusetts settlers were especially distinguished. Mr. Child was of that order of nobility bearing the stamp affixed at the departure from Eden. Methodical and exact in habit Mr. Child is known to have been, and legal manuscripts carefully preserved at the present time by some of his descendants attest his familiarity with affairs and his fine standing in the community. Benjamin Child married about 1653 Mary, daughter of Griffith and Margaret (Fleming) Bowen. She died Oct. 31, 1707. Mr. Child died Oct. 14, 1678, residing at that time in Roxbury near Jamaica Pond, as it was then called, and his estate there has been the homestead of his direct descendants until within a few years.

The children of Benjamin and Mary Child were: Ephraim, killed in battle; Benjamin; Joshua; Mary; an infant; Elizabeth; Margaret; John, died young;

Mehitable; John (2); Joseph, died young; Joseph (2).

The great-great-great-grandfather of Deacon Abel Child, Benjamin Child, Jr., was born in 1656, in Roxbury, Mass., being the second son of Benjamin, Sr. The death of his elder brother Ephraim gave him the seniority in his father's family, and the British laws of primogeniture being then in force in the colonies he was thereby the inheritor of the larger share of his father's property. On March 7, 1683, Benjamin, Jr., was married to Grace Morris, who was born Feb. 17, 1661, a daughter of Lieut. Edward and Grace (Bett) Morris. Grace Morris was admitted to the church, Aug. 21, 1681. This union so complete was broken by death but for an exceedingly brief period, Mrs. Morris dying Dec. 10, 1723, and her husband joined her Jan. 20, 1724. The children of Benjamin, Jr., and Grace (Morris) Child were: Ephraim, Benjamin (III), Edward, Grace, Mary, Ebenezer, Mehitable, William, Pennel, Richard, Thomas and Margaret.

Lieut. Morris was one of the projectors and early settlers of the town of Woodstock, Conn. From 1677 to 1684, he was one of the selectmen of Roxbury, Mass., and during the same period was also a deputy from that town to the General Court of Massachusetts, and during part of the time colonial auditor. Lieut. Edward Morris was the first white person to be buried in Woodstock, and a plain stone still stands to his memory in the burial ground on Woodstock Hill, bearing the following inscription: "Here lies buried the body of Lieut. Edward Morris, deceased Septembr 14-1689." Hon. J. F. Morris of the Charter Oak Bank of Hartford, one of Lieut. Morris' descendants, has also had placed over this grave a heavy granite tablet bearing the following inscription: "Here lies buried the body of Lieut. Edward Morris, deceased Septembr, 1690. Selectman of Roxbury, 1674 to 1687. Representative, 1677 to 1687. Selectman of Woodstock, 1688, '89, '90. A leader of the settlers of Woodstock, and their first military officer. Mrs. Grace Morris died at Roxbury June 6-1705."

The great-great-grandfather of Deacon Abel Child, Ephraim Child, born Dec. 18, 1683, in Roxbury, Mass., married in 1710, Priscilla Harris, daughter of Daniel Harris, of Brookline, Mass. Ephraim Child died Nov. 22, 1759. His wife was born June 4, 1684, and died June 26, 1780, aged ninety-six years. Ephraim Child was the eldest of seven brothers who emigrated from Roxbury, Mass., to New Roxbury, now Woodstock. He removed shortly after his marriage, in 1710, and settled in that part of the town now called East Woodstock, and erected himself a house which is now occupied by Byron E. Eddy. Ephraim Child was a prominent man of his day; was intelligent, patriotic, enterprising, generous and self-sacrificing. His patriotism was kindled by the stirring incidents of the times, and he was among the first of the early defenders of the colonial interests. In 1753 he held a commission as lieutenant in Co. 17, in the 11th Reg. of Infantry in Connecticut, and was active in the Revolutionary struggles for independence. He was a man of broad views, of a warm and sympathetic nature, living for others quite as much as for himself. Earnest in efforts for the public good, he drew around him men no less brave, who shared in his sympathies and profited by his councils. In church affairs, Ephraim Child was conscientious, steadfast and reliable, a leader whose integrity and wisdom secured the confidence of his Christian brethren and rendered him a fit man to transmit to posterity attractive and valuable characteristics. His children were: Ephraim, Jr., Daniel, Priscilla, Henry, Mehitable, Mary, Esther, Elisha, and Peter and Johanna, twins, all of whom were born in Woodstock, Connecticut.

The great-grandfather of Deacon Abel Child, Daniel Child, born Jan. 1, 1713, in Woodstock, died in 1776, in Woodstock. His first marriage was with Ruth Ammidown, Jan. 1, 1747, and his second with Abigail Bridges. He was an industrious, successful farmer and spent his entire life in Woodstock. All of his children were born in Woodstock, and they were as follows: Daniel, Jr., died young; Zereiah; Stephen, married Mercy Chase; Abel, married Rebecca Allard; Abigail; and Daniel (2).

The grandfather of Deacon Abel Child, Abel Child, born Oct. 18, 1752, in Woodstock, died Nov. 12, 1807, in Woodstock, where he had always lived. He married March 11, 1779, Rebecca Allard, who was born in 1760, and died in 1820, in Woodstock. Successful as a farmer Abel Child acquired a good competence and was a prominent man of his day and one who was highly respected by the entire community. All of his children were born in Woodstock, and were as follows: Uriah, born Dec. 5, 1779, married April 2, 1807, Polly Carpenter, of Woodstock. Soon after his marriage he removed to Norwich, N. Y., and settled on a farm where he died, July 4, 1812, leaving a wife and three young children. Salome, born July 8, 1781, married Sept. 3, 1803, Abel Chamberlin, of Woodstock. Stephen was the father of Deacon Abel Child. Nabby Bridges, born March 28, 1785, never married. Rebecca, born May 6, 1790, married Jan. 28, 1822, Nathan Morse, of Woodstock, and one of her children is Deacon Nathan E. Morse. Abel, Jr., born May 6, 1792, married (first) in 1826, Dortha Child, and (second) in 1831, Sophia Child, of Woodstock. Alvin, born April 23, 1795, married in 1824, Mary May. Daniel, born Dec. 2, 1797, married April 9, 1827, Lucy Carpenter, of Woodstock.

The father of Deacon Abel Child, Stephen Child, was born April 21, 1783, in Woodstock, Conn., and died Dec. 17, 1838, in East Woodstock, aged fifty-seven years, seven months and twenty-six days. He married, Dec. 22, 1812, Abigail Carter, born May 22, 1783, in Dudley, Mass., who died Jan.

31, 1879, daughter of William and Hannah (Mayo) Carter, of Dudley, Mass. Mrs. Stephen Child died in her ninety-seventh year, with her mental faculties but slightly impaired. Though for several years entirely blind, her patience and cheerfulness never deserted her. She possessed a strong mind, remarkable executive ability, and was for more than sixty years a member of the church, and highly esteemed for her consistent life. Stephen Child was one of Woodstock's leading citizens, a vigorous advocate of temperance principles who banished from his home all alcoholic drinks. He was a man of strict integrity, his word being proverbially as good as his bond. All his life he was engaged in farming in which he was very successful. He was active in politics, being an old line Whig. His church membership was in the East Woodstock Congregational Church. He was a quiet unassuming man in disposition. Seven children were born to himself and wife, all in Woodstock: (1) Elizabeth Morse, born Nov. 9, 1813, married April 4, 1843, Rev. Lucien Burleigh, of Plainfield, Conn., a Baptist minister, and for a number of years a teacher in the Plainfield Academy. They have six children: Gertrude Elizabeth; Harriet Frances, deceased; Caroline Ella, deceased, who married Frank Tyler, of Danielsonville, Conn., and Lucien, William and John. (2) Caroline Carter Child, born Jan. 25, 1816, married Jan. 1, 1844, William Chandler, a member of one of the old and prominent families of Woodstock. (3) Abbey Eleanor Child, born Aug. 11, 1818, married April 6, 1842, Ashley Mills, of Thompson, Conn., and their children are: Abigail E., Nathaniel C., Ashley P., Stephen C., Charles E., and William C. Mrs. Abbey E. Mills died in Thompson, Conn. (4) Abel, born July 27, 1821, is the subject of this sketch. The fifth child of Stephen Child was (5) Hannah Mayo, born Oct. 15, 1823, died June 1, 1825. (6) Harriet Frances, born Jan. 7, 1827, married Charles Harris May, of whom more extended mention appears elsewhere in this volume. (7) Stephen, born June 14, 1830, died Aug. 25, 1833.

Deacon Abel Child was born in East Woodstock and received his schooling in the district schools, later attending Nichols Academy at Dudley, Mass., for one year, when his father died and he was compelled to return home and assist his widowed mother in the cares of the home farm. He was then but seventeen years of age but remained on the homestead until he was twenty-nine years old, when he married and removed to his wife's old home in Woodstock in what is known as the "Bugbee Neighborhood." There he has since lived and successfully conducted his farm of seventy acres. Several years ago Deacon Child turned over the care of his farm to his son, and is now enjoying a well-earned rest from arduous toil after a long and active business life. His entire life has been spent in Woodstock where he has been an influential and useful citizen of the town in all projects tending to its advancement. Mr. Child has long been a worthy and conscientious member of the First Congregational Church of Woodstock, and in 1862 was chosen deacon of the church, a position he has held for over forty years in active service for his Master. In addition he has served on the church committee many years, and given his time and services in numerous ways to the advancement of the interests of the church.

Deacon Child has long been an earnest patron of education, he has for many years been a trustee of the Woodstock Academy, and for many years was chairman of the board. Together with Henry C. Bowen he personally solicited subscriptions for a large part of the endowment fund, and in 1872 for the present building, and has served as a member of the building committee. Deacon Child has also been most active in the interests of the academy, and with the possible exception of the late Hon. Henry C. Bowen no man has done more or had the interests of the academy more at heart than Deacon Child. To him is due in a marked degree the credit of bringing that prosperous institution to its present high standard as an institute of learning. The first vote of Deacon Child was cast with the Free-Soil party, he being one of twenty-four who thus voted in the town. He has since affiliated with the Republican party in which he has been a leader and solid counsellor. He has held various important offices of trust, and represented his town in the State Legislature in the session of 1864, which convened in May in New Haven, he serving on the State Prison committee. Deacon Child has also served as justice of the peace four years, as tax collector two years, and as a member of the board of relief for three years. He was also one of the promoters and original incorporators of the Woodstock Creamery Corporation, and has since served as president of the company, and also acted as superintendent of the same concern for twelve years, and under his proficient management the business has proved very successful. He was one of the original stockholders of the Putnam National Bank, and has since continued as a stockholder in that financial institution.

Deacon Abel Child was married April 2, 1851, to Ellen Matilda Bugbee, daughter of Hezekiah and Jemima (Harding) Bugbee, and a descendant of Edward Bugbee, of Roxbury, Mass., and of John Holmes, one of the earliest settlers of the town of Woodstock, who was the great-grandfather of the famous poet and physician, Oliver Wendell Holmes, of Cambridge, Mass. This venerable and highly honored and respected couple, Deacon and Mrs. Child, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, April 2, 1901. To this celebration were gathered hosts of friends and relatives who wished to extend their respects to those who had been such kindly neighbors and friends. Many were the tokens of esteem which were left with them. Both the Deacon and his wife are very charitable and their influence in the community has always been for good. None can hand down to their posterity a cleaner, better record than they. Of such can any community feel proud.

The children of Deacon and Mrs. Child were all born in Woodstock, and were as follows: (1) Clarence Harding Child, born May 14, 1855, married May 25, 1881, Carrie Idell, daughter of James I. Slade, of Pomfret, Conn., and his children are: Chauncey Slade, born Feb. 1, 1885; Spencer Holmes, born Nov. 5, 1886; Rilla Harding, born April 14, 1894. These children represent the ninth generation in both the Child and Bugbee families, and the seventh now living on the Bugbee ancestral land which has been deeded only in the direct line of descent. Clarence Harding Child has been successfully engaged in conducting the homestead farm since his father's retirement. He served four years on the board of selectmen. In 1902 he was elected judge of probate. (2) Charles Carter, born Sept. 30, 1861, died Sept. 12, 1866. (3) Ellen Maria, born May 16, 1866, was engaged in teaching for several years and then Oct. 10, 1893, married John Richard Carpenter, an enterprising and successful insurance agent of Putnam, Conn., where they reside. Their children are: Marion Emily, born Feb. 9, 1899, in Putnam, Conn.; Eleanor Child, born July 1, 1900, in Putnam, Conn. The fourth child of Deacon and Mrs. Child was (4) Herbert Chauncey, born Dec. 18, 1868, died March 12, 1872.

JOSEPH MERCER, the agent and treasurer of the Willimantic Cotton Mill Corporation, in Willimantic, Windham county, was born May 22, 1853, in Great Harwood, Lancashire, England, where the Mercers had lived for many generations. His mother, Jennie Loynds, was a daughter of James Loynds, an innkeeper and dealer in cotton yarn for hand loom weaving. His father, Joseph Mercer, Sr., a hand loom weaver in his youth, grew up in the cotton manufacturing business, and became a successful manufacturer of cotton cloth. John Mercer, an uncle of Joseph Mercer, Sr., devised the process of mercerizing cotton cloth whence the name "mercerized" originated. This same John Mercer was also the inventor of the celebrated "Turkey red dye," without question the best thing of its kind ever placed on the market. Joseph Mercer, Sr., had twelve children, nine sons and three daughters. Five sons and one daughter still survive him. Four of the sons are all cotton manufacturers of Blackburn, England.

Joseph Mercer, the subject of our sketch, obtained his education in the public schools of his native town, and from the age of nine until he was thirteen spent half the day in the mill, the other half at school. At the age of thirteen his mill career began with steady employment at Great Harwood. In the spring of 1874 he came to the United States and secured employment in a mill on George street, Boston, Mass. From there he went to Readville, Mass., as loom fixer, and then to Merinville,

Joseph Mercer

R. I., where he was employed in starting looms for weaving fancy cloth. His next position as overseer of weaving in the cotton mill at Bozrahville, Conn., was given up to accept that of overseer in the Ginnell Mill at New Bedford, Mass. In 1889 Joseph and his brother Richard leased the mill at Spragueville, R. I., and began making cotton cloth under the firm name of J. & R. Mercer Bros. In 1894 Richard died, leaving a wife and son, Joseph Washington Mercer. Joseph operated the mill alone after the death of his brother. In 1895, at the expiration of the lease, which had proved very profitable, Joseph Mercer came to Willimantic as agent, treasurer and part owner of the Willimantic Cotton Mills Corporation. While he has made his home in the United States Mr. Mercer has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, but has taken no active part in politics. He is a member of the Temple Lodge, No. 18, A. F. & A. M., at Greenville, R. I., and also of the chapter at Scituate, R. I. He was one of the organizers of the Willimantic Board of Trade, and is at present one of its directors.

Mr. Mercer was married to Mary E. Cullen in 1876. They have three children: Hester J. and Mary E., now students at Brown University, class of 1903; and James M., who graduated from the Windham high school and is now in charge of the mailing department of the Ætna Life Insurance Co., at Hartford, Connecticut.

JEROME CLINTON NICHOLS, of Putnam, Windham county, scarcely needs an introduction to the reader. As director of the Putnam Foundry and Machine Corporation, and as an exceedingly active man in social and religious circles, he is widely known in his vicinity.

Mr. Nichols is especially prominent in the Methodist denomination, having acted as steward of that church since he was sixteen years old, and as recording steward since 1885, and being at present one of its very efficient trustees. Of this same denomination his family for generations have been members, and through them he has been connected with some of the most prominent church leaders.

The first Nichols of whom we have record was William, born in England in 1599, who came to Massachusetts and was granted land in Danvers in 1638. He married and had three children: John, born in 1640, died Oct. 12, 1700. Mary, married Thomas Cave, of Topsfield, Mass. Hannah, married Thomas Wilkins in 1667. Mr. Nichols was a man of considerable means, and resided in 1652 upon a farm embracing 600 acres. He died probably about 1695, his will being probated Feb. 17, 1695-96. His wife, Mary, survived him and was living in 1696.

(II) John Nichols, born in 1640, in Danvers, Mass., died Oct. 12, 1700. His wife, Lydia, bore him ten children: William, born Aug. 25, 1663; Anna, Aug. 24, 1665; John, Jan. 14, 1667; Thomas, Jan. 20, 1669; Isaac, Feb. 1672; Lydia, April 16, 1675; Rachel, Nov. 3, 1677; Elizabeth, March 16, 1679-80; Ebenezer, Nov. 9, 1685; and Margaret.

(III) Thomas Nichols, a native of Topsfield, died in Sutton, Mass. He married Joanna Towne, of Topsfield, and in 1725 moved to Sutton. Of this union there were eight children: Anna, baptized Aug. 31, 1696, at Topsfield; Mary, Isaac and Constant, July 27, 1700; Jonathan, Oct. 17, 1703; Elizabeth, Dec. 2, 1705; Phebe, July 27, 1707, and Thomas, Sept. 21, 1712. All save the first were baptized at Salem Village. Joanna Towne had three aunts accused of witchcraft. Two, Rebecca Nurse and Mary Esty, were condemned and executed. Sarah Cloyce barely escaped. All were daughters of William Towne.

(IV) Jonathan Nichols, son of Thomas, baptized in Salem, Mass., settled in Thompson, Conn., in 1763, where at the time of the formal organization of the town he was the first man to receive the title of Mr. On May 24, 1731, he married Mary Phelps, and they had eight children; Jonathan, born June 24, 1739, a natural mechanic, was a farmer, also constructor of the Boston turnpike between Hartford and the Connecticut State line, and was prominent in Revolutionary affairs. He was a soldier in the war, and at the Constitutional convention of 1818 he was a Thompson delegate. The first Methodist conference held in Connecticut, the sixth in New England, which met Sept. 19, 1796, was held at Mr. Nichols' residence in West Thompson. Elijah, born Nov. 25, 1742, died Feb. 22, 1839. The others were: Molly; Rachel, born May 17, 1749; David, whose son, Amasa, a Universalist, founded Nichols Academy at Dudley, Mass.; Hannah; Huldah; and Lucy.

(V) Elijah Nichols, Sr., a farmer, born in Thompson, in 1742, married in 1766, Martha Flint, and, after her death, at the age of twenty-six years, which occurred April 28, 1772, he married Mary White. He died in Thompson, Feb. 22, 1839. By his first marriage there were two children: Elijah, Jr., who is mentioned below; and Martha. The latter married David Haskell, and they had a son, Jefferson, who was presiding elder of the Methodist Conference for twenty-one years, besides other sons who were clergymen. Mary (White) Nichols died Aug. 14, 1827.

(VI) Elijah Nichols (2), born in Thompson, in 1770, was an extensive landowner and agriculturist in Windham county. His property he first held in company with his father, but in 1807 a division was made, he receiving $5000, which he invested in what is now called Stroud place, a 361-acre tract northeast of Grosvenor Dale valued at $6,000. The mortgage of $1000 which he was obliged to put on the place he cleared in one year; and at the end of seven years he had amassed $7000 from his investment. In succeeding years he became even more successful, and at the time of his death, which occurred March 17, 1850, in his eighty-first year, he was enabled to give each of his children $8000. With his father and uncle, Capt. Jonathan Nichols, he was among the founders of the Methodist Church in his town, of which he served as steward. By his wife Millicent (Brackett), of Thompson, he had five children: Faxon, an extensive farmer of West Thompson, died in 1862, at the age of seventy. Schuyler, for a number of years an occupant of the Stroud place, born Sept. 2, 1801, died in Thompson in April, 1879. Franklin, a man of great ability, in early life deputy sheriff of Thompson, afterward president of the Thames National Bank, also of the Savings Society, and director of several banking institutions in Norwich, married Hannah T. Fairfield; he died in Norwich, Oct. 30, 1890, in his eighty-sixth year. Millie, died young. Emeline, married Hezekiah S. Ramsdell, a Methodist minister. She died in West Thompson.

(VII) Hon. George Pickering Nichols, a wealthy agriculturist, and exceedingly prominent in public affairs, was born in Thompson, Dec. 14, 1796. He married Lucy Alton, daughter of Thomas Alton, and after her death, which occurred in 1826, he married her sister Polly Alton. By his first marriage there was one child—Mary, who married Samuel Crosby, of Thompson; she died in New York, at the age of thirty-four, in 1860. By the second marriage there were five children: Lucy, married Josiah Stiles, of Thompson, now a pork packer of Chicago. She died in that city in her sixty-seventh year. Jerome is mentioned below. Monroe, prominent in the educational and military affairs of our country, married Sarah Shumway, of Webster, Mass. For some time he was an instructor in Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass. At the opening of the Civil war he formed a company and entered as captain. He was afterward promoted to be major and lieutenant-colonel. He died in Minnesota, in 1868, at the age of thirty-four. George Harrison, is a resident of Thompson; and Emily, who never married, died in Chicago in 1898.

Mr. Nichols owned a splendid farm of 260 acres in Thompson, which he managed with remarkable success, putting in force many of the latest and most practical methods of agriculture. As a young man he was exceedingly active in politics, filled many local offices, and represented his town in the State Legislature. At first an ardent Democrat, he held tenaciously through life to what he believed to be the original principles of the party. When he finally became a Republican, he claimed that the party, not he, had changed doctrines. He commanded the highest esteem of his townsmen, and was made captain in the State militia, being usually called by his title. Zealous in religious matters he was largely instrumental in the erection of the Fisherville Methodist Church, and after the building was finally completed he served as trustee and steward for many years.

(VIII) Hon. Jerome Nichols, born in Thompson, March 6, 1831, possessed the rare ability of turning his hand to many different kinds of work with equal assurance of success. He began his business career as a shoemaker, but as indoor confinement disagreed with his health he later turned his attention to agriculture. He owned a neat farm of ninety acres which was later somewhat diminished in area by the overflow of the Mechanicsville pond. Besides farming he engaged in several lines of mechanical work, in which he was especially gifted. He often assisted in bridge building and repairing, and often did carpenter work for his neighbors in Thompson and vicinity. On May 2, 1852, he married Harriet Frances Alton, who was born in Thompson, Dec. 31, 1832, daughter of Benjamin and Salome (Joslin) Alton, of Thompson. Mrs. Nichols died in Putnam, April 3, 1901. She was the mother of one child, Jerome Clinton, who is mentioned below.

With the exception of a slight indisposition in early manhood Mr. Nichols was a healthy, robust man until nine years before his death, which occurred in Thompson, March 19, 1897. Mr. Nichols' forceful character and keen intelligence commended him to the favor of his townsmen, and, though not an office seeker, through the merited esteem of his fellow citizens he was elected at different times to nearly every post of honor in his town. He was assessor, member of the board of relief, selectman for seven years, and filled other places. In 1870 he was sent to New Haven, where he efficiently represented his town in the State Legislature. Politically he affiliated with the Republicans. Reared in the Methodist faith he was through life a regular attendant of that church.

Jerome Clinton Nichols, born in Thompson, March 13, 1853, attended the district school of his neighborhood until about seventeen years old. Evincing a keen interest in his studies he was later sent to a school in Putnam, and to Woodstock Academy, remaining in the last named place for about two terms. During his nineteenth year he taught school for some time in East Thompson. Deciding, however, upon a business career instead of a professional one, in the spring of his twenty-first year he went to Webster, Mass., and entered the pattern making and stairbuilding establishment of John D. Putnam. There he remained seven years, becoming thoroughly proficient at his trades. On March 25, 1876, he married Ann Jeanette Childs, daughter of Daniel and Polly (Brown) Childs, of North Oxford, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols have one child, Jessie Luella, who was born in Webster, Mass., Feb. 15, 1877. On Oct. 27, 1897, she married Daniel Burton Gilbert, of North Brookfield, Mass., who is now head clerk at Ballard & Clark's furniture store in Putnam. They have one child, Florence Agnes, who was born in Putnam, July 6, 1899.

On Jan. 1, 1880, in company with the late A. S. Truesdell, Mr. Nichols started a pattern making and stairbuilding establishment in Putnam. On account of ill health, however, he was finally obliged to retire, and in November, 1882, the Truesdell & Nichols firm sold out their business to E. M. Wheaton. Mr. Nichols then spent several months in recuperating and afterward engaged for a time in lighter work. He made the original pattern for the Plummer steam heater for the Reliance Machine Co., of Putnam; and later did general work for Mr. E. M. Wheaton. In May, 1884, he began working as pattern maker for the Putnam Foundry & Machine Corporation, where he has since remained. With this company he made rapid advancement. He at once became a stockholder, and in 1885 was made a director, in which capacity he has since served very efficiently. When he entered the establishment the original patterns were entirely destroyed and he was obliged to make new ones. He is now draftsman as well as pattern maker. Mr. Nichols is an unwavering Republican, and has always been intelligently interested in politics. Fraternally he stands high, and is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

J. HENRY McCRAY came from an old Scotch-Irish family, who settled in Ellington, Conn., about 1750. This has been a numerous family, but at the present time has only a few representatives in the town. The McCray family has inter-married with the best families in this part of the State.

The first of the name in this country was William McCray, who was born in 1702, and came from the North of Ireland to Mansfield, Conn., in 1759, and later moved to Ellington, locating on the farm now occupied by Wilbur F. Chapman. He was an extensive land owner in Ellington, and died in 1776. Mr. McCray was married to Margaret McMaster, who was born in southern Scotland in 1724, and died Sept. 16, 1804; both she and her husband were buried in Ellington. Their children were: William, born in 1750, died in 1836; Elizabeth, born in 1752; Reuben, born in 1754, died in 1811; David, born in 1755; Eleanor, born in 1757, married Samuel Thompson, Jr., the first of his family to locate in Ellington; John, born in 1759; Isaac, who married Roxanna Olmstead; Sally, born in 1764; Calvin.

Calvin McCray, the grandfather of J. Henry, was born June 12, 1768, in Ellington, died Dec. 7, 1836. His first wife was Betsy McKinney, who was born in 1769, and died March 7, 1814. To them were born: Horatio, born 1788, Calvin, born 1789, both went West where they died in 1849. Lathrop was physician of South Hadley, Mass. He was born in 1803, and died in 1867. Warren was a physician of Springfield, Mass, where he practiced for many years, and then returned to Ellington, where he died in 1876, aged seventy-eight years. Philo was a farmer in Ellington, where he died in 1883; Maria married Ebenezer Stacey, and on his death William McNall. She died in Manchester, Conn., in 1880. Chloe married Abraham Allen, and had her home in Enfield, Conn., where she died in 1849.

Calvin McCray, for his second wife, married Mrs. Sarah (Hill) Rogers, who survived him. Their children were, (1) John; (2) Henry, who married Roxana R. Kimball, carried on the tinning and plumbing business in Rockville, where he died October, 1887; (3) Samuel, who married Catherine White, was a commission merchant many years in New York, and returned to Ellington, where he died October, 1887; (4) Betsy, who died in 1843, at the age of twenty-three years; (5) Ann Eliza, who died May 4, 1840, at the age of eighteen years; (6) Jane, who died in Pittsfield, Mass., the wife of Charles G. Blackman. For many years he was engaged in business in Rockville with his brother-in-law, Henry McCray. Mr. Blackman died in January, 1891.

John McCray, the father of J. Henry, was born Jan. 30, 1816, in Ellington, and lived on the old homestead. He died Jan. 16, 1866, and was a respected citizen of the town. On May 17, 1743, Mr. McCray was married to Lora Ely, born in East Windsor, Oct. 1, 1815, the daughter of Ephraim and Lora (Foster) Ely. Previous to her marriage she had been a teacher for many years. Mrs. McCray died Jan. 9, 1879, and was the mother of the following children, (1) Charles D., born Feb. 24, 1844, died in Ellington, Sept. 4, 1873. (2) Frederick E., who married Miss F. R. Cook, was born Jan. 3, 1846, and follows farming in Ellington; their children are Emma R., wife of Henry Chapman, born April 24, 1870; Walter F., born Feb. 18, 1873; Charles H., born Jan. 15, 1877. (3) Ferdinand, twin brother to Frederick E., died March 8, 1846. (4) Eliza, born Feb. 27, 1848. She was educated at the Ellington high school and was a teacher. She is now the widow of Rienzi Hamilton, and resides at Ellington. The names of the children born to this family are Earl B., born Dec. 4, 1876; Jessie F., born Aug. 4, 1879, died Feb. 25, 1883; Lizzie E., born Dec. 31, 1882. (5) Sarah R., born Aug. 20, 1850, taught school for fifty-four terms in Ellington and the surrounding towns, being very successful in her work. She was married April 6, 1890, to Josiah H. Hall, a man of deep religious convictions. He died April 23, 1899.

J. Henry McCray was born in Ellington, Sept. 10, 1855, where he spent the early part of his life on the farm, and later was a carpenter, working for some time in Springfield, Mass. In 1885 he came to Rockville, entering the employ of Belding Brothers & Company, where he had charge of the woodwork at their silk mill, during which time he drafted plans for several residences. In 1902 he resigned his position at Belding Brothers that he might devote his whole time to architectural work. He prepared plans for the Tolland county Temporary Home for Children at Vernon Centre, Conn., the Prescott Block, Rockville, and many private residences in that locality. Mr. McCray was married Oct. 27, 1885, in Bernardston, Mass., to Minnie R. Hare, born in Guilford, Vermont, June 13, 1860, the daughter of Albert L. and Matilda L. (Barber) Hare, and the granddaughter of Stephen A. and Lois (Sperry) Hare, of Ellington, Connecticut.

Albert L. Hare when a young man went to Louisiana and spent about twenty years of his life there. He returned to Bernardston, Mass., in 1864, living there until his death, Feb. 10, 1900, at the age of seventy-one years. His wife died Nov. 17, 1887, at the age of fifty-six years. Mrs. McCray was the oldest of four children: Minnie R., Alcide B., born June 28, 1862, died July 10, 1864; Albert P., born June 28, 1862, of Springfield, Mass., where he is engaged in business as a merchant; F. Belle, born June 5, 1868, who is the wife of Arthur G. Gordon, of Hazardville, Conn. Mrs. McCray was a teacher previous to her marriage.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McCray located at St. Bernard's Terrace, in Rockville, Conn. In 1891 they removed to North Park Street, Rockville, where they have since resided. Their children are: (1) Burton H., born April 2, 1888, died Aug. 18, 1888; (2) Bernice H., born April 2, 1888, died Aug. 24, 1889; (3) J. Stanley, born June 6, 1892; (4) Christine Lois, born April 15, 1900.

Mr. McCray is a Republican, and at the present time is a member of the City Council.

CALL. One of the largest business houses in the manufacture and dealing of harness and horse supplies in eastern Connecticut is that owned and conducted by Charles F. and George H. Call, in Danielson, Conn., successors to their father, Henry S. Call, who for a number of years was prominently known to the trade. The family is an old one in the annals of New England.

The first family record is found in Charlestown, Mass., and Boscawen, N. H. The latter town was settled about 1734 by families from Newbury Mass., and from the fact that the Jackman family (with whom the Calls are closely connected) came from that place to New Hampshire, it seems almost certain that Moses Call lived for a time at Newbury and the records show that the greater part of his life was spent in New Hampshire.

Moses Call married Mehitabel Jackman and their children were: Hannah, born Sept. 6, 1751; Phebe, born Sept. 11, 1753; Silas, born March 17, 1758; Phebe (2), born Sept. 10, 1760; Timothy, born Feb. 13, 1763; David, born May 18, 1765; Daniel, born Oct. 13, 1767; and Nathan, born Oct. 15, 1770. Mehitabel (Jackman) Call died Oct. 19, 1809. She was a daughter of Deacon George and Hannah (Bishop) Jackman, and descended from James Jackman and his wife Jemima, who came from Exeter, England, to Newbury, Mass., her lineage being through Richard, Richard (2) and George Jackman. George Jackman and brother Richard settled in Boscawen, New Hampshire.

At the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, Lieut. Moses Call served on the Committee of Safety, was an officer in the Boscawen company and took part in the battle of Bunker Hill, being a lieutenant in Capt. Kimball's company in the Bennington campaign of 1777, the company marching July 4th of that year to oppose Gen. Burgoyne's advance from Canada to Lake Champlain.

Silas Call, son of Moses, was a lieutenant of Henry Gerrish's company, which was formed at Boscawen immediately after the news of the battle of Lexington was received, and saw hard service. Silas Call was also a soldier and an officer in the war of 1812, dying in the service.

Among the earlier campaigns against the Indians when the settlement of Contoocook was threatened and attacked in 1743 and 1744, Moses Call and a John Call were members of the military company for their defense.

Timothy Call, son of Moses Call, was born Feb. 13, 1763, at Boscawen, N. H., and was drowned in Lake Champlain, in July, 1804. In 1790 he was graduated from Dartmouth College, after which he read law and practiced at Gilmanton, N. H. There he married Abigail Cleveland, a native of Canterbury, Conn., who was on a visit in New Hampshire, where she met Mr. Call. The only child born to this union was Henry Cleveland Call, born Feb. 14, 1797, at Gilmanton, N. H. After Timothy's death, in 1804, the widow and child returned to her home in Canterbury, Conn., where, in time she married again.

Henry Cleveland Call, only son of Timothy and Abigail (Cleveland) Call, grew up in Canterbury, where he enjoyed the advantages offered by the common schools. When of proper age he learned the harness-making trade and located at Sterling Hill, town of Sterling, Conn., where he carried on his trade in connection with a tanning establishment, his house and shop standing opposite the Baptist Church. Mr. Call was a successful business man and was a man also of inventive genius. In the possession of one of his descendants at New Haven, Conn., is a certificate granting him a patent on a certain style of horse collar, this document bearing the date of 1835, and being signed by Andrew Jackson. The sample collar is owned by Call Brothers, of Danielson. It is said that Henry C. Call owned the first carriage in the town of Sterling, Conn. Henry C. Call married Phoebe Smith, daughter of Pierce and Polly (McGregor) Smith, of Sterling Hill, and nine children were born to them, five of whom lived to grow to maturity: Maria Dorrance, born Oct. 22, 1827, married Oct. 14, 1844, William Bowen Fenner, and had children,—Eva, Frank and Phoebe; Susan Emeline, born Oct. 14, 1830, resides in New Haven, Conn.; Henry Smith, born Oct. 29, 1832; Mary Eliza, died young; Charles Cleveland, born Feb. 12, 1829, died March 14, 1892 (he married Emily H. Kenyon and had one daughter, Ida. A second marriage resulted in the birth of four more children); Jane Elizabeth, born Nov. 1, 1838, married April 27, 1862, Henry Wells Graham and resides in New Haven. They are the parents of one daughter, Florence Jean.

Henry Smith Call, son of Henry Cleveland Call, was born Oct. 29, 1832, on the homestead at Sterling Hill, Conn. Here he grew up, attended the district school, learned the harness-making trade of his father and continued to work with him until the former's death, at the age of sixty years. Both his parents were interred in the Oneco cemetery at Sterling. For three years Henry S. Call carried on the business alone, and in 1858 he moved to Moosup and for a year followed his trade there. The next year he located at Central Village, Conn., and remained in business there until 1868, at which time he settled in Danielson. For a year he carried on the harness business in partnership with Geo. W. Sanders, but at the end of the year took entire charge, and continued actively at his trade until its increasing business was assumed by his two sons in 1883. Successful in business, Mr. Call was also held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. His death occurred Aug. 26, 1900, and one of the eulogies at that time spoke of his sterling honesty and uprightness of character. In politics he was a staunch Republican, although he never accepted office.

The first marriage of Henry S. Call was to Mary F. Gaskell, daughter of George B. and Roxcilla (Perkins) Gaskell, of Smithfield, R. I., born there July 26, 1836, and died in Danielson April 10, 1885. The second marriage of Mr. Call was to Addie E. Knight, of Sterling, Conn. The children of Mr. Call were Ella Frances, born Sept. 1, 1857, died in January, 1863; Charles Frank, born Jan. 20, 1859; George Henry, born Feb. 26, 1861; and Arthur Graham, born July 27, 1865, who is employed in a department store at Watertown, N. Y.

CHARLES F. CALL, the eldest son of Henry S. Call, was born Jan. 20, 1859, in Moosup, Conn., his boyhood and youth being spent in Central Village and Danielson. Until he was fourteen years old he attended the home schools and then entered his father's establishment to learn the trade. Since then this has been his occupation. Mr. Call is an interested Republican, but takes no very active part in politics. Fraternally he belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., and also to Aetna Lodge, No. 21, A. O. U. W., and Nipmuck Camp, Modern Woodmen of America. On Nov. 14, 1888, Mr. Call was united in marriage with Minnie L. Cameron, who died Nov. 25, 1888. His second marriage was Oct. 9, 1890, to Jennie M. Remington, a native of Coventry, R. I., and to this union was born one son, Howard Remington, Jan. 10, 1895.

GEORGE HENRY CALL, second son of Henry S. Call, was born Feb. 26, 1861, in Central Village, Conn. Until he was about fifteen years old he attended the schools of Danielson, and then entered his father's establishment to learn the harness business. On Dec. 27, 1888, George H. Call was married to Harriet E. Pike. In politics Mr. Call like all his family is identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he belongs to Aetna Lodge No. 21, A. O. U. W., and Nipmuck Camp, Modern Woodmen of America.

Ever since entering their father's shop, the Call brothers, as they are known in business circles, have been associated together with common interests. As boys they learned their trade side by side, and both showed unusual aptitude for it, so that their father felt that it would be in good hands when his declining health made it necessary for him to dispose of his business. The two brothers bought it in 1883 and since that time have carried it on, continually expanding. From a small shop in 1868 with a local trade, this business has developed into the largest and most complete establishment of harness making and horse furnishing in Windham county. Both proprietors being practical workmen their output is only such as meets the highest demands of the public. In 1885 carriages were added to their line of goods, and for a number of years they used as a repository the old armory, which the firm purchased in 1901. The Call Brothers are not only energetic and progressive business men, but they also are first-class, representative citizens.

CLEVELAND FAMILY. Moses Cleveland came from England and settled at Woban, Mass., about 1635, and Sept. 26, 1648, he married Ann Winn, and had seven sons and four daughters. These were: Moses, born Sept. 1, 1651, married Ruth Norton, and in 1687 moved to Martha's Vineyard; Hannah, born Aug. 4, 1653, married Thomas Hensher; Aaron, born Jan. 10, 1655, married Dorcas Wilson; Samuel, born June 9, 1657, came to Canterbury, Conn., in 1694, and married Margaret Fitch, July 25, 1699; Marian, born July 10, 1659, married a Mr. Fosdick, and lived at Charlestown, Mass.; Joannah, born Sept. 19, 1661, died July 2, 1667; Edward, born May 20, 1663, came to Canterbury, Conn., in 1716, and April 17, 1717, married Rebecca Payne, of Kingston, R. I. (He was the Hampton ancestor, and to his branch of the family belonged Hon. Chauncey F. Cleveland, who was Governor of Connecticut from 1842 to 1844); Josiah, born Feb. 26, 1667; Isaac, born May 11, 1669, married July 25, 1699, Elizabeth Curtis, and moved to Canterbury in 1701; Joannah, born April 5, 1670, became a Mrs. Keyes; and Enoch, born Aug. 1, 1671, died Jan. 9, 1702.

Josiah Cleveland, son of Moses, was born in Woban, Mass., Feb. 26, 1667, and there married Mary Bates. In 1703 he moved to Canterbury and died April 26, 1709. His nine children were: Josiah, born Oct. 7, 1690; Joseph, born June 13, 1695; Henry, born 1697; Mary, born 1699; John; Rachel; Lydia, born in Canterbury, Dec. 7, 1704; Deliverance, born July 13, 1707; and Abial, born Oct. 9, 1709.

Josiah Cleveland (2), son of Josiah, was born in Woban, Mass., and Aug. 7, 1710, married Abigail Payne. Their children were: Keziah, born Nov. 16, 1711; Josiah, born April 4, 1713, died May 7, 1793; Abigail, born June 3, 1715, married Samuel Adams, and died Dec. 15, 1743; Elisha, born Jan. 7, 1717; Lois, born Dec. 11, 1718, died Sept. 9, 1736; Mary, born June 29, 1720; John, born April 17, 1722, graduated from Yale College 1745, became a member of the Congregational Church, and located in Massachusetts; Lydia, born Feb. 26, 1723, died March 26, 1745; Ebenezer, born Dec. 25, 1725, graduated from Yale College 1747; Aaron, born Nov. 27, 1727, was the father of Gen. Moses Cleveland, who founded the city of Cleveland, Ohio; and Moses, born April 18, 1730, died Jan. 1, 1741.

Josiah Cleveland (3), son of Josiah (2), was born April 4, 1713, in Canterbury, Conn., and married Oct. 15, 1735, Sarah Lawrence. To this union were born: Asa, born Aug. 4, 1736, died Dec. 19, 1810; Josiah, born Dec. 3, 1742, married June 3, 1778, Alice Dyer, was a captain in the Revolutionary war and died at Charlestown, Mass., June 28, 1843; Moses, born June 26, 1744; Mary, born Jan. 6, 1747; Lydia, born May 25, 1751, died Sept. 30, 1754. Sarah Lawrence Cleveland died Feb. 6, 1755, and Josiah's second marriage was June 4, 1755, to Widow Joanna Brewster, daughter of Edward and Thankful Waldo. She died April 4, 1803. Three children were born to this marriage: Lydia, born Feb. 13, 1757, was married Aug. 29, 1816, to a Mr. Phelps; Thankful, born Dec. 30, 1759, was married Jan. 13, 1782, to Thaddeus Palmer; and Abigail, born Feb. 9, 1762, died May 21, 1838. She married (first), in Gilmanton, N. H., Timothy Call, and after his death returned to Canterbury, where she later became the wife of Cornelius Adams, of that town.

PIKE, James Pike, the discoverer of a process of dyeing black, which for permanency and general excellence has no equal, and who organized the Sterling Dye & Finishing Co., which has met with phenomenal success, was a worthy representative of a family that has held an honorable place in New England for 150 years. Through the latter half of the eighteenth century there resided in the town of Sturbridge, Mass., several families by the name of Pike. The children of John and Mahetabel Pike are of record there: Mehitabel, John, Ebenezer, Lydia, Ruth, Abigail and Lois, all born between 1758 and 1779, inclusive.

Jonas Pike, the great-grandfather of James Pike, of Sterling, Conn., was married in Sturbridge, May 7, 1767, to Mary Howard, and their children were: Anna, born May 18, 1770; Ephraim, born March 7, 1772; David (not on record); Jesse, born June 28, 1774; and Jonas, born May 25, 1777 (a Jonas Pike is of record in Sturbridge as dying Feb. 24, 1781). It is recorded in Sturbridge that "Jonas Pike, of Windham, Conn., and Peggy Turner were married May 30, 1804, and that Mary H. and Jonas, their children, were born Feb. 18, 1805, and March 14, 1809, respectively. This Peggy Turner was probably the Margaret Turner born in 1780, daughter of George, as Margaret is referred to in the genealogies of the families of Medfield, Mass., as perhaps marrying Jonas Pike, of Sturbridge. George Turner, it appears, was a deserter from the British army during the war of the Revolution, and until the war was over secreted himself about Medfield, where he married Amy Clark. He is said to have been a gardener to the Duke of Argyll before entering the army.

There is a family tradition that Jonas Pike, great-grandfather of James, of Sterling, Conn., married a descendant of William White, of the "Mayflower," through the latter's son, Peregrine White. Peregrine White was born Nov. 20, 1620, in the cabin of the "Mayflower" as she lay in Cape Cod Harbor, and was the first white child born in New England. William White, of the "Mayflower," was the son of Bishop John White, and was married in Leyden, Holland, July 1, 1612, to Susanna Fuller, a sister of Samuel Fuller, also a passenger in the "Mayflower." Peregrine White married, about 1647, Sarah, daughter of William and Elizabeth Bassett.

David Pike, son of Jonas Pike, of Sturbridge, Mass., married Elizabeth Pitman, of Newport, R. I. Their two sons were: William and James Pitman; and their daughters were: Lucy, who married David Bayless; and Nancy, who married Abijah Prouty.

William Pike left Sturbridge in 1810 and settled in Sterling, Conn. He learned from his father, who was by trade a hatter, the art of coloring. In the year 1811 he began the dyeing of cotton yarns, and later assumed charge of the dye house of the Sterling Manufacturing Company. Removing to Pawtucket, he introduced the bleaching of cottons by chlorine, and thus superseded the old and primitive method.

James Pike, son of William, was born in Sterling, Conn., Dec. 31, 1826. After a season at the public schools he became a pupil of the Plainfield Academy (then a flourishing institution), and also a student at the Scituate Seminary. Soon after leaving school he entered the employ of the Sterling Manufacturing Company, and subsequently aided his father in the manufacture of chemicals. Meanwhile by a series of experiments he discovered a process of coloring black which for permanency and general excellence is superior to any other in use. He at once (1880), organized the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Company, in which he held a controlling interest and was agent until his death in 1890.

On May 10, 1853, Mr. Pike was married to Mary E. Shepard, of Brooklyn, Conn., a daughter of Abram and Hannah (Webb) Shepard. Abram Shepard was born in Plainfield, Windham county, Conn., in 1806, a son of John Shepard, and a descendant in the fourth generation from Isaac Shepard, one of the first settlers of the town of Plainfield. Abram Shepard settled in Brooklyn, Conn., in 1837, and followed farming and merchandising until his death in 1877. He had children: Harriet; Edward; Mary E. (who married James Pike, the father of Mrs. George H. Call); Maria, who married Duncan Cameron; Esther A.; John and Henry. To James and Mary E. Pike were born: James Edward, who since his father's death has been agent of the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co.; Lydia Campbell, wife of Claramon Hunt; Mary Esther; Harriet Elizabeth, wife of George H. Call; and Annie M., deceased. Mr. Pike was a Republican in politics. He served as railroad commissioner from 1868 to 1871, held several town offices, and while a member of the State Legislature served on the committee on Banks. He was a member of Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., of Danielson, and of Columbia Commandery, of Norwich. Religiously he was a supporter of the Congregational Church. He died Aug. 26, 1890, in the sixty-fourth year of his age.

Jeremiah Pike, probably son of James and Rachel, had a number of children born to him at Reading, and with his family came to Framingham before its incorporation, and their neighborhood was styled "Pike Row." Framingham, Mass., was not incorporated until 1700, although the place was known as Framingham plantation in 1670, and had received a grant of land as early as 1640. James Pike and his wives, Naomi and Sarah, were of Reading, and perhaps he was the James received into the Charlestown Church, 1647; probably also of Cambridge, where he had a son, John, born Jan. 1, 1653-54; at Reading were born Zachariah and others. [See Barry's Framingham, 1847.] There are evidences pointing to a relationship between the Pikes of Framingham and Sturbridge.

GEORGE FIELD HOLBROOK, an active citizen and efficient deputy sheriff of Windham county, is a descendant of one of the ancient families of New England.

In 1624 a substantial colony from Weymouth, Dorsetshire, England, settled and gave the name of their home town to their settlement in New England. In the following year another company from the same place joined the colony. Morse, in his genealogy of the family, is of the opinion that Thomas and John Holbrook, brothers, came with the first colony. These brothers seem to have removed about 1643 to Seekonk. The children of John Holbrook (1), the ancestor of the branch of the Holbrook family under consideration, were: Thomas, born in 1627 at Weymouth; Richard; Margaret; John (2); Daniel; Samuel; and Nathaniel. John Holbrook (2) was a tanner of Roxbury in 1667, and in 1671 was of Dorchester. His children were: John (3), born in 1671; Elizabeth, born April 6, 1670, married, March 10, 1691-92, Joseph Mayo; Abigail, born Aug. 27, 1674; Daniel, born March 15, 1676, married, May 29, 1696; Elizabeth Seaver. The widow of John (2) (Elizabeth) married Richard Hall, of Roxbury, May 22, 1679.

(III) John Holbrook (3), born in 1671, married, Sept. 24, 16—, Mary Cheney. He settled in Roxbury, where he took the freeman's oath April 16, 1690. He married (second) Aug. 19, 1714, Mrs. Sarah Ruggles, and died Sept. 26, 1735. His children were: John (4), born June 20, 1692; Elizabeth; Mary; Hannah; Ebenezer; Mehitable; Martha; Sarah; Margaret; and Ralph.

(IV) Ebenezer, son of John (3) and brother of Capt. John (4), married Mehitable Warner, daughter of Samuel and Mehitable (Saben) Warner. He settled in Pomfret, near Abington, where he was a land owner and farmer. Here he was a deacon in the church and otherwise prominent in religious matters. He died Jan. 6, 1768, aged seventy-three years. His wife died Feb. 2, 1789, at the age of ninety-one years, and was buried by the side of her husband in Pomfret cemetery, known as the Saben cemetery. Their children were: John (5), born June 22, 1720, died July 11, 1720; Mary, born Sept. 23, 1721, died Oct. 14, 1763; Mehitable, born March 12, 1723; Ebenezer, born Jan. 24, 1724, died Sept. 19, 1808; Elizabeth, born Jan. 13, 1726, died July 11, 1763; John, born April 29, 1729, died July 3 (or 31), 1778; Hannah, born May 19, 1731, married Josiah Chandler, died May 19, 17—; Sarah, born Aug. 28, 1733, married Thomas Cotton; Martha, born Oct. 14, 1735, died Sept. 14, 1762; Esther, born July 17, 1737, married a Mr. Champlain; Ruth, born Aug. 6 or 8, 1739; Anna, born March 14, 1741, died Nov. 6, 1762; and Peggy, born Oct. 19, 1744, died Oct. 5, 1746.

(V) Deacon John Holbrook (5), son of Deacon Ebenezer, born April 29, 1729, married Rebecca Choate, Dec. 13, 1758. He became a member of the church in 1760, and a deacon in 1766. He died from the effects of a fall from a horse, July 3 (or 31), 1778; his son George was in his arms and unhurt. His widow married Zephaniah Ingalls for her second husband, and died Feb. 9, 1808, in her seventy-third year. Deacon John Holbrook's children were: Henry, born April 17, 1760, died Jan. 26, 1770; Willard, born Oct. 14, 1761, died Feb. 7, 1770; Nehemiah, born July 10, 1763, died Feb. 10, 1770; Mary, born May 19, 1765, died Jan. 24, 1770; Samuel, born Aug. 27, 1766; Anna, born March 10, 1768, married Alfred Kingsbury, and died Sept. 20, 1807; John (6), born Dec. 31, 1769, married Lucy Kingsbury; Mary, born Oct. 6, 1771, died Dec. 29, 1772; George, born Jan. 2, 1774, died Nov. 8, 1856, at Abington, Conn.; Rebecca, born Aug. 28, 1776, married Ichabod Bliss, and died Oct. 17, 1864; and Sarah, born March 13, 1778.

(VI) George Holbrook, the son of Deacon John, born in the town of Pomfret Jan. 2, 1774, was a farmer and owned land near Abington, where he spent his entire life. He was in the war of 1812 and served at New London. He was afterward a pensioner. His death occurred Nov. 8, 1856. He married Ruth Field April 17, 1800. She was born at Cranston, R. I., Nov. 16, 1774, and died March 20, 1864. Their children were: George W., born March 2, 1801, died Feb. 4, 1806; John Field, born Sept. 17, 1803, died Jan. 28, 1806; Sarah Ann, born Aug. 11, 1802, died May 2, 1826; George Washington, born March 5, 1807, died May 15, 1874.

(VII) George Washington Holbrook, the father of George Field, born on the old Holbrook homestead, was a miller and farmer by occupation. His whole life was passed in Pomfret, where he died, and was buried in the Saben cemetery. He gave his political support to the Whig party until its dissolution, and then became a Republican. On Nov. 28, 1833, he married Sarah Stafford, who died June 11, 1880, aged sixty-six years. She was a good woman, a faithful wife, an affectionate mother and a power for good in the neighborhood. The children of this couple were: (1) George F., born March 2, 1835, died March 15, 1842. (2) Sarah Ann, born Aug. 7, 1836, married (first) Dec. 5, 1853, Alonzo Capwell, who died in October, 1872, leaving two children—Nellie E. Capwell, born March 4, 1856, married Milton Underwood, of Union; Charles F. Capwell, born Dec. 2, 1863, died June 30, 1899. Sarah Ann married (second) Nathan H. Twist, June 16, 1873. Their children are Esther C., Alonzo and Dwight. (3) Ruth Medelia, born Sept. 20, 1839, married Edwin Botham, June, 1857. (4) George Field, born Aug. 22, 1843. The children of Ruth M. (Holbrook) and Edwin Botham, of Hampton, Conn., are Albert Edwin; Frank Roswell; Mary Emma; Ruth McClellan; Hiram H.; Harry; Elisha Fuller; Irving; Elmer and Ella (twins); and Herbert.

(VIII) George Field Holbrook, the subject proper of this sketch, was educated in the district schools of Abington, and grew up on the farm which his ancestors had cultivated for generations. On Sept. 5, 1861, when but eighteen years old, he enlisted in Co. K, 7th C. V. I. Capt. Burton and later Capt. Jerome Toutellotte were his company commanders. Col. James R. Hawley commanded the regiment. At Fort Wagner, July 11, 1863, Mr. Holbrook was wounded in the hips and captured, remaining a prisoner at Columbia, S. C., in Libby and at Belle Isle, Va., until March 14, 1864 (he was on Belle Island most of the time), when he was paroled and sent to Annapolis, Md. Later he was sent to United States General Hospital at New Haven, Conn., where he was nurse until the expiration of his enlistment, on Sept. 12, 1864, when he was honorably discharged. He then returned to the homestead and engaged in farming, teaming and contract work. In 1895 he was appointed one of the deputy sheriffs of Windham county by Sheriff C. B. Pomeroy, of Willimantic, and later by P. B. Sibley, of Danielson. He is a staunch Republican and a member of the G. A. R., A. G. Warner Post of Putnam, and of Wolfden Grange, of Pomfret. He served as tax collector of Pomfret two years.

On December 29, 1866, George Field Holbrook married Delia M. Nye, who was born at Abington, Conn., Sept. 25, 1842, daughter of Job and Eunice (Falkner) Nye, and granddaughter of Caleb Nye and Samuel Falkner. Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook are the parents of five children: Charles Elisha, born July 17, died Sept. 11, 1870; George Caleb, born July 17, 1870, was an electrician and machinist at Providence, now in Woonsocket, R. I. On Nov. 27, 1890, he married Mary Ann Long, of Whitinsville, Mass., daughter of William and Abigail (Hall) Long. Henry Nye, born June 2, 1878, is at home. Mary Safford, born Jan. 25, 1880, died Jan. 8, 1885; Ruth Esther, born June 10, 1881, is a trained nurse.

JAMES PERKINS, a retired merchant of Danielson, Windham county, and at present president of the Windham County Savings Bank, is one of the town's substantial and esteemed citizens. He descends from an early New England settler, John Perkins, through the following line: John, John (2), Isaac, Abraham, James, James (2), James (3), James A., Lyman and James.

John Perkins, Sr., as he is called in the records, the emigrant ancestor of many of the family in this country, according to family tradition, was born in 1590, in Newent, Gloucestershire, England. He was among the earliest emigrants from the mother country, sailing from Bristol, England, Dec. 1, 1630, in the ship "Lion," bound for Boston, in America, taking with him his wife and five children. The ship anchored before Boston, Feb. 6, 1631. Mr. Perkins resided in Boston two years, and became one of the leading men of Ipswich, Mass.; was several times deputy to the General Court, and held other offices of trust. He died in 1654. The children born to John Perkins and wife were: John, Thomas, Elizabeth, Mary, Jacob and Lydia.

John Perkins (2), son of John the settler, came with the family to Boston, and with others of the household removed to Ipswich in 1633. About 1635 he married Elizabeth Whitgift. Mr. Perkins became a large land owner in Ipswich, and opened the first public house in the town; was quartermaster of the military organization of the settlement, and was one of the leading men in its affairs. He was also engaged in the coast fisheries. He died Dec. 14, 1686, and his wife passed away Sept. 27, 1684.

Isaac Perkins, son of John (2); born about 1650, in Ipswich, married, in 1669, Hannah, daughter of Alexander Knight and his wife Hannah.

James Perkins

Mr. Perkins resided on a farm given him by his father, in Chebacco Parish, and held the respect and esteem of his neighbors.

Abraham Perkins, son of Isaac, born Sept. 15, 1671, in Chebacco Parish, Ipswich, married, Nov. 6, 1701, Abigail Dodge, born in Beverly, Sept. 12, 1681, daughter of Joseph and Sarah Dodge. Mr. Perkins was a farmer in Chebacco, and acquired a large property in farming lands. His farm and homestead adjoined that of his father.

James Perkins, son of Abraham, born in 1705, in Chebacco Parish, Ipswich, married, Dec. 14, 1732, Margaret Andrews, born in 1711, daughter of Deacon John Andrews and his wife Elizabeth, of the same place. They lived for a time in that parish, and then moved from Ipswich, Mass., to the town of Lyme, Conn., in 1736, where Mr. Perkins and his brother-in-law, John Butler, purchased, on March 30th, of that year, 294 acres of land. Mr. Perkins had a large family—fourteen children—only two of whom were born in Ipswich, James and Lucy.

James Perkins (2), son of James, baptized Feb. 3, 1734, died Dec. 19, 1760. His wife's Christian name was Anna.

James Perkins (3), son of James Perkins (2), was born in Lyme, Conn., where he grew to manhood. His death occurred while he was fighting in or about New London, Conn. His wife, Lois, was a native of Long Island. To this union were born three sons: David L. and James A. (twins), and Isaac. The widow, Lois Perkins, married Jacob Ely, a widower with three sons, and they moved to Harwinton, Litchfield county. An old will, preserved by Mr. Perkins, names six sons that were born of this union of Mrs. Perkins and Mr. Ely, namely: Jacob, Seabury, Calvin, Seth, Clark and Benjamin, making twelve sons by the three marriages.

James A. Perkins, son of James, was born in Lyme, New London Co., Conn., July 9, 1775. On Jan. 15, 1799, he married Abigail Newton, who was born May 15, 1775, and died April 14, 1845. He located in Harwinton, Litchfield county, where he purchased property, engaged in farming and where he died April 2, 1843. To James A. and Abigail Perkins were born: (1) Lois, born Oct. 26, 1799, died April 23, 1802. (2) Lyman, born Sept. 19, 1801, died Feb. 5, 1877. (3) Newton, born Sept. 20, 1803, married (first) Mary Humphreville, who died about a year after marriage; and (second) April 26, 1838, Caroline Griffin, born Aug. 19, 1813, died Feb. 12, 1892. He located in Hobart, Delaware Co., N. Y., but later moved to Bethlehem, Pa., where he died Dec. 11, 1885. His son, Glover Griffin, was born June 5, 1839, and died March 23, 1882; he married Mary Dunkermole by whom he had a daughter, Helena, who married John Tomlinson and died Nov. 25, 1898. (4) Samuel, born April 21, 1806, died April 21, 1848. He married Feb. 13, 1837, Juliette Griffin, a sister to Newton's second wife. His home was at Hobart, N. Y., where he died. Of his children, Emelia, John and Charles grew to maturity. (5) James, born July 3, 1808, died unmarried in Hobart, Oct. 30, 1835. (6) Susan, born Jan. 30, 1811, married April 28, 1834, Louis L. Butler and always lived in Harwinton, Conn. She died Dec. 25, 1849. Their children were: Mary (born March 7, 1835, married Homer Griswold), Samuel (born Jan. 21, 1837, died Sept. 19, 1844), Martha (born Jan. 5, 1844) and Seth (born Nov. 21, 1846, died Oct. 12, 1848). (7) Seth, born July 10, 1813, married June 14, 1847, Maria Wetmore, of New York. He embarked in 1849 for a voyage around Cape Horn to the California gold fields, but died July 2, 1850, and was buried at sea. His only daughter, Alice, born Jan. 6, 1849, was married May 10, 1870, to Amos Glover Griffin and lives in California. (8) Rachel, born Jan. 24, 1819, was married Nov. 5, 1844, to Merritt Marks, and lived in Harwinton until her death Feb. 22, 1846; their one daughter Rachel, is the widow of Augustus Alfred, of Hartford.

Lyman Perkins, the father of James Perkins of Danielson, was born in Harwinton, Conn., and there grew to manhood. Lyman Perkins always lived in the place of his birth, although during his youth he made trips through the State of New York, peddling "notions." He purchased property in his native town and there engaged in farming. Like his father before him, he was a Democrat in politics, but never aspired to office, although he never neglected his voting privilege. On March 2, 1831, he was married to Lucy Wilson, daughter of Stevens and Chloe (Miller) Wilson, born Feb. 28, 1804, in Harwinton; she died at the home of her son James, in Danielson, Sept. 23, 1894, and is buried by the side of her husband, in Harwinton. To Lyman and Lucy Perkins were born: (1) Newton, born March 12, 1833, married (first) in 1859 Amorette Cook, who died in less than a year after marriage. He married (second) Lucy Durkee, by whom he had one daughter, Edith E., who died Feb. 27, 1889. He died Jan. 12, 1891. (2) James was born Aug. 16, 1835. (3) Lyman, born Dec. 24, 1837, died May 8, 1842. (4) Lucy, born Oct. 22, 1839, is the widow of Lewis Wilson, and lives at Navasota, Texas. They had two children, Laura, who is the widow of Blake Gibbs, lives in Navasota, and has four children, Lewis T., Lucy W., Mary and Laura B.; and Samuel, born May 20, 1865, who died July 10, 1893. (5) Laura, born Jan. 23, 1844, married Darius Beech, and lived on the homestead at Harwinton, Conn. She died Oct. 12, 1869, leaving one daughter, Ella M., born Sept. 22, 1869, wife of Edgar Lewis of Chester, Conn. (6) Lyman born Jan. 30, 1846, died Sept. 10, 1848.

James Perkins, son of Lyman, was born in Harwinton, Conn., grew to manhood in his native place, attended the public schools and later took an academic course. In February, 1857, he came to Danielson and became a clerk in Edwin Ely's dry-goods store, which position he filled until the Spring of 1860, when he entered into partnership with Mr. Ely, under the firm style of Ely & Co. The store was then located on the ground where the Catholic Church now is, and the building at present occupied by the Sisters of Mercy, opposite the old Hutchins Hotel, was Mr. Ely's old home. In 1883, on the death of Mr. Ely, Mr. Perkins assumed full control and proprietorship of the business, which some ten years before had been removed to the Hyde block, which was burned in 1886.

In May, 1887, Mr. Perkins resumed business in the New Hyde block, and continued there until April, 1898, when he sold out to George O. Thomas. At that time he was the oldest dry-goods man doing business in Danielson. His long experience enabled him to cater intelligently to the wants of his customers, this resulting in popularity and prosperity. His business foundation stone was integrity, and he never lost the esteem of his fellow-citizens. In politics Mr. Perkins is a Democrat, although in no sense a politician. However, he has permitted his name to appear on the ticket for judge of probate and town clerk of Killingly, a town that is strongly Republican. In the borough he has served a number of years on the school committee, and is now serving his third successive term on the board of burgesses, and has also been a member of the board of relief. Mr. Perkins has been a director of the Windham County National Bank since its removal from Brooklyn to Danielson, and for a number of years has been a director of the Windham County Savings Bank, of which, since 1897, he has been president. In years past Mr. Perkins was a warden of St. Alban's Episcopal Church, in which the family hold membership.

On April 11, 1861, Mr. Perkins was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of William H. Putnam, a lineal descendant of Gen. Israel Putnam, extended mention of which family will be found in another part of this volume. To this marriage have been born children as follows: Harriet Eliza, born May 1, 1863; Lucy Isabelle, born Jan. 10, 1865; William Putnam, born Nov. 16, 1866; Mary Spaulding, born April 17, 1871, died Dec. 8, 1871; and Helen Putnam, born Jan. 2, 1873. On March 3, 1902, Mr. Perkins's only son, William Putnam Perkins, was united in marriage to Miss Anna Eileen Griswold.

WILLIAM DAGGETT RUBY. This influential citizen of Willington, Tolland county, successful beyond ordinary measure in business, a farmer of large estate, thoroughly familiar with the affairs of the world, a leading spirit in local politics, enterprising and public spirited, is the representative of an old Connecticut family.

Mr. Ruby's great-great-grandfather James Ruby married Abigail Smith Adams, the daughter of John Adams, second President of the United States.

James Ruby, Jr., the great grandfather of William Daggett, was born in Nova Scotia. He served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He married June 19, 1777, Esther Howe who died Nov. 17, 1834. To James and Esther (Howe) Ruby were born six children, namely: James, who married Mary Lamb, of Ashford, Conn.; Thomas, twin brother of James and the grandfather of William Daggett; Polly, who married Jason Ferry; John; Esther, who married Chauncey Ferry; and Lucinda, who married Daniel Steers.

Thomas Ruby, grandfather of William Daggett, was born in Union, Conn., Sept. 28, 1778. He was a life long farmer and a man of active temperament. He married Feb. 11, 1801, Betsey Fuller of Stafford daughter of William Fuller a soldier of the Revolutionary war. A family of fourteen children were born to Thomas and Betsey Ruby, namely, (1) Orilla, who married Paris H. Bowers, of Thompson, Conn.; (2) Amanda, who married a Mr. Howard of Palmer, Mass.; (3) Betsey, who married Nathaniel Sibley; (4) Annis, who married Daniel Steers; (5) James, father of William Daggett; (6) Esther who died young; (7) Thomas Howe, who married Almada Potter, of Willington; (8) Ariel Fuller, who died aged eighteen years; (9) Achsah, who married William Harvey of Palmer, Mass.; (10) Edmund, who died young; (11) Julianne, who married Wakeman Sibley; (12) Angeline, who married Samuel W. Moore; (13) William, who married Leonora Burley; (14) Harriet, who married Nathaniel Sessions. The father of these children died Sept. 8, 1855, aged seventy-eight years. His wife Betsey died July 1, 1860.

James Ruby, the father of William Daggett, was born in Union, Conn., May 13, 1807. In his younger days he engaged in the work then common among ambitious and energetic young men, that of peddling tinware through the New England States. His life pursuit however, was farming in connection with which he engaged in lumbering to some extent. In politics he was a Democrat, but he never sought office. In Union, however, he was elected to a number of the town offices. He married Feb. 3, 1831, Nancy W. Daggett, who was born in Thompson, Conn., March 8, 1808, daughter of Jesse and Athenia (Witheral) Daggett, who had removed to Willington in 1812. In 1831 James Ruby purchased the Jesse Daggett farm in Willington and there spent his entire married life engaged in farming. He was a hard working man, possessing that jovial, cheery disposition which makes many lasting friends, and few if any men of his extended acquaintance were more popular than he. His death occurred Nov. 12, 1855, and his widow is still living, a member of the family of her son, William D., subject of this sketch. The children born to James and Nancy Ruby were as follows: Emily A., born Sept. 13, 1836, married John A. Brown of Willington and later of Tolland; Julia F., born March 31, 1842, married Henry Edward Billings of New York and died in Lockport, N. Y., July 2, 1894; William D., subject of this sketch; Edmund J., born Sept. 24, 1847, engaged in mining in Nevada; Thomas W., born Feb. 2, 1850, married Olah Leach of Union, and is engaged in teaming in Willimantic; Minnie A., born April 8, 1853, married Eli Remmert of Stafford.

William Daggett Ruby, was born June 14, 1844, in the Willington residence which he now occupies. He was a lad of eleven years when his father died and business responsibilities fell upon his willing shoulders at a very early age. His education was received in the Willington schools but when sixteen years old he bade good-bye to school books and entered upon that active career which has made him one of the most prominent men of Willington. He continued on his own account the lumbering business which his father had carried on and extended it to great proportions. For many years he had a contract with the railroad and he supplied the Stafford factories with large quantities of wood for fuel. He has bought and sold land quite extensively. He early took up the care of the home farm of 200 acres and has since purchased several hundred additional acres of woodland. Using a modern term, Mr. Ruby would be called a "hustler" and it is his energy and indomitable will that have won for him a signal financial success in life. He has throughout his conspicuous career ever been ready to put his own shoulder to the wheel, and while at times the employer of many men he never shirked the arduous labor which his calling involved.

Mr. Ruby married March 13, 1872, Sarah E. Barrett, of Tolland, daughter of Corlis and Rhoda (Doolittle) Barrett. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ruby, as follows: Lottie B., born Dec. 31, 1872, married Benjamin Arnold, of Harwich, Mass., and died June 10, 1897; James W., born March 9, 1874, died May 22, 1892; Wilbert C., born June 18, 1875, married Alice B. Fenton, of Stafford, and is engaged in business with his father; Alphonso M., born May 2, 1877, is engaged in lumbering in Yantic, Conn.; Herman D., born Oct. 22, 1879, died Jan. 27, 1882; Hazel M., born Oct. 28, 1899, is at home.

Mr. Ruby is in politics a staunch Republican and has been prominently identified with his party in town affairs. He has served as a member of the board of selectmen since 1885, and has also been on the board of relief. For four years he was tax collector, and he has served as constable. He represented the town in the State Legislature in 1875, serving on the committee on Highways and Bridges. He is prominent in fraternal circles and is a member of the F. & A. M., and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Stafford, Conn. He is an attendant at the M. E. Church of Moose Meadow, Willington, of which his wife is a member. The family are prominent in the religious, educational and social affairs of the town and in public affairs Mr. Ruby is one of the recognized leaders.

W. CLINTON TILLOTSON, M. D. The Tillotson family of which Dr. W. Clinton Tillotson of Rockville is a worthy and eminent representative, was originally an old Connecticut family, and was later one of the pioneer families of the Green Mountain State. Four brothers of the name migrated from Connecticut to Vermont prior to the admission of the latter as one of the States. They settled in what is now the town of Corinth, in Orange county. All of these brothers, Jonathan, Joseph, Nathaniel and Charles left descendants, Dr. Tillotson being the great-grandson of Jonathan, the eldest.

(II) Jonathan Tillotson (2), son of Jonathan, was evidently a man of energy and industry, clearing large tracts of land and following farming extensively until his death. He married in his locality and reared a family of twelve children.

(III) Henry L. Tillotson, son of Jonathan (2), was a resident of and a prominent citizen in the town of Topsham, Vt. By trade he was a shoemaker, a business which was profitable and popular in those days, and most of the foot gear in the way of boots and shoes in his neighborhood came from the skilled hands of Henry Tillotson. In town matters he was prominent, a leader in the Democratic party, and as he was regarded as a man of superior knowledge and ability he would probably have been selected for responsible positions had his life been extended. Henry L. Tillotson died in 1866 at the age of forty-five years. He was a man of very remarkable memory, and as he was a great reader he became an authority on many subjects among his fellow-citizens. Henry L. Tillotson was twice married. Dr. Tillotson was the only child of his (first) marriage with Lucinda R. Ciley, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, and was laid to rest in the old cemetery at Topsham, Vt. His second marriage preceded his death about six weeks, and he was buried by the side of his first wife.

Dr. Tillotson was born Oct. 23, 1856, in Topsham, Vt., and was but a child when he was deprived of his mother's care, and a boy of ten years when the death of his father made him an orphan indeed. An only child, he was taken to the home of an uncle, a farmer, with whom he resided for about three years, attending school meantime during the winter seasons, and in the summer months being thoroughly instructed in farming methods. His fourth year of orphanage was spent with a son of his uncle, also a farmer. Dr. Tillotson even at that early age had ambitions reaching into a different life, and was glad to make his home with Jesse Dickey, an attorney at West Topsham, who owned a small farm and who gave the lad an opportunity of longer attendance at school and fewer farm duties.

When about sixteen years old Dr. Tillotson was still working as a farm hand, receiving $100 for six months' work. He then secured a situation as clerk in a general country store at West Hartford, Vt., where he remained for two years, receiving for his services $75 and $100, respectively. Giving up that position Mr. Tillotson returned to Topsham and resumed farming, attending school in the fall and winter. In 1877 he was enabled to enter Barre Academy at Barre, Vt., which he attended for three years, working at various occupations during his vacations, for the future successful physician was always a man of tireless energy. No honest work was discarded, he could swing an axe or perform any manual labor which would add a dollar to his store with which he hoped to continue his scholastic life.

It was in Barre, Vt., that Dr. Tillotson first began his medical reading, Dr. Chamberlain being his first instructor, and later Dr. Robert Lance, in the town of Woodbury, where Mr. Tillotson lived about one and one-half years. During his residence there he accompanied Dr. Lance in his medical visits and thus early obtained a practical knowledge difficult to get otherwise. In September, 1880, he entered Hahnemann Medical College, in Chicago, Ill., residing in the home of Dr. Alvin E. Small, a distinguished professor in that great institution. It was permitted him, during his vacations, to visit with Dr. Small, which was an unusual advantage to a young student. In March, 1882, Dr. Tillotson graduated from Hahnemann College and at Lyndonville, Vt., began his first practice. There he remained with much encouragement until March, 1892, at which time on account of impaired health, he removed to Vineland, N. J., where he remained with benefit for a few months, and then came to Rockville, Sept. 29, 1892. Until that time no practitioner in the school of Homeopathy had made any progress in Rockville. Dr. Tillotson may really be regarded as the pioneer and champion of that school, although his success has been won through his own merits. A stranger in Rockville, he was at first handicapped by belonging to a school of medicine which was anything but popular, and the unusual success which has attended his practice and the eminence which he has attained reflect the greatest credit upon his energy and perseverance as well as his superior professional skill.

In May, 1895, Dr. Tillotson purchased what was known as the "Deacon Johnson property," on Park street, where, in 1893, he erected an elegant home, and in April, 1899, completed another handsome residence adjoining it. The old house which had long stood on the property was moved to the rear, and now Dr. Tillotson owns three valuable residences in one of the most desirable sections of the city. In June, 1882, Dr. Tillotson was united in marriage with Fanny Kidder, daughter of E. W. and Jane (Bagley) Kidder, of Barre, Vt., the family being an old Colonial one, having among its members many prominent citizens. Great-grandfather Kidder was a captain in the Revolutionary army. To Dr. and Mrs. Tillotson three children have been born, namely: Ruth Irene, born in August, 1886; Kenneth E., born in August, 1887; and Lawrence V. E., born April 21, 1892.

Until the campaign of 1896, Dr. Tillotson had been identified with the Democratic party, but since that time he has affiliated with the Republican party, in national affairs, drawing no party line in local matters. Fraternally he is connected with the A. F. & A. M., Fayette Lodge, at Rockville, and Adoniram Chapter at the same place. Formerly he was a member of Palestine Commandery at St. Johnsbury, Vt. Both he and wife belong to the Union Congregational Church. Dr. Tillotson is eligible to Revolutionary societies, but as yet has not joined them. Mrs. Tillotson is a member of Sabra Trumbull Chapter, D. A. R. Dr. Tillotson is well known among his brother practitioners and is highly esteemed by both schools of medicine as a man of upright character and as a representative and public-spirited citizen, one who has been very useful to Rockville. He is a member of the State Homeopath Medical Society in Connecticut. When he left his native State he was president of the Vermont Homeopath Medical Society, in which he had served for five successive years as secretary. He still holds an honorary membership.

Dr. Tillotson is a self-made man and as such deserves all the more the success which has been brought about through his own efforts. Such careers are inspirations to those who are struggling with conditions that lack promise.

JAMES EDMOND PERRY. The glory of our republic is in the perpetuation of individuality and in according the utmost scope for individual accomplishment. Fostered under the most auspicious of surroundings that can encompass one who has the will to dare and to do, our nation has almost spontaneously produced men of finest mental caliber, of true virile strength and vigorous purpose. The cradle has not been one of pampered luxury, but the modest couch of poverty has often rocked future greatness. American biography thus becomes one of more perfect individuality, in the general as well as the specific sense, than does that of any other nation on the globe. Of America is the self-made man a product, and the record of accomplishment in this individual sense, is the record which the true and loyal American holds in the deepest respect and highest honor. In the case at hand we have to do with one who is prominently identified with the industrial and social life of the town of Putnam, Windham county, and whose genealogy betokens that he is a scion of a family whose association with the annals of American history has been intimate and honorable from the early Colonial epoch, while many generations of the family have lived and labored within the confines of the State of Connecticut, where representatives of the same went forth to do yeoman service in the great Revolutionary struggle which determined the independence of the Colonies and led to the establishment of the greatest republic the world has ever known. Such men and such ancestral prestige fully justify the compilation of works of this nature, that a worthy record may be perpetuated for future generations. We of this twentieth century, representing the most electrical progress in all lines of material activity, are too prone not to give due heed to those elemental valuations which touch upon the deeper essence of human life and human achievement. We can not afford to hold in light esteem those who have wrought nobly in the past, nor fail to accord honor to those who have given us an heritage of worthy thoughts and worthy deeds. Every person should take pride and satisfaction in perpetuating, with as full detail as is possible, the record of his genealogy, while there is a scientific historical necessity that such record be secured in America, particularly in cases where the lineage indicates identification with the national history from the formative period of the republic.

James Edmond Perry was born in the town of Putnam, Conn., May 23, 1851, and it is interesting to advert to the fact that the place of his nativity was the same house in which he now maintains his home. This house has stood for more than two centuries, and in it were born Mr. Perry's maternal grandfather, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather.

(I) The Perry family came from Devonshire, England, and tradition says they were very wealthy. The first of the name in direct line to James E. Perry to appear in this country was Ezra Perry, who with his brother Edward, and sisters, Deborah and Margaret, lived at Sandwich, Mass. That they were of good family is attested by their use of a coat-of-arms. The children of Ezra Perry were: Ezra, Deborah, John, Samuel, Benjamin and Remembrance.

(II) Benjamin Perry, fourth son and fifth child of Ezra Perry, was born Jan. 15, 1670. He married Dinah Swift.

(III) Eliakim Perry, son of Benjamin, was born at Sandwich, May 8, 1716. On Dec. 16, 1740, at Rehoboth, Mass., he married Sarah Joy, and their children were: David, Elizabeth, Sylvanus, and Abigail.

(IV) Capt. Sylvanus Perry, son of Eliakim, was born in 1741. He settled in Killingly, Conn., where he died in 1821, and where he is buried. On April 4, 1770, he married Rebecca Bliss. His second wife was a Whittemore. During the Revolution he did valiant service, and was captain of a company. Captain Sylvanus was the father of the following children: (1) Anson is mentioned below. (2) Keziah married George Wadsworth, and died in Spring Prairie, Walworth Co., Wis. (3) Abigail became the wife of Elijah Ormsby, who patented the first loom in this country, and who was more than a year ahead of Robert Fulton in utilizing steam as a propelling power for boats. (4) Betsey married a Butterworth. (5) Phebe was the fifth child. (6) William lived at Rome, N. Y. (7) George, who was born in Killingly, died in Vermont. (8) Rebecca married William Jones, and died in Killingly. (9) Sylvanus removed to New York State, and died there.

(V) Anson Perry, son of Capt. Sylvanus, was born in Killingly, Oct. 5, 1771, and there his death occurred July 28, 1847. He married Abeline Buck, who was born July 30, 1772, a daughter of Aaron Buck, a soldier of the Revolution. She died in Killingly March 15, 1867, leaving seventy-five living descendants—nine children, thirty-four grandchildren and thirty-two great-grandchildren. Nine of her grandchildren served as soldiers in the Civil war. Anson Perry and his eldest son both served in the war of 1812. To Anson Perry and his wife came ten children, of whom we have the following record: (1) Otis, born in Killingly, Dec. 2, 1794, died there March 15, 1866. (2) Charlotte, born in Killingly, Nov. 16, 1796, married John Truesdale, and died in Worcester, Mass., Feb. 5, 1875. (3) Anna, born Jan. 8, 1799, married Jason Wakefield, and died in Webster, Mass. (4) Lucy, born Aug. 22, 1801, married (first) Joseph Perry (no near relative), and (second) George Chaffee, and died in Killingly in 1876. (5) Rebecca, born Nov. 13, 1804, married Pennel May, of Woodstock, and died in Putnam, June 5, 1884. (6) Keziah, born May 12, 1807, married James Young, of Putnam, and died in Killingly April 1, 1832. (7) George is mentioned in full below. (8) David B., born Sept. 26, 1811, died in Oregon, Ill. (9) Sylvanus, born Oct. 15, 1814, died in Maine, Broome Co., N. Y. (10) William, born Sept. 2, 1817, now resides in Lindenwood, Illinois.

(VI) George Perry, son of Anson and father of James Edmond, was born in Killingly, Sept. 30, 1809, and he died at his home in Putnam Aug. 19, 1895. He was one of the progressive and substantial farmers of Putnam, whither he had gone to care for his father in his declining days, and after the latter's death he took charge of the homestead farm, near the Grove street cemetery, where he continued to be successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until the close of his long and useful life. He was a man of medium height and sturdy physique, and he retained marked mental and physical vigor up to the time of his death, at which time he was eighty-six years of age. In politics he originally gave his allegiance to the Whig party. His sympathies were entirely with the Union cause in the stormy epoch leading up to the war of the Rebellion, and thus he was among those who ardently espoused the faith of the Republican party at the time of its organization, while in his later years he evidenced the courage of his convictions and clearly indicated his attitude in regard to what he believed to be a blot on the national honor, by arraying himself as one of the staunch supporters of the Prohibition party. He was a man of strong individuality and distinct opinions, and he was a vigorous opponent of the Masonic order and other secret organizations, which he considered inharmonious with the true spirit of republican institutions. He was inflexible in his integrity, just and tolerant in his judgment of his fellowmen, and he held the unqualified esteem of the community in which he passed so many years of his life. He was called upon to serve in various local offices, including that of road supervisor, of which he was incumbent for several years. He was a consistent and honored member of the Congregational Church, and his venerable widow holds to the same faith, having become a member of the church in her youth, and having been an active worker in the same until the weight of many years compelled her to withdraw from the labors which she so loved to perform.

On Feb. 2, 1835, was solemnized the marriage of George Perry to Miss Eliza W. Buck, who was born in Putnam, April 9, 1811, daughter of Captain Joseph and Dorcas (Fairbanks) Buck; she is still living on part of the old homestead, having attained the patriarchal age of ninety-two years, and is revered and loved by the wide circle of friends whom she has gathered about her during the long years of her gracious and kindly life. Of the children of George and Eliza W. Perry the following record is given: (1) Elisha Fairbanks was born in Killingly, March 20, 1836, was married March 20, 1861, to Miss Mary Jane Randall, of Centerville, R. I., and they now reside in Putnam, where he is living retired, having devoted his active business life to the vocation of contracting and building. (2) Mary Eliza, born in Killingly, April 8, 1838, was married, Oct. 10, 1866, to John D. Wells, of Grosvenor Dale, Conn., and they are now residents of Putnam. Mr. Wells was formerly an overseer of various factories, but now retired from active business. (3) Caroline Dorcas, born in Putnam, March 22, 1840, was married Feb. 21, 1866, to Francis B. Chaffee, the owner of a fine farm in Woodstock, Conn., where they reside. (4) Martha Ann, born in Putnam, June 24, 1842, was married Nov. 6, 1870, to Elisha Rogers, a representative farmer of Montville, this State, but who was a successful carpenter and builder in his earlier years. (5) James Edmond is the immediate subject of this review. (6) John Hale, born in Putnam, Feb. 21, 1855, is now one of the influential farmers of Killingly, where his marriage to Ann Jane Morrison was solemnized Feb. 22, 1876.

James Edmond Perry, whose name introduces this review, received his early educational discipline in the district schools of his native town of Putnam, and continued his studies until he had attained the age of nineteen years, while in the meantime he rendered his quota of aid in the cultivation and other work of the homestead farm. At the age noted he became identified with railroad work, securing a position as car repairer in the shops of the Boston & Albany Railroad in Worcester, Mass., where he remained for a period of three years, at the expiration of which time he again became identified with agricultural pursuits, in which he was associated with his father-in-law for one year. After this he accepted the position of foreman and gardener for Austin J. Williams, of Danielson, Windham county, retaining this incumbency for somewhat more than a decade, and then returning to Putnam, whither filial duty summoned him, that he might care for his parents in their declining days and relieve them of the cares and responsibilities involved in the operation of the fine old farm. Since that time Mr. Perry has given his time and attention to the cultivation and improvement of the homestead, which is one of the most attractive and valuable farm estates in the county, the same comprising about 140 acres, the greater portion of which tract is under effective cultivation, while the progressive methods and excellent business discernment brought to bear have brought to our subject a gratifying prosperity, and have caused him to be classed among the representative farmers and influential citizens of his native county. In addition to his agricultural enterprise Mr. Perry has given no little attention to dairying, keeping an average of about fifteen cows of high grade and disposing of his cream product to the Woodstock creamery. He is also extensively engaged in teaming and lumbering, and his energy and well directed efforts insure him excellent returns. In politics he gives his allegiance to the Republican party, but he states that he has always been too busy to meddle in politics, and he has had no desire for official preferment of any sort. He and his wife are honored and zealous members of the Second Congregational church, in whose work they take an abiding and lively interest.

On May 18, 1873, Mr. Perry was united in marriage to Miss Helena Aurelia Morse, daughter of Rev. Charles and Almeda (Bolton) Morse, of Putnam, the former having been a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church and having died in Putnam. To Mr. and Mrs. Perry were born four children, namely: Effie Almeda, born in Worcester, Mass., Dec. 30, 1875, is now the wife of Charles Benjamin Jennings, of Thompson, Conn., an overseer in the carding mill of Lemuel Perry, at Webster, Mass.; Grace Helena, born April 24, 1879, in Danielson, Conn., was a student of Putnam High School, and died in Putnam, May 31, 1896; George Edmond, born in Danielson, Aug. 23, 1884, is at the time of this writing a student in the Putnam high school; and James Arthur, born in Danielson, Jan. 6, 1887, is attending the public schools in Putnam.

HON. MILO P. J. WALKER, formerly of the town of Union, but now of the town of Stafford, Tolland county, is a member of the old Walker family of Union, where several generations of the family have resided, and have been among its most substantial and reliable citizens.

Nathaniel Walker, the ancestor of the Union family, was born in 1675. He had two wives, Rebecca and Jemima, and was living in Ashford, Conn., but in 1729 purchased land of Samuel Allen, one of the original proprietors of Union, and with a family of seven children moved into the new settlement. Tradition has it that he was the richest man of the early settlers in Union. His death occurred July 1, 1759, when he was over eighty-four years of age. His children were as follows: Nathaniel, Benjamin, Obadiah, Rebecca, Israel, Abigail, Hezekiah and Edward,—two of whom were the children of the first marriage. Hon. M. P. J. Walker is a descendant of the sixth generation from this Nathaniel Walker, the line of descent being through Obadiah, Ezra, Perley and Joseph Walker.

Obadiah Walker, son of Nathaniel Walker, born Feb. 3, 1715, was married March 20, 1739, to Mary Chaffee.

Ezra Walker, born March 29, 1741, married for his first wife, Abigail, by whom he had two children; to Anne Pitge, his second wife, were born five children. The children were: Perley, Olive, Henry, Wylls, Olive (2), Betsey and Leighton.

Perley Walker, born July 22, 1767, married Rebecca Broughton, and their children were: Warsham B., Ezra, Perley, Huldah A., Palmer, John N., Joseph and Rebecca.

Joseph Walker, the father of Milo P. J. Walker, was born March 11, 1805, and was married June 25, 1829, to Rebecca Jones. She was born March 17, 1805, and was a daughter of Benjamin Jones, who was born in 1771, a son of Benjamin and Cynthia (Russell) Jones, who were married February, 1794. Cynthia Russell came from Ashford, Conn.

The Jones family came from England in 1665, and settled on Providence Island, in Narragansett Bay, R. I. A more remote generation settled in Ashford, Windham county; from thence came Benjamin Jones, who was born in 1771. He settled in Union about 1795, bought land of William Williams, and died in 1848. His children were (1) Diana, born in 1794, died when a child of two years; (2) Benjamin Reynolds, born in 1796, died a young man in 1819; (3) Hannah D., born in 1801, married in 1827 Ephraim S. Carpenter, and died in Ashford, Conn.; (4) Rhoda, born in 1803, married in 1823 David Fuller, and lived and died in Willington; (5) Rebecca, noted above as Mrs. Walker, was born March 17, 1805, and died in Union July 1, 1844; (6) Betsey (deceased), born March 30, 1807, had scarlet fever when a child, and was left deaf and dumb. (7) Josiah R., born in 1809, and was a teamster in Union for many years, where he died March 16, 1900; (8) Aaron R., born in 1811, married Jerusha Bowen, and died in January, 1896, at Windsorville, Conn.; (9) Elisha Benjamin Reynolds, born in 1814, was the father of H. L. Jones.

To Joseph and Rebecca Walker were born: Frank E., born Dec. 27, 1830, died in 1836; Frank (2) born Sept. 23, 1837, enlisted in Co. G, 22d C. V. I., and died in the service, April 5, 1863; Emeline J., born May 6, 1833; Augusta, born Sept. 22, 1839, wife of William H. Champlin; Milo P. J. Walker.

Milo P. J. Walker was born June 6, 1843, in the town of Union, Conn., where he was reared on the farm, and given a common school education. In the early stages of the Civil war he enlisted in Co. G, 22d C. V. I., Aug. 30, 1862, and with that organization performed honorable military service for a period of nine months. This regiment was commanded by Col. George S. Burnham, and after being mustered into the United States service, Sept. 20, 1862, was sent to Washington, where it went into winter quarters near Falls Church, Va., at Minor's Hill. It was attached to the Army of the Potomac, and was assigned to the defense of Washington under Major Gen. Heintzelman. Its division and brigade commanders were, respectively, Gen. Abercrombie, Gen. Cowden and Col. Burr Porter. In the spring of 1863 the regiment assisted in the construction of fortifications overlooking the Capitol near Arlington, Va., and in guarding Long Bridge, at Washington. Later the regiment was sent to Suffolk, Va., and there participated in the defense of that point under Generals Getty and Gordon, against the siege of Longstreet. At this point the men were called to arms for several hours each morning before daybreak, and waited under arms for battle orders. The siege there was raised early in May and the command was then ordered to West Point, on the York river, where it remained until the post was abandoned. The entire body of troops was conveyed by transports to Yorktown Plains, where the 22d was encamped in front of McClellan's massive intrenchments, in sight of the old rifle pits that dated from the heroic days of the Revolution. The regiment was put in the advance column June 9, in the forward movement on Richmond. The advance was made by way of Williamsburg and the Chickahominy River, to Discomb Bridge and the Chickahominy Church. Later in the month the force was joined by Gen. Dix, and then moved by way of York river. The entire expedition has passed into history as "The Blackberry Raid." The regiment came back to Yorktown, and from there it was ordered to Hartford, Conn., where it was mustered out July 7, 1863, Mr. Walker sharing its experiences from start to finish.

When Mr. Walker was a young man he taught school about ten years. He was a student in a select school at Union, which was taught by Mr. Barrows and Mr. Weaver, for about three terms. On returning home after leaving the service, Mr. Walker resumed work on the farm, where he remained until the close of the year 1890, and became a resident of Stafford Springs, Feb. 11, 1890. To many positions of trust and honor his fellow citizens have called him, and wherever he has been found he has displayed ability and efficiency. He served his town as a representative in the State Legislature in 1871. He was a selectman in 1873 and 1874, and for seven years in Union, and one year in Stafford he was a member of the board of county commissioners. In Union Mr. Walker was on the school board, and in Stafford has been assessor for both the borough and the town. One has only to read between the lines to judge that he is a man of good business ability. He is popular and capable, and is in every way a substantial citizen. His spirit is for the general good, he is enterprising and progressive, and has done much to advance the best interests of Tolland county.

Mr. Walker was married Feb. 13, 1866, to Jennie Sarah, a daughter of Amasa and Sarah Ann (Thomas) Morse, and to them have come children as follows: (1) Frank H., born Oct. 19, 1868; (2) Herbert M., born Aug. 15, 1871, died March 29, 1880; (3) Alice J., born Nov. 30, 1874, graduated at Mt. Holyoke in 1897, and attended the Normal at Willimantic, and then became a successful and accomplished teacher at Upper Montclair, where she remained two years; she also taught in a private school in New York City, where she is still engaged at a good salary; (4) Albert M., born Oct. 21, 1877, is in the office of the Palmers Mill Co., at Three Rivers, Mass., where he is learning the business; he was married March 28, 1900, to Esther M. Cowles, of Springfield, Mass.; (5) Ruth N., born Nov. 10, 1880, is now a student at Mt. Holyoke.

Mrs. Walker was born July 12, 1842, and her father, who is a farmer, was ordained a preacher of the Advent Church.

Mr. Walker belongs to D. P. Corbin Post, No. 74. G. A. R., of which he was senior vice commander. He is connected with the A. O. U. W. at Stafford Springs, and was a charter member of Union Grange, and was also a member of Mashapaug Lake Grange. He and his wife are members of the Congregational Church.

FRANCIS XAVIER RIVERS, one of Woodstock's substantial and time-honored citizens, who after years of toil, is now enjoying a well earned competence, was born Dec. 22, 1827, in St. Ours, Canada, of thrifty and highly respected parents, whose son has done honor to the name he bears.

Francis Rivers was born in Normandy, France, from which country he emigrated to Canada. The children born to his marriage with Mary Lonswee were: Henry, John, Leblanche, Katie, Joseph, Francis and Mary Ann.

John Rivers, the father of Francis X. Rivers, was born Jan. 3, 1793, in St. Ours, Canada, and died Aug. 18, 1867, at Holden, Mass., aged seventy-four years. During his early life he was a farmer, and was successful, accumulating ample means. He was a man of great height and weight, being six feet, three inches tall, and weighing 240 pounds. Two years prior to his death he was afflicted with loss of sight. At this time he was making his home with his son Edward, in Massachusetts, where the remainder of his days were spent. John Rivers first married Margaret Duherrmeel, who was born in St. Ours, Canada, where she died in 1834. The children by this union were: John died in St. Mark, Canada, where he conducted a successful bakery business until he was fifty years of age (he married Agnes Gregore, but had no children); Peter, who was a stonemason in Manville, R. I., married Eliza Duherrmeel, had a family of ten children, and lived to the age of sixty-nine; Francis Xavier is mentioned below; Margaret married Ethan Guyot, a mill operative at St. Annis Ayers, Canada, and died in Holden, Mass., leaving six children. The second marriage of John Rivers was to Mary Leclair, of Canada, who died in 1872, at the age of seventy-three years. The children of this marriage were as follows: Baptiste, a farmer who resides at Holden, Mass., married Eliza Pappinon, and they have five living children; Edward, a resident of Holden, an engineer by trade, married Eliza Hoyle, and they have four children; Henry, who was employed in the cotton mills, died in Holden, when thirty-six years of age (he married Mary Duherrmeel, and they have four children); Mary, who is the widow of Andrew Duherrmeel, resides with her four children in Holden; Katie died at the age of eighteen years.

Francis Xavier Rivers attended the winter schools of St. Ours, Canada, his birthplace, until he was seventeen years old, spending the summers in work on the farm. Wishing to see something of the world, the young man then left home and located in Providence, R. I., where he found work at the tailoring trade, which he had partially learned in Canada. Later in the year he went to Woonsocket Falls, where he remained until the following December, and from there to Uxbridge, Mass. In this pleasant locality he worked with Michael Manley and George Gunn for five years. On March 18, 1850, he went to East Woodstock with the idea of embarking in business for himself, if the location pleased him. He soon opened up a tailoring establishment which prospered so well that in 1853 he built his shop, and in 1858 erected his present comfortable home. Mr. Rivers continued active in this business until 1889, at which time he laid aside business cares, and now employs his time in looking after his snug little farm of eighteen acres. In politics he is an ardent Republican, but has never sought any political favor. With his wife he attends the Congregational Church, of which she is a devoted member. Mr. Rivers is a generous supporter of the same and is interested in its benevolent enterprises.

Francis K. Rivers

Mr. Rivers was married (first) Sept. 9, 1851, to Martha Knight Hibbard, of Woodstock, daughter of Joseph F. and Parmelia (Burdick) Hibbard; she died Oct. 19, 1860, in East Woodstock. They had children as follows: Martha Adele, born Aug. 14, 1852, in East Woodstock, married Walter E. Cobleigh, a piano finisher, of Leominster, Mass., and has had three children, Florence Mabel, Grace Lillian (who died at the age of ten years) and Harriet Adele (who died in infancy). Esther Parmelia, born Oct. 18, 1859, in East Woodstock, died there Aug. 10, 1860.

The second marriage of Mr. Rivers, on Feb. 5, 1861, was to Esther Pamela Hibbard, sister of his first wife. She passed away Feb. 8, 1894, in East Woodstock. Her four children were as follows: John F., born Jan. 19, 1864; Harriet Elizabeth, born July 27, 1866, in East Woodstock, who died Dec. 1, 1878; Edward Fenton, born Oct. 21, 1867, who died in East Woodstock Dec. 8, 1893, unmarried; and Charles Edgar (unmarried) born Aug. 27, 1870, who is connected with the Great Western Railroad Co., of Chicago.

The third marriage of Mr. Rivers was on April 10, 1895, to Miss Susan Ellen Child, daughter of Charles and Almira (Holmes) Child, of Woodstock, the latter a daughter of Leonard Holmes, and a cousin of the celebrated Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. Mrs. Rivers is a lady of beautiful character, and is widely known through the community for her gentle beneficences and charitable impulses. Mr. Rivers is of genial, social disposition, and as a result is passing the evening of his life surrounded with the comforts acquired by his early industry, and enjoys the universal esteem of his fellow-citizens.

JOHN FRANK RIVERS was born Jan. 19, 1864, in East Woodstock, where he was reared, and acquired his education in the district schools. When about seventeen years old he went to farming for his father, but two years later decided to learn the blacksmith's trade, and with that end in view entered the shop of Françoise Foisey, at Putnam, remaining in that excellent place for ten years. Opening a place of business of his own in Putnam, Mr. Rivers successfully conducted it for three years, selling out then to Mr. Foisey. Coming to South Woodstock, he built a commodious shop, and a comfortable residence and convenient barn, building up a most excellent trade in this locality, which he carried on until Aug. 5, 1901, when his buildings were all destroyed by fire. After this disaster Mr. Rivers, with renewed courage, located in West Woodstock, and started in business again. In March, 1901, he purchased the old Wilkinson homestead, comprising 208 acres of land, and he has since been paying particular attention to the breeding of blooded stock and the finest grades of cattle. Endowed with energy and ability, there is every reason to predict a prosperous future in this line for him. He is more interested in business than in politics, although he upholds the principles of the Republican party.

On Aug. 16, 1885, Mr. Rivers was united in marriage with Hattie Alice Willard, and they have one son, Charles Frank, born July 4, 1887, in Ellcott, town of Pomfret, Connecticut.

CLAYTON E. HARWOOD, the efficient cashier of the Rockville National Bank, is one of the best known men in the banking and commercial circles of Rockville, Tolland Co., Connecticut.

Mr. Harwood is a man whose rise from the humblest position to his present responsible station in the bank has been gradual but steady. Backed by nothing but the friendly influence his merits justly commanded, he became regarded as one of the ablest men in financial circles in his town, and one whose opinion carried weight. He is yet in the prime of life, and from youth has displayed rare business capacity, combined with principles of honesty and integrity, instilled by the teachings of his parents. His entire career will bear the closest scrutiny. Mr. Harwood is a Rockville boy in the fullest sense, born, reared, schooled and trained in the institutions of that city, and the type of a citizen that any community is proud and fortunate to claim.

Mr. Harwood is in the eighth generation from Henry Harwood, who came to New England in company with Gov. Winthrop in 1630 and for a brief time was located in Boston, but the following year made his home in Charlestown, where he died in 1635.

(I) John Harwood, the son of Henry, was born in 1630, and soon after his father's death, made his home in that part of Salem, which is now called Peabody, Mass. In 1659 he was married to Emma, whose other name does not appear, and to them were born: John; Jonathan; John (2); Jonathan (2).

(III) Jonathan Harwood was born in Salem, Mass., in 1666, and married Rebecca Twiss. In 1722 he sold to his son Jonathan his home and ten acres in Salem for £100, and removed to Sutton. The following year he made a gift of land to his son (IV) Jonathan, of a "corner right" of land which his father John had formerly owned.

(V) Jonathan Harwood, the great-grandfather of Clayton E., was born in Sutton, Mass., 1748, and was the founder of the family in Connecticut. In 1785 he removed from Sturbridge, Mass., to West Stafford. The house in which he lived is still standing. Always a farmer, he lived and died in West Stafford. His wife was known when a girl as Mary Witt, and she bore her husband the following children: (1) David, born in Sturbridge, Mass., in 1772, was a shoemaker, and came to Stafford with his parents. In 1796 he married Margaret Morse, and four years later removed to Cazenovia, N. Y., and later to Plainfield, N. J. Mr. Harwood served in the War of 1812, and died at Sacket's Harbor in 1815. (2) Betsey, born in 1774 at Sturbridge, Mass., married at Stafford, Conn., Amos Chaffee, and accompanied him to the West. (3) Jonathan, born in 1776, at Sturbridge, died in childhood. (4) Henry, born in 1780, at Sturbridge, was a shoemaker by trade. He married Lita Morse, and settled in Marcellus, N. Y. (5) Mary, born in 1781, in Sturbridge, married in Stafford, Conn., in 1804, Francis Brown, and settled with him at Long Meadow, Mass., where their children are to be found at the present time. (6) Asa, born in 1783, at Sturbridge, was a shoemaker, and became the husband of Amanda Parsons in 1805. (7) Crispus, born in 1784, in Sturbridge, was a shoemaker, and married Salina Morse in 1808 at Stafford; he went West, and died in 1814. (8) Keziah, born in 1786, in West Stafford, Conn., married there in 1814, Emory Chaffee, of Hampden, Mass. (9) Orrin, born in West Stafford, in 1788, had two wives, Charlotte Spellman, whom he married in 1811, and Mrs. Bartlett, who became his wife in 1852. Mr. Harwood lived to be almost 100 years old, and was the paternal grandfather of Charles F. Harwood, of Stafford Springs. (10) Samuel, born in West Stafford, Nov. 22, 1792, was the grandfather of Clayton E. Harwood. (11) Lura, born in 1793, in West Stafford, married in 1821, Emory Chaffee. (12) Margery, born in 1795, in West Stafford, died in childhood. (13) Ebenezer, born in 1797, at West Stafford, married Minerva Dimock in 1818, and their daughter, the wife of Col. F. P. Burpee, was the mother of Judge L. F. Burpee, of Waterbury, Conn. Jonathan Harwood, the father of the above children, was a devout member of the Methodist Church, and was deeply interested in church matters.

(VI) Samuel Harwood, the grandfather of Clayton E., was reared in his native town. He became a school teacher when a young man, and learned the shoemaking trade. In his later years he was a farmer, reaching the great age of ninety-six years, dying in West Stafford, where he was buried. His home was on Chestnut Hill, where he had a fine establishment. In his politics he was a Whig, and later a Republican, following in his father's steps, and being a faithful member and worker in the Methodist Church. In 1848 and the year following he represented Stafford in the General Assembly. Samuel Harwood was married in Stafford, Dec. 31, 1815, to Miss Love Dimock, a daughter of Abner and Love (Newell) Dimock. Mrs. Harwood died Dec. 8, 1859, and was buried in Crystal Lake Cemetery with her husband. They had the following children: (1) Abner D., the father of Clayton E., born Oct. 30, 1816; (2) Marvin D., born Dec. 29, 1817, resides in Ellington, and is the subject of a sketch elsewhere; (3) Love A., born Oct. 13, 1820, married Arnold Shippey, and lived in Ellington for years, though she died in Rockville; (4) Samuel Monroe, born in 1822, married Nancy Dimock, and resides at the old home on Chestnut Hill; (5) H. Amelia, born Feb. 23, 1825, married Anson Lull, and died in Hampden, Mass.

(VII) Abner D. Harwood was born on Chestnut Hill, in West Stafford, and in 1837 went to Rockville, where he learned the wool sorter's trade in the Frank Mill, later the Florence Mill, now the property of the U. S. Envelope Co. This was his occupation for a number of years, when he bought a farm in Ellington, working at his trade during the winter season for several years. Later Mr. Harwood divided the farm which he had bought in company with his brother Marvin, one taking the barn and fifty acres, the other taking the house and fifty acres. By each building a house or a barn the two had complete farms. In 1863 Mr. Harwood sold his farm and went back to the mill to follow his trade until about 1890. During these thirty-seven years he was employed in all the large mills in Rockville, and for a number of years was "boss wool sorter" at the New England mill. Many young men learned the trade from him, and became very expert at the work. Mr. Harwood died Dec. 28, 1897, after a brief illness. After 1876 his home was on Prospect street, at the corner of North Park, a house of his own planning and construction, in which the last years of his life were spent. In politics Mr. Harwood was a Whig and a Republican, and in religion was, in his earlier life, a member of the Second Congregational Church, where he served as a deacon; but in his later years he became a member of the Union Congregational Church. He was buried in the Ellington Cemetery.

Abner D. Harwood was married May 9, 1842, in Rockville, Conn., to Lydia Irene Avery, born in Coventry, Conn., Jan. 20, 1820, the daughter of Jabez and Esther (Hibbard) Avery. When her father died Mrs. Harwood was a girl of twelve years of age, and she came to Vernon, and was reared in the family of Col. Oliver H. King, of that place. She died March 23, 1893, at the old home on Prospect street, and was buried in Ellington. With her husband she was a member of the old Second Church, and they later became associated with the Union Congregational Church. Abner D. Harwood and his wife had the following children: Ellen Rosalia, born Aug. 21, 1845, is Mrs. Orson, living west of Ellington; Samuel E., born Sept. 24, 1847, died in 1851; Erasmus A., born May 12, 1850, died the same year; Clayton E., whose name begins this article; Eveline, born April 17, 1855, died July 17, 1856; Julia E., born Dec. 20, 1860, died March 12, 1867.

Abner D. Harwood was a man of much character and intelligence, commanding the confidence and respect of the community to a marked degree. Much devoted to his family and home, he was noted for his industry and integrity, and to his children he left a good name.

Clayton E. Harwood was born April 12, 1853, in Rockville, on what is now Windsor avenue, and secured his education at the West street school, two of his better remembered teachers being Miss Armstrong and Miss Bissell. When but a lad of fourteen years he began work in the Saxony Mill in the card room; later he was employed in the finishing room of the Florence Mill, from which he retired to attend the high school under Randall Spaulding, remaining two years at the school, and then, resuming his work in the finishing room, studied at night under private instructors. About this time his career as a millman came to an end by an accident, his right arm being caught in a gig, rendering him unable to do any work for several months. When Mr. Harwood recovered from this injury he secured a position in the general store of I. P. Holton, on West Main street. While he was a clerk he studied German, becoming quite fluent in that tongue. Later while clerking for P. R. Moore he was given time off each day to recite Latin in the high school, the young man being anxious to learn, and embracing every opportunity for improvement. When Mr. Moore went into bankruptcy, Mr. Howard assisted the assignee in disposing of the property and closing out the business. Mr. Harwood was engaged in the store of White, Pease & Co., on West Main street, after his connection with Mr. Moore came to an end, and though not yet of age was bookkeeper and manager at a salary of fifteen dollars a week, probably the largest salary paid at that time to any young man in Rockville in mercantile work.

Early in March, 1874, a young man was wanted in the Rockville National Bank, and many applications were made for the position. Though not an applicant Mr. Harwood was called to the place, his first position being that of messenger. Two weeks later he was made teller, and later still was appointed bookkeeper, filling the two places until 1890, when he became cashier and acting teller. In 1893, at the death of the president, the duties of cashier had become so heavy that all of Mr. Harwood's time was given to their discharge. These duties have been discharged by him ever since with marked ability and fidelity.

Mr. Harwood and Clara Winegar were married in Auburn, N. Y., April 25, 1877. Mrs. Harwood is a native of Cayuga county, N. Y., and was born at Union Springs on the shore of Cayuga Lake, May 4, 1857, the daughter of Zachariah and Hannah (Hathorne) Winegar. Her father was a woolen manufacturer, as was his father, Phillip Winegar, who ran the first canal boat from Cayuga Lake to Albany. The Winegars are an old Pennsylvania Dutch family. The Hathornes were very prominent in the early history of New York. Gen. John Hathorne, an ancestor of Mrs. Harwood, was a member of the first New York Senate, and was a member of the first congress of the United States. He served in the Revolutionary war, where he at-

To the union of Mr. Harwood and Miss Winegar were born five children: Wilton W., born Sept. 30, 1879, graduated from Wesleyan Academy in 1899, and in April, 1900, from the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Edith C., born March 28, 1881, is a student at Wesleyan Academy; Elliot Avery, born Feb. 20, 1886, is in the Rockville high school; Leland George, born Sept. 10, 1888; Floyd Clayton, born Sept. 14, 1892.

Mr. Harwood is a Republican and cast his first presidential vote for R. B. Hayes. He was a charter member of Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Rockville, where he is also connected with the A. O. U. W., and is one of the leading men in the Methodist Church, of which he has been treasurer and superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. Harwood has been treasurer of the Rockville Building and Loan Association since its organization, and is president of the Rockville Bible Society. He is a director in the People's Savings Bank. Mr. Harwood built a nice home on North Park street, where he lived until his removal to the old home of his father on the corner of North Park and Prospect streets, which is his home at the present time. Mrs. Harwood is a member of Sabra Trumbull Chapter of the D. A. R., and it is said that her lines of eligibility were among the highest of any member in that Chapter. Mr. Harwood is much interested in genealogical research, and the foregoing narrative of his ancestors owes its completeness to his investigation of the history of his father's family, of which he is the only male representative living.

CHARLES FREDERICK BURGESS was born at Middleboro, Mass., May 16, 1855, son of Frederick O. and Lizzie Foster Burgess.

F. O. Burgess, son of Elijah and Betsey L. (Wing) Burgess, of Middleboro, Mass., was a descendant in the eighth generation of Thomas and Dorothy Burgess. Thomas was one of four brothers who came from England and arrived in Salem, Mass., about 1630, and afterward settled in Sandwich, in the Plymouth Colony. Betsey L. Wing, mother of F. O. Burgess, was a direct descendant of John Howland, who came over in the "Mayflower." Lizzie Foster Burgess, mother of Charles F., was a native of Brewster, Mass., but most of her life was spent at Middleboro, and her last ten years were passed at Marlboro, whither she went from Plainfield, Conn., where for some two years her husband was associated with his son in the conduct of the Journal. She passed away March 19, 1896. She was a member of the Central Congregational Church at Middleboro, thence transferring her membership to the Union Congregational Church at Marlboro. Many high tributes were paid to her high character and sunny disposition. Mrs. Burgess was a daughter of William W. and Hannah (Foster) Goss, of Brewster, afterward of Middleboro, Mass. William W., son of Daniel, and grandson of Peter Goss, of Revolutionary fame, was a native of Weston, Vt., and an old-time school teacher on the Cape, having taught there for thirty-six consecutive winters. He was once keeper of Highland light. In 1826 he married Hannah Foster, daughter of Sears and Betsey (Myrick) Foster, who was born Feb. 19, 1809, in Brewster, Mass., and was a descendant in the ninth generation of Elder William Brewster, and of the seventh generation in direct line from Thomas Foster, who came to New England in 1634. Mrs. Goss died at Dorchester, Oct. 7, 1902, at the age of ninety-three. Mr. and Mrs. Goss were for many years members of the Methodist Church at Middleboro. At the time of her death she is believed to have been the oldest member of the Union Congregational Church at Marlboro.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Goss: William F. M., of Santa Barbara, Cal.; Hannah J., wife of Capt. Joshua Atkins, of Chatham, both deceased; Lizzie Foster, who died in 1896, wife of F. O. Burgess, formerly of the Plainfield Journal, now of the Marlboro Enterprise; Franklin B., editor of the Barnstable Patriot; Walter S., Marlboro, for a time publisher of the American Workman, Boston; Warren Lee, formerly of Norwich, Conn., now of Rutherford, N. J., author of the Century War Series, Recollections of a Private, and other books connected with the Civil war; Mary, wife of W. B. Campbell, of Duxbury; Ellen, widow of S. B. Pratt, a well-known newspaper publisher; Annette L., wife of R. D. Pratt, formerly of the newspaper firm of Pratt Brothers; S. Foster, of Marlboro, deceased; Arabella F., deceased; Lillie A., local writer of some note, deceased wife of C. Morgan, of Syracuse, N. Y.; Abbie E., widow of D. S. Hasty, of the Stoughton Sentinel, now, of Dorchester. Mrs. Goss left twenty-six grandchildren, and twenty-five great-grandchildren.

Charles F. Burgess has one sister, Alice C., now Mrs. Samuel Graves, of Norwalk, Connecticut.

Charles F. Burgess was educated in the common schools and at Pierce Academy, Middleboro. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Middleboro Gazette, and afterward was in the newspaper establishment of Pratt Brothers, Marlboro, for some four years. He came to Plainfield in the summer of 1880 and started a printing office in a small way in the Kingsley building. The Railway Journal was first issued as an advertising sheet. The first number of the Plainfield Journal appeared Sept. 3, 1881, then a six-column folio, printed on an old hand press. In the spring of 1882, the first number of the Jewett City Press was issued, which still continues to be published, with an edition at Baltic also. In 1892 the office was removed to Moosup, where it occupies pleasant and convenient quarters in the Masonic building. Moosup and Plainfield editions of the Journal are published now in seven-column quartos, and the paper has a large circulation through eastern Connecticut. Mr. Burgess published a few years ago the Plainfield Souvenir, a work setting forth in most attractive form the prominent features of the town.

Mr. Burgess united with the Congregational Church at Middleboro early in life, but now is a member of the M. E. Church, of Moosup, where he serves as Sunday-school superintendent and recording steward, and is an active worker generally. He married, Oct. 18, 1886, Ella M., daughter of Lewis C. and Lydia J. (Higgins) Holden, of Marlboro, Mass. Her father descended from the family of that name who settled the town of Holden, Mass., and for whom the town was named. Her mother was a direct descendant of the Higgins who came over in the "Anne," first starting in the "Speedwell." The family was also one distinguished in the Revolution.

The children of Charles F. and Ella M. Burgess are: Foster Lewis, born Feb. 21, 1895; Rachel Eleanor, born Dec. 23, 1896, who died July 17, 1897; Harold Frederick, born Aug. 16, 1898. The family occupy a handsome home built in the fall of 1902 on Highland street.

HENRY HAMILTON DOYLE was born Sept. 18, 1843, at Rainbow, Conn., in the town of Windsor, and is a son of John Luke Doyle, who was born in Dublin, Ireland.

The elder Doyle came from Dublin to Boston in 1830, where he was married Oct. 13, 1838, to Mary Ann Williams, who was born March 27, 1818, and was a daughter of John and Amy (Daniels) Williams. Her father was a soldier in the war of 1812. John Luke Doyle died in Tolland, Oct. 2, 1876, and his wife passed away in the same place Dec. 16, 1896. Mr. Doyle was a wire manufacturer and was engaged in business in Rainbow many years. In 1857 he came to Tolland and settled where Henry Hamilton Doyle is now found. The farm was then known as the John Williams farm, and it was the property of his father-in-law. He had about 100 acres on the Rockville Road in Tolland, and there he died. A Democrat, and a member of the Masonic fraternity, he was known as an upright and honorable man of industrious habits and neighborly spirit. John Luke Doyle and his wife had the following family: John T., born July 6, 1841, deceased June 21, 1845; Henry H.; Harriet, born Jan. 23, 1846, who married George O. Whitman, of Danielson, Conn., now a traveling salesman; Phillip, born April 8, 1847, who married Martha Alice Lamphear, of Chaplin, Conn., and is at the present time (1902) superintendent of the Killingly town farm; Lucy, born March 1, 1849, deceased in infancy; Alice, born Oct. 3, 1852, deceased Aug. 29, 1853; Emma Jane, born Sept. 15, 1856, married to Darius Bennett, who is a traveling salesman from Holyoke, Mass., where his home is established.

Henry Hamilton Doyle removed to Tolland, when he was fourteen years of age, and at the age of sixteen went to Windsor Locks, where he learned the machinist trade of the firm of Denslow & Chase, with whom he remained four years, thoroughly mastering his trade, and going from there to New Haven, where he worked several months in a machine shop. For about a half a year he was employed in Senyer's machine shop at Rockville. This connection was broken into by his service in the Civil war. At its conclusion he came back to Connecticut, to spend some three years in travel, working for some time boating on the Erie Canal. Returning to Rockville, he resumed his farming labors, and at the present time has a dairy in operation with his farm, and the milk of ten cows is taken to the Vernon creamery.

Mr. Doyle is a member of Burpee Post, No. 71, G. A. R., of Rockville, of which he is past commander. A staunch Democrat, he has had various political honors. In 1886 he represented the town in the State Legislature, where he served on the committee on Incorporations. In 1898 Mr. Doyle was first selectman, and since 1893 has filled the position of justice of the peace. For several years he was assessor and constable, and for several terms tax collector. Mr. Doyle has been on the grand jury a number of terms, and has acted as registrar of voters for many years. He has taken generally an active part in local affairs, and has been a prominent and leading citizen of the community.

Mr. Doyle belongs to the Methodist Church and his wife is active in the Ladies' Aid Society of that church. Mr. Doyle was married Nov. 29, 1868, to Elizabeth Leming. She was born April 30, 1848, and is a daughter of Elias and Paulina (Grover) Leming, of Jackson township, Ocean Co., N. J. To this union were born: Charles Henry, born April 16, 1871, deceased Aug. 5, 1871; Harry Alfred, born May 16, 1872, who married Lydia Patz, and is keeping a general store in Burnside, Conn.; Robert Elias, born Jan. 4, 1876, who married Marian Rider, of Tolland, and is a farmer in that town.

The military record of Mr. Doyle is in every respect honorable and creditable. He enlisted in the 25th C. V. I., and served a year in Gen. Banks' expedition to New Orleans. Re-enlisting in the 77th N. Y. V. I., Co. D, he served throughout the war, being under the immediate command of General Grant in the closing campaigns. Mr. Doyle was present at the surrender of General Lee, and saw the last scenes of the terrible drama.

DWIGHT N. HATHEWAY is the leading tobacco grower in the town of Ellington, Tolland County, and was born in Suffield, Conn., where the Hatheways are a numerous family.

Charles Hatheway, great-grandfather of Dwight N., was born in 1726 and died in 1807; his wife, Aphia, was born in 1729 and died in 1810. Their children were: Aphia, Philisinda, Charles, Charles (2), Erchiel, Luther, Anna, Lucy, Elijah and Jemima.

Elijah Hatheway was a farmer in Boston Neck, Suffield, and his son, Luther, was born July 12, 1763, in Suffield, where he followed farming. He also operated an oil mill near his home. At the age of eighty-four years he completed a long and busy life on his own farm. In his active days he sold his oil in Boston, and the journey there and back with loaded teams required two weeks. The homeward load was supplies for the local store. Luther Hatheway was a member of the Baptist Church, and was buried in the old cemetery. Clara Safford, his wife, was a native of Vermont, born Feb. 3, 1774. She lived to be ninety-two years of age, and was buried by the side of her husband. They had six children: (1) Emily, born April 3, 1795, who married Park Loomis, Dec. 15, 1814, and had Luther H., Emily, Jane L., George R., Francis P., Mary S. and Georgiana H.; (2) Milton; (3) Eliza, born Oct. 2, 1799, wife of Allen Loomis, and mother of William R., Henry A., Calvin, Roland Newton, Burdett and Eliza; (4) Maria, born Aug. 12, 1801, wife of Gamaliel Fuller, and mother of Hiram, Apollas, Luther, Marie and James; (5) Clara, born Aug. 16, 1805, wife of Neland Loomis, and mother of Byron and Elizabeth F.; (6) Mary, born Oct. 13, 1809, wife of Charles Mather, and mother of Emily A., Augusta M. and Clara, now living in Hartford, a widow. Emily, Maria and Clara died in Suffield.

Milton Hatheway was born in 1797 on the old homestead, which is now owned by his son, Safford. He was brought up as a farmer boy, and when he became older, took charge of the farm, caring for his parents in their old age, and on their death bought the interest of the other heirs, becoming the sole owner of the family patrimony. As long as it was profitable he operated the oil mill, and he was a tobacco raiser. He died of old age, Sept. 12, 1888. Quite prosperous and wealthy, he gave each of his children $2,000 as a marriage portion. When he died he left a good estate. In politics he was a Democrat, held office as a selectman for a number of years, and was repeatedly elected to the State Legislature.

Milton Hatheway was married Jan. 20, 1819, to Mary Heath, a native of Suffield, who died in 1846, when her son, Dwight N., was four years old. She became the mother of six children. (1) Caroline Maria, Dec. 6, 1819, who married George Champlin, May 11, 1837, was the mother of Mary Jane, born in March, 1840; and Cordelia Elizabeth, born in January, 1842. She died in New London, Conn., Nov. 24, 1848. (2) George Miller, April 2, 1822, married Harriet L. Hyde, Feb. 22, 1848. She was born Sept. 10, 1826, and died Feb. 23, 1858, leaving two children: Harriet Augusta, born March 6, 1851, deceased Oct. 29, 1868; and Willie Hyde, born Sept. 9, 1855. April 14, 1859, George M. Hatheway married for his second wife, Julia M. Purpin, born June 12, 1836, deceased Sept. 27, 1868, who also left two children: George Eugene, born Oct. 14, 1861, who died Aug. 15, 1863; and Carrie E., born Sept. 27, 1864. George Hatheway married (third) April 11, 1869, Lucy M. Adams, born Sept. 17, 1833. (3) Elizabeth Cordelia, born Oct. 16, 1824, married March 10, 1847, Ralph P. Mather, who was born May 26, 1818. They had two children: Henry Milton, born May 30, 1849; and Mary Elizabeth, born Dec. 8, 1855. (4) Luther Bliss, born Oct. 20, 1828, married Nov. 27, 1862, Mary E. Hurburt, born Aug. 17, 1838. Their son, Edward F., was born Dec. 25, 1863. (5) Henry Safford, born Nov. 19, 1830, married June 28, 1857, Mary Jane Denslow, born Jan. 30, 1834. Their children were: Ada Eliza, born Jan. 3, 1860; Melissa Inez, Feb. 23, 1862; and Frank Safford, Dec. 15, 1865. (6) Dwight N.

Milton Hatheway was again married Oct. 20, 1847, to Elizabeth Bliss, born in Middletown, Conn., Aug. 26, 1817, who survived him one year. They were the parents of two children, Sarah Elizabeth, born Feb. 14, 1850, who became the wife of Benjamin Jerome, a fruit grower in Florida; and Frederick Bliss, born Jan. 28, 1851, who married Emma Blush, and is a Suffield farmer.

Dwight N. Hatheway was born March 18, 1842, and attended the district school, and for one term the Manchester high school. Remaining on his father's farm until the age of twenty-five years, he was then married, Nov. 6, 1867, to Alice T. Pease, who was born Sept. 27, 1841, and died July 23, 1870. After marriage he settled on a small farm which he rented in Suffield, for a year, and then spent a year in Enfield on a farm which he bought, where his wife died. After her death he sold the Enfield property and returned to the home of his parents, where he spent the next five years. At the expiration of that period he was again married, and followed farming until March 31, 1882, when he moved to Ellington, where he bought a farm which is part of the present place where he lives. It was sold by a Mr. James Avery, and was a portion of the original McCray farm, at one time a tract of twenty-two acres. Since then the entire McCray homestead has come into his possession, a farm of 115 acres. An extensive dealer and a leader in tobacco culture, he has about ten acres yearly which he devotes to the better grades, and for the products commands a high price; he sells at wholesale in the bundle.

Mr. Hatheway was again married April 10, 1875, to Hannah Connelly, daughter of Dennis and Mary Connelly, who was born in County Cork, Ireland, March 24, 1852, and came to this country when she was sixteen years old, being two weeks en route. In 1877 they made a long visit to her old home, and spent a year among its pleasant associations. Their children are as follows: (1) Charles H., born March 27, 1876, is a member of the Ellington Grange, and is an inmate of the family home; (2) George B., born Nov. 5, 1882, educated in the district schools, with three years in Rockville high school, and now at home with her father, assisting him in business; (3) Mary C., born Aug. 14, 1884, educated in the district schools and Rockville high school, class of 1903; (4) Nellie E., born July 9, 1888, now in the Rockville high school; (5) John E., born Feb. 27, 1889, attending the district school.

Mr. Hatheway is a Democrat, and he and his family are members of the Catholic Church at Rockville.

JOHN KEEGAN, one of the leading Irish-American citizens of Thompson, Windham county, is a successful stockman and general farmer, and was born at West Lubec, Maine, June 24, 1842.

James Keegan, the father of John, was born in Trim, County Meath, Ireland, grew to manhood and acquired a good education. For a time he was an assistant teacher in one of the national schools. For some time prior to his crossing the ocean, his attention had been attracted to America as a wider field for a young man's usefulness, and when of age he left his native land to found a new home in the United States. He settled in the town of Trescott, Washington Co., Maine, where he passed the remainder of his life, and all his children were born at that place. He was engaged at surveying as well as farming. Hard work awaited him in the clearing up of his land, but he went at it with energy, and in the due course of time had a very valuable tract of 200 acres. He also carried on stock raising, and became one of the leading men in his section.

Not only was Mr. Keegan a good farmer and excellent business man, but he was a man of unusual intelligence, and one whose natural gifts and estimable qualities placed him in the front rank. As a promoter of educational movements he became widely known, and was the examiner of the teachers of his locality for a number of years. For thirty-six years he continued on the school board, and for twenty-four years served his town as selectman, during a great part of this time being the chairman of the board. Mr. Keegan was a devout Catholic, was one of the leading organizers of the church in his new home, and was liberal in providing for its construction. In all progressive public movements he was a factor, and he was a broad-minded, well-read man, one who looked well after his home and family and took the deepest interest in his town, county and State. His death occurred at the age of sixty-seven years, on his home farm, and he was laid to rest in the Trescott cemetery. He was mourned by many, for he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of everyone.

Mr. Keegan was married in Trescott, Maine, to Betsey Morris, who proved to be a woman of Christian character, a devoted wife and mother. She was born near the birthplace of her husband in Ireland, and was buried by the side of her husband in the Catholic cemetery at Trescott. A family of eight children were born to these most worthy people, namely: William, who resides on the Pacific coast; Mary, who married Bernard McCool, a farmer of Machias, Maine; Ann, who is deceased; John, mentioned below; Eliza, who married Capt. James May, of Trescott, Maine, who followed the water for a number of years as a sea captain, and is now a farmer and stock raiser; James, who resides on the homestead; Catherine, who married John B. Donohue, a farmer and stock raiser of Trescott; and Thomas, who is a prominent business citizen of Lubec.

John Keegan grew up on the home farm and was given every educational opportunity within reach in his locality. His early manhood was spent in the lumber camps of his native State and in farm work, his first labor in another line being in the woolen mills at North Oxford, Mass. In 1868 he came to Connecticut and entered the woolen mills at Wiltonville, in the town of Thompson, remaining there three years. His next location was in Mechanicsville, where eleven years were spent in the woolen mills; at the end of this time Mr. Keegan became desirous of changing his mode of life.

Although very prosperous as a mill worker, Mr. Keegan preferred to go back to farming, and as a beginning he bought twenty-three acres of land near Thompson Center, known as the Reiley farm. Until 1895 Mr. Keegan operated this land, finally selling it very advantageously to the late John W. Doane. Then Mr. Keegan purchased his present farm of twenty-five acres and there has been engaged in farming and dairying ever since. As an agriculturist Mr. Keegan has met with excellent success and is considered one of Thompson's most prosperous farmers. In politics Mr. Keegan is identified with the Democratic party. Both he and his estimable wife are consistent members of the West Thompson Catholic Church.

In 1875, in Putnam, Conn., Mr. Keegan was married by Rev. Father Vygen, to Miss Elizabeth Mullen, daughter of the late William and Ann (Calhoun) Mullen and sister of Edward Mullen, one of Putnam's leading business men. Mrs. Keegan is an educated and accomplished lady, devoted to her husband, her home and her church. They are among the most highly respected residents of their neighborhood and have hosts of friends.

LYON. "William Lyon," says Savage, of Roxbury, Mass., "came to New England in 1635 in the ship 'Hopewell' when he was aged fourteen years, probably under the charge of William Heath, a passenger with his family in the same ship."

Mr. Lyon was married June 17, 1646, to Rachel, daughter of Thomas Ruggles, and their children were: John, born in 1647; Thomas, born in 1652; Joseph, born in 1654; Sarah, born in 1657; Jonathan

(1), born in 1662; and Jonathan (2), born in 1672. Some of his children must have settled in Woodstock, Conn., for family traditions and record deeds show that Caleb Lyon and his wife Margaret, who were parents of thirteen children, located in Massachusetts, coming from Woodstock, and from family names and other evidences it is certain that the Woodstock and Canterbury families were closely related.

Ebenezer Lyon, born in 1717, located in Canterbury in 1763 and purchased in the Gay Head District a farm of about 125 acres, then almost entirely unimproved. This farm has been in the hands of his descendants to the present day, each generation making improvements. In appearance and productiveness, it is far above the average Canterbury farm.

Ebenezer Lyon was a man of considerable note in his day and generation and was a local preacher of the Methodist denomination and in his home the first meetings in this locality were held. He was a circuit rider, giving the winter months to preaching and in summer attending to the farm work and officiating at the local services on Sunday. He married Mercy Clark, born in 1717, and who died April 10, 1804, aged eighty-seven years. His death occurred Aug. 21, 1795, at the age of seventy-eight years. To them were born two sons, Abel, in 1742 and Ephraim, in 1745.

Capt. Abel Lyon, born in 1742, died Oct. 1, 1815. He married Susannah Leach, who died April 2, 1829, aged eighty-four years. He was a farmer and lived in the south-western part of the town of Canterbury. In the local militia he held the position of captain. In his family were the following children: Sally; Ebenezer, born Dec. 25, 1769; Joseph Leach, born June 13, 1775; Spencer, born Nov. 30, 1778; and Ephraim.

Capt. Spencer Lyon, son of Capt. Abel, was a farmer and resided on the home farm. In the local militia he was at first a lieutenant, but was made a captain by Gov. Roger Griswold April 15, 1812. When the British threatened New London, he was there in command of a company. Capt. Spencer died in 1848 and his remains rest in the Winchester cemetery in Canterbury. During his lifetime he owned much property. In politics he called himself a "Jacksonian Democrat." Sarah Williams, his wife, was a native of Canterbury and a descendant of Roger Williams, who founded the city of Providence. Their marriage was Nov. 9, 1800, and their children were: Marcus, born June 18, 1806, died May 9, 1880; Mary, married Francis Adams and lived in New York; William, married Charlotte Ann Lyon, of Woodstock, was a farmer, and died in Canterbury; Susan, married Capt. Walter Smith, of Canterbury; Alexander, married Zerviah Collins and lived in Canterbury; and George Washington, married Mary Ann Bottum.

Marcus Lyon, born June 18, 1806, in Canterbury, son of Capt. Spencer, married March 17, 1834, Emeline Fenandez Fuller, born Oct. 4, 1808, and died March 12, 1887, at Belleville, R. I. His death was May 9, 1880, at East Greenwich, R. I., where both he and his wife lie buried. As a young man Marcus Lyon was a school teacher, but after marriage he engaged in farming, first in Hampton and later in Killingly. In later years he moved to Centerville, R. I., but soon located at East Greenwich, where he died. His children were: Rockwell Fuller, born Jan. 31, 1835, in Hampton, Conn., died Sept. 13, 1901. Frances Mary, born Oct. 10, 1839, married Feb. 26, 1881, Venum Bicknell, deceased. With her daughter Abby Fuller Lyon, born April 1, 1885, she resides at East Greenwich, R. I. Abby Fenandez, born March 24, 1843, married (first) Jan. 25, 1876, Samuel Lafayette Tillinghast and (second) Feb. 19, 1899, Moses Fiefield, M. D., deceased, and lives in Centerville, Rhode Island.

ROCKWELL FULLER LYON was born in Hampton, Conn., where the family lived until he was fourteen years old, when they came to Killingly and resided in the house on the site of Hon. Timothy E. Hopkins' present home. Mr. Lyon enjoyed academic schooling until the age of eighteen and then entered a drug store in Danielson, Conn. In 1856 he went to Boston and was there employed as a drug clerk until 1860, when he returned to Danielson, Conn. and opened a drug store in the Hutchins block, but later occupied quarters in the Exchange block. Until Jan. 1, 1896, he conducted his business alone, but by that time it had grown to such proportions that he needed assistance, and Charles H. Burroughs was admitted to equal partnership. Mr. Lyon continued active in the store until about one year prior to his death, when failing health made it necessary for him to retire, after a business life in Danielson of about forty years. His death occurred Sept. 13, 1901.

On Aug. 7, 1859, Mr. Lyon was united in marriage with Miss Jennie E. Canney, who was born June 24, 1842, in Dover, N. H., but who grew up in Boston, Mass., where she married. She was a daughter of William and Eliza (Caverly) Canney. To this union was born one daughter, Adabelle Canney, born Jan. 6, 1868, who married William Hutchinson Putnam. They have one son, Lyonel Hutchinson, born Aug. 27, 1900, and one daughter, Marcella Rockwell, born May 3, 1902.

Mr. Lyon was distinctively a gentleman, quiet and unassuming, devoted to his business and his home. In political sentiment he was a Republican, and fraternally he was identified with the Masons. With his family he held membership in St. Albans Episcopal Church, of Danielson.

THOMAS RYAN. As head agriculturist, landscape gardener, and general superintendent of three hundred acres of land at Thompson, Windham county, Thomas Ryan has a many-sided responsibility which he discharges with credit to himself and satisfaction to those who rely upon his ability. To carry out his wishes are about seventy hands, and his entire time is devoted to planning for the beautifying of the grounds, to the erection of the buildings, and to the maintaining of fine hard roads. He came to Thompson in 1868, and in 1898 assumed charge of the property of Norman Ream, since then making his influence felt in various avenues of the community's activities.

A native of Dudley, Mass., Mr. Ryan was born Dec. 8, 1858, a son of Edward and Winnifred (Ryan) Ryan, and he was but ten years of age when the family fortunes were shifted to Thompson, Conn., where he was reared on a farm and educated in the district schools. At the age of seventeen he struck out for himself by hiring as a farm hand for Marcus Davis, and later for Mrs. Julia A. Munyon, remaining two years with the latter employer. In 1877 he married Mary A. Munyon, a native of Thompson and daughter of Charles and Julia Munyon, after which he continued to reside on the Munyon homestead, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising. In all, he operated about 550 acres of land, a part of which was in the State of Rhode Island. In connection therewith he engaged also to a considerable extent in the wood and lumber business, and to no one in the town are the fine roads more directly traceable, for Mr. Ryan has made a special study of this important part of the country and city progress, having personally superintended the construction of many highways. For several years he has held the position of highway surveyor for the town of Thompson, and his political influence has been further felt by his election to the office of selectman, an honor renewed by his re-election to the same office in 1901 and 1902. He represented the town as a delegate to the Republican State Convention, and has otherwise aided in the promotion of his party's interest in the town. He is fraternally associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Israel Putnam Lodge No. 33, and is a member of the Royal Arcanum. With his family he attends the Baptist church, towards the support of which he is a liberal contributor.

Mrs. Ryan died in January, 1891, and is buried in the cemetery at East Thompson. She was a member and active worker in the Baptist church, and was devoted to the interests of her husband and children. Of the seven children of which she was the mother, Warren, a highway surveyor for Thompson, is a successful and enterprising young man; Charles is living at home; James is engaged in road building; and the daughters are Emily, Julia, Mary, and Nellie. Mr. Ryan is one of the experienced and practical agriculturists of the county, and one of the successful, self-made men in his town, and he is gifted with an appreciation of the beautiful and artistic in the arrangement of houses, lawns, fences and roads. He attributes his success to industry and honesty, and a special adaptability to his line of work. He is popular and genial, and enjoys the friendship of many of the best people in the community.

SAMUEL J. KING, of Moosup, Windham county, a notable horse breeder and popular hotel proprietor, has won his place in life entirely through his own efforts. Born in Sterling, Conn., March 21, 1845, he procured much of his early education in the State of Rhode Island, where his grandfather, Rhodes King, and his father, George Green King, had lived before him.

Rhodes King, a resident of Scituate, R. I., married Ann Young, daughter of Annie and Jedediah (Foster) Young, whose people were residents of Rhode Island. Mrs. King died at the age of sixty-three, and is buried in Scituate, R. I. By this marriage there were four children: (1) Rhodes, who never married, died about 1859; (2) George G., mentioned below; (3) Elihu, a merchant, married Lavina Johnson, of Vermont, and moved to that State, where it is presumed he died. They had two children: Albert, who died in his second year, and Mary Eliza. (4) Lucinda (deceased) married John Edwards, of West Greenwich, R. I., and they had nine children: Rhodes, Turner, John, Solomon, Abbie (deceased), Amy (deceased), George, Amanda, and Mercy.

George Green King, born in Scituate, July 11, 1815, was reared from the age of two by an uncle of that place, Squire Elihu Fish, who was born Aug. 9, 1756. In 1783 Mr. Fish married Catherine Green, who was born March 2, 1758. After her death he married Amy Aldrich, the widow of Angell Aldrich, and later Fanny Whitten. Mr. Fish died Sept. 5, 1840. At an early age, after careful nurture in the Fish home, Mr. King married, March 8, 1835, Abbie Love, who was born Jan. 20, 1817, daughter of Leonard and Sarah (Johnson) Love. Mrs. King survived her husband, and in Aug. 1886, married Gideon Reynolds, of Coventry, R. I., (he died March 18, 1895). She was extremely bright and active and had a remarkable memory. She spent her last days at the Love homestead in Coventry, dying in February, 1902. Mr. and Mrs. King had seven children, two of whom lived in Butte, Montana: (1) George A., Dec. 16, 1836—Nov. 26, 1897, who married Laura Waide and had two children: Rosell, and George W.; and (2) Silas F., born July 26, 1838. (3) Alva D., Nov. 4, 1840—Sept. 17, 1867, married Lucy Gibson; (4) Lyman T. A., a resident of Coventry, R. I., born May 5, 1843, never married. (5) Samuel J. is mentioned below. (6) Leonard, born Sept. 13, 1850, died Jan. 24, 1864. (7) Sarah A., born June 25, 1854, married Feb. 4, 1873, Lafayette Blanchard and they had one child, Tully King, who was born Aug. 19, 1873. He married, Aug. 13, 1896, Maud Isabelle Shepard, and they have one child, Gladys, who was born Aug. 12, 1897.

By his mother, Samuel J. is descended from Gabriel Love, a native of Scotland, who married Elizabeth Gould and settled at Coventry, R. I. They had six children: Comfort and James both lived to maturity and married; the latter in Coventry. The other children were: Thomas; Leonard, who is mentioned below; Lydia, who married David Elliot, of Brooklyn, Conn.; and Nabby, who lived to maturity and married.

Leonard Love, grandfather of Samuel J., born in Coventry, R. I., died Feb. 14, 1849, in his eighty-third year, and his wife passed away at the age of fifty-two. They were buried in Oneco, Conn. To Mr. and Mrs. Love were born eight children: (1) William, born Jan. 24, 1797, married Roxanna Youngs and lived on the Love place in Coventry. He died Nov. 23, 1825, at the age of twenty-nine. (2) Samuel, married Hulda Vaughn and they lived in Sterling, Conn. He died at the Love homestead, Aug. 21, 1874, at the age of seventy-six. Of this union there were two children, who now reside at Solon, Iowa: Cynthia, who married Henry Palmer and has one child, Charley; and Anis, who married Lyman Randall of Foster, R. I., and had one son, David Randall. (3) Josiah, born in 1800, married Martha Dorrence, after her death, Tabatha Tillinghast, and later the widow of Thomas James. Mr. Love resided in Coventry and died at the age of ninety-four. He had one daughter, Sarah, who married Isaac Tillinghast and lived in Killingly, Conn. They had three children: Ida, now a resident of Auburn, R. I., and Joseph and Aden A., of Killingly. (4) Leonard married Mahala Knox and lived on the Providence Pike, in Coventry. He died at the age of eighty-seven. Of this union there were seven children: Jane, who married John Congdon, lived in Norwood, R. I., and William in Bunkerhill, Ill. Henry (deceased), married Susan Babcock and lived in Sterling, Conn. Two married residents of Coventry, R. I.: Ellen, Albert Love; and Sarah, Darius Allen. Leonard married Jane Townsend, and resides in Coventry. John married Phoebe Reed, and they live on the Coventry homestead. (5) Johnson, born in 1807, married Esther Potter. He died Jan. 10, 1863, and is buried at Oneco, R. I. (6) Comfort, married Cynthia Case and lived in Coventry, R. I. He, too, is buried at Oneco. His son, Albert, married Ellen Love, daughter of Leonard Love. (7) Abbie is mentioned above. (8) Thomas G., born Dec. 6, 1818, married Sarah Case and resided in Coventry. He died Feb. 20, 1889, and is buried in Oneco, where his wife also is interred.

Samuel J. King early evinced a self-reliant, forceful spirit which characterized him through life. In the summer of his thirteenth year he started out as a farm hand, receiving the encouraging salary of five dollars a month. After this he seldom asked odds of anyone. For two years he worked on the farm of Deacon Edgar Bissell in South Windsor, Conn.; then going to Moosup, he hired out in the large manufacturing establishment of Sampson Almy, remaining there another two years. He had made good use of his experience and was now enabled to engage as farm manager. In this capacity he worked one year for Mr. Allen Gibson, and another for George Sanderson. But Mr. King was a born horse trader, and with Mr. E. A. Card, of Oneco, Conn., he soon secured a position for which he was eminently fitted—the management of that gentleman's horse business. The buying and selling was entirely entrusted to Mr. King, and such keen judgment and shrewdness did he exercise that immense profits accrued to the owner. As a result he continued in this position for eight years. In 1874 he married Helen M. Sanderson, daughter of George and Maria (Gates) Sanderson, who are mentioned below. Mr. and Mrs. King have had four children: Alva G., born Feb. 20, 1875, senior partner of King Bros. livery business, in Moosup, graduated from the Toronto Veterinary College in Canada and practiced his profession in his vicinity. Henry, born Sept. 22, 1876, well known as a horseman throughout southern New England, is in partnership with his father. Harry, born April 26, 1879, died Aug. 23, 1898. Samuel L., born Dec. 1, 1882, is a member of the King Bros. livery firm.

In 1877, deciding to go into business by himself, Mr. King went to Central Village, and on April 9, opened a hotel and sale stable. In working for himself he was even more successful than he had been for others. He purchased large numbers of horses in southern Canada and western New York, and always kept in his stable from fifteen to twenty. These he readily sold to local purchasers. For twelve prosperous years he continued his business in Central Village. Then he came to Moosup and rented the hotel near the station in connection with which he opened a livery stable. In this business, in July, 1892, he unfortunately incurred the loss of $4,000 by a fire, which destroyed the entire premises. Undismayed, however, he immediately rebuilt, and on Christmas day of the same year moved into his new home. Early in 1893 he opened to the public one of the biggest hotels in that vicinity. It is a three story modern building, with heat, light, and water supply, on the most highly improved plans. Indeed its metropolitan air would do credit to many a New England city, and the structure strikes an outsider as being a little too large for the small village of Moosup. Due, however, to Mr. King's wide popularity, it is extremely well patronized. After the fire Mr. King continued his horse business on even a larger scale than before. He opened a livery stable which he conducted with success till the fall of 1901, when he turned the business over to his two energetic sons, Alva G. and Samuel L. At present, with his son Henry, he has a private stable in which are kept about seven excellent race horses, which are yearly entered in the New England circuit. Besides speculating in horses Mr. King has throughout his career made a great success of breeding, training, and driving horses. He has owned some of the best bred horses in the State, and he has a reputation as a horse fancier throughout New England. Personally he impresses a stranger as being curt and independent, but to an acquaintance his manner assumes a genial air, which has won for him his wide and lasting popularity.

John Sanderson, grandfather of Mrs. King, born in Lancashire, England, married Ann Mills, and they came to America. After living for a while in Mexico and Canada they finally settled in the United States. Four children were born to this union, all of whom grew to maturity and married: Charles, who had three sons (he died in Canada); Ann; George, who is mentioned below; and James, at first a resident of New York State, later a sea voyager. He died in Philadelphia.

George Sanderson, father of Mrs. King, now a resident of the town of Plainfield, was at one time an extensive manufacturer. Born in England, Nov. 27, 1823, he received his early education in that country. At the age of sixteen he came to America, and after a varied career finally settled at North Adams, Mass. Here he married Maria L. Gates, who died in July, 1847, at the age of twenty-nine. Later, in Windsorville, Conn., he married Elizabeth Attwood, who was born in Mansfield, Conn.; she died June 3, 1891. By the first marriage there was one daughter, the present Mrs. Samuel J. King. By the second marriage there were two children: (1) George Henry, born Aug. 3, 1851, married, in 1875, Hattie H. Mills, and resided in Moosup, Conn. (He died there). They had one child, Gertrude E., who married Arthur M. Brown and lives in Jewett City, Conn. (2) Charles A., born April 13, 1855, married Frelove Hill, and they have two children, Ruth E., and George Henry. (The Hill family have a sketch elsewhere in this volume).

While living at North Adams Mr. Sanderson began working in a woolen mill. He later engaged in the same line in the old Frank Mill at Rockville, Conn., then for two and a half years in a factory at Worcester, Mass.; and finally from July, 1857 to 1862 in a mill at Uxbridge, Mass. He had now become thoroughly acquainted with the business, and on May 1, 1862, began as manager of a mill at Otter River, in the town of Templeton, Mass. After two years of successful management, on May 7, 1864, he came to Almyville, in the town of Plainfield, Conn., and engaged as superintendent of the Sampson Almy Co.'s Woolen Factory. Later this company failed; then Mr. Sanderson, in partnership with Messrs. Mitchell, Crow and Luther Laraway, purchased the business, which they continued for three years. Mr. Crow then withdrew and Messrs. Sanderson and Laraway carried on the industry alone for three years longer.

Though the business proved successful, Mr. Sander-son finally felt forced to discontinue it. He now lives in retirement with his son Charles, near Moosup.

FREDERICK GILNACK, M. D., the oldest practicing physician of Rockville, Tolland county, where he has been engaged in professional labors since 1867, is a thoroughly self-made man, who has fought his way up from very restricted circumstances to an enviable position, and is regarded as one of the prominent and representative men of his city.

Dr. Gilnack was born in Germany, Sept. 1, 1844, and is a son of Valentine and Anna Dora (Zinn) Gilnack. His parents came to the United States in 1852, making an ocean voyage of six weeks on a sailing vessel from Hamburg to New York. In the old country the father had been employed in a large distillery, and after coming to this country took up farming at once near East Glastonbury, Conn., working at first for others and then securing a home for himself by his industry and economy. He died in Glastonbury at the age of eighty-one, surviving many years his wife, who died when sixty-nine years old. Both were buried at the Buckingham Cemetery in Glastonbury. Valentine Gilnack was an industrious and hard-working man, who sought in America a better home for his children, and he died highly respected in the community which had come to prize his modest character and genuine manhood. He was father of a family of five boys: (1) Frank, who is a farmer in Glastonbury, on the old family homestead, where he has a family of the following children: Martin, John, George, Minnie, who is Mrs. Granville Hudson, and Emma. (2) Walter enlisted in 1861 in Co. K, 1st C. V. I., served until Nov. 3, 1863, when he was reenlisted as a veteran, and was made a corporal, Sept. 11, 1865. He was mustered out Sept. 25, 1865, and returned to Connecticut. Later in life he went to California, where he died. (3) Martin enlisted in 1861 in Co. B, 10th C. V. I., and was discharged Oct. 7, 1864. For some years he had his home in Glastonbury, and is now in Georgia. There are three children in his family: Lena, who is Mrs. George Putnam, of Belding, Mich.; Clara, a teacher in Rockville, and Grace, a stenographer of Hartford. (4) Frederick; (5) Henry resides in Glastonbury near the Manchester town line and has four children: Ernest, Erma, Winnifred and Elma. Valentine Gilnack was a Republican, and in religion a member of the Congregational Church.

Dr. Gilnack was but a boy when his parents settled in Glastonbury, where he was reared to manhood. As the parents were poor, and made but difficult headway against adverse circumstances, all the boys early applied themselves to work and contributed their earnings to help establish the family home. Frederick Gilnack worked for three years for 'Squire David E. Hubbard when a boy and had his board and clothes and school privileges in the winter season. He also worked for John Mitchell on his Glastonbury farm, and when a young man he worked for Anson Treat, a farmer at East Glastonbury, receiving $40 a year, and did chores for his board during the winter season while he attended school. For some three or four years he was employed in the Crosby Mill, at East Glastonbury, and attended what was called the Select School, at that point. John R. Buck was the teacher. For a short time he was engaged in the making of powder kegs under Mr. Howe, at Addison.

Up to this time the young Frederick had taken advantage of every opportunity for adding to his education that his circumstances permitted, and his had been an exceedingly laborious youth. As he grew older his interest in medicine increased, and became confirmed in a somewhat novel way. His health was poor and he bought some medicine and a "treatise" from an Indian doctor, which had beneficial results. At first he studied medicine to satisfy his own curiosity, but when he came to get an inkling of its character he determined to make it his profession. In 1864 he began the study of medicine with Dr. C. E. Hammond, then of South Glastonbury. He attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, spending his vacations in Glastonbury, riding with Dr. Hammond and doing other work calculated to advance him in his life calling. Dr. Gilnack was graduated from the above mentioned college in 1867, and after giving close thought to a location in Connecticut, settled in Rockville, June 10, 1867, and there he has been constantly engaged in practice to the present time. Success has crowned his earnest and conscientious efforts, and he enjoys a wide circle of devoted and faithful friends and patrons.

Dr. Gilnack is a member of the Tolland County Medical Society, and of the State Medical Society, and is very popular both as a physician and citizen. When he came to Rockville he had his home for a time in the Thread Mill Boarding House on Brooklyn street. At a later period he had his home in the Doane Block, with his office in connection with B. L. Burr, the photographer. When the Opera House was opened, Dr. Gilnack was its first tenant, having for his office one of its most desirable suites of rooms. Then he had his office at his residence on High street, and from there removed to Elm street, where he bought the old Rock Mill boarding house property. In 1890 he built an excellent home on the upper portion of this property, where he has since had his residence. It is one of the most delightfully located homes in the city.

Dr. Gilnack was married Dec. 10, 1874, in Hartford, to Anna Belle Mossgrave, of Glastonbury, but a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, where she was born Nov. 17, 1850, the daughter of Thomas and Isabella (Mossgrave) Mossgrave, who came to the United States in 1852. They settled in Glastonbury and followed farming. There the mother of Mrs. Gilnack died at the early age of twenty-seven, leaving two daughters, Anna Belle, and Eliza Jane, who is residing a single woman in Glastonbury. Mr. Mossgrave was married a second time, and became the father of four children: George, of Glastonbury; Thomas, a broker of Hartford; Flora; Alice, who is Mrs. Burnside, of Westerly, R. I. Mr. Mossgrave died in Glastonbury when he was sixty-three years old. Mrs. Gilnack attended the Wassuc district school, and lived at home until she reached the age of fifteen years, when she went to work in Crosby's Mill, in East Glastonbury, where she was employed until her marriage. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Gilnack are as follows: Lilla E., who graduated from the Rockville high school in the class of 1895, and from Mt. Holyoke Seminary in 1900, now is Mrs. Edward C. Bell, of Unionville county, being married Oct. 30, 1901. Willie died in infancy. Anna Belle graduated from the high school in Rockville in the class of 1901, and is a student at Mt. Holyoke Seminary in the class of 1905.

Dr. Gilnack is a staunch Republican, and an ardent foe of the liquor traffic, at one time working earnestly in the order of the Sons of Temperance. Mrs. Gilnack and her daughters are members of the Union Congregational Church.

EVERETT E. SALISBURY, one of the prosperous young merchants, bankers and real estate dealers of Windham county, resides in Moosup.

Abraham Salisbury, his grandfather, was a native of Rhode Island, and among his brothers were William, Robert and Charles. Born in New Rockland, he engaged in farming in that community, and established more than a local reputation as a fox hunter. In later years he moved to Moosup, Conn., where he died in 1860, at the age of fifty-six. His first wife, Harriet Phillips, whose father was a prosperous mill owner near Hopkins Mills, R. I., was born and reared in Rhode Island. To this marriage was born: (1) Ora was married to Charles Hopkins, who went to California in the early days of the gold fever, and later, becoming a police officer, was killed in the discharge of his duties; she died at the age of twenty-five years. (2) Theron Robinson.

Theron Robinson Salisbury, the father of Everett E., was born at Foster, R. I., March 19, 1839, and, when a young man came to Connecticut. At a time when shoemaking was a household art, and carried on at the homes of the patrons, he learned the trade, but did not follow it long. He engaged in the hotel business in Moosup, Brooklyn, Danielson, Putnam, Taftville, Jewett City, New London and Block Island, Conn., through a period of thirty years. The greater part of this time was passed in Moosup, where he died Dec. 6, 1899, and where his widow still resides. Mr. Salisbury married Ellen L., a daughter of Lowell and Martha M. (Young) Graves, an old and prominent family in Killingly, Conn. Of the six children born of this union, three died in infancy, and the three sons living are all residents of Moosup, and engaged in a mercantile business. These are: Everett Eugene, born July 22, 1859; Charles Daniel, born Nov. 20, 1864; and Linwood Elmer, born June 7, 1874, married July 6, 1899; Clara Potvin of Moosup, and has one son, Roger Graves, born June 10, 1900. The two last named are associated together in business.

The Graves Family is of Scotch descent, and the first of the name to come to America was Whitney Graves. He married Esther Youngs, a girl of English parentage, and to them were born eleven children: Willis, who married Lizzie Moore, and lived to the advanced age of one hundred years; Amy, who married Daniel Chase, who was county judge in Windham two terms, and judge of probate in Killingly two years; Betsy, who married Walton Matthewson; Ruby, who never married; Esther, who married John Whitney; Lucy, who married Westcott Franklin, and moved to Pennsylvania; Helena, who married Rice Baker; Naomi, who married a Mr. Warren; Azuba, who married Mr. Coomer; William, whose wife was Ruth Dean, of Killingly; and Lowell, the youngest of the family, who became the father of Mrs. Salisbury.

Lowell Graves was born May 13, 1804, and died Jan. 6, 1897. He married Martha Maria Young, who was born Feb. 15, 1807, a daughter of Hezekiah Young, of one of the old Killingly families; she died Oct. 16, 1896. Lowell Graves was a man of mark in his day, and was landlord of a tavern on the Providence turnpike at a time when stages were the only rapid transportation. He was a farmer and merchant, and taught school during the winter term for many years. For several years he filled the office of justice of the peace, and when he died it was stated that no name appeared in the town records oftener than his. When a young man he was engaged in a grist mill, and was superintendent of a cotton mill in Rhode Island. He was one of the oldest members of the Masonic Order. To Lowell Graves and his wife were born: one that died unnamed; Ellen, born in 1832, and died at the age of five years, six months and ten days; Cordelia, born in January, 1834, and married to Horace Butts, of Danielson, Conn.; Ellen L. (Mrs. Theron R. Salisbury), born Oct. 15, 1839, now living in Moosup; and Gilbert Ansel, born April 23, 1837, a farmer of Killingly, and married to Frances Butts.

Everett E. Salisbury was born in South Killingly, Conn., and was educated in the public schools of that place, and at Moosup. Private instruction was given him by Stephen Hall. Remaining at home he helped his father in the hotel until he was twenty-one. In 1881 he started a general store in South Killingly, where he remained five years. He owned the building in which is the post office and was made postmaster under President Garfield. In 1886 he bought the stock in trade of Lucius Batty, at Moosup, and engaged in the grocery trade in that city, and three years later his brother, Charles D., became a partner with him in this enterprise. In 1892 Mr. Salisbury purchased of Dr. Burgess 178 feet frontage on Main street, where he erected the structure known as the Salisbury Block, a building 46 x 70 feet, and three stories high, and since extended to a depth of 96 feet. To this new and commodious place the business was moved, and a stock of dry-goods and fancy notions was added. The partnership of two brothers was dissolved in 1896, Charles D. taking the groceries, and Everett E., the dry-goods. Both have a fine trade.

Mr. Salisbury is a large dealer in real estate, and in this line has been very successful. In 1887 he bought the McGrath place on Prospect Hill, comprising some thirty acres, where only one dwelling house was standing. Here he had a street established to which was given the name of Salisbury avenue, and here he has erected upwards of a score of neat cottages, besides having many building lots still on hand. Here in 1888 he built his own handsome and commodious residence. In 1894 he purchased what was known as the Crystal Lake farm in the town of Lisbon, N. H., in sight of the Franconia Mountains, chiefly for use as a summer home, and has since traded for a summer residence in Bethlehem, N. H. In 1896 he purchased of Joseph Potvin all his real estate, consisting of forty tenements in Moosup. In addition to his other interests Mr. Salisbury has opened a private bank, and has a part of the store fitted up for that purpose, conducting a general banking and savings department. He also carries on both life and fire insurance.

Mr. Salisbury is a Republican and when in South Killingly was clerk of the school board. He is a member of Moosup Lodge, No. 113, A. F. & A. M., and his wife belongs to the Eastern Star. Both are members of the Baptist Church of Moosup.

On Jan. 14, 1882, Mr. Salisbury was married in South Killingly, to Mary Etta, the daughter of Thomas and Maria (Hill) Jaques, and to this union were born: Lira Ellen, born Nov. 4, 1883; Evelyn A., born April 29, 1888; Eldred Everett, born April 2, 1897.

The JAQUES Family is of French origin, and the name is sometimes spelled Jacques. The great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Salisbury was a native of France, and came to this country with LaFayette, of whom he was a relative, and in whose service he was an officer. He married an English woman.

Amos Jacques, the great-grandfather, was born in Newport, R. I., and married Frelove Westcott. Among their sons were Arthur F., the grandfather of Mrs. Salisbury, and Amos, both of whom were born in Sterling, Conn. Amos Jaques became a man of means, owning a large estate in his native town. He later moved to a farm near Rockville, Conn. He married Mary Kenyon, and they had four children: Calvin William, born March 24, 1822, died March 21, 1891; he married Anna G. Bucklin, and for over fifty years was a practicing physician. Adoniram Judson. John J. Narissa E. is the wife of Dr. Isaac Sperry, of Waterbury, Connecticut.

Arthur F. Jaques was reared in Sterling, where he married Lydia, a daughter of Daniel Winsor.

Thomas Jaques, the father of Mrs. Salisbury, was born on Sterling Hill, in the town of Sterling, Conn., Sept. 15, 1826, and almost his entire life was spent in Killingly, where he was engaged in farming, and where he died at the age of fifty years. He married Maria Hill, and their children were: Edna, who married George Barlow, of South Killingly; Adelbert A., of South Killingly, who married Jennie Graves; Frank, now a fruit grower in Florida, who married Mary Batty; Lois, who wedded Charles Spaulding, of South Killingly; Mary Etta, born Dec. 16, 1862; William, who married Kate Bradock, and died at the age of thirty-two; Ernest, in Alaska; and Arthur, at Utica, Ill.

The history of the Winsor family referred to in the preceding is quite interesting, and begins with Robert Windsor, a Catholic knight of influence in the reign of Henry VIII, who raised an army to defend a monastery against a Protestant assault and won great fame in the operations of that campaign. (I) Joshua Windsor, a descendant of his through Samuel, John, and Samuel (2), of England, came to America, and made a home in Providence, R. I., in 1638, and was one of twenty to pay the thirty pounds, the amount of the price of Providence at the hands of the Indians. All were admitted to equal shares with Roger Williams and 120 others who had already come to this asylum. Here Joshua Windsor dropped the "d" out of the family name, and his descendants have followed his spelling. He had four children, Samuel, Sarah, Susan and Mary. Joshua Winsor died in 1655.

(II) Samuel Winsor was born in 1644, and in 1677 married Mercy, the widow of Resolved Waterman, and the youngest daughter of Roger Williams. To this union were born three children: Samuel, Joshua and Hannah. Samuel Winsor died in 1705.

(III) Samuel Winsor (2), son of Samuel, born in 1677, in 1703, married Mercy Harding, of Providence, where he was at first a deacon of the historic Baptist Church, which had been established by Roger Williams, and was its pastor from 1733, until his death in November, 1758, at the age of eighty-one years, lacking one day. He had two sons, Joseph and Samuel, and seven daughters, Martha, Mary, Mercy, Hannah, Lydia, Deborah and Frelove.

(III) Joshua Winsor (2), son of Samuel, and grandson of Joshua the emigrant, born in 1682, was first married in 1706, to Mary Barker, of Newport, and second, to Deborah Harding in 1719. By his first marriage he had the following children: Sarah; Joshua (born in 1709), Samuel (born in 1712), Susanna and Mary. To the second marriage were born: Abraham (born in 1720), and John (born in 1723). Mr. Winsor was co-pastor of the Baptist Church in Smithfield, for a number of years, and died Oct. 10, 1752, in his seventy-first year.

(IV) Joseph Winsor, son of Samuel (2), born in 1713, married for his first wife, Deborah Matthewson, of Scituate, by whom he had twelve children: Abraham, who married Roby Keech, of Gloucester; Amos, who married Mary Bushee, of Gloucester; Christopher, who married Sarah Smith, of Scituate, or Cranston; Ann; Anan, who married Amey Angell, of Smithfield; Samuel, who married Marcy Healy, of Pawtucket; Amey; Deborah; Lillis; Martha; Mary; and Thankful. Mr. Winsor married for his second wife the widow Potter, of Providence. He succeeded Thomas Knowlton as pastor of a separate Baptist Church in Gloucester, where he was ordained Oct. 31, 1763, and continued in that sacred office until his death in the summer of 1802, when he was in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

(IV) Samuel Winsor (3), son of Samuel (2), born in 1722, married for his first wife, Lydia Olney, a daughter of John Olney, of North Providence, and their children were: Lucy; Rhoda; Isaac, who married Amy Waterman, a daughter of John Waterman, of Johnston; and Olney, who married Frelove Waterman, a daughter of Charles Waterman, of Johnston, by whom he had four children, Nancy, John O., Lemuel and Prudence, all of whom excepting Nancy died in infancy. Samuel Winsor (3), married for his second wife Hope Thurber, a daughter of Samuel Thurber, of Providence by whom he had one daughter, Susan J., who was born in Alexandria, Va. He succeeded his father as pastor of the Baptist Church in Providence, to which position he was ordained in June, 1759, where he continued until 1771, when, a division of the church taking place, he with the deacons and a majority of the members of the country part of the society, built themselves a meeting house in Johnston, and established themselves there. Mr. Winsor continued their pastor until his death Jan. 26, 1803, at the age of eighty years.

CHARLES B. WHEATLY, now a highly respected resident of Danielson, Windham county, Conn., is a retired merchant, and long had a successful business at Wauregan.

James Wheatly, the first of the name in the State, settled at Wethersfield, Conn., in 1638. Capt. John Wheatly, of Wheatleigh, settled in Norwich, Conn., in 1732, and merchant John Wheatly lived in Boston from 1745 to 1774. James Wheatly assisted in drawing up a constitution for the government of Connecticut Colony, which was adopted in January, 1639. Among his papers we find a coat of arms.

Capt. John Wheatly, who settled in Norwich, Conn., in 1732, had a family born in England. Jonathan Wheatly, his son, lived for a time in Baltimore, Md., and later at Washington, D. C. Born in England in 1730, he was the father of four children: John B., born in 1761; William B., born in 1763; Mary B., born in 1766; Joseph B., the grandfather of Charles B., born in 1772.

Joseph B. Wheatly was a resident of Washington, and many of his name still live in that city. He was a farmer and owned land on which now stand some of the massive public buildings. Twice married, he died in Washington.

Joseph Wheatly, the son of Joseph B. Wheatly by his first marriage, left his Washington home when a young man, and at the age of twenty located in Norwich, Conn., where he married Eliza Alberts, a native of that city, and to them were born: Elizabeth, the wife of Henry Whitely, of North Brookfield, Mass.; and Charles B., whose name appears at the opening of this article. After the death of Mr. Wheatly, his widow married Edward Blake, by whom she had a son, Edward, who died at the age of twenty-two years in Norwich.

Charles B. Wheatly was born in Norwich, Conn., Dec. 22, 1835, and received his education in his native city. When he was twenty-one he entered the painting business, in which he continued until February, 1859, in Norwich. That year he moved to Wauregan, where he followed his trade until April 1861, when he enlisted in Co. B, 2nd C. V. I., and participated in the battle of Bull Run, being discharged in August, 1861. This enlistment was for the first call for 70,000 men for three months. He was the first man to enlist in his section. Early in the war he was elected captain of Co. B, 8th C. V. I., and though he drilled the company at Hartford, and prepared it for the front, circumstances prevented his going to the seat of war with the command.

Mr. Wheatly returned to Wauregan and in the spring of 1862 opened a boot and shoe store. To this he added at different periods groceries, clothing, hats and caps, millinery, dry goods and furniture, and eventually came to own and conduct one of the largest stores and the most complete of its kind in the eastern part of the State. His stock was valued at $21,000, and he did a surprisingly large business. He is still proprietor of the store, though its active management is in the hands of his son, Willie W. Some of the side lines have been dropped as local conditions do not warrant so large a store.

Mr. Wheatly erected in 1893 on Broad street, in Danielson, one of the handsomest residences to be found in that section of the State. Since May, 1895, he has occupied this home, having resided before that time in Wauregan, where he still retains a cordial social and business relationship, and where he and his estimable wife have very many warm and sincere friends. Mr. Wheatly is a member of several secret orders, some of which he was foremost in organizing in Central Village. He belongs to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, F. & A. M., at Danielson, Warren Chapter, No. 12, R. A. M., Montgomery Council, No. 2, R. & S. M., Columbia Commandery, K. T., at Norwich, and the Aleppo Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Boston. As an Odd Fellow he is a member of Canton Oneco, Patriarchs Militant, Norwich Protection Lodge, No. 19, Central Village, and Unity Encampment, No. 21, Central Village. For one year he filled the position of Noble Grand and High Priest. Mr. Wheatly belongs to Hope Council, O. U. A. M., at Moosup; to Quinebaug Lodge, A. O. U. W., of which he was Master Workman three years, at Central Village, and to James B. Kilbourn Post, G. A. R., at Central Village, of which he was Commander two years. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wheatly are members of the Congregational Church at Wauregan. Mr. Wheatly was originally a Democrat, but for many years has been an active Republican.

Mr. Wheatly was married March 24, 1860, to Lydia Pray, a native of East Killingly, and to this union came a son, Willie Winslow, born in Wauregan July 19, 1864, where he is now engaged in business as the manager of his father's store. Mr. and Mrs. Wheatly adopted Hattie Titus, a niece of Mrs. Wheatly, Aug. 6, 1890. She was born in Providence May 4, 1881.

George Pray, the grandfather of Mrs. Lydia Wheatly, was born in Killingly, Conn., where he became the proprietor of an extensive farm between Chestnut Hill and the Rhode Island line. A large and successful farmer, he also did teaming between Providence and Killingly before the railroad era. His habits were strictly temperate and his business ability noted. He was often called on to draw deeds and wills, and was for many years a justice of the peace. He was a Whig and a member of the Baptist Church, and was commonly known as 'Squire Pray. At different times in his long and useful life he held a number of town offices, and was generally recognized as one of the substantial and reliable citizens of the town. When he was seventy years of age he was killed by a yoke of runaway oxen, and was buried in a private cemetery, which he laid out on his own land. Nancy Bannister, his wife, was of English descent, and lived to be ninety years of age. She had a most uncommon memory, and though her opportunities for education were very meagre, she became widely informed, reading much and being a deep student of the Bible; her Bible was always close at hand when she tired of knitting. She could quote from memory entire chapters of the Bible, and knew by heart the greater part of the laws of the State.

These were especially marked powers of her mind during her later years. In mathematics she was very apt and her conversational powers were quite remarkable. To 'Squire Pray and his wife were born: George Washington, the father of Mrs. Wheatly; Eddy, a farmer in Gloucester, R. I., married Susan Stone, of Webster, Mass.; Alfred married and died in Killingly (his wife's Christian name was Pauline); Lura was twice married, first to Roswell Babbett, and then to a Mr. Green, is now a widow, and has her home in Gloucester, Rhode Isl- and.

George Washington Pray was born at Chestnut Hill, in the town of Killingly, and attended the common school when a boy. Early reared to hard work he was able to obtain an education that fitted him for teaching when a young man. Locating on a farm adjoining his father's he made farming his life work. He was a man of large frame and unusual strength, and his death at the untimely age of thirty-four was the result of over-exertion. A natural musician he developed remarkable talent without instruction, and could play on many instruments. In the choir of the Baptist Church, of which he was a member, he played a stringed instrument, either the violin or the bass viol. In political matters he was a Whig, and held several town offices. Salome Green, wife of George Washington Pray, was a native of Foster, R. I., and a daughter of Jason Green. She died in her ninetieth year, and is buried beside her husband in Killingly. She had a brother, Daniel Green, who was a Baptist minister, and who lived to almost one hundred years old.

To George W. Pray and wife were born: (1) Daniel, who married Mary Parkhurst, and resides at Fall River, Mass., where he conducts a restaurant; (2) Marietta, unmarried, lives in Chaplin; (3) Alfred, born Jan. 4, 1838, (first) married in Scotland, Conn., A. Adelia Parkhurst, and (second) Martha E. Moody, of Whitinsville, Mass. He is a successful farmer of Brooklyn, Conn., and has had a family consisting of Grace E., deceased; Herbert, deceased; Claramon, of Ann Arbor, Mich.; Alice, deceased; Marion, and Clinton. (4) Elizabeth was twice married, first to a Mr. Avery, then to a Mr. Sweet, and is now a widow at Hampton, Conn. Her son, Charles A. Sweet, is the subject of a sketch on another page. (5) Lydia, born May 24, 1843, is the wife of Charles B. Wheatly, of whom this article is written; (6) Emily, married Albert Titus, of Providence, R. I., both deceased. She was the mother of eight children.

THOMAS STRONG PRATT, publisher and proprietor of The Rockville Journal, was born at Adams, Mass., Sept. 24, 1842. He is the son of Rev. Stillman and Mary (Richardson) Pratt. On his father's side he can trace his ancestry back to English ancestors in the early part of the seventeenth century. Both great-grandfather and grandfather saw service in the Revolutionary war, the latter being an officer at the battle of Lexington and at Ticonderoga, dying soon after. The subject of this sketch entered his father's printing office at the age of sixteen and has been in the business of printing and binding all his life. He has owned and published papers in Middleboro, Rockland, Newburyport, Boston and Marlboro, Mass., but has been located in Rockville, Conn., since 1881. He is a member of the G. A. R., Fayette Lodge and Adoniram Chapter of Masons, A. O. U. W. and Knights of Pythias; also of the Sons of the American Revolution. His son, Allen T. Pratt, is his business associate.

WILLIAM SIBLEY, a prominent manufacturer of woolen flocks at North Windham, Windham county, descends from one of the old Colonial families of New England.

(I) The family was founded in America by John Sibley, who came from England and settled in Salem, Mass., in 1629, bringing his family with him. In 1634 he united with the church at Charlestown, and was made a freeman the next year. He served as selectman, and was sent to the General Court, dying in 1661, leaving nine children, five of them being sons.

(II) Joseph Sibley, the son of John the emigrant, was born in 1665. At one time while returning from a fishing voyage, he was pressed on a British frigate, and after a hard service of seven weeks was released and sent home. His wife's name was Susanna. His six sons settled at Sutton, Massachusetts.

(III) Joseph Sibley, Jr., son of Joseph, was born Nov. 9, 1684.

(IV) Jonathan Sibley, son of Joseph, Jr., was born Sept. 11, 1718. He was a commissioned officer of troops sent from Sutton to serve in the French and Indian wars. On Dec. 3, 1739, he married Hannah Burnap.

(V) Gideon Sibley, son of Jonathan, was born Nov. 30, 1750. He was one of the minute men called out after the British attack on Concord in April, 1775. On other occasions also he took up arms to repel hostile invasions in Rhode Island. On April 28, 1772, he married Tamar Fitts.

(VI) Simon Sibley, son of Gideon, was born in the town of Sutton, Mass., Jan. 12, 1778, and he died in September, 1873. On Feb. 6, 1805, he wedded Nancy Rice, and their children were: Linus, born Feb. 26, 1808, died Nov. 27, 1808; Sophronia, born Jan. 18, 1810, married Anthony Mason; Freeman Rice; Mary; born Nov. 15, 1813, married Charles Cummings; Simon H., born in Oxford near Sutton, Dec. 22, 1816, was a wool manufacturer, and died in Warren, Mass., in 1879; Nancy Augusta, born April 3, 1820, married Robert McKnight, and died in 1842; and George Leonard, born March 25, 1823, was a farmer at Blue Mound, Ill., and died March 3, 1890. Simon Sibley, the father, was engaged in farming in Sutton. In politics he was first a Whig, and then a Republican.

(VII) Freeman Rice Sibley was born in the town of Sutton, July 27, 1812. He was reared under the parental roof, and attended school until he was twenty years of age. Learning the trade of scythe maker he was employed at same for a number of years in Pine Plains, N. Y., and in different places and while thus engaged, he began the study of medicine. In 1856 he set up an office at Warren, Mass., but in 1876 he disposed of his Warren practice, and although he made Warren his home for the next nine or ten years, he confined his practice to Worcester. In 1887 he moved to Hollis, N. Y., where he died March 17, 1890. Dr. Sibley was four times married. His first wife Olive Harwood, of Athol, Mass., bore him one child, Maria Sophronia, born March 31, 1835, who is the widow of Asa F. Ellis, of Warren, Mass. Clarissa Wooldridge, of Pine Plains, N. Y., the second wife of Dr. Sibley, bore him two children: Olive, born June 17, 1844, lives in Warren, Mass.; and William, our subject. For his third wife, Dr. Sibley wedded Adeline Briscoe, of Pine Plains, N. Y., and their children were: Sarah Augusta, born Dec. 19, 1849, is unmarried, and lives in Warren; and Charles Nathan, born Oct. 16, 1851, now a machinist for the Knowles Blake Pump Co., and residing at Cambridge, Mass., married first Jane Curtis, and second Rosa Russell. Dr. Sibley's fourth wife was Fanny Kilbourn, of Hollis, New Hampshire.

William Sibley was born in Pine Plains, N. Y., March 11, 1846, and at the age of nine years was taken by his parents to Warren, where he remained until he was twenty-one. His schooling was received mostly at Warren, and in Eastman's Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He began as a woolen worker in the mill at Millville, Mass., where he was employed for some three years.

Mr. Sibley began for himself at the age of twenty-four years, as a manufacturer of woolen flocks and waste at Warren, Mass., a business in which he continued at that point until 1875. In that year he sold out at Warren and began in the same line at North Oxford, Mass., in company with N. E. Taft. They were together for a year, when Mr. Sibley disposed of his interest, and went to West Thompson, Conn., where he was engaged in similar business two years. In 1881, he came to North Windham, buying property, and entering upon a very successful business career. Here he has built up a fine trade, and his mills, which are situated on the east side of the Natchaug river, a short distance below the bridge in North Windham, are furnished with the most modern and complete machinery. He has a 100-horse-power water wheel and a 30-horse-power boiler, and the boiler will shortly be replaced by far larger motor-producing machinery, and recent additions to the mills will be fully tested. At the present time the output of flocks is more than a ton a day, and the plant is run to its full capacity. Its patronage comes from woolen mills all over New England.

Mr. Sibley is a staunch Republican, though no office seeker. He is a member of the North Windham Christian Society, which was established about 1820. His wife belongs to the Episcopal Church, of Millville. He is not a secret society man, though he belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution.

In Millville, Mass., on Sept. 19, 1868, Mr. Sibley was married to Emma Lindley, a native of Huddersfield, Yorkshire, England, and daughter of Henry and Sarah (Crossland) Lindley. Her parents came to this country, and made their home at Millville, Mass., where her father, who was born in 1820, died in August, 1879, at the age of fifty-nine years and four months. Her mother died in 1888 at the age of sixty-seven years, and both parents were buried in Millville. William Crossland, the father of Sarah, was born in Huddersfield, where both he and his wife died and are buried. Grandfather Lindley died in England, but his widow came to this country, and died in Millville, where she was buried. Henry Lindley had two sisters and a brother; Annie, who married Joseph Sykes, and died in Millville, in 1892, at the age of seventy years; Marian, who married Solomon Parker, and lives in Clinton, Mich.; and Job is married, and lives in Worcester, Mass., where he is a machinist. Henry Lindley was the father of the following children: Reuben, born March 11, 1843, died March 2, 1901; Wright, born June 19, 1844, lives in Newark, N. J.; Emma (Mrs. Sibley), born Sept. 19, 1846; Amelia, born May 19, 1849, married Thomas H. Wimbush, of Newark, N. J.; John William, born in 1851, died at the age of five years; and Mary Jane, born in 1853, died at the age of two and a half years.

To Mr. and Mrs. William Sibley have come the following children: Clarissa Amelia, born June 12, 1869, was graduated from the Willimantic high school in 1886, and prepared for teaching at the Normal in that city, and is now engaged in teaching at Webster, Mass.; William Henry, born Feb. 4, 1871, at North Windham, is the superintendent of his father's factory; and Maria Lindley, born June 30, 1873, died March 31, 1876.

WILLIAM H. SARGENT, M. D. The history of the Sargent family, of Plainfield, Windham county, begins in America with William Sargent, who was the son of Roger and the grandson of Hugh Sargent, and was baptized June 20, 1602.

William Sargent was made a freeman at Northampton, July 20, 1626, and about 1632 was made senior bailiff. His first wife was Hannah, who died about 1632, when he married Marie, who died about 1637. His third wife, Sarah, was the widow of William Marshall. With this wife William Sargent came to New England in 1638, bringing with him two daughters by his first wife. He located his family at Charlestown, Mass., and was admitted to the church March 10, 1638, and his wife on the following Sunday. In that same year he was made a freeman in the Bay Colony. Malden was established in 1649, and of the church there William Sargent was a lay preacher from 1648 to 1660. His farm was on the south side of the river Mystic, and he owned it as early as 1640. About 1656 he removed to Barnstable. In both towns he was prominent, and died at a very advanced age Dec. 16, 1682. His widow survived some six years, and passed to her rest Jan. 12, 1688.

(II) John Sargent, son of William, was born in December, 1639, and married Lydia Chipman for his third wife. She was born in Barnstable, a daughter of John Chipman, Dec. 25, 1654, and there she died March 2, 1730. John Sargent had his home in Malden, where he served as selectman for six years. For a time he lived at Charlestown with his father, but returned to Malden in 1669. His death occurred Sept. 9, 1716. Mr. Sargent was born in the Bay Colony, and his first and third wives in Plymouth Colony. Out of these two colonies grew the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Thus there mingled in the blood of the Sargents both Pilgrim and Puritan strains.

(III) Samuel Sargent, son of John, born Sept. 15, 1688, a son of the third marriage of his father, was married Dec. 2, 1714, to Elizabeth, who was born Dec. 24, 1673, a daughter of Thomas Pratt. His home was in Charlestown, where he died Dec. 7, 1721.

(IV) Thomas Sargent, son of Samuel, born in September, 1720, was married Sept. 27, 1744, to Tabitha, who was born Aug. 8, 1724, a daughter of Samuel Tuttle. They lived in Hubbardstown, Mass., where he died in 1795, and his widow in 1804.

(V) Ebenezer Sargent, son of Thomas, was born June 5, 1762, married April 12, 1785, Phebe Shute, who was born Dec. 5, 1763. He was a merchant in Hubbardstown, where he died Oct. 12, 1840, and his wife March 5, 1834.

(VI) Daniel Sargent, son of Ebenezer, born July 23, 1788, was married Dec. 15, 1810, to Betsy, who was born Aug. 21, 1794, a daughter of William Rice. They lived in Petersham, Mass., where Daniel Sargent was engaged in putting up a very superior brand of chewing tobacco. He died in Petersham. In politics he was a Whig, and a man of much character. He lived to Aug. 21, 1871, Mrs. Sargent having passed to her rest March 21, 1848.

(VII) Francis F. Sargent, son of Daniel and the father of Dr. William H., was born May 7, 1812, and was married in May, 1838, to Susan H., who was born Jan. 3, 1816, in Hubbardstown, Mass., a daughter of Ralph Rice. He was reared in Hubbardstown, Mass., where he secured his education. While still a young man he was engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, continuing in that line from 1842 to 1846. In politics he was a Whig, and then became a Free Soiler. Both himself and his wife belonged to the Methodist Church. Mrs. Sargent is still living, and has her home with Dr. William H. Her father had a family of ten children. Mr. Sargent died Oct. 13, 1850.

(VIII) Dr. William Harrison Sargent, son of Francis F., was born May 9, 1841, and was next to the oldest in a family of six children, of which only one other member, a daughter, is now living. She is Mary A., the wife of N. E. Holland, of Barre, Massachusetts.

Dr. Sargent attended the common and select schools of his native town, and later gave his attention to farming until the breaking out of the Civil war. In November, 1861, under Lincoln's first call for 300,000 men, he enlisted as a private in Co. B, 1st Mass. Artillery. This organization was changed to infantry, and was known as the 3d Mass. Volunteers. In 1863 Dr. Sargent was appointed ordnance or drill master in the District of Columbia, where he served until his three years' enlistment had expired. His health was at that time very poor, and remained so several years. Chiefly to secure better health, he spent several years in traveling, and in the course of his journeying visited every State east of the Mississippi. Later still he studied medicine with Dr. J. M. Tenney, an eclectic physician of Hubbardstown, Mass., and attended lectures at the Eclectic Medical College of New York. The study of medicine he had taken up largely for his own satisfaction. His health continued poor, and Dr. Sargent did not think it wise to take up the practice of medicine. So he became a druggist and until 1881 was engaged in that business at Barre, Mass. In November of that year he came to Moosup, and bought out W. H. Hurlburt in a drug store, and succeeded him in business. In 1885 he built the business block where he is at the present time. After locating in Moosup Dr. Sargent resumed his medical studies and in 1882 graduated from the Rush Medical School in Chicago, and since that date has given his attention also to the practice of medicine.

Dr. Sargent is a Republican and since coming to Moosup has identified himself with the working interests of his party. He has served as justice of the peace for six years, and is a notary public, an office he has filled for some ten or twelve years. He has taken all the degrees in Masonry that are conferred in this country, and for some sixteen years has been an active member of Moosup Lodge, No. 113, and a member of the Providence consistory. He is a thirty-third degree Mason. It was largely due to his persistent energy and liberality that the commodious Masonic building was erected. Dr. and Mrs. Sargent are members of the Order of the Eastern Star of which he has been Patron and she Matron. When he left Hubbardstown he was commander of the Burnside Post, G. A. R., and has since retained his connection with the Hubbardstown Post. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Church, while his wife belongs to the Episcopal Church.

Dr. Sargent was married in 1868 to Fannie E., a daughter of Harvey E. Clark, of Hubbardstown, Mass. She died March 20, 1871, and he was married a second time, March 14, 1883, to Nettie L. Davis, who was born Aug. 20, 1862, a daughter of George W. Davis, of Pawtucket, R. I. To the first marriage was born one son, William Gilmore, who was born June 5, 1870, and is now a druggist in his father's establishment in Moosup. To the second marriage came one son, Reinald, who was born Oct. 14, 1888.

HON. BARTON JACOBS, ex-member of the Legislature, and a prominent farmer and lumberman, is one of the leading citizens of Thompson, Windham Co., Conn., and is a member of one of the oldest families of that locality.

The Jacobs family is not only one of the oldest in Windham county, but also in the State of Connecticut. (I) Nicholas Jacobs, the first of the name in America, was born in Hanover, County of Suffolk, England, a son of John Jacobs, of the same county. Nicholas came to America, accompanied by his son John, and his daughter, Elizabeth, and another member of the party was Thomas Lincoln, son of Samuel Lincoln, a brother-in-law of Nicholas. A descendant of this Thomas Lincoln located in the Wyoming Valley, Pa., but after the great massacre in that locality, he escaped to Kentucky and there founded the branch of the Lincoln family from which came Abraham Lincoln. With his wife and family, Nicholas Jacobs settled at Hanover, Mass., where he died June 5, 1657. His children were: Elizabeth; John; Sarah, who married John Cushin; Hannah, who married Lieut. Matthew Cushin; Deborah, who married Capt. Matthew Thomas; and Joseph.

(II) Joseph Jacobs, son of Nicholas, born in 1646, in Hanover, Plymouth Co., Mass., married Hannah Whitman, born in Hull, Plymouth county, April 30, 1650. They became the parents of these children: Joseph, born Feb. 20, 1672; Joseph (2), April 20, 1676; Benjamin, April 10, 1680; Nathaniel, June 29, 1683; and Mary, in 1696, who died in March, 1698. The parents of these children removed to Rhode Island, locating first at Pawtucket and later at Bristol, where Joseph Jacobs, the father, died Feb. 9, 1708.

(III) Nathaniel Jacobs, the youngest son in the family of Joseph, was born in Hingham, Mass., June 29, 1683, and removed with his parents to Rhode Island, locating at Bristol, where he made his home for many years, but later removed to Woonsocket for one year, and then came to Connecticut, locating in Thompson parish, then a part of Killingly, where he bought a tract of land and passed the remainder of his life; he died there Feb. 22, 1772, and is buried in East Thompson cemetery. On Oct. 22, 1713, in Bristol, Mr. Jacobs married Mercy Whitman, born in 1689, a daughter of Rev. Zacheriah Whitman, of Hingham, Mass. She died in Thompson, Feb. 21, 1774, aged eighty-five years, and was interred in East Thompson cemetery. This couple had eight children. Joseph was born July 12, 1717, and died Oct. 10, 1739. Benjamin was born April 26, 1719, and died Nov. 24, 17— He married (first) Hulda Bisworth, who died Oct. 9, 1749, leaving one son, born Sept. 11, 1749. On Dec. 27, 1750, Benjamin Jacobs married (second) Dorothy Arnold, and they had one son, Peter, born May 7, 1758. Nathaniel Jacobs, third son of Nathaniel, was born April 26, 1721, and lived at Royalston, Mass.; Hannah was born in 1723; John, May 25 (or 29), 1725; Whitman, May 3, 1727, the first Baptist minister in Connecticut, the organizer of the Brandy Hill Church; Mercy, born April 20, 1729, married Dec. 12, 1751, Joseph Dresser, and died May 29, 1810, and he died in 1769; and Elnathan, born Jan. 5, 1731, died Aug. 31, 1745.

(IV) John Jacobs, son of Nathaniel, born in Thompson, May 25 (or 29), 1725, was a landowner and farmer there; in 1751 he married Sarah Plank. Of their children, John was born in 1751; Jesse, born Nov. 30, 1752, died in March, 1842, a survivor of the Revolutionary war, who married Louise Martin; Asa, a survivor of the Revolutionary war, born April 18, 1760, married (first) Sarah Emerson, who was born Aug. 7, 1767, and died Jan. 4, 1835, and (second) Phebe Greenwood, and died Nov. 27, 1847; Abel, born April 13, 1764, in Thompson, succeeded his father as hotel keeper, became well known in that line, died in Thompson Oct. 19, 1832, and is buried in East Thompson cemetery; Amasa was born in 1766; Mercy married Israel Tourtellotte; Jerusha died unmarried; Sally married (first) Alexander Mason, who was lost at sea, their one child dying in infancy, and (second) Joseph Chapin, of Oxford, Mass., who was a landowner, hotel-keeper and farmer in Thompson.

(V) Amasa Jacobs, son of John, was the grandfather of Barton Jacobs, of Thompson, and was born in Thompson in 1766, and died June 12, 1837. He married Eunice Joslin, born April 24, 1766, and died April 14, 1830. These children were born to Amasa Jacobs and his wife: Mercy, born Dec. 13, 1794, who married Joseph Benson; Maria, born June 9, 1796, who married John Martin and located in New York; and Serril, born June 18, 1798. Amasa Jacobs, was a farmer and large landowner and spent his life in East Thompson, where he died in advanced age and was interred in the East Thompson cemetery.

(VI) Serril Jacobs, son of Amasa, and father of Barton, was born on the old Jacobs homestead and spent his life in farming and lumbering, occasionally engaging in cattle dealing. Many of the excellent improvements, including the present comfortable and commodious residence, were placed here by Serril Jacobs, and there he lived to old age, a thoroughly respected and useful citizen, his death occurring Oct. 13, 1868. His first wife was Nancy Dudley, born June 20, 1802. His second marriage occurred Nov. 13, 1841, to Phila M. Dudley, born March 17, 1810, who died Sept. 10, 1888. Both father and mother lie side by side in the old East Thompson cemetery. Mr. Jacobs was identified with the Democratic party. The children born to the first marriage of Mr. Jacobs were: Hannah, born Jan. 3, 1828, who married Fielder Converse, May 14, 1851; Eunice, born April 6, 1833, who died Oct. 3, 1851; and Rufus, born June 18, 1830, who died April 18, 1837. The children of the second marriage were: Barton, born March 16, 1843; Maria, born March 6, 1846; and Harrison Serril, born April 25, 1848. Of these children, Maria married May 10, 1865, John Rich, born May 17, 1844, and they had a family of five: John J., born Nov. 13, 1867; Chandler H., May 8, 1871, who died Nov. 21, 1883; Everett S., May 22, 1877; Florence M., May 31, 1881; and Sarah Maria, Jan. 12, 1886. Harrison Serril, on May 4, 1871, married Ann Maria Richardson, who was born Aug. 1, 1844, and died June 11, 1891; their two children were: Mabel, born April 8, 1875; and Ethel, born Sept. 7, 1877.

(VII) Hon. Barton Jacobs belongs to a family which has contributed many members to the public life of their localities. He received a district school education and has followed farming and lumbering the greater part of his life. Mr. Jacobs owns the homestead farm of sixty acres and still continues to operate it with eminent success. For many years he has taken an active part in public affairs, and on account of being so well qualified, has been called upon to fill many responsible positions. For a long period he has been a justice of the peace, has been assessor and a member of the board of relief, while in 1880 his fellow citizens testified to their respect and confidence by electing him to the Legislature. While there he was a member of the committee on Fisheries, and performed his full duty.

On Nov. 28, 1872, Mr. Jacobs was married to Lucy M. Jenkins, born April 28, 1849, a daughter of Ira and Sally (Bates) Jenkins, and the children born to this union are: Lottie M., born Nov. 18, 1873, who was educated in the public schools of Thompson, graduated at the Webster high school and later, in stenography and type-writing at the Hinman Business College, at Worcester, in which city she is employed at her profession; Laura Emma, born Dec. 21, 1877, who was also educated in the Thompson schools and at Worcester; Lucy Jane born Sept. 4, 1879, a popular and successful teacher, who has followed her profession in New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Rhode Island; Louise Ann, born Jan. 5, 1883, a graduate of the Webster high school; Ruth Ellen, born Aug. 5, 1885, a student; Mary Bartena, born Feb. 26, 1891, who died May 3, 1892; and Ira Barton, born Nov. 20, 1894. Mr. Jacobs's family are attendants on the services of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Jacobs has long been interested in fraternal life, and is well known to his Masonic brethren all over the State. He is a charter member of Corner Stone Lodge, at Grosvenor Dale, and has attained to the Royal Arch degree. In his community Mr. Jacobs enjoys the highest measure of public esteem, his neighbors fitly speaking of him as "a thoroughly reliable, whole-souled man."

ROBERT L. JOHNSON. The meritorious career of Robert L. Johnson has been connected for the greater part with Sterling, Windham county, the highest political and agricultural interests of which he has persistently maintained and fostered and where he is known for his wholesome and practical views upon governmental and other issues. A long and arduous military service during the Civil war entitles him to still further consideration from all lovers of country and heroism, although his experience upon the battle field was gained by the side of other sons of his native state of Rhode Island, rather than besides those of his adopted State. A native of Cranston, R. I., Mr. Johnson was born April 2, 1840, and was reared and educated in Dover, N. H. His parents were Darius and Ann (Guild) Johnson, and his grandfather was also called Darius.

The grandfather Darius Johnson was in early life a resident of Coventry, R. I., where he married Amy Love, who bore him two sons, of whom John was born Sept. 19, 1804, and died July 20, 1870; while Darius, the father of Robert L. was born March 6, 1809. The grandfather started for the West about 1808, and on the journey met with the unexpected, for he was never after heard from. His widow continued to live in Coventry, and she was one of the unfortunates carried off by the plague of 1816.

The second Darius grew to manhood in Coventry, and learned the machinists' trade in Cranston, R. I. He at a later day removed to Dover, N. H., and while there engaged in the calico print business, continuing thus for twenty-seven years, or until 1860. The April following the disposal of his calico industry Mr. Johnson came to Sterling, Conn., and purchased the Samuel Gordon farm of 203 acres in the southern part of the town, where he made his home and engaged in farming until his death, July 17, 1876. In Cranston, R. I., Mr. Johnson married Ann Guild, a native of Cranston, and a daughter of Richard Guild, who was born Jan. 21, 1762, and died in 1832. Mr. Guild was a soldier during the Revolutionary war, and a prominent and enterprising farmer and citizen. His first wife, Orphia Wilbur, was born in 1767 and died Nov. 18, 1807; and his second wife was a widow, the sister of Gov. Knight. Mrs. Darius Johnson was the youngest of nine daughters; was born April 9, 1806, and died May 1, 1879.

In early manhood Darius Johnson was a Whig, but upon the establishment of the Republican party in 1856 he became one of the staunch supporters of the new organization. He was exceptionally well informed on all current events, and though he never sought official recognition viewed with enthusiasm the local undertakings of his party. In spite of his aversion to office he was persuaded to represent Dover, N. H., in the Legislature of 1854, and his services while a member of that august body were consistent with the best interests of the community in which he lived. To himself and his wife were born three sons: Richard M., born Dec. 15, 1836, married Susan Lord of Dover, N. H., and lives in Hyde Park, Mass., where he is clerk of the sewage commission; Robert Love; and William H., born Aug. 5, 1842, and died Dec. 3, 1843.

When sixteen years of age Robert L. Johnson discontinued attendance at the district schools of Dover, N. H., and entered his father's calico print establishment, remaining there until the family removal to Sterling. On Aug. 14, 1862, he enlisted in Battery A, 1st Rhode Island Regiment of Light Artillery, and served until his discharge at Providence, R. I., June 10, 1865. During the service he saw much of the terrible and gruesome side of warfare, and in all participated in twenty-six battles, many of them of vast historical moment. Fortunately he escaped serious wounds, capture or imprisonment, his sole reminder of the fray being a bruise from an exploding shell, which has since caused him considerable annoyance. He was at the second battle of Bull Run, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and Hatcher's Run, and was present at the surrender of Gen. Lee, and at the grand review at Washington.

After the war Mr. Johnson returned to Sterling and continued with his father in business until the latter's death, July 17, 1876, when he came into possession of the home farm which has since been his home. He has been very active in town affairs, and as a Republican had the satisfaction of casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He has taken an active interest in promoting the well being of the public schools, and the cause of education has no better friend in this part of the county. However, Mr. Johnson opposed the consolidation of schools, his belief being that district schools were more to the advantage of farming communities. He served three years as town treasurer; was selectman for two years, and justice of the peace; and represented Sterling in the legislature of 1899, his service on the banking committee being particularly effective. He is a member of the Kilborn Post, No. 77, G. A. R., of Central Village, and he is variously associated with social and political concerns in his town.

On Nov. 22, 1865, Mr. Johnson married Mary A. Johnson, daughter of John L., and granddaughter of Darius Johnson. John L. Johnson was born in Coventry, R. I., Sept. 19, 1804, and was reared and educated in Coventry. He later came to Sterling, Conn., where he engaged in farming until his death, July 20, 1870. He married Eunice, daughter of James Bailey, of Sterling, and had the following children: Nancy, widow of Dwight Jenks, of Foster, R. I.; Thomas J., deceased, who married a Miss Field, and father of Florence Johnson; Henry D., a resident of La Salle, Ill., married Roxie Lewis, and has four children, Frank, Clayton, Mary, and Ernest; Mary A., wife of Robert L. Johnson; John F., a farmer and merchant of Bennington, Ill., married Maggie Tait; and Gilbert C., born April 25, 1839, married, Jan. 1, 1874, Sarah J. Winslow, daughter of Philip and Mercy (Whitford) Winslow, is a veteran of the Civil war, and has the following children: Gilbert F., born Oct. 27, 1874; and Bertha Mabel, born June 10, 1877, and now the wife of Walter S. Place. Alexander, the second youngest of the children born to John L. Johnson and his wife, died at the age of twenty-one years; and Jennie E., wife of Henry L. Pratt, lives in Oaklawn, R. I. To Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Johnson has been born one daughter, Susie B., born Sept. 7, 1867, who became the wife of Philip G. Winslow, March 12, 1889. Mr. Winslow is one of the prosperous farmers of Sterling, while his wife is a very successful educator, and now has charge of the school at Oneco, having inherited her special aptitude for teaching from her mother who in her youth taught for several years in the town of Sterling.

Two brothers and a sister, John, Samuel, and Ann Guild, arrived from Scotland about 1636, and are about that time recorded in Dedham, Mass. Samuel was admitted a freeman in 1642, and is thereafter traced to Newbury, Haverhill, and Watertown, Mass., from which town it is thought he removed to Milford or Wethersfield, Conn., with the first considerable immigration, where he left numerous descendants. John Guild was admitted a freeman in 1643, had united with the church at Dedham in 1640, and was one of the original grantees of the town in 1643. He married in 1645, Elizabeth Crook, of Roxbury, and died in 1682.

The name of Wilbur is widely known in Rhode Island and Massachusetts, where are descendants of Samuel Wilbur, of Boston, who arrived in the Hub city not later than 1633, at which time he and his wife Ann, were admitted to membership. His first wife was a daughter of Thomas Bradford, of Doncaster, York, England, and his second wife was called Elizabeth. He had four sons, Samuel, Joseph, William and Shadrach, and possibly a daughter, Sarah. Samuel Wilbur, Sr., removed to Taunton, Mass., and he having embraced with others "the dangerous doctrine of Cotton and Wheelwright" was banished from the province in 1637, and fled to Providence. The refugees purchased Aquidnick (now Knod Island) from the Indians, and thither Mr. Wilbur removed with his family in 1638. However, he returned to Boston probably in 1645, thereafter living in both Boston and Taunton, in which latter city he died in 1656. After his death the spelling of the name was changed to Wilbor. Of the sons, Samuel and William settled in Portsmouth, and Joseph and Shadrach in Taunton, Mass. It is almost certain that all who bear the name in this country have come from the first family in Boston, those in Rhode Island, Connecticut, and the adjacent towns in Massachusetts coming from the two who settled in the Island.

ALPHONSO LYSANDER ANDERSON (deceased) was born in Hardwick, Mass., April 10, 1822, and was the son of Timothy Page Anderson, who was born in New Braintree, Mass., Jan. 24, 1792. The father was a miller with a special gift in mechanics, he had a large grist and saw mill, and built the stone dam which is still standing. The first improvements on the turbine wheel long in use were invented by him. He invented a lathe and patented a water wheel in 1833. He died April 9, 1842, in Hardwick, to which point he had removed when quite a young man. In politics he was allied with the Whig party, and was selectman for many years, filling other town offices from time to time.

T. P. Anderson and Betsy Hastings, of Barre, Mass., were united in marriage in 1812. Mrs. Anderson's father, Theophilus Hastings, was a soldier of the Revolutionary war where he served in the commissary department, and drew a pension from the Government. T. P. Anderson becoming an advanced temperance man resigned the position of selectman, which he had held for twenty years, rather than vote to allow the sale of liquors in his town. In his religious affiliations he was a Universalist, and served on the committee that built the Universalist Church in Hardwick. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson had the following children: (1) Elvira, born July 15, 1813, married Charles Alexander, and on his death became the wife of John Severance, both of Winchester, New Hampshire. Her first husband died in Cuba, where he had gone for his health. She died Feb. 12, 1898, in Barre, Mass. (2) Maria, born Jan. 2, 1816, married Festus Spocner, who was killed by a boiler explosion. She died in May, 1842, in Warren, Mass. (3) Eliza, born Aug. 5, 1819, died May 24, 1841. (4) Alphonso Lysander is the next in the family. (5) Almeda, born May 12, 1824, married Joseph Dexter, of Hardwick, Mass., and died March 11, 1866.

John Anderson, the grandfather of Alphonso L., was born in New Braintree, Mass., where he was very extensively engaged in farming. Phebe Barr, his wife, was born in Braintree, and both were buried there. He reached the age of sixty-three, and made a fine reputation as a thoroughly honorable and straightforward man, something of a humorist, and withal a practical joker on occasion, but his word was good as gold and whatever he said was counted as truth. They had a family of eleven children, six of whom grew to manhood and womanhood.

Alphonso L. Anderson had his education in the Hardwick schools, and it was his father's intention to give him a liberal education, but that gentleman unfortunately lost the greater part of his property. Alphonso L. Anderson was compelled to leave school at the age of eighteen and apply himself to mill work in order to help the family along. After the death of his father he entered the employ of the Smith Manufacturing Company, to learn the trade of paper making, and here he remained several years. Mr. Anderson's next work was to take up the millwright trade as well as the carpenter business, and thoroughly learn these two lines of industry. In 1849 Mr. Anderson leased for a period of eleven years the saw and grist mill of Joseph Harding, and then purchased a fine farm of sixty acres in Hardwick. The farm and the mill were both conducted in masterly manner until 1860. In 1860 Mr. Anderson removed to Gilbertville where he was engaged for two years in a saw and grist mill. He then returned to Hardwick where in 1866 he traded some property for a farm, and in 1880 removed to Warren, Mass. In 1881 he came to Tolland and purchased of Carlos Tilden the Leverett Luce grist, saw and shingle mill, the Hardwick farm having been sold the previous year. Mr. Anderson and his son, William T., bought the place under the firm name of A. L. Anderson & Son. They also purchased the old Luce homestead.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the old American or "Know-Nothing" party, and assisted in the organization of the Free Soil party; he became a Republican in 1856 and was very active in its affairs during the remainder of his life. His services were often demanded in various local positions, and after coming to Tolland he took an active interest in school matters.

Mr. Anderson was married (first) to Mary C. Hall, of Berkshire county, Mass. She died in 1854, and Mr. Anderson married (second) Abigail B. Ellis, June 13, 1859. She was born Feb. 1, 1824, in Calais, Vt., and is a daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Burt) Ellis. To the first marriage was born a son, who died when seven months old. Of the second marriage one son, William Timothy, was born, March 2, 1860, in Ware, Massachusetts.

WILLIAM TIMOTHY ANDERSON was educated in Ware, attending the local high school three years, and then learning the carpenter trade. This has been his occupation for many years, most of his time being engaged as a contractor and builder. In 1880 he worked in Knowles Pump Works in Warren, Mass. for a year, and then removed to Tolland. Here he conducted the mill with his father, and has been very busy on his own account as a carpenter. In August, 1895, he took up the metal ceiling business which has proved a very taking line, many fine constructions having been made in churches, halls and public buildings. Mr. Anderson represents the McCormick Reaper Company and the Farmers' Union Fertilizer Company, and these ventures have proved very successful.

Mr. Anderson is like his father a staunch Republican, and has done some very hard work for the party. For several years he has been chairman of the Republican town committee. For a number of terms he was on the board of selectmen, and has also been a member of the board of relief. Mr. Anderson has been auditor of the Tolland Savings Bank for several years, and was one of its incorporators.

Mr. Anderson was married May 26, 1887, to Alice S. Campbell, of Ware, Mass. Mrs. Anderson is a daughter of John P. and Nancy M. (Sargeant) Campbell, and is the mother of the following children: Marion Ellis, born Nov. 21, 1889; Ethel Maria, born July 14, 1892.

Mr. Anderson spends much of his time traveling attending to his various business interests. The son, like his father before him, is a good business man, of careful judgment and broad views, and unusually successful in all his enterprises.

After several years of failing health Alphonso L. Anderson passed away Dec. 12, 1901, in Tolland, and is buried in Ware, Mass. His widow is still making her home with her son.

COL. LEBBEUS P. TINKER (deceased). Though one of the foremost business men of his day in the town of Vernon, Tolland county, little is now known of Col. L. P. Tinker. He was a native of Westfield, Mass., and the first of a family of twelve children, born to Martin and Mary (Peck) Tinker. Col. Tinker was born in 1770, and died in March, 1852. His wife was a sister of John J. White, a noted instructor of Hartford, and the father of Julia W. Dobson, of Dobsonville. There were no children born to this union.

Mr. Tinker was engaged in the mercantile business in Manchester and Buckland, and located at Vernon Center when in the prime of life. There he owned and operated a general store, and had his home on what is now the E. Hammond place. From his first coming to the town he took an active interest in everything that tended to its improvement. He was interested in a woolen mill in company with Col. McLean and Alonzo Bailey, and took an active part in the first factories at Rockville. At the time of his death in 1852 he had an estate of about $20,000. His wife died the same year. His title as "Colonel," came from his appointment as regimental inspector in the old state militia.

In 1814 the manufacture of satinets was first established in Rockville. This mill stood at the corner of the old Hockanum Mill, and was owned by Ebenezer Nash, father of Mrs. Dr. Skinner. It was destroyed by fire and a new company was formed consisting of Ebenezer Nash, John Mather and Col. Tinker, who built one and then the other of what were known as the twin mills. Until 1821 this was the sum total of the factory interest of Rockville.

Col. Tinker was a Whig and took an active part in local political activities. He was the second town clerk, Oliver King being the first, and served from 1815 to 1846, and also for a part of the year 1850. Col. Tinker and his wife attended the Congregational Church, to which she belonged.

JOHN SILCOX (deceased). During the earlier period of the woolen manufacturing business, in Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., there were attracted from the woolen centers of England, many young men whose early training in that branch of work made them desirable acquisitions to the great army already busy here. These in later years often developed into some of Rockville's best and most highly respected citizens. This is shown in the case of John Silcox who came to Rockville fifty years ago and grew with the town, rejoiced and assisted in its development, and prospered with its prosperity.

Mr. Silcox was born at Road, Somersetshire, England, Jan. 31, 1831, a son of John and Jane (Dodemade) Silcox. He was one of a family of four boys and four girls, of whom one boy and one girl died in infancy, and one sister, Virtue, died at the age of eighteen. Of the others, Samuel, who came to Rockville in 1847, entered the mills, and died in 1890; William, who was a skilled musician, traveled over England with a show for a number of years, and died there; and Sophia, who married William Moore and went to Australia years ago, dying near Sydney.

The father of John Silcox remained in England until 1867-68, when he came to the home of his son, then in Broad Brook, Conn., where his last years were spent. He reached the age of eighty-three, still a well preserved old gentleman, although he had been active during life, his business being that of dyeing. The mother did not live to reach America, dying in England where she had been a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism for a long time. The Silcox family is a long-lived one and some of the ancestors lived to reach the age of almost a century.

The parents of Mr. Silcox were people of limited means, the four cents a week required to pay for his schooling was almost more than could be afforded when the family was large and wages low. Even the advantages offered the children of that time were so inferior to those pressed upon the boys and girls of today that there is scarcely any basis of comparison. Physical needs had to be attended to, and at the tender age of eleven years John Silcox was obliged to give up all further hope of an education, and go into the mill as a "roller joiner," this being a feature which machinery and different kinds of rollers have long done away with. His wages were fifty-six cents per week. Then Mr. Silcox was engaged at "fulling on the cards," and so his young life was spent, the only change from the noise and confusion of the mill being when he could get a few jobs at hay making during the summers.

As Mr. Silcox grew older he was not satisfied with the industrial conditions then prevailing in his native section, and decided to come to the United States, the only question being that of enough money to pay his passage. Although he had been most industrious and economical, it was almost impossible, with his opportunities, to have saved sufficient money, but his brother Samuel was willing to lend it, and Mr. Silcox prepared to leave his native country. This loan was repaid in later times. Samuel had come to the United States, previously. In May, 1852, John Silcox took passage from Liverpool on the sailing vessel "Henry Clay," and after a voyage of five weeks and three days landed in New York and set out immediately for Rockville to join his brother. At this time he was in possession of six sovereigns, but owed his brother Samuel the passage money. Entering the Rock Mill, Mr. Silcox was employed there for seventeen years. He left this place in 1869 to go to Glastonbury, Conn., where for a year he was employed in the Glazier Mill and for a time conducted a boarding house in connection with that mill. From there he went to Broad Brook and for nine years was in the fulling room of the Broad Brook Manufacturing Co.'s Mill, but in 1879 he returned to Rockville and for a few months was employed in the fulling room of the American Mill, this terminating his work in mills.

With H. C. Parker, Mr. Silcox now entered the mercantile business, opening a furniture store in the Orcutt building. This partnership was dissolved a year and a half later, Mr. Silcox retiring. Shortly after Mr. Silcox bought the clothing business of H. A. Merrick in Rockville, and in company with Henry L. Noble formed the firm of Silcox & Noble. For thirteen years this business flourished, then Mr. Silcox became its sole proprietor, continuing until February, 1896, when he was succeeded by his son Earnest J., who was a member of the firm of Howell & Silcox. Mr. Silcox then concluded to retire and enjoy the fruits of his former activity and success.

The first marriage of Mr. Silcox was in Rockville, in November, 1853, to Esther Bowns, a native of Wiltshire, England, and the daughter of Enoch and Esther Bowns, who came to Rockville about 1849. Mrs. Silcox died in 1861, the children of this union being: Charles, Esther and Francis, deceased; John Edward, a resident of Battle Creek, Mich.; and Julia, the wife of Rev. F. B. Adams, of East Blackstone, Mass. The second marriage of Mr. Silcox was April 22, 1863, to Miss Emma Dart, a native of Tolland, near Snipsic, who was born Oct. 19, 1835, a daughter of Salmon P. and Maria (Ladd) Dart. Mrs. Silcox was but a child when her parents removed to Ellington, and soon after to Somers, Conn.; in 1847 they moved to Rockville, from which time Mrs. Silcox was reared in that city.

Salmon P. Dart was a carpenter by trade and lived to be eighty-two years old, his wife also reaching that age. Of the family of seven born to Mr. and Mrs. Dart, only Mrs. Silcox and one sister survive, Mary Ann, now Mrs. Willard Griswold, of Rockville. The children born to Mr. Silcox by his second marriage were: Algernon, Archibald and Gertie, died young; and Earnest J., born March 29, 1876, a graduate of the Rockville high school in 1895, passed a successful examination for entrance to Yale, but respecting his father's wishes took up a business career and in 1896 became a member of the firm of Howell & Silcox, clothiers and tailors, which firm he succeeded in July, 1901. His marriage was to Bernice Tilden, of Ellington, only daughter of John Tilden. and they have one child, Marjorie, born March 1, 1899.

In 1877 Mr. Silcox bought the property on High street, and where he continued to reside until his death. A staunch Republican, he took a keen interest in the success of his party; in religious matters he was one of the prominent members of the Methodist Church, having joined it in 1853; he was a member of the official board, for many years was the chorister and for a long time a member of the choir. Although he was successful in life, his life as spread before the public is one which would naturally bring success. Add energy, industry, honesty and correct habits to a young man's equipment, and the result of his life race can easily be predicted. Mr. Silcox's death took place April 18, 1902 and he was laid to rest in Grove Hill cemetery.

SAMUEL KNIGHT SPALDING. One of the old and prominent families of New England, one which has been particularly conspicuous through generations for military valor and loyalty to country, is that of Spalding, of which a worthy representative is found in Samuel K. Spalding, a leading and esteemed citizen of Putnam, Conn., teller of the First National Bank of that city.

Reliable information from family papers, Plainfield, Conn., records, the "Year Book of Colonial Wars" and other sources, give a consecutive record, although but too brief a one, of the life and services of the members of this family.

Edward Spalding, the emigrant ancestor, located in Braintree, Mass., probably between 1630 and 1633. His wife Margaret, died there in 1640, but Edward survived until Feb. 26, 1670, dying in Chelmsford, Massachusetts.

John Spalding, son of Edward the settler, born about 1633, died in Chelmsford, Mass., Oct. 3, 1721.

On May 18, 1658, he married Hannah, daughter of John and Dorothy Heald, of Concord, Mass. It is certain that he participated in King Phillip's war, and was a lieutenant in 1701 and 1702, in Queen Anne's war.

Edward Spalding, son of John was born in Chelmsford, Mass., Sept. 16, 1663, and died in Plainfield, Conn. According to the Concord records, on Oct. 23, 1705, he married Dorothy Barker, of Concord, Massachusetts.

Joseph Spalding, son of Edward, was born Sept. 3, 1718 (Plainfield records), and died Feb. 9, 1796. On March 4, 1742, he married Lydia Wheeler, daughter of Isaac and Sarah Wheeler.

Reuben Spalding, son of Joseph, was born Dec. 7, 1748, in Plainfield, Conn., and died there Dec. 4, 1821. (Plainfield and gravestone records). On April 1, 1775, he married Rachel Knight, daughter of Deacon Samuel and Rachel (Leavens) Knight. The "Revised Spalding Memorial" attributes to Reuben Spalding service in the Revolutionary war from June to December, 1776, in Wadsworth Brigade, and from Sept. 8 to Nov. 2, 1776, in Major Backus' Regiment of Light Horse. That this family was entitled to more than ordinary consideration on account of its pronounced loyalty may be judged when it is asserted that three brothers of Reuben Spalding, three cousins, fifteen sons of cousins and a grandson of a cousin, all bearing the honorable Spalding name, participated in the marches and battles of the Colonial army, while still another cousin, himself a veteran of the French and Indian war, paid a substitute for service all through the long struggle, and also supported the latter's family during his absence.

Samuel Knight Spalding, son of Reuben Spalding, was born possibly as early as 1777, and died Jan. 31, 1847, in Plainfield, Conn. His first marriage was to Nabby Cary. By occupation he was a farmer, although long years of ill health seem to have incapacitated him for much labor of any kind.

Simon Spalding, son of Samuel Knight Spalding, was born Sept. 9, 1813, in Plainfield, Conn., and died May 9, 1854, in Putnam (then Thompson). During the whole of his business life he was connected with mill interests. In Killingly he engaged in cotton manufacturing, running two mills, which, however, did not prove a satisfactory enterprise, and in 1852 he located in Putnam. Here he obtained the responsible position of boss of the carding room in Edmund Wilkinson's mill. In politics he was an old-line Whig, and doubtless would have attached himself to the Republican party, but his death occurred in the same year of its birth. He was a man of intelligence, personal and political honesty, and took a deep interest in the development of the educational needs of the community, serving with usefulness upon the Putnam district school committee. His religious membership was with the Congregational Church. Gifted with a fine voice, he was a valued member of the church choir for a long period. On March 18, 1839, Mr. Spalding married Sarah Robinson Ballard, a native of Thompson, Conn., who died in Putnam, Sept. 21, 1895, daughter of Lynde and Amy (Greene) Ballard, of Thompson. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Spalding consisted of two daughters and two sons, namely: Sarah Jane, born March 26, 1841, on July 24, 1866, married George F. Willis, of Plymouth, Mass., who later engaged in the insurance business in Putnam, dying in Florida in 1899; Samuel K., a prominent citizen of Putnam, is mentioned below; Carrie Elizabeth, born July 8, 1844, in Killingly, married Charles H. Brown, of Putnam, Sept. 3, 1866; and Jerome, born April 27, 1852, died May 31, 1855.

Samuel K. Spalding was born Oct. 25, 1842, in Danielson, Conn., and attended the East Killingly district schools until the age of ten years, accompanying the family in its removal to Thompson (now Putnam), where his schooling was continued. Upon the death of his father in 1856 he went to live with his uncle, A. S. Bruce, of Pomfret Landing, and remained there five years. From 1859 to 1862 he engaged in farming at Pomfret in company with Lucian Holmes, this occupation being interrupted by his enlistment for service in the Union army, the old military spirit and loyal enthusiasm of the family coming to the front and inducing him to give up everything for his country.

On July 28, 1862, Mr. Spalding enlisted in Putnam, and was mustered into the army on Aug. 18, 1862, in Norwich, Conn. Army life was by no means a series of pleasant incidents to Mr. Spalding. On June 15, 1863, he was captured by the enemy near Winchester, Va., and was incarcerated in Libby Prison and at Belle Isle, being paroled July 10, 1863. More serious in its results was a gunshot wound in the thigh which he received May 15, 1864, at New Market, Va. During his service Co. B, 18th Conn. V. I., was heard of in many a fierce battle, Mr. Spalding participating in all of them and proving himself a valorous soldier. On June 27, 1865, he was mustered out of the service at Harper's Ferry.

Upon his return from the field in 1865 Mr. Spalding went back to Putnam and was employed in a clerical position at the Morse Mills store, going from there to Worcester, Mass., where he learned the machinist's trade, with the New York Steam Engine Works, remaining there about three years. His next position was with Isaac Fiske, a manufacturer of brass instruments, in Worcester, and after one year with him he accepted a position for the same period with Pratt & Whitney, of Hartford. In the latter part of 1870 Mr. Spalding returned to Putnam, where for one and one-half years he was watchman for the National Bank, becoming then clerk and bookkeeper for the same institution, and one and a half years later was promoted to acting teller, continuing in that responsible office until the present. From Dec. 4, 1875, he served as clerk of the Probate court, under Judge Carpenter, until the latter resigned his office on account of the age limit, in 1900.

In political thought and action Mr. Spalding has been an ardent Republican, and has faithfully worked in the interests of his party. For ten years he served the town as auditor, and has been the agent for the town deposit fund for a very long period. His fraternal connection is with the Putnam Council, No. 340, Royal Arcanum, in which council he has served as treasurer for ten years. He was a charter member of A. G. Warner Post, No. 54, G. A. R., and in 1888 was post commander. His interest is active in the Association of the Union Ex-prisoners of the War of the Rebellion, of Hartford, Conn., in which for the last two years he has held the position of first vice-president.

Mr. Spalding has been twice married, his first union being to Ellen S. Blashfield, on Nov. 25, 1873. She was a daughter of Hiram Blashfield, of Putnam, and died Oct. 22, 1892. Mr. Spalding was married (second) Sept. 20, 1899, to Miss Annie Eliza Bacon, daughter of Ephraim and Eliza (Baxter) Bacon, the former a well-known blacksmith in South Killingly. Both Mr. and Mrs. Spalding belong to the Second Congregational Church, in which Mrs. Spalding is actively interested in the Ladies' Social Circle, and also in the Missionary Society. In 1900 Mr. Spalding added to the attractiveness and value of his property on the corner of Grove and King streets, Putnam, by the erection of a handsome modern residence, where both he and wife delight to offer a generous hospitality. As an old resident of his city and the representative of an established family of note, Mr. Spalding is entitled to regard. His excellent citizenship, his brave soldier record and his many estimable personal characteristics have won for him the highest esteem of his community. Samuel Knight Spalding is one of the representative men of Putnam.

JOSEPH B. STETSON, the present first selectman, is one of Brooklyn's representative citizens and is a worthy descendant of an old established New England family which has always stood high in public esteem.

The founder of the American branch of this family was Coronet Stetson and among his descendants may be found representative men in all the higher walks of life, all over the United States.

James A. Stetson, the father of Joseph B. Stetson, of Brooklyn, Windham county, was born Sept. 28, 1801, in Scituate, Mass. He was one of a family of ten children and was but a small boy when he lost his father. Circumstances made it necessary that the lad should make his own way in the world and it was in the family of Mr. Fisk, a woolen manufacturer of Scituate, that he found a home. This family was brought into prominence later, as this Mr. Fisk, a most excellent man himself, was the father of the noted Col. James Fisk, who later became involved in political affairs in New York City and there lost his life. Mr. Fisk was deeply interested financially in cotton manufacturing, and he was one of the first men to introduce power looms in this country. Here James Stetson gained a thorough knowledge of the business, and several years later, in 1825, he came to Brooklyn, Conn., where he engaged in the manufacturing business in another line, that of the old-fashioned thorough-brace chaise. One of these vehicles, made about 1827, is still owned in the town of Brooklyn. Several men were employed by Mr. Stetson and he was becoming prosperous when an incendiary fire destroyed his little shop. With the assistance of the neighbors it was immediately rebuilt, and there he carried on the business for several years. Then he became connected with the Old Community, at Northampton, Mass., and was employed as a salesman by the sect in their silk factory, which was founded by them and is operated now as the Nona-tuck Silk Co. For several years Mr. Stetson continued with the Community, but later resigned his position on account of a proposed transaction which he considered dishonest.

Returning to Brooklyn Mr. Stetson located on the farm of his late father-in-law, and in agricultural pursuits passed the rest of a most estimable life. There he died March 5, 1893, from advanced age. His burial was in the cemetery in the west part of Brooklyn, not far from his late home. Mr. Stetson was a man of high-minded political life. His opinions on the anti-slavery question made him an intimate friend of those great leaders, Samuel J. May, William Lloyd Garrison and George Benson, the latter of whom married his sister. A most active Republican, in 1864 he represented Brooklyn in the State Legislature and was a member of that body when it ratified the constitutional amendment. Although a willing member of that session he declined all other political preferment.

From the age of twenty-one years James A. Stetson was connected with the Masons, and at the time of his lamented death he was probably one of the oldest, in point of years, if not the very oldest member of that fraternity in the United States. Hand in hand with Mr. Stetson's devotion to the principles of Masonry, went his influence in the cause of temperance. Although such was not the general custom in his locality, in 1827 in his home cold sparkling water took the place of sparkling wine, and he boldly took a stand which he believed to be right and never deviated one jot or tittle from it. His friends and neighbors might retain a custom which age had sanctioned, often times to their undoing, but the rule of his house was—temperance. For a number of years he was a deacon in the Unitarian Church in Brooklyn, of which he was a generous supporter.

It was in 1827, two years after his location in Brooklyn, that James A. Stetson was married to the most estimable woman who was his beloved companion through many years and who survived him until June 5, 1899. She was Dolly Witter, born July 8, 1807, in Brooklyn, and was a daughter of Capt. Ebenezer Witter. The latter was born April 10, 1775, died Nov. 18, 1840, and married Dolly Sharpe, who was a daughter of Deacon Robert Sharpe and was born in 1778 and died Dec. 9, 1857.

Deacon Nathan Witter, the father of Capt. Ebenezer and the great-grandfather of Mr. Stetson, of Brooklyn, located on the farm now occupied by Joseph B. Stetson in 1754. At that time these broad and fertile acres were but a wilderness through which the traveler found his way by means of blazed trees. The house which was then erected still stands and is incorporated in the present residence. This farm has been in the possession of the Witter descendants for nearly 150 years.

A family of ten children was born to James A. Stetson and wife: Almira B., who married Courtland Y. De Normandie, a clergyman of the Unitarian Church, has been located at Kingston, Mass. for the past forty years; Mary S., who resides at Northampton, Mass.; George R., who married Ellen Stall, is president and manager of the Electric Light & Power Co. at New Bedford, Mass.; Lucy D. married Vernetta Cleveland, who is a bookkeeper located at Northampton, Mass.; James E., who is a graduate of the Yale Medical school, married Carrie Burrett, and is now a prominent practicing physician, in New Haven; and Joseph B., of Brooklyn.

Joseph B. Stetson was born Oct. 12, 1847, in Brooklyn, on the old farm which he now occupies. His primary education was in the district schools and he became a student in a private high school, conducted there by the noted Byron Bingham, an able instructor who later became a popular minister in the Congregational Church, and died in Woodstock, Conn. Mr. Stetson in his earlier years turned his mind toward a medical career, and devoted some two years of study to it, but as he was the youngest of the family and the only one left to care for the aging parents, he was obliged to put aside his ambitions and remain on the farm. Until his parents passed out of life, full of years, they received his tender filial care. For a number of years Mr. Stetson operated the farm and also taught school, continuing in the latter profession for four years after his marriage. Mr. Stetson has a magnificent farm of 325 acres, but devotes the greater part of it to high-class dairying, having very effectively solved in this locality the question of pure milk and dairy products. Mr. Stetson has called to his aid modern appliances and skilled labor, and his sanitary arrangements and excellent management have resulted in a demand for his products that he can scarcely meet. Here may be seen as fine a herd of high grade Jersey cattle as can be found in the State, and so remarkable has been Mr. Stetson's success as a breeder that in an experience of thirty-two years he has bought but one cow. When he does not breed enough to satisfy his needs, he buys calves of high grade and raises them according to his own excellent methods.

The citizens of Brooklyn have ever been noted for the excellent selection they make for legislative representation, and it was no surprise to that body to have among its members, in 1880, a strong and earnest representative man like Joseph B. Stetson. His service on the committee on Agriculture was appropriate and very satisfactory. This, however, was not his first public appearance, for in the early seventies he was elected a member of the board of selectmen for a period of four years. In 1889 he was appointed chairman of the board to fill out the unexpired term of John Searles, deceased. It was during this time that Mr. Stetson was able to institute an improved system of bookkeeping which has been followed to the present time. At that time the town was in debt to the sum of $12,500, and to meet it a very low rate tax of seven mills was levied. During the term of Mr. Stetson of four and one-half years, this alarming debt was reduced to the moderate sum of $4,500, and, in addition, a fine gravel road was built in the town, a new vault was erected in the cemetery, water was piped to the same place, and a new iron bridge was built at Wauregan. Thus the town improvements were looked after and by good management the debt was reduced. Mr. Stetson has been called upon to fill almost all of the local offices. When he accepted his present position as first selectman, in 1901, he found a town debt of $28,000 staring him in the face, a fact which his fellow-citizens believed he alone was able to manage. This confidence is most gratifying to a man who so thoroughly understands the responsibilities connected with this office. As census taker in 1900 and 1901 Mr. Stetson made so complete and comprehensive a report that he was specially complimented in a letter from Superintendent Eddy. For thirty-two years Mr. Stetson has been connected with the Windham County Agricultural society and for several years was its secretary. This society was organized in 1809 and was chartered in 1821, being the oldest in the United States. Always intensely interested in progressive agricultural movements Mr. Stetson became associated with Brooklyn Grange, No. 43, soon after its organization and both he and wife have filled all of the important chairs of the order, and he has served as Master for three terms. For several years he served as lecturer of the county Pomona society, of which he is also an active member. In the State and National Granges he has taken all of the degrees, with one exception, and is widely known and his views eagerly sought for publication and dissemination.

Mr. Stetson was united in marriage Nov. 26, 1868, in Scotland, Conn., to Mary C. Frink, who is a native of Scotland and is a daughter of Charles and Caroline (Spafford) Frink. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stetson are valued members of the Brooklyn Unitarian Church and Mr. Stetson has been active on the Society's committees. There have been economists who have seemed to enjoy the idea that the old New England farms are not to be compared in fertility or productiveness with those of other sections, but they might be furnished with an object lesson of value by a visit to the estate so ably managed by Mr. Stetson. The sleek well-nurtured cattle which are reared on the farm of Mr. Stetson and the abundant crops which fill his granaries, would dispel quickly such an idea, and perhaps suggest as an explanation that to attain good results in any direction requires a thorough understanding of principles and then a vigorous prosecution of them. Few tracts of like extent in the country present so attractive an appearance or give more remunerative returns than does Mr. Stetson's farm.

JOHN ELLIOTT. In disposing of the opportunities at his command, John Elliott, general merchant and postmaster of North Grosvenor Dale, has maintained the admirable precedent established by ancestors intimately connected with the general welfare of Windham county. He was born in Thompson, Conn., Feb. 6, 1849, and is a son of Marcus A., and grandson of John Elliott.

The preliminary educational training of John Elliott was acquired in his native town, and while still quite young he embarked upon a business career as clerk in a general store in Grosvenor Dale, in which capacity he continued for seven years. So zealous was he in promoting the interests of the firm, and so readily did he adapt himself to the requirements of his position, that his promotion to the more responsible position of bookkeeper and accountant was a foregone conclusion. Possessing the faculty of management, as well as obedience to the will of his superiors, he inaugurated an independent general merchandise business in February, 1882, and in the intervening years has repeatedly demonstrated the wisdom of this ambitious departure. His store is not only adequate so far as variety of goods is concerned, but the courteous treatment and invariable tact and consideration shown customers render it one of the notable establishments of the town.

On Dec. 6, 1879, Mr. Elliott was united in marriage with Alice E. Breckenridge, a native of Iowa, and who died in North Grosvenor Dale. Of this union there were born six children: Sarah Blanche; John E., a clerk in his father's store; Zeruah E., living at home; Pansy O., deceased while young; Marcus A., also deceased while young; and Alice O., at home. For a second wife Mr. Elliott married Anna B. Delaber, of North Grosvenor Dale, and of this union there have been born four children: Marcus, Ralph, Harold, and Wayland. Although a staunch Democrat in political affiliation, Mr. Elliott is yet independent as far as local offices are concerned, and he invariably votes for the man best qualified to serve the public interests. He served the community as selectman for one term, but otherwise has no desire to figure as a politician. His popularity is best evidenced by the fact that although a Democrat he has held the office of postmaster continuously since 1885. He is one of the reliable and conservative business men of the town, and possesses those fundamental traits of character which have ever been regarded as representative of universal good citizenship.

(I) The first of this line in America was Francis, a mariner, who bought land in Salem (afterward Middleton) in 1686. He married (first) June 19, 1686, Abigail, daughter of John and granddaughter of Wilhelm Nicols; and (second) Feb. 15, 1716, Margaret Knight Tapsfield. He had six children: Lydia, Abigail, Francis, Thomas, John and Joseph.

(II) Thomas Elliott married Lucy (probably daughter of Joseph and Abigail) Flint. He lived in the vicinity of Salem till 1749, when the record shows the sale of his real estate. He bought land in Thompson, parish of Killingly, Conn., which he divided between his sons, Francis and Joseph.

(III) Francis Elliott, son of Thomas and Lucy (Flint) Elliott, was born in Salem, Mass., Aug. 17, 1725, and when a young man was presented with a farm by his father. This property was situated on the French river, in the parish of Thompson, towp of Killingly, Conn., and there Francis Elliott spent the remainder of his life. In 1749 he married Phoebe, daughter of Ebenezer Berry, of which union there were born three children: Eunice, baptized Sept. 16, 1750, became the wife of Ebenezer Cooper; Phoebe, baptized January 20, 1754, became the wife of John Cooper; and (IV) John, baptized July 9, 1758, married, Aug. 1, 1779, Mary Nichols, daughter of Jonathan Nichols, who died Aug. 12, 1837, and is buried in Nichols (West Thompson) cemetery. Her husband died in 1832. Of this union there were born the following children: John, born June 23, 1781, died in 1854, having married Mary Bartholomew; Francis, born in August, 1784, died in August, 1843; Albigece, born in August, 1791, died in 1834, having married Betsey Clough, by whom he had one child, Louise; and Dyer Nichols, born Dec. 8, 1797, married Eliza Green, and had one son, Francis Nichols Elliott, of Grosvenor Dale.

(V) John Elliott was born on the Elliott homestead, June 23, 1781, and died in 1854. He married Mary Bartholomew, and reared the following children: Lucy, wife of John Alton; Hannah, who married John Brown; Millie, who was the wife of Thomas Aldrich; Susan, first wife, and Polly, second wife of Samuel Bassett; Marcus A., who is mentioned further below; Sarah, the wife of Alvin Chamberlain.

(VI) Marcus Aurelius Elliott, father of John and George, was born Dec. 15, 1817, on the farm upon which he spent his life in the Grosvenor Dale district, and where he instituted many modern improvements. He died March 21, 1876. He was a Democrat, but never spent much time in seeking office. He married Jan. 4, 1843, Sarah C. Ormsby, a native of Thompson, born Dec. 4, 1817, and who died Feb. 19, 1895, on the old homestead. Five children were born of this union: Anna Elizabeth, who lives on the homestead; Rose, the wife of Eugene Coman of Grosvenor Dale; John; George; and Marcus A., the last named also residing on the Elliott homestead.

OMER LA RUE, M. D. Greater than that of any other vocation to which man may devote his energies and abilities is the responsibility that rests upon the physician and surgeon. The issues of life and death are in his hands, and an improper prescription or unskilled operation may rob the patient of that which he prizes above all else—life itself. It becomes necessary then for the devotee of this noble profession to secure a most careful preliminary training of technical and general order and to be personally animated with that deep humanitarian sympathy whose efficacy is scarcely less potent in many instances than is professional judgment, capacity for accurate diagnosis and the application of proper remedial agents.

Dr. Omer La Rue is one of the able representatives of his profession in Windham county, and a well known and distinctively popular citizen of the attractive little city of Putnam, where he has been engaged in the active practice of medicine and surgery for more than a quarter of a century, gaining high prestige and a large and representative clientele. He honors the profession to which he is devoting his life and a reciprocal honor is conferred upon him by his confreres and by all who know him as a physician and a man. It is clearly apropos of a work of this nature that a review of his genealogy and personal career be given a place within its pages.

Dr. La Rue comes of staunch French lineage, as the name implies, and is himself a native of St. Denis, province of Quebec, Canada, where he was born March 14, 1849, being a son of Levi and Naflette (Brazeau) La Rue, the respective families having been founded in the dominion of Canada in an early day. Levi La Rue was born in the town of St. Antoine, Quebec, in the year 1811, and died in that province in 1899. In his earlier years he followed the trade of tailor, but in 1856 he was made incumbent of the responsible position of superintendent of locks, dams and canals in Canada for the English government. He remained in this office for the long term of forty years, when he was retired on full pay, this being a distinctive mark of appreciation of his zealous and faithful service. He was a man of strong mentality and much executive ability and was one of the prominent citizens of the dominion, where he was honored for his sterling integrity in all the relations of life. During the conflict between the Canadians and English in 1837, he received a bullet wound in his right wrist and right buttock, this being in the engagement at St. Denis. He served for many years in the office of justice of the peace, was a devoted member of the Catholic Church and a man whose faith was exemplified in the daily walks of life. He left that best of all heritages, a spotless reputation, and the record of a busy life. His marriage to Miss Naflette Brazeau, of St. Antoine, was solemnized in the year 1833: she was born in the year 1812, and was summoned into eternal rest in 1895, at St. Ours. Of the children of this union we make brief record at this juncture. Delima, died one year after her marriage to Dr. Pierre St. Jean, who later became mayor of the city of Ottawa, where he was a prominent representative of the liberal party; Amede, a tailor by trade, died in Sorel, Canada, at the age of forty-four years; Vitaline is the widow of Joseph Beliveau, who was a prominent merchant of Montreal, where she still maintains her home; Anna, who died in St. Ours, was the wife of Alexis Giard, son of Louis Giard, a celebrated lawyer of Montreal; Ulric, died at the age of two years; Omer is the immediate subject of this sketch; Victoria is the widow of Ulric Chapdelaine, who was a successful merchant, and she is now living in the city of Montreal; Ludivine, deceased, was the wife of Honore Chagnon, a grocer of Sorel, Canada; Malvina, is the wife of Eleazer Moge, who conducts a grocery and meat market in Worcester, Mass.; and Elise is the widow of Edward Moge, of Worcester, Mass.; Alderic, a portrait artist, is residing with his brother in Putnam.

The grandfather of the Doctor in the agnatic line was Antoine La Rue, who lived in the town of St. Antoine, being a farmer by vocation and a man of prominence in the community. He married a Miss Perrault and both were devout and consistent communicants of the Catholic Church, in whose faith they reared their ten children, all of whom are now dead except two, the father of the Doctor having been the youngest in the family. The two survivors are Noel, a resident of St. Antoine; and his sister, the widow of Noel Guertin, who also makes her home in the same place. The paternal great-grandfather, Augustine La Rue, was a member of the nobility and was a man of great wealth for his day. The manor house of the family was entailed and thus passed into the possession of an older son instead of being inherited by Augustine and his descendants.

Dr. La Rue attended the public schools of his native town until he had attained the age of eleven years, when he was matriculated in the College of St. Hyacinthe, near the city of Quebec. There he completed an eight years' classical course, so that it may be seen that he has had the best of educational advantages aside from his technical course. After leaving the institution mentioned the Doctor went to Montreal, where he became a student in the Victoria Medical University, now the medical department of the famous University of Laval, and there he continued the study of medicine and surgery under the most auspicious conditions for four years, being graduated as a member of the class of 1872, with the coveted degree of Doctor of Medicine. Soon after his graduation Dr. La Rue came to Putnam and opened an office, and there his gracious personality and unmistakable professional ability made his novitiate of short duration, and he has for many years been in control of a notably large and representative practice, ever keeping in touch with the advances made in the sciences of medicine and surgery and being known as a close student and as thoroughly en rapport with his chosen profession. He has consecutively maintained his headquarters in Putnam save for an interval of six months, when he was associated in practice with Dr. Jaques, in Worcester, Mass., this being in the year 1876. He is a member of the Windham County Medical Society, of which he served as president in 1898, and is also a valued member of the Connecticut State Medical Society and the National Medical Association. He is a charter member of the fraternity of the Knights of Columbus, in Putnam, and has served as physician for the organization, with which he is still identified, and he is also a charter member of the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In addition to these the Doctor is a member of the Society of St. Jean Baptiste, of which he served as president for a number of years. He is one of the prominent members and a communicant of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, taking a lively interest in the church and parochial work, and is still farther identified with local organizations, retaining membership in the Arcanum Club, of Putnam.

Dr. La Rue was a charter member of the Franco-American Historical Society of the United States, has served as treasurer of the same since 1899, the date of its formation, and he has taken a very active interest in its affairs, the aim being to preserve and perpetuate the records of the lives and deeds of those worthy men of French birth or lineage who have played so important a part in the history of America. The Doctor is an intimate friend and great admirer of Arthur Favreau, late editor of L'Opinion Publique, published at Worcester, Mass., and was a frequent and highly esteemed contributor to the columns of that excellent paper. He also had a perhaps equally intimate acquaintanceship with Ferdinand Gagnon, editor of the Travailleur, which was subsequently merged into the journal previously mentioned, Mr. Gagnon having died in March, 1886. In all that touches the general welfare of his home city the Doctor has shown a lively interest, doing all in his power to forward the work of education, religion and civic progress. He has served for a number of years as a member of the Putnam board of education. He has the distinction also of having been the first French selectman ever elected in Putnam, serving one year as first and an equal term as second selectman, and proving a valuable executive there, as in every other capacity in which he has been called upon to officiate. His political proclivities are indicated by the staunch support which he accords to the principles and policies of the Democratic party. In a more purely professional way the Doctor has served for many years as health officer of Putnam, both under town and city regimes, and in all these things are manifested the popular confidence and esteem in which he is held by the community. He is a man of distinct individuality and high intellectual gifts, a man of initiative power and thoroughly fortified opinions, and thus it is but natural that he should be a leader in thought and action in any community where his energies and abilities are brought into requisition.

Dr. La Rue is a public speaker of force and incisive dialectic strength, and has been called upon by his party to do campaign work on various occasions—notably in 1884, 1888, 1892 and 1900, having been selected as a campaign orator by the Democratic state central committee of Connecticut. His services in this capacity have been enlisted in the States of New Jersey, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts and Rhode Island and were productive of much good to the party cause. The Doctor inaugurated the system of State conventions in the interest of the French-speaking people, sixteen such conventions having already been held in divers sections of the State, the Doctor having been president of several of these assemblies. In 1886, at the national convention of French-speaking people, in Rutland, Vt., he offered the eulogy in memory of Editor Gagnon, previously mentioned, and in 1888, at Nashua, N. H., he was chosen first vice-president of the organization. In 1893 he was delegate from Connecticut to the national convention in Chicago, where he served as first vice-president and held the chair for five hours during a period of turbulent debate. He also acted as chairman at Nashua for several hours. In 1901, at the convention of the New England States and New York, held in Springfield, Mass., 750 delegates were present and the Doctor served as chairman of the convention, which is an offspring of the national association or congress of French-speaking people. During the second administration of President Cleveland the Doctor was appointed a member of the board of examining surgeons for pensions in Windham county, and served for four years, and he has been on the staff of physicians of the Day-Kimball hospital of Putnam from the time of its organization.

On June 19, 1873, Dr. La Rue was united in marriage to Hermine David, of St. Ours, Canada, the daughter of Dr. Samuel David, and she was summoned into eternal rest, in Putnam, Jan. 17, 1898, having held the love and esteem of a wide circle of friends in that community and being a woman of gentle refinement. Of the children of this union we enter the following record: Antonio, born March 6, 1874, is engaged in the practice of dentistry at Danielson, Conn., being a graduate of the University of Maryland, at Baltimore. He married Alice Kennedy, of Putnam; Arthur, born Aug. 6, 1876, attended the College of St. Marie, at Marieville, Canada, for a period of seven years; in 1896 he entered his father's alma mater the University of Laval, in Montreal, where he continued his studies for three years and was then matriculated in the Baltimore Medical College, Md., where he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1900. Thereafter he served six months as interne in the Maryland general hospital in Baltimore; Endore, the third child, was born Dec. 24, 1880, and completed his education in the Putnam high school; Bella, born Aug. 7, 1883, is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy, in Putnam; Aline, born July 30, 1884, is attending the same school; Maud Alice, born Dec. 20, 1887, is also a student in the same academy; and Achille, born Jan. 2, 1892, is attending the public schools of Putnam. Three other children died in infancy.

NATHANIEL LYON KNOWLTON, a well-known resident of West Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., descends on both sides from two of the oldest and most distinguished families of Windham county.

Comprehensive ancestral data of the Knowlton family may be found in another portion of this record, and in this sketch it will be the pleasant duty of the biographer to trace the descendants of Stephen Knowlton, the grandfather of N. L. Knowlton, who was one of the leading men of his community. The birth of Stephen Knowlton occurred Sept. 7, 1768. He was a son of Abraham and Molly (Kniox) Knowlton, of Ashford, where the whole of Stephen's life was passed. By occupation he was a farmer, one who was interested in his work and very successful and at the same time became prominent in the affairs of the town. His residence was in the western part of town, opposite the present residence of J. E. A. Knowlton. His political convictions made him a member of the Democratic party. His religious connection was with the Baptist Church.

On Jan. 8, 1795, Stephen Knowlton married Hannah Heath, of Willington, who died Sept. 26, 1854, aged seventy-nine years. Stephen died Sept. 15, 1849. Their children were: Stephen, born April 17, 1797, married Cassandra Hester, located in the State of New York and died there on his farm; Arnon, born Jan. 28, 1800, married Susan Wentworth, resided on the homestead in Ashford and died there Dec. 6, 1874; Orson, born Nov. 10, 1803, died in 1807; Marcus, born Feb. 26, 1806, died May 31, 1843, unmarried; Luke, born March 22, 1808, removed to Illinois, where he married, dying there Oct. 12, 1846; Ebenezer, born April 2, 1810; Samuel, born Nov. 3, 1813, married Elizabeth Fay Woodward, located in Illinois and died there; and Hannah Minerva, born Sept. 15, 1816, married John S. Dean and died in Westford. She was the mother of Charles L. Dean, of Walden, Mass., who served several terms as mayor of that city.

Ebenezer Knowlton, father of N. L. Knowlton, was born on the farm in West Ashford belonging to his father, and obtained his education in the common schools. He was of a mechanical turn of mind and was always interested in work along that line. His business career was begun as a merchant, succeeding John Amidon in West Ashford, who went to New York where he accumulated a large fortune. In connection with his store Mr. Knowlton at different times became greatly interested in lines where his mechanical genius was called into play, being engaged at silk-making, grist-milling and in the manufacture of buttons and steelyards. It was in West Ashford that these enterprises were carried on. Some of these were eminently successful and all added to the prosperity of the community.

Until death closed his useful and active life, Mr. Knowlton retained his interest in his mercantile business. He was the first postmaster at West Ashford and faithfully served as such for twenty-five years, irrespective of changes in the presidential chair. In politics he was a Democrat and as a man of judgment and reliability was called upon to fill many town offices. For a long period he served as justice of the peace, and possessing the entire confidence of the community was very frequently selected to settle estates. At the time of his death and long prior he was one of the main supporters of the Baptist Church at West Ashford. Ebenezer Knowlton died Aug. 13, 1866, a man who by strict honesty in business dealings and loyalty to friends and family had won the respect and affection of all who knew him. His remains were laid to rest at Ashford. He was succeeded in business by his son Henry, who continued the business until his own death.

Ebenezer Knowlton married Eliza Ann Lyon, born Nov. 8, 1816, a native of Eastford Society, daughter of Amasa and Keziah (Knowlton) Lyon, and a sister to the brave Gen. Nathaniel Lyon, who was one of the early victims of the Civil war. The grandfather of Mrs. Knowlton was Lieut. Daniel Knowlton, a brave Revolutionary soldier. Mrs. Knowlton survived her husband many years, dying Dec. 2, 1886. The children born to Ebenezer Knowlton and his wife were as follows: (1) Henry E., born Nov. 1, 1839, who married Harriet S. Bullard, succeeded his father in the mercantile business and also was postmaster until his death, Aug. 12, 1881. His children were three in number, namely—Lottie H. S., the wife of J. E. A. Knowlton, has children, Edwin E. and Elizabeth W.; Harriet Blanch, the wife of A. B. Hunt of Hartford; and Henry E.; (2) Hannah Keziah, who married John W. Church, a member of the well-known firm of Freeman, Church & Co., of Hartford. Their one son Henry married Louisa Freeman, and they have one daughter; (3) Nathaniel Lyon, of this sketch, a namesake of his distinguished uncle; (4) Mary E., who is postmistress of West Ashford; (5) Adaline J., who is the wife of Dwight W. Shurtliff of West Ashford, has children—Dwight K., Goldie A., Nora I., and Gladys G.; (6) Lillian V. R., who married Joseph E. Phillips, of York, Pa., their one daughter being Lillian Y.

Nathaniel Lyon Knowlton was born May 19, 1843, in West Ashford, Conn., and attended the common schools until he was eighteen years of age. Until he was twenty-two he remained at home assisting his father, but at this date entered into an independent enterprise. In company with J. W. Church, they established a distillery at West Ashford, which for four years was very prosperous, turning out choice brands of gin, whiskey, etc. The firm did business under the name of Church & Knowlton, but their plant was destroyed by fire, entailing a severe loss on the partners. This business was not resumed. Later Mr. Knowlton engaged in the making of Wagons, continuing for several years, and now is engaged in carpenter work, paper hanging and painting. With the exception of a short time in 1887, when he acted as clerk for his brother-in-law, Mr. Church, in Danielson, Mr. Knowlton has spent his entire life in Ashford where he owns a fine farm of 150 acres.

On April 5, 1868, Mr. Knowlton was married to Sarah S. Wright, born March 2, 1847, in Ashford, daughter of Leander and Sally Howe (Fisk) Wright. Both he and his wife are connected with the Baptist Church. Mr. Knowlton has been prominently identified with the Democratic party in his section and has been its choice as constable and tax collector and is now serving his third term as justice of the peace. In 1872 he represented Ashford in the State Legislature at New Haven, and again in 1891 at Hartford, that session being remembered as "the dead-lock session." When his brother Henry removed to Danielson, Mr. Knowlton, in 1881, succeeded as postmaster, retaining the office until 1887.

Mr. Knowlton is a man who has friends everywhere, and is known as a good citizen, a capable man of business and one equipped by nature for the prominent positions he has held in public life.

THOMAS F. ROCKWELL, M. D. Among the leading physicians and surgeons of Rockville, Tolland county, Dr. Thomas F. Rockwell is prominent. He was born in New York City, March 17, 1854, only child of Thomas and Ellen (Naugle) Rockwell, the former of whom died when Thomas F. was a small child.

Going to Hartford, Conn., with his mother, Thomas F. Rockwell was a pupil in the Hill school and later in the Hartford high school. After his mother's death in that city, he was thrown upon his own resources at the age of fifteen years. His medical education was begun under Dr. Jackson, and later he studied with Dr. M. M. Johnson, both of whom were eminent practitioners in Hartford. He then entered the medical department of the University of New York, graduating from that institution in the class of 1881.

In March, 1881, Dr. Rockwell located in Rockville, Tolland county, and has since been identified with that city and her interests. Ever since 1890 he has been surgeon of the 1st C. N. G., first serving on Col. Erickson's staff, and since 1891 he has been post surgeon of Tolland county. During the Spanish-American war he served as major and surgeon on the staff of Gen. Burdette. On May 4, 1898, he was appointed post surgeon of the military post at Niantic, Conn., under Brig.-Gen. George Haven, and he served as consulting surgeon to the First Division hospital at Camp Alger, Va. He is now serving on the staff of Col. Edward Schulz.

On Nov. 9, 1887, Dr. Rockwell was married in Rockville to Miss Katie Elizabeth Bill, youngest daughter of Judge B. H. and Kate (Griggs) Bill, extended mention of whom will be found elsewhere. To Dr. Rockwell and wife has come one son, Charles Bill, born Dec. 9, 1888, an intelligent, manly youth, now a student in the Rockville schools. Mrs. Rockwell is a member of the Union Congregational Church. Socially she belongs to Sabra Trumbull, Chapter, D. A. R. The family home is one of the most comfortable and attractive on Park street, and both Dr. and Mrs. Rockwell are prominent in the best social life of the city.

Politically Dr. Rockwell is a staunch Republican, and takes a keen interest in party success, although he is in no sense a politician. He has served the city as health officer and is now medical examiner, having served as such since the coroner's law was passed. Since 1897 he has been secretary of the United States examining surgeons for Tolland county. His medical connections include membership in both county and State societies, and the Society of Military and Navy Surgeons of the United States. Fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows, the Foresters and the A. O. U. W.

Dr. Rockwell is a self-made man. When he came to Rockville he was a stranger and was obliged to contend with old practitioners, but he now has probably the most desirable, and undoubtedly the largest, practice of any physician in Rockville. Possessing every qualification for success in his profession, he has also the attributes which make him an excellent citizen.

AVERY AMOS STANTON. No name in Sterling, Windham county, carries with it greater weight, nor does any represent a more substantial and reliable agricultural, political and social standing than does that of Avery Amos Stanton, who has lived on his present farm for forty years and is an integral part of the growth and prosperity of this region. Mr. Stanton is a native son of Connecticut, and was born in Preston, April 5, 1837, in which locality he lived until his eighth year. His parents were Lodowick B. and Hannah (Stanton) Stanton, and his grandfather was Amos Stanton.

(I) Thomas Stanton embarked at London, England, Jan. 2, 1635, in the merchant ship "Bonaventura," bound first for Virginia and thence to Boston. He settled in Hartford, Conn., in 1637, and there married Ann, daughter of Dr. Thomas and Dorothy Lord, of Hartford. In 1650 Mr. Stanton established a trading house on the Pawcatuck river, where the family finally removed after a residence of several years in New London. Before the removal of the family from Hartford they had come into the possession of a considerable quantity of land, and were considered well-to-do for those times. Thomas Stanton died Dec. 2, 1676, while his wife, Ann, survived him until 1688. They had ten children.

(II) Thomas Stanton, Jr., was born in 1638, and in his native town of Hartford married Sarah, daughter of Captain George Denison, of Stonington, Conn. She was born March 20, 1641, and died Dec. 19, 1701. Thomas, Jr., died April 11, 1718. Himself and brother John received from their father his lands in Preston, Conn. "Thomas Stanton, Jr., had shown so great aptitude for the language of the Indians, as to be desired, in 1654, by the Commissioners of the United Colony of New England to be employed in the public service with his younger brother, by training at Harvard College for interpreter, and seven years this Colony made grant of land and money to the father for the benefit of him and them." On Nov. 11, 1698, Thomas Stanton bought of Owaneco, chief sachem of the Mohegans, a tract of 650 acres of land lying in the North Parish of New London, this same land being later disposed of to Lieutenant James Harris in 1721.

(III) Samuel Stanton, son of Thomas, Jr., was born May 21, 1682. He married for his second wife, Jan. 23, 1729, Rebecca Worden, of Stonington, and died in that town, Jan. 19, 1770.

(IV) John Stanton, born May 13, 1736, married, June 9, 1763, Susanna, daughter of Stephen and Mary (Hazard) Champlin, and lived in Stonington, where he died in 1819. He was a soldier in both the French war and the Revolution, and it is said bore eighteen bullet wounds in his body.

(V) Amos Stanton, the paternal grandfather of Avery Amos, was born in Stonington, Conn., May 25, 1768, and died in Stonington, June 8, 1841. On March 5, 1789, he married Amelia, daughter of Elkanah and Esther Babcock; she died Jan. 7, 1844. Amos Stanton was a lifelong resident of Stonington, where he owned and occupied a farm three miles northwest of Westerly, R. I., on the place now owned by Horace Babcock. His lands of large extent overlooked White Rock, and he here farmed extensively and profitably. He was a man who powerfully impressed those who came in contact with him, for he was strong of character and physique, weighing nearly 300 pounds. Politically he was a Jackson Democrat. At his death his large property was divided among his children, and this gave each of them a good start in life.

(VI) Lodowick B. Stanton, the father of Avery Amos, was born in Stonington, Conn., Jan. 28, 1795. He married Hannah, daughter of Deacon John Stanton, of Stonington. Soon after his marriage he removed to Ledyard, Conn., and later to Preston, same State, eventually returning to Stonington, where he lived on the old estate, and where he died in 1874; his wife died in February, 1866. He was a Democrat in political affiliation, and in his religious associations was connected with the North Baptist Church. To himself and wife were born five children: John L., who served as captain of a company in the 26th Conn. V. I., and was killed at Port Hudson; Albertus S., who died at Norwich, Conn., in February, 1901, leaving a son and daughter; Elizabeth, deceased wife of William Storey, whose son is deputy sheriff of Norwich; Avery Amos; and William E., a resident and large property owner of Lemon City, Fla., where he is a minister in the Baptist Church (he has a son and daughter, the former of whom has been a missionary in India for the past eight years, while the latter is the wife of Thomas G. Houser, a merchant of San Mateo, Florida).

A part of the boyhood days of Avery Amos Stanton were spent in Norwich and Voluntown, and his early educational training was confined to the rather inadequate district schools. At the age of fifteen he entered the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, where he continued as a student for a year and a half. In the meantime his expenses were entirely self-defrayed, the money therefor being saved from his salary as a teacher. In fact, Mr. Stanton became a most proficient educator in his young manhood, and for several years was identified with the best-known schools of his neighborhood and county. His first three terms were in the school at Woody Hill, and he was later at the Greenwich Academy, Greenwich, and still later was identified with the schools of Carolina Mills, Hope Valley, and Hopkinton City, R. I., and after coming to Sterling he taught there and at Plainfield and Voluntown.

Upon arriving in Sterling in 1862, Mr. Stanton purchased a farm of 110 acres on Ekonk Hill, and also leased the adjoining farm of 190 acres belonging to the people living on the south of his present home, and which he afterward purchased. Here he has entered extensively into all kinds of general farming, stock raising and kindred occupations that engage the attention of progressive husbandmen, and at the same time he has engaged in lumbering on an extensive scale.

He has purchased woodlands in a number of towns in Eastern Connecticut, from which he is and has been cutting off the timber, and he is thus the owner of several hundred acres of land. When he first took possession of his present farm forty years ago the live stock consisted of seven head of cattle and a yoke of oxen. He now has a herd of twenty-eight head of cattle and four horses, though at times he owns as many as sixteen horses.

In political preference Mr. Stanton is a Republican, and his most able and conscientious efforts to aid the community have been through the medium of the many official responsibilities entrusted to him. In fact, he has held all of the important local offices in the town, and has embellished his political career with the dignity, enterprise and unquestioned wisdom and integrity to be expected of so high-minded a citizen. For more than thirty years he has been a member of the Republican town committee, and was for the greater part of that time its chairman. For seven and a half years he was on the board of county commissioners, and he represented the town in the Legislature in 1874, during which session he served on the committee on Humane Institutions. For many years he has been a member of the school board, and is at present the acting school visitor. As a member of both the board of selectmen and the school board he has instituted measures and reforms which have not only met with universal approbation but have been practically demonstrated by years of constant usage. With his family he is identified with the Ekonk Grange, No. 89, of which he is a charter member, and the first lecturer. Himself, and Byron Gallup, John Tanner, Deacon Cyrus Tanner and Nathaniel Gallup, were instrumental in securing the organization of the Grange. The family are members of the Voluntown Baptist Church, in which Mr. Stanton was for many years very active, and of which he was Sunday-school superintendent for a time.

In Voluntown Mr. Stanton married Laura C. Gallup, daughter of Benjamin and Caroline L. (Kinne) Gallup, and of this union have been born the following children: (1) Walter, born June 13, 1863, married Jerusha Frink, and has two children, Grace May and Ethel Minor; he was an engineer in the employ of the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co., at Sterling, but is now in employ of the People's Tramway Co., and resides at Danielson, Conn. (2) John B., born June 6, 1865, was educated in the home schools, at the Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, of which he was valedictorian in the class of 1886, and at Brown University, which he entered in 1890 and attended three years. He taught during a part of his schooling at evening schools in Pascoag and Thornton, and in a private school for a part of each day for ten weeks. In the fall of 1892 he became principal of the graded schools at Moosup, Conn., continuing thus for about seven years. He is at present, and has been for several years, superintendent of schools of Norwich, Conn., a difficult and responsible position. He married Winifred Harris, daughter of Hiram Harris, of Plainfield, but has no children. (3) Benjamin G. Stanton was born Aug. 30, 1867, married Bessie Champney, and for fourteen years was bookkeeper for the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co. (4) Nettie L., born June 23, 1871, is the wife of Lawrence Jerome, once in the employ of the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co., but now in the mercantile business at East Lyme, Conn. They have one son, Benjamin Stanton. (5) William Edwin, born July 21, 1875, married Anna Fuller, daughter of James Hazard and Ruth Ann (Raymond) Fuller, of Hartford. He is a bookkeeper for the Sterling Dyeing & Finishing Co. (6) Ella C., next in the family, is a graduate of the Willimantic Normal School, class of 1900, and is at present a teacher in a branch of her alma mater, called the Model School. (7) Albert H., born March 27, 1878, is preparing for the Baptist ministry at Brown University, being in his third university year. (8) Lottie E., born Jan. 21, 1882, is living at home, and takes an active part in the management of the house.

THE GALLUP FAMILY, to which Mrs. Stanton belongs, is descended from John Gallup, of the parish of Mosterne, County Dorset, England, who came to New England in the ship "Mary and John" in 1630, his wife and children following in 1633. He lived first at Dorchester, then at Boston, where himself and wife were admitted to the First Church in 1634. Mr. Gallup was the owner of Gallup Island, and died in Boston, Jan. 11, 1650, his wife surviving him until Sept. 27, 1655.

(II) John Gallup (2), born in England, came with his mother to New England in 1633, married at Boston, Hannah Lake, daughter of John and Margaret (Read) Lake, the latter a daughter of Edmund Read, of Wickford, Essex, England, and sister of Elizabeth Read, who married John Winthrop, Jr., Governor of Connecticut. John Gallup and his father served in the Pequot war, and in 1671 had a grant of land in New London. Mr. Gallup owned several hundred acres of land on the Mystic side of the river, upon which he settled with his family in 1654, and he was an early settler of Stonington. He was deputy to the General Court in 1665-67, and an Indian interpreter of such skill that upon the breaking out of the King Philip war, though more than sixty years of age, he joined the forces, and as captain not only served the cause as an interpreter but gallantly led his forces to his own doom in the Narragansett Swamp fight, Dec. 19, 1675, he being one of the six captains losing their lives on that date.

(III) John Gallup (3), born in 1646, married in 1675, Elizabeth Harris, born Feb. 8, 1654, daughter of Thomas and Martha (Lake) Harris, of Ipswich. Mr. Gallup settled in Stonington, where he was deputy to the General Court in 1685, 1696, 1697 and 1698. He served with his father in King Philip's war, and was probably with him in the Narragansett fight. He also was an Indian interpreter, and maintained friendly relations with the red men up to the time of his death, April 14, 1755.

(IV) Nathaniel Gallup, born July 4, 1692, married, June 4, 1717, Margaret, daughter of Benadum and Esther (Prentice) Gallup, both being admitted to the First Church of Stonington, July 20, 1718. Mr. Gallup died April 3, 1739, and was survived by his wife until March 2, 1761.

(V) Benjamin Gallup, born July 26, 1736, married, Jan. 20, 1763, Amy Kinne, settled in Voluntown, and died Dec. 6, 1824.

(VI) Benjamin Gallup (2), born May 25, 1774, married Huldah Kinne, a native of Voluntown, in which town the couple settled, and where they died respectively Aug. 23, 1854, and June 21, 1860.

(VII) Benjamin Gallup (3), born in Voluntown in 1811, married, Oct. 30, 1831, Caroline L. Kinne, lived on the old homestead, held many important offices in the community, and died Sept. 3, 1891. His wife died Dec. 20, 1874. Their children were: Sterry B., of Sprague, Conn.; Laura C.; Byron, a resident of Voluntown; Albert, of Hartford; and Amy, unmarried, living on the old homestead in Voluntown.

(VIII) Laura C. Gallup, daughter of Benjamin (3), born Aug. 2, 1837, married, Nov. 28, 1861, Avery Amos Stanton.

EDGAR S. LINCOLN, one of the most prominent and leading citizens of Chaplin, Windham Co., Conn., belongs to one of the old and respected families of the State. The line of descent from the emigrant settler of the family is through Samuel, Samuel (2), John, Jonah, Dan, and Jared W.

Dan Lincoln, the grandfather of Edgar S. Lincoln, was born July 27, 1786, at North Windham, Conn., and attended the common schools of his native town. Later he learned the trade of cloth dresser, and was with his brother Stowell in the cloth manufacturing business, the latter making the cloth and Dan dressing it. For a number of years grandfather Dan engaged in this business and then sold it to his brother Stowell, for a year managed the home farm, later becoming the owner of the Joshua Abbey farm on which he resided for a period of thirteen years. Disposing of this property to his son Allen, grandfather Dan removed to Scotland Society of Windham and purchased a farm in the north-west part of the place where he remained until 1856, removing then to North Windham, near his birthplace, where he lived the rest of his life, during the last few years being retired from activity.

Until "secession times" Mr. Lincoln was a Democrat, but the issues before the country at that time changed him into a Republican, as he was a strong supporter of the Union. Mr. Lincoln was a prominent and well-known citizen and served on the board of selectmen for a number of years, was most highly esteemed and was noted for his industry. Physically he was a man of large proportions and was made captain of the local militia, being familiarly known as "Captain Dan." Both he and wife were members of the Christian Church at North Windham. His death occurred Dec. 31, 1864, resulting from paralysis, and his burial was at North Windham.

Grandfather Dan was married Feb. 6, 1812, to Mehetable Flint, who was born in 1787, a native of North Windham, and who died Sept. 3, 1875. The children of this union were: Amanda, born Nov. 10, 1812, married Edwin A. Burnham. In early life Mr. Burnham engaged in the mercantile business at Windham, and later resided in Willimantic, where both he and wife died; Mason, born March 26, 1816, died July 10, 1889, married Hannah E. Clark; Allen, born Oct. 16, 1817, died Feb. 8, 1882, married Salinda Bennett; Albert, born Sept. 5, 1819, married Rebecca Cogswell, of Mansfield, was a blacksmith by trade and resided in Mansfield Hollow for several years, later removed to Andover, Conn., and died there Jan. 14, 1885; Earle, born June 8, 1821, died May 21, 1826; Jonah, born on Sept. 8, 1823, died Oct. 20, 1824; Jared, the twin of Jonah and the father of Edgar S.; and Dan, born Dec. 7, 1827, died Dec. 15, 1827.

Jared W. Lincoln, the father of Edgar S., was born in Windham, Conn., Sept. 8, 1823; he attended school in his neighborhood and also was afforded advantages in private schools in both Chaplin and Willimantic. At the age of seventeen Mr. Lincoln began teaching school and continued in this profession for fourteen winters, beginning in Brunswick district of Scotland, where he remained one term, "boarding around" and receiving $10 per month for his services. His next post was Jerusalem district of Windham, one term; Lebanon, Conn., one term; Brick Top district of Windham, four sessions; Windham Center, four sessions; Back Road district, one winter, and in his native district for several years. During the summer season when not teaching Mr. Lincoln sold school books for the firm of Cady & Burgess, of New York.

In April, 1856, Mr. Lincoln removed to Chaplin and entered the store of his brother, Allen Lincoln, as a clerk, and three months later he bought the business and successfully conducted it in a general mercantile line until 1871, when he was succeeded by his son, Edgar S. Lincoln. Mr. J. W. Lincoln has retired from trade and is now engaged in farming on a small scale, preferring out-door life, and enjoys good health, comfort and a feeling of independence.

Mr. Lincoln has served his town in various public capacities since his residence there. In 1862 he was a representative in the State Legislature and was elected town clerk and treasurer in 1863, holding both offices ever since except in 1870 and 1871. Although a Republican in politics, and the candidate of that party whenever nominated for office, he has generally received the votes of both political parties on account of personal popularity. In 1863 he was appointed by President Lincoln postmaster of Chaplin and held the office until the appointment was made by President Cleveland of a member of his party, but Mr. Lincoln was re-appointed by President Harrison. When a Democratic administration again came into power Mr. Lincoln was again deposed; the election of Mr. McKinley meant a re-appointment for him to the same position, but he resigned July 1, 1901. For many years Mr. Lincoln served as a notary public, receiving his commission from Gov. English in 1868.

Mr. Lincoln is a member of the Chaplin Congregational Church, of which he was elected clerk and treasurer in 1870, and he has efficiently served in these offices ever since. The esteem in which he is held in his locality and the honors that have been conferred upon him denote the value which his fellow-citizens place upon him as a citizen and as a neighbor.

The marriage of Mr. Lincoln was April 21, 1844, to Joanna Spafford, who was born Sept. 28, 1824, and who was a native of Windham, and a daughter of Darius and Lora (Lincoln) Spafford. To this union two children were born: Edgar S.; and Clinton D., born Nov. 21, 1859, who died July 2, 1862.

Edgar S. Lincoln, the immediate subject of this biography, was born Aug. 2, 1847, in Windham, Scotland Society, Conn., and there his youthful years were spent on the farm. When ten years old he was taken to Chaplin and remained there at school until the age of sixteen and then entered Eastman's Commercial College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., graduating from that institution in 1863. After finishing his course there Mr. Lincoln engaged in teaching for several terms, one at Mt. Hope, in Mansfield, and one in Canterbury, Conn. Later he entered his father's store, in Chaplin, as a clerk, and five years later, in 1871, he purchased the business which he successfully and profitably managed until April, 1901, when he disposed of it and retired, removing to Waterbury, Conn., where he has purchased property and now resides.

In his political affiliations Mr. Lincoln is a Republican, but he has refused all tenders of office, the only exception being when he accepted the probate judgeship, in 1889, which office, with the exception of the years 1892 and 1893, he held continuously until November, 1901. In 1880 Mr. Lincoln was elected to the State Legislature and efficiently served on the committee on Banking, refusing the offer of the clerkship of the committee. Mr. Lincoln is in no sense a politician, taking no active part in the contests of the day, his interests centering more directly in the field of business enterprise.

Mr. Lincoln was a member of the First Congregational Church of Chaplin, in which his family were active workers and he a liberal supporter. He is now a member of the First Congregational Church of Waterbury, Conn. For ten years Mr. Lincoln was the earnest and efficient Sunday-school superintendent. His marriage was Jan. 8, 1868, to Miss Catherine F. Griggs, who was born June 2, 1847, and who was a daughter of the late David A. Griggs, who was one of the leading citizens of Chaplin. The children born to this marriage are: Lucy G., born April 11, 1872. She is a highly cultured and gifted lady, formerly a pupil in the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston. She was a teacher at Storrs School for four years, during three years of this time being the lady principal, resigning this position in 1900; and Mabel S., born July 10, 1875, who was married Dec. 21, 1899, to Ulysses G. Church, a native of Chaplin. Mr. Church attended school at Mount Hermon, Mass., and graduated with honors from Yale College in 1895, and from the Yale Law School in 1897. He is a young man of rare talent and ambition. During his legal course he was the correspondent of the Courier and Journal, doing this literary work while attending to his law studies. In 1899 Mr. Church located in Waterbury, Conn., where he has built up a lucrative law practice and has attracted attention by his brilliancy and educational acquirements. His pen is a ready one and he was connected with the editorial staff of the Waterbury American until Jan. 1, 1901, when he resigned, that he might give his undivided attention to his increasing law practice. Mr. Church is fraternally connected with both the Masonic and Odd Fellows orders at Waterbury. He is also clerk of the Business Men's Association of Waterbury.

This is one of the most highly esteemed families of this section and is thoroughly representative.

JOHN M. BESSETTE, a prosperous and energetic citizen of the town of Brooklyn, Windham county, is well known in his locality as the proprietor of a successful bakery business of East Brooklyn.

Grandfather Abraham Bessette was a farmer of St. Alexandre, Quebec, where he began life poor, but by industry became wealthy, accumulating large tracts of land and comfortably rearing a large family. His death occurred in St. Alexandre in 1895, when he had reached the age of eighty-eight years. He married Justine Benjamin, who was born in March, 1813, and she still survives, a beloved member of the family of her son, Magloire Bessette, in Brooklyn. They had born to them a family of sixteen children, some of these dying in childhood, the surviving ones, who reached maturity, being: Antoine, who married Philomen Choquette, and for a quarter of a century kept a hotel at St. Alexandre, where he is now engaged in farming; Abraham, the father of John M.; Augustin, a farmer of St. Alexandre, who married Adelide Galipau; Saline widow of Armine Quintin, of St. Alexandre, where she now remains; Joseph, a teamster, who married Euphemie Lareau, and resides at Woonsocket, R. I.; Magloire, a mill operative, residing in Brooklyn, married to Delina Dextraze; Pierre, who married Adeline St. Garmin, is a mechanic and lives in Central Falls, R. I.; and Julie, who is the widow of Frank Daume and is a resident of Brooklyn.

Abraham Bessette, the father of John M., of East Brooklyn, was born Jan. 19, 1836, in St. Alexandre, in the province of Quebec. Until 1880 he was engaged there in farming, but removed at that date to Brooklyn, Conn., and for four and one-half years he was employed in the cotton mills of that town, but then moved back, in 1885, to the farm in St. Alexandre, and was successfully engaged in farming and the raising of poultry until May, 1901, when he gave up active work and retired to the village of St. Alexandre, where he lives at ease, a man of prominence and means, and a valued member of the Catholic Church.

The first marriage of Abraham Bessette was to Philomen Houle, who was born in January, 1838, a native of St. Alexandre, a daughter of John Baptiste and Marie (Poirier) Houle, the former of whom was a wealthy farmer of that locality, and died there June 12, 1891, at the age of eighty-six years, his wife dying in the following August, at the age of eighty-six years. The children born to this first marriage were: Leonorad, who married Joseph Lariviere, a farmer, at St. Alexandre; Moses, who married Marie Croup, and for fifteen years was the trusted and reliable coachman for Benjamin Bailey, of Brooklyn, but is now a farmer on the old homestead at St. Alexandre; John M., of East Brooklyn; Josephine, who married Napoleon Gosselin, a farmer of St. Alexandre; Hector, who married Josephine Molleur and is the railroad agent at Notre Dame of Stanbridge, Quebec; Alphonse, who married Elvina Bessette, and is a dry goods clerk in Providence, R. I.; and Arthur, who married Lea Rainville, and is station agent at St. Angel, Quebec. The mother of these children died Dec. 31, 1875.

The second marriage of Abraham Bessette was to Adeline Normandin, who died Feb. 1, 1888, the two children of this marriage being: Hormidas, who married Jennie Dunbar, is a painter and resides at West Danville, Vt.; and Godfrey, who died at the age of six months. The third marriage was to Denise Dubuc.

John M. Bessette was born April 19, 1864, in St. Alexandre, Quebec; he attended school there until the age of twelve years and assisted on the farm until the age of sixteen, coming then with the family to Brooklyn, Conn. The idea of the change of residence was to enter the mills, many of the residents of their village and province having become people of means in this line of industry, and soon John found employment in the card room of the Quinebaug Company. There he remained for four years and then entered the family of a wealthy German farmer, Frank Troop, who resided at St. Armand, in Quebec, near the United States line, and there he attended an English school through one winter, paying for his board by doing the "chores."

In the following spring the Bessette family went back to St. Alexandre, and John accompanied them to the farm, where he remained for eighteen months. In connection with farm work, he drew the brick and mortar and did much of the hard labor incident to the building of a new house on the farm, which was later the comfortable family residence. Sept. 13, 1886, he was married to Rose Choquette and two weeks later, in October, he came back to Brooklyn and re-entered the card room of the same company, under James H. Smith, who is now superintendent of that company's establishment. For four years he remained there, being card grinder during two years of the time, and by April, 1890, he had accumulated enough to purchase his present business, formerly the property of David A. Potvin. With characteristic energy, Mr. Bessette immediately began making changes and improvements, thereby increasing both the quality of his goods and the methods of handling, building up a large and lucrative trade which has constantly been on the increase. Mr. Bessette finds it necessary to employ two men and his wagon supplies customers through the towns of Brooklyn and Killingly. In addition to his bakery business, he is also a retail and wholesale dealer in flour, and in this line he has a fine trade also, his methods of doing business gaining him the confidence of the public.

The marriage of Mr. Bessette occurred in St. Gregoire, Quebec, to Rose Choquette, who was born there Aug. 9, 1865. Three children have been added to the family circle: Marie Rose Laura, who was born April 6, 1887; Jean Roch Oliva, who was born Aug. 9, 1889, during a visit that Mrs. Bessette was making in St. Gregoire, and died April 30, 1902, at the age of twelve years and eight months; and Marie Rosanna Lea, born Jan. 20, 1891.

In political life Mr. Bessette has been an active and influential Democrat, and has served in many of the public offices; for the past seven years he has been registrar of voters, and he is justice of the peace and town auditor. With his family he belongs to the St. John the Baptist Catholic Church, and for years has served as one of the trustees.

Among the French-Canadians, Mr. Bessette has always been a leader and in the community in which he lives he is highly respected as an industrious man of business integrity as well as ability.

CHOQUETTE. Mrs. John M. Bessette is a granddaughter of Norbert Choquette, who was a wealthy farmer in St. Gregoire, Quebec, who later moved to St. Alexandre, where he died July 23, 1888, at the age of seventy-eight years. His widow, Rose (Casavant) Choquette was a resident of St. Alexandre, making her home with a son, her age being eighty-four at the time of her death, Sept. 14, 1902.

They reared a family of sixteen children, the survivors being: Norbert, the father of Mrs. Bessette; Jacques, who married Agate Bessette, and is a large farmer in St. Gregoire; Joseph, who married Matilda Bessette, and is a farmer in St. Gregoire; Paul, who married Agnes Racine, and is a large farmer in St. Alexandre; and Emelie, who married Moises Quintin, a farmer in St. Alexandre.

Norbert Choquette, the father of Mrs. Bessette, was born in St. Gregoire, Dec. 25, 1836, and for many years was a very successful agriculturist and engaged extensively in the buying and shipping of hay into the United States. For some years he has lived in comfortable retirement at St. Gregoire. He married Adeline Patnaude, born in 1835, a daughter of Joseph Patnaude. They had a family of twelve children. Two of these died in infancy, the survivors being Roch, who married Rose Alma Godu, and is now a successful merchant in Trail, British Columbia; Louise, who married Solymer Choquette, a card grinder in the Brooklyn mills; Gregoire, who married Agnes Demers, and is a special messenger in the employ of the Central Vermont Railroad at Sans Cesaire, Province of Quebec, a very responsible position; Rose, who became Mrs. Bessette; Delia, who married Megloire Le Tarte, a farmer of St. Gregoire; Arthur, who married Anastasie Beauregard, and is a baker in Magog, P. Q.; Exeuable, who married Rose Bessette, and is a railroad agent at St. Pie, P. Q.; Eugene, who married Josephine Beauregard and is also connected with the railroad at St. Cesaire, as an agent; Ferdinand, who married Celia Guillette, and is a farmer in St. Gregoire, P. Q.; and Joseph, who married Alexina Choquette, and is a telegraph operator in Quebec. Both the Bessette and Choquette families are among the oldest and most honorable and intelligent in the Province of Quebec, the ancestors of both extending far back among the first families in importance in France. They are among the best, most reliable and generally the most substantial citizens of any locality where they choose to found a home.

HON. WILLIAM HENRY BURNHAM.

The Burnham family, one of the oldest in the town of Hampton, Windham county, is descended from that English John Burnham who, with two brothers, came from England in 1635 and settled at Chebacco, now Ipswich, Mass. Two years later he marched with the forces sent to fight the Pequod Indians. For this service he was given a tract of land. During his life time he acquired a considerable property, located on the east side of the stream, now known as Haskell's creek, where he lived until his death. He was a prominent citizen of the little colony of Chebacco and was deacon of the church there. He and his wife Mary had four children: John, Josiah, Ann, Elizabeth.

Between (1) Deacon John and the grandfather of William Henry Burnham were three generations.

(II) Josiah Burnham (May 9, 1662—Oct. 25, 1692, son of Deacon John, married Abigail Varney; she died Oct. 31, 1692. (III) Ebenezer Burnham (I) (Dec. 23, 1691—Mar. 10, 1746), son of Josiah, married Dorothy Collins; she died June 26, 1760. He settled in Hampton, having moved there from Chebacco. (IV) Ebenezer Burnham (2) (1722—Nov. 1, 1788), son of Ebenezer (1), was a resident of Hampton. He married Martha Hubbard, and after her death, Elizabeth Hunt. His children were by his first wife.

(V) Jedediah Burnham, born Dec. 12, 1761, son of Ebenezer (2), was the grandfather of William Henry Burnham. Agriculture was the business of his life. He died in Hampton, June 4, 1828. His wife, Phoebe (Martin), was born Oct. 15, 1769, and died April 26, 1856. Thirteen children were born of this union, six daughters and seven sons, among them, Alvah, the father of William Henry Burnham.

(VI) Alvah Burnham, well-known in Hampton as a school master, peddler and farmer, was born in that town, Jan. 20, 1801. Like many a New England lad of his day, he obtained his physical training by vigorous farm labor, and his education, thorough of its kind, in the district schools of his section. So ambitious and energetic was he that during the first years of his young manhood he taught school in winter and worked at farming in summer. Imbued with the true Yankee spirit of traffic, he later started out as a peddler, carrying his notions from village to farmhouse in a tin trunk strapped to his back. At this time J. S. Curtis, later a manufacturer of silverware at Curtisville, now Naubuc, in the town of Glastonbury, Conn., was carrying on his business near Hampton; and so it was natural that Mr. Burnham's specialty should be the Curtis silverware. He fitted out other men in the business, and at times had several in his employ. So thrifty was he that he soon made money enough to carry on his business with a horse and wagon.

On Oct. 7, 1839, he married Hannah Holloway, of Wickford, R. I., who was born Feb. 15, 1809, and died Sept. 11, 1875. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Alvah Burnham were: Mary Ann, born Nov. 14, 1840, who lived but three days; William Henry; and Hellen Lou, now a widow in Wickford, R. I., who was born Nov. 28, 1845, and married Hiram R. Rollock, a carpenter. She has three children: Susan, Everett, and Clinton.

Mr. Burnham continued his peddling business for thirteen years and then turned his attention to farming. He owned the old Burnham homestead in the southern part of Hampton, but purchased another farm in that town, on which he lived the rest of his life. Ill health impaired his last years and he died July 31, 1876. Despite his long and active exertions in the field, business to Mr. Burnham was not all-absorbing. He attended the Congregational Church of which his wife was a member, and he gave liberally for its support. In politics he was well informed; at first he was a Whig, later a Republican. Though disinclined to seek public honors, he was often elected, because of his neighbors' respect for him, to town offices. He was a wise business man and an excellent farm manager, and relying upon nothing but his own brain and muscle, he amassed considerable wealth.

(VII) HON. WILLIAM HENRY BURNHAM, popular in local politics and an opulent and leading business man in Hampton, was born in that town Dec. 27, 1841. In his boyhood he attended the local district schools, later Williston Seminary, at East Hampton, Mass., and, for a considerable time, Monson Academy at South Wilbraham, Mass., where Hon. John M. Hall, President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, and Judge Bennett, a native of Hampton, and postmaster at Hartford, were fellow students. For a livelihood he engaged first as manager of the home place; and after his marriage, which occurred Dec. 25, 1865, he moved to the old Burnham homestead and took up farming for himself. Shortly after his father's death, in the spring of 1877, having erected new buildings during the preceding winter, he moved to his present farm. He has since carried on general farming and dairying, though he has at the same time been largely engaged in public affairs. Mr. Burnham married Mary G. Button, who was born in Hampton, Oct. 28, 1842, daughter of Lyndon T. and Sarah A. (Curtis) Button; and they had two children, who have attained considerable prominence. George L., born June 17, 1872, attended Hannum and Steadman's Business College and is now cashier of the Aetna Fire Insurance Company, at Hartford. He married Helen C. Crowe, and has one son, William Henry, born April 7, 1902. Bertha M., born Dec. 29, 1878, married Lesley F. Hartson, a manufacturer at North Windham, Connecticut.

Mr. Burnham is at present the judge of probate and the town clerk of Hampton. In the first capacity he has served since 1889, and in the second, with the exception of the year 1890, since 1882, with marked success. He has been town treasurer since 1882. In 1880 he represented Hampton in the State Legislature, where, in recognition of his keen judgment, he was put on the committee for State Prisons. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1902. He was selectman for several years and filled many minor offices. Being a good business man, he often acts as auctioneer. He attends the Congregational Church and takes an active part in its business management. Though possessed of considerable wealth, he never leans on his oars. He is conservative and forceful, has great executive ability, and his word carries weight in his community.

CHARLES M. GAGER. The Gager family is one of the old and well established families, which is found through Windham and New London counties in Connecticut, and wherever found stands for integrity and high character.

The founder of the family of Gager in America was (I) Dr. William Gager, who came to the United States in 1630 with Governor Winthrop, but died the same year from disease contracted at sea, from poor diet, many of the emigrants dying from the same malady. Contemporary records speak of Dr. Gager as a skillful surgeon, a very godly man and one of the deacons of the church. His son (II) John, the only child that has been traced, was one of the company that settled at New London with John Winthrop, the younger, and his name is there found on the earliest extant list of inhabitants. John Gager had a grant from the town of New London of a farm of 200 acres, east of the river, near the straits, now in Ledyard, Conn., to which he removed soon after 1650, and there dwelt until he joined in the settlement of Norwich, removing thither. His house lot in the new town bears the date of the oldest surveys, viz.: November, 1659. In 1674 and 1688 he was constable of Norwich, and died Dec. 10, 1703, at an old age, leaving two sons and a daughter, one of the former being Samuel Gager.

(III) Samuel Gager in 1695 married Mrs. Rebecca (Lay) Raymond, widow of Daniel Raymond. Samuel Gager was a man of good repute and considerable estate, a resident of the parish of New Concord, now Bozrah, Conn., but he was interred, at his own request, in the old, neglected graveyard in the town of New London. His children were: Elizabeth; John; Samuel; William, who graduated from Yale College in 1721, and was pastor at Lebanon, Conn., until his death, in 1739; Sarah; Simon; and Rebecca.

(IV) John Gager, of this family, was a farmer in Franklin, Conn., and married Jerusha Barstow, and their children were: Jerusha, John, Jason, Samuel, Lydia, Daniel, Simon, Aaron, and Levi.

(V) Samuel Gager, of the above family, was the great-grandfather of Charles M., and his first wife and the mother of all his children, was Lucy Pettis. His second wife was Zerviah Gustin. The children of the first union were: Simon, Sarah, Oliver, Samuel, the latter being the grandfather.

(VI) Samuel Gager (2) was born in 1770, either in Bozrah or Franklin, Conn., where he resided until after his marriage, when he removed to Stafford, Conn., and there all of his children were born. Later he removed to East Windsor, Conn., in 1812, and resided there until Jan. 7, 1813, the time of his death, and there he was interred. His life had been an agricultural one. In New London county he married Fanny Woodworth, who survived him, and later married David Glazier, of Willington, Conn., whither she removed. The children of her first marriage were: Mabel, who died at the age of nineteen; Marvin, who married Clarissa Hunt, of Stafford, Conn., and later removed to New York State, where she died; Fanny, who married Calvin Stebbins, and died in Springfield, Mass.; Emeline, who married Herman Gager and lived in Franklin, Conn.; Angeline, who married Timothy Marcy, of Willington, and died in Willimantic, Conn.; Gurdon O., who married Rachel Haskell, and resided in Woodstock, Conn., where he died; Samuel Levi; Mabel, who died young, in Willington. One child was born of the second marriage, Celinda Cordelia, who married Merritt Johnson, and died in Willimantic. The mother of these children died in Willington in 1842, aged sixty-nine years.

(VII) Samuel Levi Gager, the father of Charles M., was born Jan. 2, 1810, in Stafford, Conn., and was quite young when his parents removed to East Windsor. Until the date of his marriage he was employed in farm work but shortly afterward moved to Monson, Mass., where he also worked on a farm, but remained there only a short time, as he desired to follow the same occupation in Somers. Still later he removed to Hampden, Mass., where he conducted a hotel for a season but several years later returned to Somers and located on the farm where his wife formerly resided, and there he followed farming the rest of his life, dying there Aug. 2, 1885; he was buried in Somers. While residing on the above named farm, he was also engaged in wood dealing, and burned a great deal of charcoal, which found a market at the U. S. Armory at Springfield, Massachusetts.

Although a pronounced Whig, Mr. Gager was no seeker after office, but was simply a good citizen. He married Sophronia F. Avery, born March 15, 1813, daughter of Charles and Sarah (King) Avery, and she survived him several years, dying April 24, 1894. The children of this marriage were: Sarah K., who married Marcena Needham, a prominent politician of Springfield, Mass., where she died; Mabel C., who married Henry R. Kibbe, of Somers, where they now reside; Harriet L., who married William Allen, and died in Somers; Charles M.; and Henry M., who married Mary E. Bond and is a farmer and wood dealer of Somers.

Charles M. Gager was born Aug. 23, 1840, in Somers, spent his early life in farm work, and attended the common schools until the age of fifteen. In 1856 he was employed as a clerk in a grocery store, where he remained until Aug. 1, 1859, when he located in Philadelphia, Pa., engaged in dealing in tobacco for several years, and later formed a partnership and was extensively engaged under the name of Sorver, Cook & Co., which firm later became Cook & Gager. This firm dealt extensively in domestic tobacco, and were well known in their line. Mr. Gager continued in this business until Feb. 1, 1892, when he disposed of it and took up his permanent residence in Somers, where he has since lived, retired.

In July, 1892, Mr. Gager purchased his present home in Somers, near where he was born, and remodeled the same, making extensive improvements, and now spends his time between Somers and Philadelphia. He was married Oct. 27, 1865, in Philadelphia, to Rebecca L. Burch, daughter of Richard and Rachel (Gray) Burch, of Bridgeton, N. J., and has two children. Mabelle K., born March 23, 1867, married the well-known Dr. John L. Phillips, of Philadelphia, and has had the following children: James B., born Aug. 13, 1887; Charles Gager, May 9, 1889; Robert B., who died in infancy; and Lougeay, May 10, 1896. Charles M., Jr., who was born May 9, 1869, married Jeannie Dougall, resides at Thompsonville, Conn., and has one child, Mabelle P., born Aug. 13, 1895.

Mr. Gager is a Republican who, during the Civil war was a pronounced Abolitionist; beyond being in the Connecticut Assembly he has never consented to accept public office. In the Legislature, as always he was a strong temperance advocate, and is one of the leading members of the Congregational Church, in Somers, where he is held in the highest esteem. Mrs. Gager is a member of the Presbyterian Church, Broad and Oxford streets, Philadelphia, and attends the Congregational Church at Somers. Her husband also attends there and is a liberal supporter of the same.

CHARLES ALFRED SWEET. The name of Sweet in Hampton, Windham county, is associated with agricultural advancement and practical, enterprising citizenship. Although a young man, Charles Alfred Sweet bears an enviable reputation for thrift and all-round success, and his model dairy farm has no superior in the town as regards neatness, modernness and evidences of a scientific understanding of farming. He was born in the house he now owns and occupies June 12, 1876, and his entire life has been spent among his native surroundings. He comes of a family of farmers, his forefathers having been men strong in body and purpose, and thoroughly inured to the hardships and responsibilities of life.

William Sweet, the paternal grandfather of Charles Alfred, was born March 20, 1797, and during his active life lived on rented farms in Hampton, Pomfret and Plainfield, in which latter town he was making his home at the time of his death, Oct. 5, 1865. He married Betsey C. Clapp, born March 20, 1793, and died Aug. 31, 1866, in Plainfield. Mrs. Sweet was an admirable woman and affectionate mother, and her resting place is in Green Hollow cemetery. She was the mother of two children: William, the father of Charles Alfred, born June 6, 1829; and Alvan A., born March 9, 1832, married Marion Fisk, Nov. 10, 1856, and had two children: Anna Rebecca (born Aug. 26, 1857, and is now the wife of Edward Bliss, of Brighton, Mass.) and Gertrude Marion (born Dec. 12, 1863, and died when a young lady). Alvan A. Sweet was for many years engaged in the mercantile business in Milford, Mass., and followed a similar occupation in Hopkinton until the destruction of his store by fire. He was also president of a bank in Hopkinton, and, after the fire, disposed of his interests in that town, and removed to his present home in Newton, Mass. He stands high in the community, and is wealthy and popular.

William Sweet, father of Charles Alfred, was born in Plainfield, and was quite young when his parents removed to Abington, in Pomfret. His parents were in very moderate circumstances, and his advantages, educational and otherwise, were of a limited kind. He was reared to hard work and saving ways, and lived on the home farm until after his marriage. At that time his brother Alvan and himself bought a large farm in Plainfield, very near the Killingly town line, and here he lived and cared for his parents until their deaths. He then came into the possession of the entire farm, which was sold a few years later to the Wauregan Co., which now owns it. In the fall of 1873 Mr. Sweet located on the farm in Hampton upon which he died, Dec. 28, 1894, and which was purchased from the heirs of Enoch B. Lewis, the father of Mr. Sweet's first wife. The farm was in a run-down condition and badly in need of improvement, and Mr. Sweet erected modern buildings, built fine stone fences, and transformed the practically worthless property into one of the best and most profitable farms in the town. He was engaged in general farming and dairying, and he also bought and sold considerable live stock, of the merits of which he was an excellent judge. He was very industrious, and had the reputation of being a neat and practical farmer. Although a staunch Republican, he never allowed the attractions of office to draw him away from his home interests, and therefore never figured in the local or county offices. He was an attendant and supporter of the Congregational Church. The first marriage of Mr. Sweet occurred Dec. 14, 1857, to Fannie Lewis, of Hampton, daughter of Enoch B. Lewis. Mrs. Sweet died June 15, 1861, leaving one son, Frank W., born Feb. 16, 1859, married Olive W. Hatch, April 3, 1884, has one son, Henry Lewis, born Jan. 13, 1885 and lives in New Haven, Conn. For a second wife William Sweet married, Jan. 1, 1870, Mrs. Elizabeth (Pray) Avery, born in East Killingly, July 4, 1840, a daughter of George W. and Salome (Greene) Pray, the Pray family being mentioned elsewhere in this work. The two sons of Mrs. Elizabeth Sweet, Alvan A. and Charles Alfred, have become two of the most prosperous farmers in Hampton.

ALVAN A. SWEET was born July 7, 1872, and was quite young when his parents removed from his native town of Plainfield to Hampton. He attended the district school and the Brooklyn high school, also the Morse Business College at Hartford. After leaving the latter institution he returned to the home farm and assisted his father for a couple of years, going then to New Britain, where he was for a time employed as bookkeeper, a position resigned in order that he might become assistant postmaster to Charles A. Potter, at Danielson. A few months later he resigned this office for the more lucrative position of bookkeeper for the Danielson Cotton Co., with which concern he remained until purchasing his present farm of John Skinner, in April, 1900. He owns eighty acres of improved land, upon which has been erected a pleasant and commodious rural residence. On Oct. 9, 1900, he married Pearl Evangeline Morgan, daughter of Rev. Charles Morgan, a Congregational minister located at Hampton for seven years. One child has blessed this union, William Morgan, born Sept. 11, 1901.

Charles Alfred Sweet was educated at the district schools of his home town, and at the Brooklyn high school for two years, where he studied the sciences. After the death of his father, himself and brother Alvin purchased the interest of their mother and jointly carried on the business until the whole farm came into the possession of Charles Alfred in 1899. Mr. Sweet has a herd of forty head of cattle, twenty-five of which were milch cows, and he supplies one of the finest dairy routes in the town. His farm is in splendid condition, and it would be difficult to find a more prosperous or thrifty agriculturist. In one sense both of the brothers may be spoken of together, for they represent the same progressive methods and the same high personal tributes. They are upholders of Republican institutions, but have never entered the ranks of office seekers or office holders. When young they united with the Congregational Church, in which they have since been active, and have served on the church committee. Charles Alfred Sweet has been president of the Christian Endeavor Society for several years. The young men enjoy an enviable reputation for sobriety, integrity and thorough nobility, and both attribute their stability and usefulness to the teachings of an admirable mother, who is making her home with her son, Charles Alfred, who has never married.

Through the maternal grandmother the Sweet brothers are descended from Thomas Clapp, son of Richard, of England, born in Dorchester in 1597, and who came to America presumably in the ship that arrived from Weymouth, England, July 24, 1633. He is recorded in Worcester, Mass., in 1634, and was admitted a freeman in 1638. According to Farmer, he removed to Hingham, thence to Scituate, being an inhabitant of that town in 1640. He was a deacon in the church of Scituate in 1647; was deputy of the court in 1649; and overseer of the poor in 1667. He was a useful and industrious citizen, and died April 20, 1684. By his wife, Abigail, he had several children.

Increase Clapp, born in 1640, removed to Barnstable, Mass., and there married, in October, 1675, Elizabeth Goodspeed widow of Nathaniel, and daughter of John Bursley. Mr. Clapp went to Barnstable about 1661, and in the latter part of his life went to Rochester.

John Clapp, born in October, 1676, married and removed to Rochester, where he bought land in 1710, of Samuel Prince.

Major Ebenezer Clapp, born in 1704, married, March 9, 1727, Mary Winslow, who was born about 1707, daughter of Kenelm Winslow, of Harwich.

Earl Clapp, born April 21, 1741, married, first, Sarah, daughter of Jeremiah How, and she was the mother of all his children. For a second wife he married Widow Phoebe Dutch. Major Clapp was a soldier in the French war, and took a very prominent part in the affairs of the town of Rochester during the Revolutionary war. He was captain of a company of minute men, and was later appointed major in the army and served throughout the war. He was a brave and energetic man, and for his services in the cause of the Colonies received a pension from the government amounting to $560 a year. About 1801-02 he was a resident of Woodstock, Conn., and he died in 1835, at the age of ninety-four years.

Captain Seth Clapp, born Jan. 22, 1764, married Charlotte Burden, and lived in Woodstock. He was a seafaring man, and after starting on his last voyage was never heard from again. His wife who died July 13, 1833, at the age of seventy-one years, was the mother of the following children: Lathrop; Sydney; Sally; Betsey, born in 1793, married William Sweet, and lived in Plainfield, Conn.; Charlotte; James; and Almira.

WILLIAM HENRY LINCOLN, a farmer residing in the northeast part of the town of Hampton, Windham county, descends from the Lincoln family at Taunton, Mass.: Its earlier forebears are supposed to have settled in Hingham, on the south shore of Massachusetts Bay. Hingham was first settled in 1635, and in the three subsequent years had large accessions to its population. Its first comers brought in nearly all the names that appear in the annals of the town. In 1636 home lots were granted to Thomas Lincoln, the miller, Thomas Lincoln, the weaver, and Thomas Lincoln, the cooper. In 1638 Thomas Lincoln, the husbandman, and his brother, Stephen Lincoln, received home lots. The name of Daniel Lincoln appears in 1644, as one of the young men of the town. Samuel Lincoln, brother of the weaver, came over in 1637, and afterward settled in Hingham.

Robert Lincoln, a laborer of Boston, in 1644, who died in 1663, and William Lincoln, of Roxbury, who was a soldier in the Narragansett war, and was wounded in the fight of Dec. 19, 1675, dying soon after, do not appear to have left any descendants.

To some of these heads of families, enumerated by Savage in his genealogical dictionary, all the Lincolns in this country must look for their origin. Little doubt is felt that they all came from County Norfolk, England. Stephen Lincoln and his brother, Thomas, the husbandman, were from Wymondham (Windham); Thomas Lincoln, the weaver, came from Hingham, and his brother, Samuel, from Norwich to Salem, and thence to Hingham.

Thomas Lincoln, the miller, removed with his family to Taunton in 1652. He and his sons, Thomas, John and Samuel, and grandsons three Thomases, two Samuels, two Johns, Jonah and Ebenezer, constituted a goodly family. The family of Thomas Lincoln, the miller, is identified with the early history of Taunton, where they were proprietors of iron works some two and a half centuries ago. The Lincoln family in Windham, Conn., may properly be mentioned in this connection. Samuel Lincoln was there as early as 1692. His descendants claim to have originated in Hingham, upon evidence that merits consideration. His son, Samuel, reached the age of 101 years, lacking a very few days. Nathaniel, son of the second Samuel, at his death had attained the age of 105 years, three months and eighteen days; Nathaniel, a son of this Nathaniel, died in 1864, having almost completed his ninety-fourth year.

Thomas Lincoln, the cooper, had sons, Thomas, Joseph and Benjamin; and grandsons, Thomas, Josiah, Joseph, Israel, Nehemiah, Elisha, John, Benjamin and Jeremiah. This Thomas Lincoln, the cooper, died in Hingham, and was the ancestor of Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, of the Revolutionary army, and afterward Lieut.-Governor of Massachusetts, and collector of the port of Boston for nearly twenty years. He had sons: Benjamin, who graduated from Harvard College in 1777, and became a distinguished attorney-at-law in Boston; and Judge Theodore Lincoln, who graduated from Harvard College in 1785, settling in Dennysville, Maine, where he died in 1852, at the age of eighty-nine.

This family of Lincolns contains many famous names, among them being Prof. Benjamin Lincoln, of the University of Vermont, a gentleman of deep scientific knowledge, who died in 1835, at the untimely age of thirty-two.

Thomas Lincoln, the husbandman, is numerously represented in Hingham, in the county of Worcester, and in other parts of the State by his descendants.

Stephen Lincoln, noted above as the brother of Thomas, the husbandman, is numerously represented by his descendants, who are confined almost exclusively to the confines of Hingham, among them being Isaac Lincoln, who, graduating from Harvard in 1722, was for a long series of years a school teacher; Abner Lincoln, who graduated from Harvard college in 1788, was an accomplished scholar, and first preceptor of Derby Academy; Rev. Perez Lincoln, a graduate of Harvard in 1798, at one time minister at Gloucester; Rev. Calvin Lincoln, a graduate at Harvard College in 1820, and for years the beloved pastor of the First Parish at Hingham.

Daniel Lincoln has numerous descendants in Hingham and Cohasset, embracing graduates, teachers, lawyers, and other men of distinguished reputation within the limits of the old town.

To the family of Samuel Lincoln belong the honored names of Levi Lincoln, a graduate of Harvard College in 1772, at one time the Attorney General of the United States, Lieut.-Governor of Massachusetts and acting Governor after the death of Governor Sullivan; his two distinguished sons, Levi Lincoln, of Harvard College in 1802, nine times elected governor of Massachusetts; and Rev. Henry Lincoln, a graduate of Harvard College in 1786, for many years the pastor of the First Parish at Falmouth, and who died at Nantucket in 1857; Dr. Isaac Lincoln, of Brunswick, Me., an eminent physician, who in 1865 was one of the two survivors of the famous class of 1800 at Harvard; and many others, embracing in all sixteen graduates from New England colleges. It was believed by the writer of the article from which the foregoing extracts have been taken, Solomon Lincoln of Hingham, that Abraham Lincoln, president of the United States, descended from this Samuel Lincoln.

George Lincoln, the grandfather of William H., was a native of Taunton, Mass., and came to Hampton in early manhood. He located on Hampton Hill, where he resided the rest of his life, and where he died in 1810, at the age of thirty-seven. His death came from a broken neck, the result of a fall from a wagon. Dilly Ingalls, his wife, died March 14, 1814, at the age of thirty-seven years. They had the following children: (1) George, a tanner and furrier, who married a Miss Ashley, located in Westford and there died; (2) Samuel, a boot and shoe maker, who lived in Hampton and Ashford, and died in Worcester, Mass.; (3) John, a farmer who married Miss Davidson, and died in Hampton; (4) Sally, married to Alonzo Martin, a farmer, both of whom are buried in Hampton, Conn.; (5) William, the father of William H. Lincoln; (6) Charles, who was bound out to a family by the name of Howard, who removed to Champaign county, Ohio, where he became wealthy and where his descendants now reside.

William Lincoln, noted above, was born on Hampton Hill, May 17, 1806, and was reared to the life of a farmer. His parents died when he was young, and he was bound out to Daniel Dennison, a farmer in Hampton, where he resided until he was sixteen years old. His education was but limited, and he was early employed at farm work at Hampton, and continued in that line until he reached the age of twenty-one. At that age he was employed as a farm hand by Gen. Stephen F. Palmer, of Ashford, who later became his father-in-law. For several years after his marriage he resided in Ashford, and then removed to Mansfield and lived on rented farms for nine years, afterward buying a farm in Goshen, in the town of Chaplin.

There he lived for eight years. That farm he bought for the timber, and got out a considerable amount.

Mr. Lincoln sold this farm and in 1856 went to Hampton to purchase a farm of Patrick H. Pearl, which had been long in the Pearl family name. There he made extensive improvements and was successfully engaged in farming until his death, Aug. 6, 1885, at the age of seventy-nine. He was well-to-do, and a self-made man, a hard worker and a good manager. In his politics he was a Republican, and was a member of the General Assembly in 1871. He was a member of the board of selectmen, and held many minor offices. He was a member and a liberal supporter of the Congregational Church of Hampton.

Mr. Lincoln was married in Ashford, Conn., to Caroline Palmer, who was born Dec. 28, 1804, a native of Ashford, and a daughter of Gen. Stephen F. and Tabitha (Simmons) Palmer. Mrs. Caroline Lincoln died Sept. 30, 1873. To this union were born: William H.; John Palmer, who died in 1856, at the age of sixteen years.

William H. Lincoln was born Nov. 20, 1835, in Ashford, Conn., and was quite young when his parents moved to Mansfield. His first schooling was obtained in the Mount Hope District of Mansfield, but later he attended at Atwoodville, Mansfield Hollow, at Mount Hope and at a district school in Goshen, in the town of Hampton. The young Lincoln also was a student in a select school at Chaplin Center, which was taught by Rev. George Soule, a Mr. Stearns, who later became a Congregational minister, and by Timothy Hazen.

Mr. Lincoln always resided on the home farm, and assisted his father, later taking the full management of the farm. After his father's death it became his by inheritance. It is a good farm and comprises 300 acres, on which Mr. Lincoln is engaged in general farming and in dairying.

Mr. Lincoln was married Nov. 29, 1859, to Emma Woodworth, who was born Feb. 23, 1837 in Scotland, Conn., a daughter of George and Marcia (Larned) Woodworth. Her father was a farmer, and died in Hampton. To this union has come one child, Carrie Louise, born Feb. 7, 1861, and married June 23, 1886, to Carll A. Lewis, who was born Jan. 2, 1860, in New Haven, Conn. He graduated from Yale College, and is principal of the Guilford high school. To this union have come four children: Edith Palmer, born April 16, 1887; Ethel Knowles, March 25, 1889; John Gardner, Sept. 26, 1891; Bessie Lincoln, May 30, 1894.

Mr. Lincoln is a Republican, and was a member of the Legislature in 1895, serving on the committee on New Counties and County Seats. He has held various minor offices. His wife and daughter are members of the Hampton Congregational Church.

ALPHEUS BILLINGS (deceased) was a worthy representative of one of the leading families of Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., the part of the town in which his home was situated being now known as Somerville, but then as Billings mills, named from the fact that nearly all the land in that section at one time belonged to various families of that name. At the present time there are few there who bear this old and honored name.

The Billings family descends from (I) Nathaniel Billings, who was born at Taunton, England, and came to America some time before 1640, as his name appears on the Concord records of that year. In 1641 he became a freeman of that colony, and died there in 1673. He left two sons, Nathaniel and John, who became freemen of the town in 1643.

(II) John Billings married Ann Reed, and last among their children was (III) Samuel Billings, who was the sire of the following family: Samuel, Thaddeus; John; Elijah; Ezekiel; Mary; Beulah.

(IV) John Billings, the third child of the above family, was born in 1737, combined farming and cloth dressing, and lived in Somers, where he was a large land owner and owned a saw mill. Eunice Cooley, his wife, was a daughter of Capt. Luke Cooley, and became the mother of the following children: John, born in 1765, was a farmer, and after his marriage removed to Chenango county, N. Y., where he died; Solomon, born in 1767, who was a peddler and a manufacturer of wooden goods, owning and operating a mill at Somerville in company with his cousin, Rufus Billings; Eunice, born in 1769, who married a Mr. Wakefield, and lived and died at Somerville; Flavia, born in 1775, who married a Mr. Collins, and went to Chenango county, N. Y., where she died; Luke, born Oct. 15, 1777, who married Lucy McClure, and afterward Mrs. Hannah Demmon, was a farmer and miller, and died in Somerville, Jan. 19, 1852; Alpheus, born Feb. 19, 1780.

(V) Alpheus Billings was born in Somerville, in what is now the "old hotel" which is still standing. There was much to do on his fathers' farm and in the saw mill and young Alpheus devoted his youth and early manhood to toil, having the privilege of but little education. When a young man he lost, by accident in the mill, all the toes on his right foot, and on another occasion the middle finger on his right hand. He followed farming and milling until after his second marriage, when he opened the hotel at Somerville, and ran it for many years, accumulating a handsome competence, on which he retired from the hotel. The home of Hon. George E. Keeney was built by him, and there he died Aug. 11, 1867, his death resulting from quick consumption. Mr. Billings was a tall, slender man, with light complexion, blue eyes, and a full beard. He had a remarkable memory. In the later years of his life he was accustomed to read the Bible through yearly, and could quote Scripture freely. In his politics he was an Andrew Jackson Democrat, and a strong advocate of the Union during the Civil war. In his religious convictions he was a Universalist and his character was formed on the best lines of that faith, broad and tolerant, sympathetic and tender hearted, and personally up to a very high standard.

Mr. Billings was married to Abigail Meacham for his first wife, who died March 16, 1816, at the age of thirty-six years. By this marriage he had four children: (1) Theodore, who had three wives, Turza Hatch, a Miss Whitney, and a Miss Todd, was a merchant at Deerfield, Mass., moving from there to Buffalo, New York, and later to Lansing, Mich., where he died, leaving four children; (2) Ann married Major John Weston, and died in Somers. (3) Dorothy married Timothy Rogers, a wagonmaker, living for a time in Somerville, and then removing to Quincy, Ill., where he died a wealthy man. (4) Harriet married James Chaffe, a commission merchant in Philadelphia, and later a hotel man at Saratoga, N. Y., where he died.

Mr. Billings married for his second wife Mrs. Mary (Kingsbury) Benton, of Tolland, Conn., a daughter of Samuel R. and Ruth (Steele) Kingsbury, who died Sept. 1, 1852, at the age of sixty-six years. Of their children, Mary A., Mary E., and Frances died young. George S., James N., and Jane F. reached maturity. Alpheus Billings married for his third wife, Mrs. Mary (Cleveland) Taylor, who is now deceased.

(VI) George S. Billings married Amelia Fields, was a farmer, and later had a hotel, and died in Somerville. Of his children, Randolph married Lomira Davis, and died in Somers, leaving two children: Josephine, who died young; and Alice, now the wife of Maro Keeney. John E. married Ella May, and had: George, now of Rockville; and John, of Springfield, Mass. Mary E. married Elwood White, a publisher of Philadelphia, by whom she has one child, Frank. (VI) James M. Billings, son of Alpheus Billings, married Julia Root, and was a school teacher in early life, but became a traveling salesman, and later was in the commission business in Philadelphia and New York. His death occurred in New York, at the age of forty-four, and he had in that short life accumulated over a million dollars. He had the following family: (1) Julia S., who married Albert Gillespie, and died at Philadelphia, leaving one child, Julia, now Mrs. William D. B. Haven, of New York; (2) J. Archibald, who married Emma Hathaway, and has one child, May; (3) Minnie, the wife of Irving Brown, of Plainfield, N. J., and the mother of Helen, Harold, Percy, and Marion; (4) Charles K., who married Mary Alden, lives in New Haven, and has the following family: Charles Kingsbury, Margaret, Mabel, Julia, Elizabeth and John C.; (5) Jane F., the wife of Julius H. Seymour, an attorney and assemblyman in New York, who has one child, Susan H.; (6) William E., who married Florence Bloomfield, and lives in New York; (7) Harry M., married to Emmie Black, by whom he has one daughter, Fanny J. (V) Jane F. Billings, daughter of Alpheus Billings, by his second marriage, was born Aug. 14, 1831; is the widow of Theodore M. Gowdy, of whom a sketch appears elsewhere, and resides in Somerville.

THEODORE M. GOWDY (deceased) was one of the prominent men of Somers, Tolland county, and in his lifetime exerted a wholesome influence in that town, where he died March 7, 1893, after a lingering illness of several months duration. He was a son of Robert and Anna (Henry) Gowdy, and a grandson of Robert and Content (McGregor) Gowdy.

To the parents of Theodore M. Gowdy were born the following children: Angeline; John; Emeline; Cindona; Leonora; John C.; Theodore M.; Anna Maria; Marion.

Theodore M. Gowdy was born Feb. 19, 1832, in Enfield, Conn., and was taken by his parents to Somerville when he was seven years old, where he attended the public schools for a somewhat brief period, and then became an apprentice in a woolen mill. There he remained until he was nineteen years old, when he was engaged in farming and carpenter work for the eight years ensuing. At a later period he became a manufacturer of Shaker hoods, and at one time had as many as 160 men and women working for him in this industry. Meanwhile he had purchased and improved a farm in Somerville, which in 1852 became his permanent home. A few years later he owned and operated the grist mill in Somerville, doing milling work for two years. When his health began to fail, Mr. Gowdy gave up the active work of the farm, and sought to preserve such measure of health as he enjoyed.

Mr. Gowdy was married Oct. 25, 1854, to Jane F. Billings, a daughter of Alpheus Billings, who is still living at Somerville, where she commands the respect and esteem of the community to a marked degree.

Mr. Gowdy was a Republican and in 1872 was sent to the General Assembly from Somerville, where he was chairman of the committee on Fisheries. Out of the sixteen years in which he was a member of the board of selectmen he was chairman eleven years. In the management of town affairs he displayed much ability, and everything with which he had to do was handled with admirable business skill. For eight years he was deputy sheriff. In his religious convictions he was a liberal supporter of the Congregational Church at Somerville, of which his wife is a member, and where he habitually attended.

Mr. Gowdy was a man of popular traits, upright and honest in his dealings, of a kind and jovial spirit, and was known as a friend to all.

GILBERT POTTER BABCOCK. Mention of the Babcock family is made in the earliest history of New England. James Babcock, the founder of the family in the United States, changed the family name at the time of his coming to these shores, it having been "Badcock" before that day. This old Puritan was born in Essex, England, in 1580, and in 1620 accompanied the Pilgrims to Leyden, Holland, and later to this country. He crossed the ocean in the ship "Anne" in 1623, and arrived at Plymouth, Mass., in July, where he spent the remaining years of his life. Mr. Babcock was a member of the most venerable body of men the world has ever known, men of a profound spiritual illumination, and a most vital sense of dependence on an over-ruling Providence; and among them he occupied a very honorable place.

James Babcock brought with him to these shores four children, who were born in England from 1612 to 1620, James, John, Job and Mary. Mr. Babcock contracted a second marriage in Plymouth about 1650 and became the father of one son, Joseph, by this second wife. The four older children, already noted, remained with their father in Plymouth, but the youngest son, Joseph, removed to Saybrook, Conn., where he made settlement.

John Babcock, the second son, later settled in Rhode Island, in that section which is known as Westerly, about 1648, and there he died in 1719, when over one hundred years of age. At the time of his death he left ten children, and their descendants at the present time number over 5,000. The first magistrate in Westerly, he held that office many years. Nearly all Westerly, and much of South Kingston belonged to him, and much of this land is now in the hands of his descendants, two hundred years after his death.

Nearly all the offices of the town within the gift of the people, were filled by him or his family for many years. Joshua Babcock, born in 1707, and deceased in 1783, was a noted man in his time. As a physician he excelled in his profession, and his christian character was worthy of all imitation. The descendants of the Babcock family are found among the earliest pioneers of the far West. The name is found in the annals of the Revolution, and many Babcocks have died on the field of honor, making their lives a sacrifice on the altar of their patriotic devotion.

Henry Babcock, born in 1736, was a colonel in the English service prior to the Revolution, and was wounded at the battle of Ticonderoga in the French war. In the Revolution he was "General of the State Troops of Rhode Island," and distinguished himself on many occasions. Oliver Babcock, another distinguished member of this family, was a captain in the Revolutionary army, and was at the siege of Fort Washington, becoming so indignant at its surrender that he broke his sword across a cannon, with the declaration that it should never be yielded to the British.

Simeon Babcock, great grandfather of Gilbert P., lived in Columbia, Conn., where he died, having been the father of seven boys and seven girls. When he died in 1852, he was ninety-four years of age.

Stanton Babcock, the grandfather of Gilbert P., was born in Westerly, R. I., was bred a farmer, and came to Connecticut when a young man. Almira Robertson, of Coventry, became his wife and bore him the following children: Janes M.; Horatio, Gurdon; Stanton.

Janes Maxwell Babcock, the father of Gilbert Potter, was born Feb. 14, 1820, in Coventry, Conn., and died April 18, 1895, in Vernon, Conn. Bred to a farming life, he followed that calling all his active years. In 1858 he removed from Coventry to Tolland, where he combined farming and lumbering until 1870. That year he settled in Vernon, where he made a specialty of tobacco raising. In 1892 he gave up farm work on account of old age. It was in 1872 that he went to California, and for a time had a dairy of a hundred cows at Cape Mendocino, in Humboldt county, spending seven years all told in that State. Always a strong Republican, he was a selectman in Coventry for several terms and represented the town in the General Assembly in 1857, and at different times held many town offices. In Tolland he was first selectman several terms, and was county commissioner four years, the last year being chairman of the board. His services as justice of the peace in Tolland were highly creditable to him. In 1847 he was married to Levica Huvey, who was born in 1826, in Mansfield, Conn., a daughter of Alvia Huvey. She died in 1856. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Janes M. Babcock were as follows: Maryette, born May 30, 1848, who married Alford Harvey, of Ashford, and is now living in Scranton, Pa.; Gilbert P.; Jennie Minerva, who died at the age of twenty years.

Gilbert P. Babcock was born in Columbia, Conn., Jan. 2, 1850, but when he was only two years of age his parents removed to Willimantic, and two years later to Coventry. In 1858 he came to Tolland, where he received his education, both at the public school, and at a select school taught by Prof. Fred Lilley, of Coventry. Mr. Babcock left school when he reached the age of seventeen years, and engaged in farming, a business he followed until 1874, when he went to Scranton, Pa., where he became an engineer, having a stationary engine in charge for several months, and then becoming a fireman on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. In 1881 he left railroad work, and came back to Vernon, Conn., where he bought the Blinn mill of Charles Underwood, operating both the grist and saw mill for sixteen years. At the end of that time he sold out to George M. Cox, and returned to his Tolland farm, a place of a hundred acres, with a fine grove of thirty-five acres of peach trees. While engaged in the Vernon mill, Mr. Babcock dealt in lumber, and did custom work for the public. He was appointed deputy jailor of Tolland county, June 1, 1899, acting under Sheriff A. P. Dickinson.

Mr. Babcock belongs to the Grange, an institution in which he has always taken an active part, having been a charter member of Vernon Grange, No. 52, of which he has been steward, overseer, and for three years a trustee. Mr. Babcock attends the Tolland Congregational Church, and in politics is an ardent Republican. In 1897 and in 1898 he was first selectman. In 1898 he was defeated for representative by only four votes, running ahead of his ticket eighteen votes.

Mr. Babcock was married Oct. 22, 1873, to Inez Brown, who was born in Tolland, a daughter of James A. and Frances E. (Kimball) Brown. To this union have come the following children: Frank Gilbert, born July 22, 1875, a graduate as a mining engineer from the school of Technology at Boston, class of 1903; Harry Janes, born July 27, 1877, who entered Yale in 1902 to study sanitary engineering; Elliot Kimball, born March 27, 1896.

Mrs. Lurancy Hall, born Lurancy Huvey, a daughter of Alvia Huvey, and a sister of the mother of Mr. Babcock, is the widow of Egbert Hall, of Willimantic, and is now an inmate of the home of Mr. Babcock, with whom she has lived for twelve years. Mrs. Hall took care of Mr. Babcock in his early childhood after the death of his mother, and has indeed been a mother to him and his sisters.

GEORGE MASON HOLT, owner and operator of one of the most highly cultivated estates of Hampton, Windham county, known as the Elm Dale farm, is also one of the leading citizens of the town.

James Holt, father of George Mason Holt, was born Feb. 17, 1786, in Hampton, and in early manhood learned the trades of tanner and shoemaker, and followed them for many years. Later in life he abandoned the former pursuit and followed farming during the summers and worked in his shoe shop during the winters. He occupied several rented farms in Hampton at various times and finally purchased a farm of Charles I. Grosvenor, the same one now occupied by his son, and there Mr. Holt passed his last years. He was an extensive farmer and also dealt largely in live stock, driving many head of stock thirty-six miles to market in Providence, R. I. In almost any line of business Mr. Holt would have been a successful man, for he possessed rugged health and great industry combined with business sagacity which enabled him to accumulate large means. In his early political life he was a Democrat, but after the formation of the Republican party, he adopted its principles as being more in accord with his views.

He efficiently filled many of the town offices and was well and favorably known through the town. The cause of his death was a stroke of paralysis, which rendered him somewhat of an invalid for the last six years of his life. His death occurred Dec. 23, 1865, and he was interred in the burying ground north of his home.

Abigail (Ashley) Holt, the mother of George Mason Holt, was born March 1, 1790, daughter of Samuel Ashley, a farmer of Hampton, and her death took place Oct. 24, 1873. The children born to James and Abigail (Ashley) Holt were as follows: Mary Ann, born Aug. 25, 1810, who married Joseph F. Holmes, a bookkeeper, and resided for many years in Providence, R. I., but died in Hampton, April 17, 1880; Sylvester G., born Nov. 1, 1812, a farmer in Hampton, who married Eliza Ann Curtis (who died May 3, 1887), and died June 24, 1898; James H., born April 21, 1815, deceased Aug. 4, 1842; Lucy Maria, June 12, 1817, who died at the age of twenty years; Angelina A., May 2, 1820, residing in Hampton; Cornelia A., June 7, 1826, who died April 17, 1901, in Hampton, unmarried; George Mason, Jan. 2, 1829; and Charles, Sept. 8, 1831, a farmer in Hampton, who married Sophia Simmons and died May 26, 1871.

George Mason Holt was born in the house that stood on the site of his present residence. His education was acquired in the district schools and until he was eighteen years of age he employed himself in farm work. At that age he went to Plainfield, Conn., to learn the carpenter trade, apprenticing himself for two years to Gardner Rouse; for his first year's labor he was given a salary of $40, and $60 for the second year. He remained with Mr. Rouse for three months longer and then went into the employ of Samuel Underwood, a contractor of Pomfret, and was made overseer of a number of carpenters who were employed by Mr. Underwood. Later he filled a similar position for Mr. Samuel Truesdale where he had charge of a large force. Mr. Holt remained with both these employers for several years and worked through Connecticut and Rhode Island at various places. Still later he was foreman for George A. Bodge, a large contractor and builder in Hartford, and there had from six to twenty men under his direction. Mr. Holt continued to fill responsible positions of this kind for several years in Hartford, and then went to Providence, where for two years he was employed as boss carpenter for Moulton & Ingraham, after which he opened a shop of his own there and found employment for from six to ten men. For two years, or until 1857, he remained thus engaged in Providence, but when the whole country became involved in financial distress, he closed out his business in Rhode Island and returned to Hampton. There he worked quietly at his trade for several years and finally located on his father's farm, as the latter was getting to be advanced in years. He assumed the care of his parents, smoothed their way during their last days, and after his father's death purchased the farm, which comprises 180 acres. Since that time his energies have been engaged in agricultural labors, including general farming and dairying. He has erected a new house and commodious barns and is considered as good a farmer as he was a carpenter, and that is high praise, for few excelled him in his locality in the latter line. Many of the attractive homes in Hampton are examples of his taste and skill. Mr. Holt was the principal contractor and builder for many years in Hampton and the surrounding towns.

On Nov. 1, 1854, in Hampton, Mr. Holt was married to Miss Abby C. Dorrance, born April 18, 1829, in West Woodstock, Conn., daughter of Deacon Alexander and Mary Lucretia (Fox) Dorrance, the former of whom was born Feb. 15, 1796, and died Sept. 11, 1870. The latter was born in 1801 and was instantly killed Sept. 9, 1849, by being thrown from a wagon. Mrs. Holt is a descendant of Rev. Samuel Dorrance, who graduated at the University of Glasgow in 1709, and became the first pastor of the first church in Voluntown, Conn. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Holt, namely: Helen C., Aug. 10, 1855, widow of George L. Cleveland, who was born Oct. 29, 1835, and who died Jan. 18, 1888; Mary Louisa, April 18, 1859, who married William P. Spaulding, a farmer in Pomfret, and has one child, Helen Holt, born Aug. 25, 1894; and Frank H., born Jan. 15, 1865, who died March 18, 1865.

In politics Mr. Holt is a staunch Republican, and has held many of the local town offices. For a number of years he has served on the board of selectmen, being its chairman for two years, and has also served as trial justice for a number of years. In 1877 his fellow-citizens made him their representative in the State Legislature, and he served acceptably on the Fisheries committee. Mr. Holt has taken a very active interest in the Grange movement and he was the prime mover and organizer of Little River Grange, No. 36, of Hampton, the organization being completed in Mr. Holt's residence, Dec. 30, 1885. He served as first Master and subsequently held the office during two more terms, and in 1901 and 1902, his accomplished daughter, Mrs. Cleveland, was made Master, both daughters being interested members of the order. Mr. Holt belongs also to Moriah Lodge, No. 15, A. F. & A. M., of Danielson, a pleasant connection which has lasted through a quarter century. Although not a member of the Hampton Congregational Church, to which his family belongs, he attends the services and gives it a generous support. Mr. Holt is held in high esteem in Hampton and is regarded as one of the town's representative men.

SAMUEL BRAINARD WEST, a prosperous farmer and leading citizen of Columbia, Tolland county, is a worthy descendant of a long line of highly honorable ancestors, one of a family whose record is without blemish. The first of this family in America was Francis West, who came from England and settled at Duxbury, Mass., where he died, aged eighty-six.

Grandfather Col. Samuel West, Jr., was born in Lebanon, Conn., and died on the West homestead in Columbia, Oct. 16, 1863, aged eighty-seven years, six months and five days. Col. West was married four times, his first wife, Rebecca Little, being the grandmother of Samuel B. The other wives were Ruby Bliss, Lucy Manning and Amanda Woodward. His first marriage occurred Nov. 18, 1798, and his first wife died May 8, 1821, aged forty-seven; the second wife died July 8, 1831, aged forty-nine; Lucy (Manning) West died Aug. 29, 1861, aged seventy-six; while his fourth wife died Aug. 11, 1878, aged seventy-four. By his first marriage Col. West had the following children: Elizabeth Dorchester, born Sept. 18, 1799, deceased Oct. 9, 1818; Cynthia Maria, born July 18, 1801, deceased Jan. 15, 1816; John Orlando, born Dec. 5, 1803, deceased March 9, 1820; Marietta, born Feb. 4, 1806, deceased March 7, 1817; Malvina, born April 12, 1808, deceased Oct. 21, 1817; Milinda, born Sept. 2, 1810, deceased May 14, 1894, wife of a Mr. Morgan; Samuel Ferdinand, born Dec. 13, 1812, deceased Feb. 27, 1897; William Wellington, born July 17, 1815, deceased Nov. 3, 1817; Harriet Lucinda, born Sept. 23, 1817, deceased Jan. 26, 1901, the wife of a Mr. Woodward. By his second wife Col. West had the following family: Henry Bliss, born Feb. 15, 1823, deceased Sept. 21, 1831; Eliza Malvina, born Dec. 27, 1824, deceased Oct. 6, 1891; the wife of Edwin Little; Cynthia Maria, born Sept. 26, 1827, deceased Jan. 23, 1831.

Samuel F. West, the father of Samuel B., married Sept. 28, 1837, Charlotte Porter, of Columbia, and had the following family: Henry Porter, born Oct. 2, 1838, deceased May 22, 1840; an infant son, born July 28, 1840, and deceased the same day; Samuel Brainard, born Aug. 5, 1841; Gelon Wilbreforce, born Aug. 31, 1845, deceased Jan. 17, 1890; Catherine Parmella, born March 3, 1847, deceased Jan. 2, 1900, who married and had two daughters,—Kate R. and Bertha M.; Robert Irwin, born Nov. 5, 1848, deceased Nov. 24, 1849; Mary Niles, born Oct. 7, 1851, deceased July 6, 1880, who married William E. Hawkins and had,—Claude B., born Jan. 18, 1876, and Enid May, born June 21, 1878; Carrie Ellen, born April 6, 1857, who married Thomas Sprague McGlaulin and has a daughter, Maude Louise, a teacher. Mrs. Samuel F. West died Nov. 19, 1897, in her eighty-first year.

The farm where Samuel B. West was reared and now resides and where three generations of the family have lived before him, is located in the western part of the town of Columbia on West street, and is now the largest farm in the town. This property was purchased by the great-grandfather, Samuel West, Sr., who came from Lebanon and settled there, having been a soldier in the Revolution; while his son, Samuel West, Jr., saw service at New London in the war of 1812. The latter was an extensive farmer and a member of the Congregational Church. Samuel West, the father of Samuel B., and the third Samuel in the West family, was born on the West homestead, received his education in the district schools, and during a short period at a select school, and worked upon his father's farm during the summer months. As soon as old enough he taught school, during the winter of 1830-31, and also in the winter of 1835-36. In November, 1835, he left home and went west to Ohio, and stopped at Delaware, in that State. In the spring of 1836 he formed a partnership with Nathaniel W. Little, of that place, under the title of Little & West, in a mercantile line, continuing thus until the spring of 1841. In the fall of the same year, at the earnest solicitation of his father, he returned to his native town and managed his father's farm, remaining there until his death.

Samuel Ferdinand West, the father, was first a Whig and later a Republican, and always took an active part in political matters. During his life he served as selectman, justice of the peace and held other minor offices. In the spring of 1847 he was chosen to represent the Twenty-first Senatorial district in the Connecticut Legislature and faithfully performed the duties of that position in the General Assembly during its session in May, 1847. In 1855 he was county commissioner for Tolland county, and also during the following year, and bore a large part in overseeing the erection of the excellent jail at Tolland. In December, 1864, he was appointed assistant assessor for the ninth division of the first district of Connecticut, which position he filled until July, 1868. This division embraced the southern part of Tolland, including the town of Willington. In addition to his other interests he was president of the Tolland County Agricultural Society and a member of the State board of agriculture, and was a director in the Willimantic Savings Institute and a trustee in that institution for many years. Prior to their marriage, he and his wife united with the Congregational Church in Columbia, in 1831, but in 1838 removed their relationship to the Presbyterian Church at Delaware, Ohio. Upon their return to Columbia they renewed their associations with the Congregational Church of that town. Mr. West was a live, active, energetic citizen, interested in all the advancements and improvements of the times.

Samuel Brainard West was born in Delaware, Ohio, but when he was only a baby the family returned to Columbia, and he attended the West street school, and also had two years at the Ellington high school. For a short time he traveled for a Hartford book company, then began teaching his first school, at Elktown, Cecil Co., Md., which he continued until the spring of 1861, when the sectional feeling became so strong that he came north and reached New York City the day Fort Sumter was fired upon. Aug. 9, 1862, he enlisted as sergeant in Co. E, 1st Conn. Cav., and was discharged June 5, 1865. During his term of service he was with Sheridan in the Virginia campaign; participated in the battle of the Wilderness, Cold Harbor and all of the fighting in the Shenandoah valley, including Winchester and Cedar Creek, also in many minor engagements, and was present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. He was one of Grant's escorts and accompanied him to the front on that memorable day.

After his return from the war, Mr. West settled down on the old homestead, where he has since been engaged in farming, and he now owns the largest and best cultivated farm in Columbia. In addition to general farming, he is largely interested in dairying and has a fine herd of Devon cattle.

In politics Mr. West is a Republican and has represented the town in the Legislature of 1882; served on the Humane committee; was selectman five years and chairman nearly all of that period; also assessor, grand juror, etc. Both Mr. and Mrs. West are members of the Columbia Congregational Church, in which Mr. West has been a member of various committees and was superintendent of the Sunday-school from 1881 to 1883. They are also charter members of the Columbia Grange, having joined in March, 1892; and members of Frank S. Long Post, G. A. R., No. 30, of Willimantic.

On Nov. 14, 1866, Mr. West was married to Hannah E. Thompson, a native of Hebron, and a daughter of Royal Ansel and Sarah Jane (Warren) Thompson. Royal A. Thompson was born in Columbia, Sept. 7, 1814, and died Feb. 2, 1894, while the mother was born Oct. 16, 1819, in Westville, Conn., and died May 16, 1894; they were married in Hebron, Sept. 7, 1837, by Rev. William Geer. Of their children, George Warren, born July 12, 1838, died June 5, 1883. He was a member of Co. B, 7th C. V. I. (He was married Oct. 18, 1866, by Rev. B. Peters to Adelia Ticknor); Francis J., born June 21, 1840, a resident of Kansas City, Mo., was married by Rev. F. D. Avery, Jan. 1, 1866, to Amelia Yeomans; Hannah E. (Mrs. West), born March 17, 1843, was married by Rev. F. D. Avery, of Columbia; Frederick J., born July 31, 1850, deceased Aug. 30, 1881, was married by Rev. F. D. Avery to Walter C. Thompson, and had a daughter, Fredrica J., born in 1881; Royal H., born Oct. 9, 1855, died Sept. 7, 1856.

The maternal grandfather of Mrs. Samuel Brainard West, Anson Warren, was a native of Massachusetts, and married Betsy Sperry, of Woodbridge, Conn., a descendant of one of the old colonial families, which provided food for and housed the regicides, in "Judges' Cove" in the town of Woodbridge, which is still pointed out as a place of interest, and it was owned by the Sperry family. Grandfather Warren's children were: William, who married Maria Everets, and died in Hartford; George, who died in Hartford, leaving a wife, Mary; Sarah Jane, deceased in Columbia; Ann, married to John Blythe, of Winsted, Conn.; Louise, who died in Hartford, married; Matilda, married to Leverett Wright; Andrew Thompson, a resident of Winsted, married to Hancy Beers; Mary Ann, deceased in childhood; Elizabeth, married to James Clarke, of Hartford, Conn. The Warren family is descended from Gen. Warren, of Bunker Hill fame.

Clark D Whitford

CLARK D. WHITFORD. By far the largest mercantile business in Oneco, Windham county, is conducted by Clark D. Whitford, who was born in West Greenwich, R. I., Jan. 15, 1844, a son of Caleb and Roxy A. (Young) Whitford, a grandson of Solomon Whitford, and a great-grandson of Simeon Whitford.

In Austin's Genealogical Dictionary of Rhode Island, it is assumed that Pasco Whitford, who settled early in Newport, and later lived in Greenwich and Kingston, who was taxed in 1680, who became a freeman in East Greenwich in 1689, who was a witness to a deed in Kingston in 1697, is the progenitor of all bearing the name of Whitford in Rhode Island. He had two sons, Nicholas and Pasco, the former of whom was a weaver in Portsmouth, East Greenwich and West Greenwich. His wife, Mary, died in 1743, and his own death occurred in 1748. They were the parents of the following children: Pasco, Robert, David, Ezekiel, Catherine, Dinah, Mary, Ruth and two daughters whose names are unknown. Pasco, the son of the settler, married Mary Stafford, of East Greenwich and Kingston, and one of his sons, Pasco, married, July 5, 1723, Deborah Fowler. His other children were called Joseph, John, Ezekiel and Nicholas.

Nicholas and Mary Whitford, the great-great-grandparents of Clark D., lived in the towns of Greenwich and near-by vicinities in Rhode Island, and their son, Simeon, was born April 28, 1750. He married, in June, 1783, Elizabeth, daughter of John Case, and among his children was Solomon.

Solomon Whitford was of Welsh descent, and lived in West Greenwich, R. I. He was a large land owner, having in all about 700 acres, which constituted a very fair property in those days. He was among the influential men of his neighborhood, and was active in Democratic undertakings. His death occurred in 1867, at the age of seventy-three years, while his wife, formerly Mary Brown, lived to be ninety-one years of age. To this couple were born two sons, Elisha and Caleb, the former of whom was born in 1806 and died in 1840. He was a machinist by trade, lived during his whole life in West Greenwich, and married Deborah Hopkins.

Caleb Whitford, the father of Clark D., was born in West Greenwich, R. I., in 1810, and died in Coventry, R. I., in February, 1899. He was educated in his native locality, and married Roxy A., daughter of Benjamin Young; she was born in 1825, and died in Warwick, R. I. Caleb Whitford was fortunate in inheriting his father's farm, which he improved and cultivated until waning powers compelled retirement from active life. In early life he was a Democrat, but in later life was a staunch Republican. To himself and wife were born the following children: (1) Clark D. (2) William, deceased, married Harriet Hopkins, and had two children, Everett and Ernest W. (3) Phoebe first married Solomon W. Harrington, second a Mr. Warner, and third Russell Nichols, of Coventry. By her first husband she had three children, Grace, Mary and Arthur. (4) John, of West Greenwich, married Amanda A. Lawton, by whom he has one daughter, Addie, now the wife of Mr. Joslyn, of Norwich, Conn. (5) Charles, of Coventry, married Sarah A. Johnson, of Providence, and they have four children, Earl H., Nellie E., Claude R. and Charles. (6) Solomon, in the employ of his brother, Clark D., married Fannie Babcock, of Sterling, and their children were: Lulu (who married, July 7, 1902, Perry F. Lewis, of Greene, R. I.), Mabel, Lilly, Flossie and Harry, of whom Mabel and Harry are deceased. (7) Ferdinand died in 1872, at the age of fourteen years. (8) Susan, deceased, married, first, Henry Brown, by whom she had a son, Charles; she married, second, Charles Champlin, the result of this union being one daughter, Clara Belle, now deceased. (9) Frank, of Coventry, R. I., married Dora Sunderland, and their only child, Gladys, died when young.

Clark D. Whitford was reared and educated in Greenwich, R. I., and at the age of seventeen began to engage in farm work. During the early days of the Civil war he was engaged in making Spencer's Pills at Warwick, R. I., and in 1863 found employment on the farm of Austin Campbell, of Canterbury, Conn. The year 1864 found him an employe on the Rhode Island State farm, and in 1865 he was at Portsmouth and Newport, R. I. In 1866 he removed to Stonington, and during 1867-8 he was employed laying track on the Stonington Railroad. In 1869 and 1870 he was in the employ of the Providence, Hartford & Fishkill Railroad, and in 1871 he engaged in the saloon business at Quidnick, R. I. At the end of three years and three months, or August, 1874, he came to Voluntown, Conn., and for a little more than four years conducted a saloon in that town. In April, 1879, he removed to Danielson, Conn., and bought the Olive Branch Hotel goods of B. F. Wilbur, and disposed of this property in June, 1881. He then located in Sterling and opened a store and saloon in the stone basement of the Doherty property at Oneco, an enterprise entirely successful for a period covering ten years. He then constructed the large and commodious building he now occupies, and to his original commodities he has added a line of general hardware and general merchandise. Twenty thousand dollars a year constitutes the average run of business, or about three times the amount made at the start. In 1900 he bought the Oneco Mill plant and property and erected thereon a modern gristmill, and in 1902 he sold this property to the Case & Lincoln Co., paper manufacturers. Mr. Whitford is public-spirited, and interested in all local and county affairs. Politics has never weaned him away from his large and increasing business, although he is a staunch Republican and an ardent upholder of his party's issues and principles. Fraternally he is identified with the Protection Lodge, No. 19, I. O. O. F., of Central Village, Connecticut.

In West Greenwich, R. I., Mr. Whitford married Celinda A. Wood, a native of that place. To this union have come two children: Flora M., born Aug. 12, 1882, married, Dec. 25, 1901, Russell Thurrott, of Taunton, Mass., but a native of Canada; and Fred C., born in October, 1887, is attending the Bryant and Stratton Commercial College at Providence, Rhode Island.

GARDNER C. WOOD, M. D., is a retired physician, and is now residing in Somers, Tolland Co., Conn., where his ancestors have been honorable and useful members of the community, and at one time were very numerous.

Dr. Wood has recently been the subject of considerable attention by reason of his discovery of gold at Somers, Conn., near Woodville. No rock has been taken, according to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, of April 3, 1901, from more than three or four feet below the surface, and if as is usually the case where there are such surface indications, the yield grows richer as the mine goes deeper, then considerable gold is yet to be taken out of the rocky and sterile hills. The property was formerly a part of the farm of Theodore Sheldon, and Dr. Wood bought thirty-seven acres of it a short time ago, paying for it one thousand dollars, a price that set the neighbors talking, as $500 would have been counted a liberal price.

This discovery of gold has come about in a peculiar manner. Some thirty years ago Dr. Wood dreamed one day that he had found gold in the hills of Somers, the dream recurring several times within thirty minutes. Occasionally after that he would examine the rocks while engaged in his favorite study of geology, but never found anything more than iron pyrites, or other deceptive metals, until in 1897, he found near the point where work is now being carried on a piece of rock which showed decided traces of gold after it had been roasted in the kitchen fire, after the fashion in which gold was found in Cripple Creek mines. On roasting the Somers rock in the red coal the smell of sulphur is given off, and the little specks of gold which make the Somers rock remarkable, are brought into view. According to the assays it ranges from $8 to $22.90 a ton in value. As a scientific discovery of gold in Connecticut, Dr. Wood's find has attracted much attention and he has received representatives from the Smithsonian Institute, and Prof. Emerson, of Amherst College, who desired specimens, both raw and roasted, of the first Connecticut gold that has been found in appreciable quantities.

Dr. Wood traces his ancestry to (I) Thomas Wood, the immigrant ancestor of the family, who was born about 1633, and was located at Rowley, Mass., where he was buried Sept. 12, 1687. He was married July 18, 1654, to Ann Hunt, who died Dec. 29, 1714. To them were born the following family: Mary, born April 15, 1655; John, born Dec. 2, 1656, married to Isabelle Hazen; Thomas, born Aug. 10, 1658, married to Mary Hunt; Ann, born Aug. 8, 1660, married to Benjamin Plummer; Ruth, born Aug. 21, 1662, married to Capt. J. Jewett; Josiah, and Elizabeth, twins; Samuel, born Dec. 26, 1666, married to Margaret Eli-thorp; Solomon, born May 17, 1669, married to Mary Haseltine; Ebenezer, born Dec. 29, 1671, married to Rachel Nichols; James, born June 22, 1674, who died when a little over twenty years of age.

(II) Josiah Wood, twin brother of Elizabeth, was born Sept. 5, 1664, and was married in 1685 to Sarah Ellithorpe, who died some three or four years after marriage. Soon after her death he was married to Mary Felt. To his first marriage was born one child, Joseph, who was baptized Sept. 18, 1687. To the second marriage came the following children: Samuel, born Nov. 4, 1691; Sarah, Feb. 15, 1693; James, April 9, 1695; Mary; Josiah; Ruth, June 4, 1704; Elizabeth, May 26, 1706; George, Aug. 13, 1708.

Josiah Wood, the father of the above family, bought 2,000 acres of land in 1722 in East Enfield, now a part of Somers, of Samuel Terry, and on this he settled with his sons, Josiah, Jr., and Deacon James.

(III) Deacon James Wood was the first deacon of the Somers Church, being chosen to that position in 1727, and holding it for forty-five years. He lived to be eighty-four years of age, and had the following children: Nathan, born May 23, 1735; Lois; Capt. John.

(IV) Capt. John Wood was born about 1729 in Somers, and made his home near Woodville. He was a captain in the 8th Company, of the 22d Regiment of the Continental army, and did valiant service in the Revolution, serving at Crown Point, Bennington and elsewhere. Capt. Wood married Mary Chapin in 1754, and died Aug. 31, 1805, his widow surviving him until Nov. 30, 1824, when she died at the age of ninety years. To them were born six children. Capt. Asa, born Aug. 4, 1761, served in the Revolutionary army, and was on duty at the execution of Major Andre. Dr. Wood remembers hearing him tell of the battle of Bennington, in which he served. His death in Somers in 1844 was from the effects of a fall. John was the grandfather of Dr. Wood. Oliver was born March 23, 1766. Luke, born Aug. 29, 1767, married Anna Pease, of Somers, and became a Congregational minister. Sarah, born Nov. 20, 1770, married Mr.

Russell, a teacher of elocution. David was born June 5, 1773.

(V) Dr. John Wood, grandfather of Dr. Wood of Somers, was born in that town, Jan. 16, 1764, received a district school education, and prepared for the practice of medicine at New Haven, where he took lectures. Locating at Somers he cared for his farm, and followed the practice of his profession very successfully. His death was quite sudden, occurring in May, 1832, in Somers. A member of the Congregational Church, and a man of character and standing, he was married to Kate Dibble, of Saybrook, Conn., a daughter of John and Irena (Williams) Dibble. She lived to be eighty-four years of age, and was mother of six children. Orson was the father of Dr. G. C. Wood. Harriet had two husbands, J. Newton and Lot Killam, of Enfield, and died in New York City, at the age of ninety-three years. Gaius married Abigail Pease, and on her death, Mrs. Hancock. He was a carpenter and joiner, and in his later years owned a shingle mill in Somers. He died in Stafford at the age of eighty-seven years. Polly married Charles Pease, a peddler in early life, and later a farmer in Somers. Sophia married Deacon Charles Morgan, a farmer in Somers. Eunice married Jeremiah Bishop, a locksmith in Somers, and died early in life.

(VI) Dr. Orson Wood, the father of Dr. G. C. Wood, was born in Somers, Dec. 10, 1792, where he received educational advantages of a high order, beginning with the district school, and a private school under the management of the Rev. Mr. Strong. Medicine he studied under his father, and took lectures at Yale College, many years later officiating as a member of the examining board of that institution. In Somers he began his practice, where he remained a short time and then removed to Stafford, which was his home as long as his father lived. On the death of that gentleman Dr. Orson Wood came back to Somers, which was henceforth his home. There he practiced medicine and had a very extensive circle of friends and patrons. When past seventy years of age he would ride by night to visit those who called for him. The latter years of his life he retired from practice and died July 19, 1874. He was buried in Center cemetery at Somers. Dr. Orson Wood was a strong Democrat, and represented Stafford in the State Legislature in 1831; and the twentieth district in the State Senate in 1843-44. A well-read man, he was fond of Shakespeare and delighted to quote him on occasion. In early life he united with the Congregational Church of Somers, but as he resented a reference to politics in a sermon by the minister, Rev. Rodney G. Dennis, he and his family severed their connection with that body.

Dr. Orson Wood married Arethusa Pease, who was born Oct. 5, 1802. Mrs. Wood was a daughter of Stephen and Abigail (Hall) Pease, of Somers, and a granddaughter of Stephen Pease, a veteran of the Revolution. She died Jan. 29, 1880. Dr. and Mrs. Orson Wood had the following children: Orson H., born in June, 1821, a farmer and seed grower of Ellington, who married Jane M. Collins, had one daughter, Emma G., the wife of A. V. Griffin, of Meriden, and died in Somers in February, 1853; Gardner C.; Amelia A., born May 5, 1830, who died July 1, 1848, in her lifetime a musician and an artist of note; Edward P., born in 1832, who married Celestia Eaton, was a farmer, and died in Somers, Sept. 7, 1869.

(VII) Gardner C. Wood, M. D., was born in Somers, May 8, 1823, attended the district school, and at the age of fourteen years entered the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he remained two years. In 1842 and 1843 he attended school in Ellington, and during the winter of the last year studied Latin under the instruction of Mr. Chapin, of Enfield, who kept a select school in Somers.

When a child of seven years, Dr. Wood received a chill and shock while in swimming, which affected his throat, and if it had not been for the unremitting attention of his father, who employed all the resources of medical art in his behalf, it is doubtful if he would ever have spoken again. Dr. Wood began attending lectures at Yale, and was a member of the noted Young Medical Students' Debating Club. In 1845 and 1846 he took lectures in the Medical Department of the University of New York when Valentine Mott was Professor of Surgery, and John W. Draper was Professor of Chemistry.

Dr. Wood opened an office in Springfield, Mass., in 1847, where he remained until 1853, when he came back to Somers for the sake of the free and open-air life he might lead there. Since his return he has devoted himself to the care of his farm, although at the same time he has interested himself in the study of geology, astronomy and ornithology, becoming a practical taxidermist, and having a very valuable collection of prepared birds and animals. From Dr. Wood Dr. Horsford, of Springfield, and Dr. William Wood, of East Windsor, received their first lessons in taxidermy.

Dr. Wood received in March, 1868, a proposition from Dr. Baird, of Washington, D. C., to become the taxidermist of a government expedition then in preparation for Alaska. Against his desire, Dr. Wood felt it impossible for him to go. He is an excellent musician, and still retains a master touch on the piano. After he was sixty years of age he took up the study of Greek, and now reads the Gospels and the Iliad in the original. On the subject of astronomy he is thoroughly versed, and frequently lectures on the theme. A fine telescope was constructed for him to his order. Dr. Wood is a Democrat, has represented Somers in the General Assembly, and was a strong supporter of the Union during the Civil war. In 1896 he was a candidate for the General Assembly, and though he failed of election by fourteen votes, he greatly reduced the Republican vote.

Dr. Wood was married Oct. 26, 1869, to Elizabeth F. Kibbe. She was born Oct. 8, 1842, in Somers, and is a daughter of Amariah and Caroline (Bestor) Kibbe, and a granddaughter of General Amariah Kibbe, who served at New London in the war of 1812. Dr. Wood and his wife have one child, Amelia E., born Oct. 5, 1877.

Amariah Kibbe, the father of Mrs. Wood, was one of twelve children, two boys and ten girls, born to Amariah and Charlotte (McKinney) Kibbe, whose lives are more fully noted elsewhere. Squire Amariah Kibbe was a merchant at North Somers for thirty years, and during all that time was the local postmaster. Later he removed to Somers street, where he kept a store until his death, which occurred Aug. 20, 1860, at the age of fifty-nine years. In good circumstances, his name is that of an extremely honest and conscientious man. A Republican in principles, he represented Somers one term in the State Legislature. For many years he was a justice of the peace, and as his place of business was near the Massachusetts line, he married during his term of office more than 300 couples from various towns across the lines, on account of the Massachusetts law demanding advertisement in the public print of the intention to marry. Mr. Kibbe married Caroline, a daughter of Dr. Uriah Bestor, of Wilmington, Vt. She died April 22, 1896, at the home of Mrs. Wood, in Somers, and was the mother of three children: Mrs. Wood; Jairus H., of Staten Island, N. Y.; Henry A., who died in Hartford at the age of thirty-five years.

CHARLES HENRY KELLEY, a leading contractor and builder of Putnam, Windham county, is a man who can proudly boast of the fact that to his own energy, pluck and perseverance is entirely due his marked success in life. He was born in Woodstock, Conn., Aug. 9, 1850, and comes of honest industrious stock.

Joseph Kelley, grandfather of Charles H., was born Oct. 8, 1784, in Killingly, where he passed his entire life as a sturdy, hardworking farmer. April 9, 1809, he married Mary Copp Howe, who was born May 31, 1779, in Killingly, where she died March 14, 1843, aged sixty-four years. The following children were born to them: Simon Copp, born March 8, 1810; Lucy, Aug. 20, 1811; Henry, March 18, 1813; Mary Howe, April 18, 1815; Edwin, Nov. 3, 1816; Elisha R., Oct. 19, 1818; Rebecca S., Sept. 29, 1820; William Monroe; Lavina, Nov. 28, 1824; and Joseph A., Aug. 15, 1827.

William Monroe Kelley was born in Killingly, Conn., April 14, 1823, and there died, Aug. 17, 1852. For a number of years, he was a railroad engineer, but in early life he followed the shoemaker's trade. After he had entered upon his work on the railroad, he so proved his trustworthiness and efficiency that for several years before his death he had been an engineer. His death was a sudden one, and all the more sad, in that the engine he so faithfully cared for, crushed out his life. While engaged in making some repairs on the engine, near Danielson, his fireman opened the lever, and obedient to its signal, the iron horse moved out, catching Mr. Kelley and so severely injuring him that he died a few minutes after being carried into the depot. April 20, 1845, William M. Kelley was united in marriage with Rheuby Squires Withey, who was born in Woodstock, Conn., and died in Putnam, March 22, 1893. One child, Charles Henry, blessed this union.

Charles Henry Kelley was taken to Norwich, Conn., in his infancy, and was but two years of age when his father died. His widowed mother then removed to Putnam, Conn., and in the schools of the fifth district of that town he acquired his education under such instructors as the late Israel M. Bullock, Prof. William T. Harris, ex-national commissioner of education, and others. For one term he attended Joseph Lippert's private school in the same town. At the age of fourteen he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., to live with Henry C. Bowen, editor of the New York Independent, and Internal Revenue Commissioner, and there he remained one and one half years. His next employment was as a driver with the Adams Express Company in New York City, where he remained two and a half years. In April, 1868, he determined to return to Putnam, and accordingly gave up his position with the Express Company. Upon his arrival in Putnam he set out to master the carpenter's trade, under the direction of Horace Hazzard, with whom he remained for three years. Proving a very apt pupil, he was taken into partnership in the spring of 1872, the firm becoming Hazzard & Kelley, and continued for four years, when they dissolved (1876). Mr. Kelley then went to Providence, R. I., where he held the position of foreman of all the carpenter work for the big contracting firm of French, McKenzie & Co., who employed as many as 700 hands, and were at that time building the Olneyville mills, at Providence, R. I. After one year he returned to Putnam and opened up for himself as a contractor and builder. From the first he met with gratifying encouragement and was accorded a substantial welcome in the shape of excellent contracts. He early laid down the principle that people were willing to pay for good work, and upon the excellence of his workmanship he must depend for his future success. With this as a ruling motive he soon became known as one whose work could be relied upon, and contracts for out-of-town building also began to pour in. By keeping up to the standard his reputation for honest work continues and his success is an accepted fact. He broadened his line of operations, taking contracts for buildings from beginning to end—grading, mason work, painting, etc., employing his own men in the various departments. He put in the first piece of plate glass ever introduced into Putnam, placing it in Dresser's drug store, and has probably done more in rough rubble stone work than any other man in the county. In addition to his building department, he has made a specialty of architectural designing, furnishing plans, estimates, etc., in scores of instances, where occasionally other contractors have put up the buildings. He mastered architecture by a careful application of his practical knowledge of instruction, until now he is capable of drawing the most intricate plans for buildings of any size. His business has so increased, that frequently he has found it necessary to employ as many as seventy men in the various departments connected with his work.

As to Mr. Kelley's success as architect, contractor and builder, it will be only necessary to enumerate the various projects which have passed through his hands in Putnam and the vicinity. It is not exaggeration to say that most of the business blocks in Putnam were erected by him, and as proof of this, mention is made of the following: The Union Block; Hathaway's (twice); Bugbee's; Wagner's; the Court House building; Bosworth's; the Arcade; Putnam Woolen Company's office and stock-house; J. O. Fox & Co.'s lumber sheds and office; the Windham County Orphans' Home; the new hall of St. Jean Baptiste Society; the buildings of the Putnam Park and Fair corporation; all the improvements at "Wildwood Park;" the Universalist Church; Episcopal Church; plans for the Methodist Church; Bradley Opera House; he has erected almost two-fifths of the town. Among the residences are those of S. H. Seward, H. H. Burnham, George A. Hammond, A. W. MacDonald, E. B. Kent, W. H. Mansfield, A. C. Luke, G. B. Morse, the Episcopal rectory, and other houses, recognized as among the finest in Putnam as to workmanship, design and interior finish. His own beautiful residence on Grove street is one of the most complete homes in Putnam, the acme of architectural design and interior finish, and was completed with all the modern improvements in 1890. In Pomfret, we might mention either the building or remodeling of the Ripley and Wilcox residences; Mrs. R. A. Clark's residence; a large portion of the George A. Bradley place; the Episcopal rectory, as well as a dozen or more of smaller cottages, and a barn 120 feet long for F. F. Wright; nor should we omit to mention the popular resort for summer guests, the "Ben-Grosvenor," also at Pomfret, Conn. In Woodstock he remodeled the Congregational Church and built the Chapel; remodeled the Stoddard and Arnold places for Mrs. Clarence W. Bowen; and built the Deming residence, on the shores of Woodstock lake. He also drew the plans for the new church at North Woodstock; the new church at West Woodstock; in Thompson he remodeled the Doane mansion the first time; the Olney residence; the beautiful house owned by Miss Hattie B. Fox; the Henry L. Burt and Norman B. Ream homes; and the public library. One of the most attractive churches in that section is the Episcopal Church at Danielson, also the work of Mr. Kelley, as was the rectory of Brooklyn. He also designed the buildings for the Riverside Driving Club, Danielson. In addition to all of his extensive building interests, Mr. Kelley long had charge of the large properties owned in Putnam by Thomas Harris, during which time he attended to the repairs, collecting rents, extensions, etc., but owing to his own important interests he gave this up in 1899. In 1894 Mr. Kelley purchased the Morse farm of twenty-five acres, between Putnam and Putnam Heights, greatly improving it and selling off a large quantity of stone for cellars and other work.

In spite of all the demands made on his time by his business, Mr. Kelley has yet found time to take an active interest in public affairs. In politics he is a Republican, and while he is in no way an office seeker, he has served as alderman from the First ward, and also as alderman-at-large. He was urged for the office of mayor in 1901, but declined. For one year he was chief engineer of the fire department, and proved himself most efficient. Fraternally he is a Mason, affiliated with Quinebaug Lodge, No. 166, F. & A. M., of Putnam, in which he is past master; and of Columbian Commandery, of Norwich. He is also a member of Apollo Temple, Mystic Shrine of Boston. Mr. Kelley is first, last and always a business man, paying that close attention to detail in his own work and that of his employees which insures only satisfactory results. We need add nothing further than to say that he has reached that point in professional experience where the expression, "Kelley built it," is equivalent to saying "it is well and satisfactorily done." He is a self-made man in the truest sense of the word, and is deserving of high credit for the record he has made. Genial in his manners, charitable to the weaknesses of others, he is a man of many friends, and few, if any, enemies.

On Dec. 16, 1874, Mr. Kelley was united in marriage with Miss Olive Frances Collins, daughter of Charles and Betsey (Hall) Collins, of Danielson. No children have blessed their union, but their hospitable home is ever open, and the young people are frequent visitors.

A. PALMER DICKINSON, sheriff of Tolland county, Conn., is one of the best known men in the county, and for years has been one of the leading members of the Republican party there. Mr. Dickinson is the grandson of Col. Francis McLean, who in his day was one of the most influential men in Vernon, and the owner of much valuable property situated along the stream in Rockville.

Lemuel Dickinson, our subject's grandfather, was born in the town of Chatham, and was a son of David Dickinson, a vessel owner who carried on a coasting trade at the time when Chatham, Middletown, and other points were great ports for the business, from which many vessels sailed to the West Indies. David Dickinson had emigrated from England, but reared his family in Chatham, Conn., his son Asa becoming one of the owners of the quarries at Portland.

Dr. F. L. Dickinson, now deceased, the father of A. Palmer, was born in Portland, Conn., then Chatham, Jan. 29, 1817, a son of Lemuel and Sarah Hurlburt (Clark) Dickinson, the former of whom was a native of Colchester. Lemuel Dickinson died in 1818 at sea, on his way home from the West Indies, where he had gone for his health, which had been impaired during life in the fort at Groton, Conn., during the war of 1812. His widow was given a small tract of land in Iowa, for her husband's services in that war, this land being disposed of by Dr. Dickinson later in life, as the only heir. Sarah Hurlburt Clark, the mother of Dr. Dickinson, was born at Colchester, and married when but seventeen years old, Dr. Dickinson being her only child by this union. In 1840, for her second husband, she married Deacon Amasa Palmer, of South Mansfield, and she went there to reside, her husband dying there, when she went to live with her son in Willington, Conn., remaining with him until her death in Rockville, at the age of eighty-four.

When Mrs. Lemuel Dickinson was left a widow in straitened circumstances, with an infant son, she returned to her father in Colchester, later rented a house and opened a boarding house. In this village Dr. Dickinson was reared, attended Bacon Academy there, and in 1836, when but nineteen years old, began school teaching in Rocky Hill, Conn., and the next year came to Vernon, was engaged as the teacher of the high school, and secured board in the family of Col. Francis McLean, where he met his future wife. For two winters Dr. Dickinson taught this school, and then began the study of medicine, under Dr. Alvin Talcott, of Vernon Center, later going to Colchester and placing himself under the direction of the well-known Dr. Morgan. This led up to the Yale Medical school, from which he was graduated in 1840.

Dr. Dickinson began practice in Hampton, Conn., but a few months later was taken ill and in July, 1840, went to the home of his mother, in Mansfield, where he had a long attack of typhus fever, after recovery remaining with his mother until the spring of 1841. In May of that year he located in Willington, and soon became so attached to the place and interested in his profession, that he made it his home until May 1, 1863. Dr. Dickinson's practice grew large and laborious, including the towns of Union, Stafford, Westford, Mansfield and Willington, his rides being long and tiresome, sometimes dangerous, many of these covering thirty miles through a rough country.

This hard work finally told upon him, and when in 1863 Dr. Alvin Skinner and Dr. Lewis, of Rockville, were attached to the army, at the urgent request of many citizens, Dr. Dickinson consented to move to Rockville, and there soon built up a large practice, continuing to minister to his sick up to within three weeks of his death. Fully aware of the nature of his own malady, he warned his wife of its fatal ending; his death occurred June 3, 1897, and he was buried at Grove Hill cemetery.

On Sept. 28, 1840, at Vernon Center, in the old McLean homestead, built in 1793, by Alexander and his son, Col. Francis McLean, Dr. Dickinson was married to Miss Roxey McLean, who was born Feb. 10, 1820, the daughter of Col. Francis and Sarah (Childs) McLean. The children of this marriage were: Francis P., born Aug. 16, 1842, in Willington, who served four years in the Civil war, enlisting from Illinois in a volunteer company, now resides in Springfield, Mass., and has reared a large family, Arthur, Emma, Eliza, Ione, Howard, Eugene, Grace, Maud and Allen; Amasa Palmer, born in 1844, in Willington; Sarah Eliza, who died at the age of five years in Willington; and Arthur Talcott, born in 1855, who resides in Rockville, married Isabella Hodge, of East Glastonbury, and has one daughter, Bernice Mae, born May 1, 1895. Arthur Talcott is an electrician and a well-known citizen of Rockville.

Dr. Dickinson was sent to the Legislature in 1850 and in 1857 and again, from Vernon, in 1875-76, and also served in the State Senate from the twenty-first district in 1877-79 and served as president of the Tolland County Medical Society. While a young man he united with the Congregational Church in Colchester, and always continued in that association. For years before his death he was one of the directors in the First National Bank of Rockville. By all men he was held in high esteem, and the late Dr. Storrs, of Hartford, was his sincere admirer, having read medicine under his tutelage in Willington, where Dr. Storrs was teaching school.

The venerable mother of A. Palmer Dickinson, one of the most estimable ladies of Rockville, who, in spite of her advanced years is vigorous both in mind and body, resides in the home on Prospect street, which was built by Dr. Dickinson. In 1900 she made the trip and return to California, alone, and enjoyed the experiences as thoroughly as do those of fewer years. When but fifteen years old she joined the Congregational Church, and is connected with same in Rockville. For fifty-seven years Dr. and Mrs. Dickinson were permitted to journey together, and their "Golden Wedding" was appropriately celebrated.

A. Palmer Dickinson was born at Willington Center, Conn., Feb. 8, 1844, where he was reared and attended school. When a boy in his later teens, he went to Vernon, later to Talcottville, and worked for C. D. Talcott, in the latter's mill. Accompanying his parents to Rockville in 1863, he became a pupil in the first school building erected on School street, and later attended Business College in New Haven, at an institution on Chapel street, thus concluding his education. When R. W. Tracy was made postmaster and the office was on the site of the Peoples' Savings Bank, Mr. Dickinson was assistant postmaster.

Mr. Dickinson made a trip through the West during his youthful days, traveling in Illinois, Iowa and other western states, returning to Rockville in the fall of 1868, in time to cast his first vote for Gen. U. S. Grant, and from that time he has been one of the staunch Republicans of the county and a worker for its success, serving it in many positions. For ten years Mr. Dickinson was in the hardware business on the corner of Elm and Union streets, but in the big fire in April, 1888, his store was burned and he did not rebuild, the site being now occupied by the Union Congregational church.

The first political office held by Mr. Dickinson was that of constable; later he served as deputy sheriff under John H. Buell, of Hebron, Conn., and has served as city sheriff most of the time since Rockville became a city. In the fall of 1894 he was elected sheriff of the county, in June, 1895, took charge of the office, and in 1898, and again in 1902, was re-elected. For four years Mr. Dickinson was first selectman of Vernon, and is socially connected with Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., and Adoniram Chapter; was a charter member of the first K. of P. lodge there; and was a charter member of the A. O. U. W. at Rockville.

On Aug. 8, 1872, Mr. Dickinson was married in Rockville to Miss Anna Frances Sill, born in Andover, Conn., March 15, 1847, the daughter of Isaac Newton and Almira (Bolles) Sill. The former was a native of North Lyme, while the latter was born in Columbia, Conn. Mr. Sill died in Andover, where he was a deacon in the church, his father, Isaac Watts Sill, having been a deacon in the same church for thirty years. The widow of Isaac Newton Sill died in Rockville, where she removed after her husband's death.

The children born to Mr. Dickinson and his wife are: George E., born in 1874, a letter carrier of Rockville; Ella Sill, born in 1875, a graduate from Mt. Holyoke Seminary in the class of 1898, for four years assistant registrar of that school, and now registrar of the National Cathedral School, Washington, D. C.; Francis McLean, born in 1877, who graduated from the Rockville high school in the class of 1897, from the Yale Scientific School, in the class of 1900, and is now a student at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, N. Y.; Ernest Hyde and Ray Palmer, who both died in infancy. Mrs. Dickinson is a valued member of the Union Congregational Church, and the family is one held in high esteem in the city.

ARTHUR C. STETSON. The Stetson family, which is represented in Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., by Arthur C. Stetson, a man of prominence in business and social life, traces an ancestry which reaches back to the early settlement of the historic village of Scituate, in 1634.

Robert Stetson, commonly known in later records as Cornet Robert, probably came to America from Kent, England, although the precise date of landing is buried in mystery. However, he was one of the early settlers of Scituate and in 1634 received from the colony court an extensive grant of land on the North river, which constituted his farm. His title was acquired on account of his being cornet of the first company of horse which was raised in Plymouth Colony, Mass., in 1658-59. In 1659 the town records tell that Capt. William Bradford, Lieut. John Freeman and Cornet Robert Stetson were confirmed by the court to be commissioned officers of the troop of horse. During the twenty succeeding years, which included the period of King Philip's war and other Indian troubles, Cornet Robert Stetson proved himself a brave and useful officer. In the year 1661 he was chosen a member of the council of war and still held the office as late as 1681. There is no doubt that this early ancestor of the Stetson family was one of the most prominent men of Plymouth Colony and capably filled many offices of responsibility. He was born in 1613 and his death occurred Feb. 1, 1702-03. The Colonial records give his children as follows: Joseph, born June, 1639; Benjamin, in August, 1641; Thomas, in December, 1643; Samuel, in January, 1646; John, in April, 1648; Eunice, in April, 1650; Lois, in February, 1652; Robert, in January, 1653; and Timothy, in 1657.

Samuel Stetson, the next in the line of whom we have record, was born Aug. 24, 1754, and died in March, 1800. His wife was Deborah Gross, who died June 27, 1833. They lived in Charlton and Brimfield, Mass. Their children were: Hervey, born July 25, 1783, who died Nov. 4, 1785; Lucy, Dec. 10, 1784, who died Jan. 10, 1785; Hervey, Nov. 15, 1786, who died May 26, 1869; Samuel, Aug. 25, 1788; Nancy, Feb. 28, 1790, who died June 4, 1863; and John, June 29, 1792.

Hervey Stetson, son of Samuel, was born in Charlton, Mass., in 1786, and died in Woodstock, Conn., in 1869. He married Augusta Lamb, a native of Charlton, Mass., and their oldest child was (1) John Hervey. (2) Otis died May 10, 1860, in Woodstock, Conn. He married Sarah Child, daughter of H. Nelson Child, of Woodstock, and their son, Charles Nelson, was born Sept. 28, 1848, in Woodstock, and died Aug. 22, 1864, in Southbridge, Mass. (3) Lucy married George Perrin, of Woodstock. (4) Sarah Newhall was married Aug. 14, 1850, to Henry Stoddard, son of Hon. Ebenezer Stoddard and Lucy (Carroll) Stoddard, of Woodstock. Henry Stoddard served his country in the war of the Rebellion, and his death occurred in Springfield, Mass., June 20, 1873. Their children were Lillian, born Jan. 18, 1852 (who died Sept. 21, 1873); Florence, May 24, 1853; Mabel, July 31, 1855 (who died June 5, 1885); and John Ebenezer, Dec. 28, 1857 (who died March 24, 1897). (5) Jane never married. (6) Adelaide married Weaver Austin, of Woodstock, Connecticut.

Hervey Stetson was a sailor in his early life, but an accident caused the loss of his right leg, and after that he followed the trade of carpenter, having a shop in Woodstock.

John Hervey Stetson, son of Hervey, passed almost the whole of his life in Woodstock, where he followed contracting and building with good success. His health and strength continued into advanced life. It is related of him that he thought nothing of carrying a kit of tools a distance of eight miles, reaching his place of work at sunrise. Industrious and provident, he accumulated means, and at the time of his death, at the age of eighty years, was a substantial man in his locality. Many of the buildings still standing in Woodstock and the vicinity were erected by him. His work was considered most excellent, as he had a natural talent in that direction and it still stands as a testimonial to his skill. In politics he went from the Whig to the Republican party, and being a man of integrity was called upon to fill a number of the minor offices in his town. He served as a representative to the Legislature, where his honesty of purpose was demonstrated by his efforts in the direction of good legislation.

Arthur Corbin Stetson, son of John Hervey and Mary Bayliss (Rich) Stetson, was born Dec. 11, 1846, in West Woodstock, Conn. There he obtained his education, attending school through the winter season and assisting his father during the summers, at the age of nineteen beginning to teach school during the winters. Thus his life was passed until 1876, during which time he had become skilled in the carpenter's trade, under his father's supervision. In that year he went to work for the firm of Longdon & Morse, meat dealers, remaining until its re-organization in 1878, when it became Morse, Stetson & Co., Mr. Stetson taking an interest in the business.

Later Mr. Stetson embarked independently in the meat business, locating in the Union block, Putnam, where he conducted his business for two years, removing then into the Bugbee block, and selling out July 1, 1893. On July 17th of the same year, Mr. Stetson purchased the grocery stock and business of Wood Bros., continuing the business in the Union block. This was sold Aug. 20, 1902, to E. T. Tucker. Mr. Stetson is an excellent business man and fine manager, and has demonstrated his ability as a first-class purveyor, carrying an immense stock of both staple and fancy groceries, kept at a high standard to suitably meet the wants of the most fastidious trade of the city.

A Republican of fixed principles, Mr. Stetson is more of a business man than politician, and seeks no political preferment. His interest in public measures of all kinds is constant, and in every way he lives the life of a useful and representative citizen. In 1902 he was elected a member of the board of selectmen. He is a director in the Mystic Valley Water Company, of Mystic, Conn., and of the Putnam Foundry & Machine Company, and he has varied business interests in his city. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F., and has been high priest of the local encampment; is past master workman of the A. O. U. W.; and past regent of the Royal Arcanum. Mr. Stetson is an attendant and liberal supporter of the Congregational Church.

On June 21, 1871, Mr. Stetson was married to Miss Helen Janette Morse, born June 9, 1848, in Stafford, Conn., daughter of Orrin and Helen (Horton) Morse, of Putnam, of whom further mention is made on another page. One son was born to this union, Clarence Arthur, born Sept. 25, 1877, in Putnam, who is now occupying a responsible position with a prominent contracting engineer of New York City, being bookkeeper for Eugene Len-tilhon, and is a young man of great promise.

JOHN C. WILLIAMS, one of the prominent and well-known farmers of Brooklyn, Windham county, and an esteemed and respected citizen, comes of one of the oldest families of New England. Authentic records prove that a conspicuous member of this family was no other than the great Protector, Oliver Cromwell. A reliable authority on genealogy, Rev. Dr. M. Russell, LL. D., with others, asserts that as late as the reign of James I the family name was written, "Cromwell, alias Williams."

Robert Williams was a native of Norwich, England, where he married Elizabeth Stalhaney, and with her came to Roxbury, Mass., in 1638, in which same year it is recorded that he was made a freeman. Elizabeth died in 1674, at the age of eighty years, and for his second wife Robert married Martha Story, who survived until 1708, dying at the age of ninety-two years.

Samuel Williams, the great-grandfather of John C., of Brooklyn, was a resident of Pomfret, Conn., having probably lived prior to this time in Vermont. His occupation was farming. He reared a large family, two of his numerous sons locating in Brooklyn, Conn., Nathaniel and Joseph. The latter, born Aug. 14, 1793, located on the farm immediately north of the farm occupied by his brother, Nathaniel, and there he died, Sept. 15, 1882.

Nathaniel Williams, son of Samuel, was born in 1783, and was a small boy when his family removed to Pomfret, Conn. In this place he grew to manhood and resided there until 1812, when he went to Brooklyn, there locating on the farm which is now occupied by his grandson, John C. Williams. All his life was devoted to farming, and it was while engaged in that work that his sudden death occurred, July 12, 1880. His industry through life had resulted in a prosperous condition of affairs, and his family was well provided for. In his political sympathy Mr. Williams belonged to the Old-line Whigs, but later became an active member of the Republican party. Through life he was a constant and devoted attendant of the Unitarian Church at Brooklyn, his membership dating from his youth. He married Hannah Witter, of Brooklyn, who died Feb. 12, 1848, at the age of sixty years. His children were: Charles W., who died April 3, 1816, aged one year; Nancy Maria, born in 1816, died, unmarried, Feb. 10, 1845; Samuel, born in 1818, died Feb. 20, 1826; Charles G., the father of John C.; Mary, born in 1822, died unmarried, Nov. 29, 1846; and Warren, born in 1824, married Olive French, of Plainfield, and died May 31, 1850.

Charles Gardiner Williams, son of Nathaniel, was born April 12, 1820. His education was confined to the advantages offered in the public schools, but he was remarkably intelligent, and at the age of eighteen years was given charge of a school in Brooklyn during the winter term, succeeding so well in its management that for several years he continued to teach during the winters in Brooklyn, Pomfret and Sterling, Conn., working on the farm during the summer seasons. It was in the last named town that he first met the lady who later became his wife, Miss Lucy Emily Gallup, who was a native of Sterling, the estimable daughter of John Gallup. Her death took place Jan. 29, 1864, at the age of forty-two years. They had the following children: Mary M., born in 1849, died June 13, 1872; Nathaniel G., born May 21, 1850; Hannah G., born June 21, 1852, died July 15, 1853; and John C., born Aug. 24, 1856. After his marriage Charles G. Williams located on the farm which is now occupied by his son, Nathaniel G. Williams, and there was occupied in agricultural pursuits until his retirement from activity in 1887. Mr. Williams was known in this locality as one of the best and most progressive farmers of the section, a real, practical tiller of the soil, who thoroughly understood how to attain the best results, and who adopted modern methods and machinery to promote the same. In early life he was a Whig in political sentiment, embracing later the principles of the Republican party, but during his last days he became attached to the Prohibitionist party, on account of his firm stand on the subject of temperance. In the Unitarian Church Mr. Williams was highly valued, his life being in accord with the principles he professed. For a number of years he was a director in the Windham County National Bank, only resigning this official position when the concern was moved to Danielson. As one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Creamery Association he was much interested in its affairs, and at the time of his death was its efficient president. In 1887 Mr. Williams left the farm and moved to Brooklyn Center, where he lived surrounded by the comforts of life until his death, Jan. 22, 1896. His second marriage was on Nov. 15, 1865, to Mrs. Ruby (Gallup) Burgess, who was born on Jan. 1, 1822, and who was the widow of Dr. Horace Burgess, and the daughter of David and Nancy (Jacques) Gallup, this estimable lady still surviving and residing in Brooklyn.

John C. Williams was born in Brooklyn, Conn., Aug. 24, 1856, in the house which is now occupied by his brother, Nathaniel G. Williams. His early interests were centered in agricultural pursuits, and these have ever been of paramount importance to him. His education was obtained in the public schools, and he remained at home until he had reached the age of twenty-one years, and for the succeeding five years was employed as a farm assistant in the neighborhood. Moving then to Middletown, Conn., he accepted a position as an attendant at the Connecticut Hospital for the Insane, and remained with that institution for five years. In 1888 Mr. Williams returned to Brooklyn, and located on his present farm of 160 acres of fine land, and since that time has been engaged in its cultivation, and he has also devoted a large part of his interest to the developing of a dairy business. At present he conducts a milk route through Brooklyn, finding this a lucrative and satisfactory part of rural industry.

Although Mr. Williams' ancestors have been notably devoted to the principles of the Republican party, he is just as firmly convinced of the claims of the Democratic party, and by it has been tendered almost every office in its gift. In 1892 he was elected to the board of selectmen, and served as third member of the board until 1895, when he was elected chairman, acceptably filling this responsible position until October, 1901, being elected then third member. He was elected first selectman again in 1902. In 1899 he was further honored by his fellow-citizens by an election as representative, serving with credit on the committee on Military Affairs, and receiving the indorsement of a second election, in 1901, serving on the committees on Roads, Rivers and Bridges and on Forfeited Rights. Brooklyn is normally a Republican town, with a majority of decided proportions, but his personal character made Mr. Williams the choice of the majority of voters. An unprecedented distinction held by Mr. Williams is that he filled at the same time the two highest offices in the gift of the town, that of representative and selectman, for four consecutive years, especially remarkable when it is remembered that the town gives a majority to the opposite party.

Mr. Williams possesses many personal attributes which win popular favor. A life of integrity and generous public spirit, of known activity in promotion of all objects to enhance the prosperity of the town, combined with a genial, agreeable personality, has won for him a great measure of public favor. In musical circles Mr. Williams has many friends and admirers. A talent in this direction has been cultivated, and has resulted in a complete mastery of the cornet and the baritone horn. While engaged in his duties in the hospital in Middletown he gave his services as a cornet player, his beautiful music soothing the poor tortured imaginations of the patients in a most remarkable degree. During his time there he led the hospital orchestra, and was a member of the orchestra of the McDonough Opera House, in Middletown. The Hampton Cornet, the Eastford and the Danielson schools have had the advantage of him as a leader, the latter for a period three years.

On Aug. 14, 1887, in Hartford, Conn., Mr. Williams was married to Miss Clara Boomhower, a native of Hyde Park, Vt., and a daughter of Lester and Nancy (Collins) Boomhower. This estimable lady was also an attendant at the hospital, where her kind ministrations were highly valued. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams are: Charles G., born June 9, 1890; Lester, B., born Feb. 13, 1893; and Emily G., born Dec. 5, 1899. Both Mr. and Mrs. Williams are consistent members of the Unitarian Church, while socially he is a charter member of Mortlake Council, A. O. U. W., and has held important offices in the same.

MORSE. Concerning the antiquity of the surname Mors, Moss, etc., the following is extracted from the "Morse Memorial" compiled by Henry Dutch Lord:

The surname of Morse, Morss, with numerous variations in spelling, has been changed from De Mors to Mors, and the prefix "de" gradually dropped by English usage, it became Morse—with the final "e." The surname Mosce became Moss, etc., both of these being found in Old England and New England, but of a different origin, as is now believed. Of the armorial bearings of these two distinct families more will be given in detail presently.

"Moss" is an ancient name, probably local, and of Norman origin. Moss for Mosce, as follows: "Godefridus de la Mosce, Normandy, held a fief from Philip Augustus, of the honour of Malherbe," and not identical with Morse, but intermingled with Moores, Moos, Mores [see "Norman People," pp. 338, 339], as in the name Geoffry de Mores. Thus in the ancient spelling are instances of "Morce," alias Moss, and of De Mors, alias Mors, and finally Morse.

"John Moss of New Haven, Conn., born in England about 1619, settled in New Haven, Conn., in 1639, and removed to Wallingford, Conn., in 1670," is a striking illustration of the continuance of this surname "Moss" in New England. [Morse Genealogy, pp. 139 and 144.] And "The Rev. Joshua Mors, an itinerant preacher, contemporary with Whitefield, was the grandson of a Joshua Morse, of New England, Chaplain under Sir William Phipps—1689—a minister from the 'west of England,' who settled in Rhode Island, and served also as chaplain in the first war in which this country was engaged with the French."

We must then consider the surname Morse (of Old England and New England) as from De Mors—alias Mors (the prefix "de" dropped), and with a final "e" Morse (Anglicized)—and Moss, from Mosce. Whether the prefix "de" as found in these surnames points to Normandy or Germany for the primary origin remains an open question. The names of both with the prefix "de" are found at an early date in both places, and there are numerous examples of such changes of surname. Thus in ancient Normandy, De St. Lando. The armorial bearings of the family of Lowe were changed to a wolf (the now well recognized arms of this family in England). The family of D'Ath—"de Ath"—(a Norman family, mentioned in the William Duke of Normandy's lists) was changed (corrupted) to "Dearth"—and De Lard became Laward, alias Lord [see Burke, "Norman People," "Bardsley, "Rymer's Foedera" and other works].

In further illustration and more pertinently: Thomas Lord, the settler at Hartford, Conn., in 1635, died before 1669-70, intestate. In that year his widow, Dorothy Lord, sealed her last will and testament with a seal bearing the impression of armorial bearings from what was undoubtedly the seal ("signet ring" perhaps) of her late husband, Thomas Lord. The "arms," as depicted on the seal thus affixed 1669-70, are identical in every particular with the armorial bearings of the ancient family of De Laward of England, and as presumed previously of Normandy [see family of Laward alias "Lord," so given in Burke, "Edmondson's Herald" and "Norman People" and other English works].

The word surname was originally, and more significantly surname, and "Coroner" was anciently and much more correctly Crouner, as Charles Reade, the eminent English novelist, and the early English records assure us.

These illustrations in connection with that of Anthony Morse (the son of Anthony Morse, of Newbury, Mass.) signing his name as Anthony Moss, "Jun'r." in his last will and testament, serve as an example of the whims and caprices attending surnames. There is no law, no legislative act as to these surnames; times and customs, the gradual change from feudal service and mailed knights to civil offices and commercial enterprises, wrought a corresponding change in surnames. From De Mors came Morse, the Norman prefix "de" gradually dropped by change of English customs and usage, and Mors yielding to Morse, by the giving of a final "e." The surname Morse claims a high antiquity. It occurs as early as A. D. 1358. In the reign of Edward III Hugo De Mors received an order from the King in connection with a journey about to be undertaken into France during a truce with that country and the captivity of her King. From the nature of this commission and the prevalence of chivalry at the time it is inferred that Hugo was a knight [Morse Genealogy]. There is assurance of this surname in England in 1358 but whether Hugo de Mors was from Normandy or Germany is unknown.

The surname "Mors" and "de Mors" was known in Germany as early as 1200. Of this we gain some interesting particulars from the gleanings of the Rev. Abner Morse, A. M. (after his work of the "Morse Genealogy" had been published, 1850). Rev. Mr. Morse in 1865 wrote "From the early adoption of surnames until 1553, both upon the Continent and in England, the name is invariably spelled Mors, as it still is throughout Germany, its birthplace, probably originating in the Count De Mors, about 1200-1300. German immigrants have no doubt carried the name into Russia. The geographical center of the name in England was the County of Suffolk, where it was not probably planted until after 1400, and then by a single family, as their peculiar Christian names in 1500-1600 in this and contemporaneous countries indicate, and as reference to each other in their thirty wills shows. The Morses from Wiltshire were undoubtedly a colony from Suffolk, for they carried with them and transmitted the names peculiar to the Morses of Suffolk, and still have the same family arms. These, perchance, may have been the arms of Count de Mors of Nassau, Germany, enrolled by the courtesy of the English Herald Office, with final 'e' added to the name to make it English, for the arms are too simple and the emblems too ancient to have been compared so lately as to the admission of the 'e' to the name, and the family claim for them about 200 years higher antiquity than the appearance of the name in England, going back quite to the age of the German Count XXX."

Anthony Morse, who was a native of Marlborough, Wiltshire, England, born May 9, 1606, came to America in 1635, and settled in Newbury, Mass., where he died Oct. 12, 1686. He was married (first) to Mary, and (second) to Anne, and his children were: Anthony, Benjamin, Sarah, Hannah, Lydia, Hesta, Johnson and Mary, all born between 1637 and 1655.

(II) Deacon Benjamin Morse, born March 4 or 27, 1640, married Ruth Sawyer, and resided in what became West Newbury. Children: Benjamin, Ruth, Joseph, William, Sarah, Philip, Anne, Mary and Samuel, all born between 1668 and 1688. Mr. Morse was a member of and a deacon in the church.

(III) Benjamin Morse (2), son of Deacon Benjamin (1), born Aug. 24, 1668, married Jan. 28, 1691-92, Susannah Merrill, born March 14, 1673, daughter of Abel Merrill, and granddaughter of Aquila Chase, who came from Cornwall, England, to Newbury. Mr. Morse resided in Newbury and was identified with the church there. His children were: Abel, Ruth, Priscilla, Judith, Stephen, Mary and Benjamin, all born between 1692 and about 1716.

(IV) Capt. Abel Morse, son of Benjamin (2), born Oct. 5, 1692, married (first) in Bradford, in 1714, Grace Parker, and (second) Sept. 29, 1757, Sarah Kimball. He resided in Newbury, Mass., and Chester, N. H. Capt. Morse was a member of the church and served as deputy to the General Court. His children were: Parker, Abel, Nathan, Josiah, Stephen, Rebecca, Oliver, Abraham and Susan, all born between 1715 and 1735.

(V) Dr. Parker Morse, A. M. (Harvard), son of Captain Abel, born April 20, 1715, married in 1737, in Newbury, Hannah Huse, probably a daughter of Ebenezer, and a great-granddaughter of Abel Huse, who came from London, England, to Newbury in 1635. Dr. Morse settled in Woodstock, Conn. His children were: Parker (a physician), David, Abel, Evander and Leonard, all born between 1738 and 1754.

(VI) Abel Morse (2), son of Dr. Parker (1), born about 1741, married in 1770, Sarah Holbrook, and resided in Woodstock, Conn. Their children were: Leonard, born Oct. 27, 1770; Polly, born Sept. 5, 1772, married Winthrop Chandler, of Thompson, Conn.; Abel, born Feb. 8, 1774, died unmarried in Woodstock; Oliver, born Nov. 4, 1775, resided in Woodstock; Sally, born Oct. 7, 1777, resided in Woodstock; Stephen, born June 24, 1779, married Mehetabel Henderson, and settled in Ticonderoga, N. Y.; Patty, born Jan. 28, 1781, died unmarried in Woodstock; Dorothea, born Jan. 16, 1784, married in 1808 Abigail Dewing, and resided in Canterbury; Nathan, born Oct. 14, 1785, married (first) in 1822, Rebecca Child, and (second) Mary Mills, and resided in Woodstock; Susannah, born Sept. 24, 1787, resided in Woodstock; Elizabeth, born Sept. 14, 1789, died in Woodstock; and Nancy, born Oct. 16, 1791, died in Woodstock.

(VII) Leonard Morse, son of Abel (2), born Oct. 27, 1770, married in 1813, Remember Meacham, and died in Woodstock May 11, 1845. Leonard Morse was a thrifty farmer, and one of Woodstock's substantial and highly esteemed citizens. His children were: Albert, born March 20, 1814; Nathan, born Dec. 24, 1815; Nelson, born March 3, 1818; Stephen, born June 28, 1820; Joseph M., born April 1, 1823; and Charles D., born Nov. 1, 1827, who is mentioned on another page.

REV. ASA RANDLETT, a highly esteemed citizen of North Ashford, Windham Co., Conn., is engaged in farming, having retired from the arduous duties of a clergyman of the Baptist Church after a long and useful career in the ministry.

Reuben Randlett, the grandfather of Rev. Asa Randlett, was probably one of three brothers who came from England to America many years ago, settling in Bridgewater, N. H., where he died at the age of seventy-five years. He was a devoted member of the Free Will Baptist Church, and set a Christian example to his descendants. Reuben Randlett married Rachel Ellsworth, who survived him to extreme old age, dying in Sanbornton, N. H. Their children were: Jacob, the father of Rev. Asa; Asa, who married in middle life, a farmer in New Hampshire; Rachel, who married W. Cram, and died in Sanbornton, N. H.; and Polly, who married Jonathan Daniels, and died in New Hampshire.

Jacob Randlett was brought up to labor on the old New Hampshire farm, but after his marriage he resided at Sanbornton, and later moved to Bridgewater, N. H., where he and his brother Asa operated a farm in partnership. Still later he made his home at Newbury, Vt., and there his first wife died. He returned to Bridgewater and was there married a second time. During his later years he lived at Canaan, N. H., and also at Lyme, where he died at the age of eighty-one years, and there he is buried.

The first marriage of Jacob Randlett was to Mary Currier, of Meredith, N. H., daughter of Jacob Currier, and the fourth child in a family of fourteen children. She died in 1831, at the age of thirty-three years. Her children were: Celinda, who died at Bristol, N. H., at the age of nineteen years; Rev. Asa; Jacob, who was a farmer in Jefferson, N. H.; Mary, who married Horace Boardman, a mechanic, and died in Lyme, N. H.; and John, who was reared in the family of Charles Brock, in Newbury, Vt., and bore the name of John Randlett Brock. He was given educational advantages, graduated from Rutgers College and became a minister in the Dutch Reformed denomination, but died in early life, leaving a wife and one son, Charles Randlett Brock, of Paterson, New Jersey.

The second marriage of Jacob Randlett was to Mrs. Affie Hodge. She had four children by her previous marriage and two children born to Mr. Randlett namely: George, who died in Lyme, N. H., where he was engaged in the stove and tinware business; and Reuben Augustus, who is a resident of Topeka, Kansas. The third marriage of Jacob Randlett was to Betsey Bradbury, of Canaan, N. H., who survived him. They had two children, one of whom died in infancy, the other, Celinda, resides in Bakersfield, California.

Asa Randlett is a native of New Hampshire, born at Sanbornton, in that State, March 22, 1822, and his eighty years of life have encompassed not only the highest stages of the world's progress in temporal affairs, but also the greatest religious progress the world has ever known. In furthering the latter Mr. Randlett has faithfully performed the duties and endured the sacrifices of a laborer in the Lord's vineyard. He was but six weeks old when his parents moved to Bridgewater, N. H., and six years later to Newbury, Vt., and here his beloved mother was removed by death, when he was but nine years of age. Asa Randlett's chances for obtaining an education were not very good, as when he was ten years old he was indentured to a neighboring farmer with the promise that he should go to school during the winter for about six weeks, and have his board and clothing for his services. Those were days when boys did the work of men, machinery being little in use at that time. Until he was seventeen the wages he earned were paid to his father, but at this period his father gave up his legal claim. Asa then bought fifty acres of land in the town of Canaan, N. H., although he was obliged to go heavily into debt in order to do so. The good son thus provided a home for his father, which he would have finally paid for if sickness had not prevented. Unfortunate circumstances arose by which he lost his land and all he had paid upon it—about one-half the amount. This was a severe blow, as he had been ambitious to succeed.

During the years intervening between eighteen and twenty-one Asa Randlett worked with industry at anything he could find in Lyme, N. H., managing to secure a few weeks' attendance at the Lyme Academy and also a short period at the New Hampton Academy. His last attendance at school was when he was twenty-three years of age. The wonderful opportunities were not then to be had which are offered the youth of the present day. While living in Lyme, at the age of nineteen, Asa Randlett united with the Baptist Church under the ministry of Rev. George W. Cutting.

At the age of twenty-four Mr. Randlett married, and then located at Lebanon, N. H., where he engaged at farm work for a time, and also taught penmanship. Two years later he removed to Danbury, N. H., where he was engaged three years at farm work, although all this time his mind was on serious things. From the time of his conversion he began the study of the Bible, and as soon as he was thoroughly imbued with its spiritual teachings, he felt called upon to declare the truth to others, and began evangelistic work. It was at this time that Mr. Randlett united with the religious body known as the Free Will Baptists, one reason of this departure being that he could not accept all of the tenets of the Baptist Church, and another reason and a strong one being that the Free Will Baptist denomination represented the strongest anti-slavery element, no church of that belief existing south of the Mason and Dixon line.

On March 2, 1852, Mr. Randlett was ordained at New Hampton, N. H., to the ministry of the Free Will Baptist Church. The years that followed were filled with Christian work and often with many sacrifices, but he was continually cheered by the results of his labors. After two years at Ware, N. H., he spent six years at New London, N. H. supplying also a portion of the time the pulpits at South Newbury and Georges Mills. Then he was stationed at Contoocookville, for two years, and later was sent to Charlestown, Mass., where, during a residence of two years he established a church and secured a membership of 100. After leaving this prolific field where he had labored with such success he learned that dissension had arisen, but upon being recalled his influence was sufficiently great to heal the troubles in the church.

Rev. Mr. Randlett then took up evangelical work and in pursuing this traveled from Maine to Nebraska, his efforts meeting with abundant reward and veneration and attachment following him from one point to the other. His disregard for personal comfort and his sincere Christianity awakened the confidence of all who listened to his eloquence. However, failing health necessitated a period of rest and he located on a farm at Groton, Mass. It was while residing in Groton, actuated in great measure by the fact that his family were connected with the Calvinistic Baptist Church, and by a desire to belong to the same communion, that Mr. Randlett with true Christian spirit put aside the few hindrances and in 1875 entered into communion with the church in Groton. For several years after leaving Groton, Mr. Randlett was located at Dunstable, Mass., coming in September, 1887, to North Ashford, Conn., where he preached his first sermon on the last Sunday in that month. This connection existed for seven and one-half years and then the faithful laborer felt called upon to place his mantle on younger shoulders and retire from active ministerial work. However, upon occasion, his old parishioners see him in the pulpit telling the same old story of which he never tires. His success both as pastor and preacher has been remarkable, as he never had the advantages of a theological school or even of a thorough academic training. Mr. Randlett is a forceful and convincing speaker. His home is on a farm at North Ashford, which he purchased from L. Stone. Rev. Mr. Randlett while not a politician has always supported the Republican party.

On March 8, 1846, Mr. Randlett was united in marriage with Sophia G. Gardner, born Feb. 8, 1825, in Troy, N. Y., daughter of Samuel and Sophia (Greely) Gardner, who removed from Troy to New Hampshire when she was quite young. Mrs. Randlett is a most estimable lady and has ably supported her husband's efforts, possessing also a business ability which has contributed to the material welfare of the family. The children born to Rev. Asa Randlett and wife were as follows: (1) Angeline G., who married George L. Stevens, a member of the Warren Soap Mfg. Co., of Boston, Mass., has one daughter, Edith; (2) Emma S., who married Rev. John R. Stubbett, a Baptist minister, who was located for a number of years at Putnam, Conn., later acceptably served the church at Southington, Conn., and is now again at Putnam, has three children, Irving, Florence and Harold; (3) Warren Gardner, who married Mary Gates, and lives in Groton, Mass., his children being, Mary (who is married and has two children), Maude, Marion C., and Doris; (4) Nellie, who married George W. Dickerman, who is engaged in the insurance business in Boston, Mass.; (5) Ida Grace, who married Charles A. Rice, a merchant at North Ashford; (6) Fred Asa, who is engaged in the stove and tinware business at Lyme, N. H.; (7) Miss Josephine G., who resides in Boston; and (8) Mary Nina, who married C. E. Switzer, of Wales, Mass., has two children, Mabel S. and Byron R. Switzer.

CUTLER. The family name of Cutler, now so largely represented in English speaking countries by men of intelligence, wealth and influence in the various communities in which they have resided, is a time honored one. Members of this family have for many generations held positions of trust, and enjoyed the respect and esteem of their fellow townsmen.

Many members of this old established family in New England have since long before the Revolution been prominent and of special usefulness. From generation to generation they have been noted for their patriotism, honesty of purpose and intellectual stamina.

As early as 1453, A. D., we find one Edward Cutler was sheriff of Norfolk county, England; and still later, in 1460, Edward Cutler was a member of the Burgesses in Parliament at Westchester. The name Cutler, obvious as it is in its plain English sense, dates back through the first form of Norman French to the original tongue. Cutler is undoubtedly derived from the Latin word "culter," a knife, from which it passed into French and by the Norman invasion was grafted into the English language.

The Cutler family of Windham county, of whom this record treats, is represented by stalwart, energetic, persevering and successful self-made business men in the persons of Joseph W. Cutler and Edward J. Cutler. These gentlemen are associated with the coal and wood business of Putnam, and are of the seventh generation in descent from James Cutler, the first of the family to come to America.

(1) James Cutler, who was born in England in 1606, emigrated to America, settling as early as 1634 in Watertown, Mass., where the first record of the family name in New England is to be found. James Cutler was one of the original grantees of the land on the road to Belmont in the Northern part of the town. His first wife, tradition says, was a sister of Capt. John Grout's wife, both of whom were so persecuted and oppressed in England on account of their Puritanism, that untended by relatives or friends, they sought home and fortune in New England.

There is no authentic record by which to fix the year of James Cutler's arrival in America. His first child, James, was born Sept. 6, 1635, in which year James, the emigrant, passed all necessary probation, and was received an inhabitant of Watertown. A house-lot, which contained eight acres, was assigned him. In the first "great divide" (that is, general division of land), July 25, 1636, he was assigned twenty-eight acres, and in 1642

he had assigned him from the farm lands eighty-two acres in the fourth division, and four other lots. On Oct. 2, 1645, James Cutler was one of the petitioners "in relation to Washaway plantation, now Weston," which was a petition to the General Court to have that portion of the town set off as a distinct parish, as the dwellers therein had no ministry without going from five to ten miles. About 1651 James Cutler settled at Cambridge Farms (now Lexington), not far from the Concord (now Bedford) line. A part of the farm was sold recently to the heirs of Leonard Cutler. James Cutler is supposed to have built one of the first houses at the Farms and vestiges of the cellar still remain. Mr. Cutler was too remote from Watertown, and especially from Cambridge, to admit of his having served in town affairs in either place.

James Cutler buried his first wife, Anna, Sept. 30, 1644, and married (second) March 9, 1645, Mary, widow of Thomas King. She died Dec. 7, 1654, and he married (third) Phebe, daughter of John Page, about 1662. He made his will Nov. 24, 1684, at Cambridge Farms, being then seventy-eight years old, and he died May 17, 1694, aged eighty-eight years. He named his sons Thomas and John as executors of the will, which was proved Aug. 20, 1694. Such is a brief record of James Cutler, who came to New England nearly 270 years ago. There is no direct testimony as to his character, social standing or his intelligence, but that he was honest and persevering, is evident from his acquisition of land and his payments for the same, while his early investment with full citizenship shows that he had established a fair reputation among his fellow townsmen. The provisions of his will, whereby his sons-in-law and step-children share his estate, manifest a large and liberal spirit.

Of James Cutler's children we have the following record: (1) James, born in Watertown, Sept. 6, 1635, died at Cambridge Farms, July 31, 1685; (2) Hannah, born in Watertown May 26, 1638, died before 1688; (3) Elizabeth, born in Watertown, Nov. 28, 1640, died Oct. 30, 1644; (4) Mary, born in Watertown March 29, 1644, died in Sudbury; (5) Thomas, born about 1648, died at Lexington, July 13, 1722; (6) Sarah, born about 1653, died in Weston, Mass., Jan. 17, 1744, aged ninety-one years; (7) Joanna, born about 1660, died Nov. 26, 1703; (8) John, born May 19, 1663, died Sept. 21, 1714; (9) Samuel, born Nov. 18, 1664 (his death was commemorated by his brother John); (10) Jemima; and (11) Phebe.

(II) Lieut. Thomas Cutler, sixth child of James, was born in Watertown, Mass., about 1648. With his wife, Abigail, he united with the church in Watertown, July 31, 1687, and when a church was gathered at Lexington in 1696, they were transferred to that parish. He was taxed for preaching in 1692, 18s 9d. He was a subscriber for the erection of the first meeting house in 1692, and was chosen one of the assessors in 1694. In 1700, when the parish performed what was formerly considered a very important duty, that of "seating the meeting house," he was appointed one of the committee for that purpose. Soon after the incorporation of Lexington, Mass., March 20, 1712, when the inhabitants met for the purpose of organizing, Lieut. Thomas Cutler was chosen one of the tythingmen. He was also assessor, constable and selectman. He was honored in the public records with the title of Lieutenant. He died in Lexington July 13, 1722. The children of Thomas Cutler, all born in Lexington, were as follows: (1) Abigail, born Oct. 31, 1674, died Dec. 19, 1715; (2) Thomas, born Jan. 19, 1678, died March 26, 1718, in Sudbury, Mass.; (3) Mary, born March 15, 1681, died June 26, 1713; (4) Hannah, born March 7, 1683; (5) James, baptized Jan. 9, 1688, died Sept. 16, 1756; (6) Jonathan, baptized June 17, 1688, died in Killingly, Conn., about 1746; and (7) Benjamin, born July 4, 1695, died Nov. 2, 1776.

(III) Jonathan Cutler, son of Thomas, was baptized at Watertown, Mass., June 17, 1688, and died at Killingly, Conn., where an inventory of his estate was ordered June 10, 1746. He married at Watertown, Aug. 17, 1710, Abigail Bigelow. On Nov. 5, 1709, he purchased lands in Killingly, Conn., which he sold May 8, 1710, and removed to Colchester, Conn. In 1726 he was in Bellingham, Mass., where he sold to Samuel Cutler, of Killingly, all the right he possessed by virtue of his being a proprietor of the town of Killingly. Jonathan Cutler was the father of the following children: (1) Abigail, born at Colchester Aug. 28, 1711, died Sept. 22, 1776; (2) Jonathan, born at Colchester Aug. 17, 1713, died at Dover, N. Y., in 1789; (3) Beach, born at Colchester, July 4, 1716, died in Plainfield, N. H.; (4) William, born in Bellingham, March 24, 1726-27, died in Plainfield, Conn., in 1744; (5) Stephen, settled in Vermont, but returned to Connecticut and became a wealthy farmer of Plainfield, Conn.; and (6) Wyman, settled near the Hudson river in New York State.

(IV) Capt. William Cutler, son of Jonathan, was born March 24, 1726-27, in Bellingham, Mass. Soon after his birth his parents took up their residence in North Killingly (now Thompson, Conn.), from which place he removed and settled in Plainfield, Conn., about 1744. On Nov. 7, 1750, he married Susannah, daughter of Joseph Shepard, of a good family. She received from her father the gift of a house lot of six acres. On this land Mr. Cutler built a house and clothier's shop with the income from which he was able to fit out four of his daughters and give farms to three of his sons. In 1760 Mr. Cutler petitioned the General Assembly that but two-thirds of his church tax should be paid to the old Established Church, and one-third to the church of his choice, which was granted.

He was lister in 1765, and appointed captain in 1766. Physically he was a typical Cutler, bony and tall and upright, a shrewd and energetic man.

Capt. William Cutler was one of the soldiers who marched from Plainfield, Conn., for the relief of Boston in the "Lexington alarm," April, 1775. He served seven days in the Colonial army, in Capt. Andrew Backus' company. His regiment served from seven to seventeen days. Capt. Cutler's wife died in 1798, and he married (second) a lady of Brookfield, Mass., who had previously twice married into the Cutler family. He died in February, 1802, aged seventy-five years. The children of Capt. William Cutler were: (1) William, born in Plainfield, Conn., Sept. 6, 1751, died in 1828 in Griswold, Conn. (2) Mollie, born in Plainfield March 21, 1753, died Nov. 1, 1787, in Killingly. (3) Joseph Hodges, born April 14, 1755, in Killingly, Conn., died in New York City in 1837. (4) Thankful, born in Plainfield Aug. 17, 1756, died there at the age of forty years. (5) Eunice, born in Plainfield, Dec. 15, 1759, died there aged fifty-six years. (6) Jonathan, born at Plainfield, Jan. 24, 1762, died in Killingly, Conn., aged seventy-five years. (7) Abigail, born in Plainfield April 28, 1763, died in Berkeley, Mass. (8) Simon, born in Plainfield, Sept. 6, 1766, died there June 1, 1843.

(V) Simon Cutler, son of Capt. William, was born Sept. 6, 1766, in Plainfield, Conn., and inherited from his father the homestead on which he lived during his life. He was a farmer by occupation and a sturdy industrious one. He married (first) Dec. 17, 1797, Betsey Herrick, distinguished for piety and energy, who died Aug. 5, 1821, aged fifty-one years. Simon Cutler married (second) a widow named Gordon, one of whose daughters married his son. He died June 1, 1843, having lived all his life in the house in which he was born.

Simon Cutler's children were all born in Plainfield, Conn., and were as follows: (1) Andrew, born Feb. 8, 1799, was prepared for college at the academy near his father's home in Plainfield, and was graduated in 1823, from Hamilton College, with fair claims to genius and scholarship. But in the midst of high hopes and bright prospects he contracted a cold, which was followed by a severe sickness and the partial but permanent disability of his left hand and right leg. Although nearly helpless, Andrew Cutler determined that life should not be a blank, and he opened a private school in Plainfield and taught in the neighboring towns, and after the death of his father took possession of the ancient Cutler homestead and for eight years longer received scholars. During all this time he studied and introduced improvements in school books and methods of instruction, encountering much opposition which he successfully resisted. He also prepared a "treatise on Moral Philosophy." Andrew Cutler died unmarried in Central Village, town of Plainfield, Conn., June 26, 1876, aged seventy-seven years. (2) Susannah, born June 26, 1800, married Dec. 20, 1829, Rufus W. Kennedy, and died Oct. 22, 1859. (3) William, born Oct. 9, 1802, died unmarried in North Carolina in 1881. He served in the Mexican war and in the Confederate army. (4) Isaac Knight, born July 15, 1805, retired from a successful business life and resided at Central Village, Conn. He married Mary, daughter of Samuel Gordon, became the father of four children, and died in Plainfield, July 20, 1884. (5) Job Herrick, born June 3, 1807, died in 1886. (6) Simon, born May 15, 1811, engaged in farming and died in Norwich, Conn., Nov. 3, 1854. In 1834 he married Louise Gordon, of Canterbury, Conn., and had three children. (7) John, born Nov. 5, 1813, became a merchant in New York, and died unmarried at Easton, Pa., Feb. 17, 1852. (8) Mary, born Nov. 15, 1815, married Rev. J. C. Jacobi, who died in New York Feb. 9, 1874, aged seventy-four years; she died in Central Village, town of Plainfield, Conn. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobi had four children. (9) Henry S., born in February, 1818, was a machinist by trade, although much of his life was devoted to mercantile pursuits in New York, and New London, Conn. He died in Central Village, in 1899. He married Mrs. Laura (Bottom) Beckwith, of Plainfield, who died in 1882, and they had two children.

(VI) Job Herrick Cutler, son of Simon, born June 3, 1807, in Plainfield, Conn., died Sept. 8, 1886, at Danielson, Conn. Until 1872 he lived in Plainfield, Conn., and while his son, Joseph W., managed the farm he engaged extensively in cattle dealing. In 1872 he removed to Danielson, Conn., where he lived retired. He was formerly a Whig but later a staunch Republican in politics, and served his native town in many offices of trust, being selectman for a number of years, constable, and a member of the school committee for several years. In fact, Mr. Cutler served in nearly all the offices in his town, and in 1857 represented the town in the State Legislature. He settled many estates, and was a man highly respected by all who knew him. Jovial and good natured, he was seldom known to become angry under any circumstances.

Job Herrick Cutler was gifted by nature with a robust physique, and was noted for his strength. He was never sick a day in his life until his last illness. He was always happy and genial. His presence would cheer any one with whom he came in contact. His religious connection was with the Congregational Church of Central Village. On May 24, 1836, he married Mary Elizabeth Wylie, who was born Aug. 22, 1813, a daughter of John and Sarah Susannah (Dorrance) Wylie, of Voluntown, Conn., and died in Danielson, Dec. 14, 1890. Their children were: (1) Annette, born Nov. 16, 1838, in Plainfield, Conn., married June 13, 1860, Eben S. Young, of Killingly, Conn., who was a very successful cotton manufacturer at Danielson, where he died in 1872, leaving a good competency.

They had children: Annette M., Burnette C., born in 1864, John, born in 1866, Susan W., born in 1869 and Mary L., born in 1871. Mrs. Young and the children are all living in Danielson, Conn. (2) Joseph Wylie, born in Plainfield, Feb. 5, 1841, mentioned below. (3) Edward Job, born in Plainfield, March 16, 1847, also mentioned below.

John Wylie, father of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth (Wylie) Cutler, was born Dec. 16, 1770, and became a man of prominence and influence in Voluntown, where he was a large land holder. He died there March 9, 1846. In religious faith he was a Congregationalist. He was three times married. On May 1, 1794, he married Amy Brown Tyler, who died Aug. 2, 1804, aged thirty years. Their children were: Sally, born July 5, 1795, died unmarried June 7, 1873; Lucy, born July 15, 1797, married Jan. 11, 1816, Amos Prentice, a farmer of Griswold, and died at the home of her son, ex-Mayor Amos Prentice, of Norwich, Conn.; Rachel B., born Aug. 25, 1799, married March 6, 1818, Thomas P. Chapman; John T., born April 8, 1802, married Oct. 12, 1826, Polly Hempstead, located in Rome, N. Y., but after several years went farther West, and there died; and Charles Bishop, born May 8, 1804, married (first) June 4, 1829, Lucinda Gridley, and (second) March 18, 1840, Mrs. Betsey Bicknell (he went West).

For his second wife, John Wylie married Oct. 18, 1804, Elizabeth Wylie, who died Aug. 26, 1811, aged thirty-three years, leaving him three children: (1) Henry, born April 10, 1806, was a farmer in Voluntown, where he died Dec. 15, 1889, unmarried; he was a deacon in the church there for many years, and at his death left his property to the church. (2) Alva, born Feb. 10, 1809, was a cotton dealer in early life and traveled through the South, but later located in Brooklyn, where he died Nov. 14, 1882. On Sept. 3, 1839, Alva Wylie married Frances M. Lester, who died Oct. 12, 1873. (3) Betsey Amy, born May 29, 1811, married Sept. 30, 1833, John P. Casson, and died in Voluntown Jan. 27, 1837.

John Wylie married (third) Oct. 29, 1812, Sarah Susannah Dorrance, who was born July 14, 1782, and who died March 17, 1857. The following children blessed this union: Mary Elizabeth, born Aug. 22, 1813, married May 24, 1836, Job H. Cutler; James Allen, born July 18, 1815, died March 9, 1817; Joseph, born June 7, 1817, died the same day; Susan D., born June 18, 1818, died Oct. 10, 1865, unmarried; and one that died unnamed the day of its birth.

JOSEPH WYLIE CUTLER, son of Job Herrick, was born Feb. 5, 1841, in Central Village, town of Plainfield, Conn., where he received his education in the district schools. He left school at the age of sixteen years, having also up to this time assisted in the work on the old Cutler homestead containing 300 acres. After leaving school Joseph continued to perform his duties upon the farm until 1868, when he purchased it, and after conducting it successfully for about four years, sold out. In 1875 Mr. Cutler came to Putnam, Conn., and later purchased a farm of 100 acres which he still manages, having a fondness for out door life. He also has a farm of eighty acres in Thompson, Conn., which he superintends. In 1877 Mr. Cutler started on an extensive scale, a wholesale and retail coal and wood business, in which he has met with marked success. In 1897 he took into partnership his younger brother, Edward J. Cutler, and since that time the business has been conducted under the firm name of J. W. Cutler & Bro. The firm has extensive coal pockets on the N. Y., N. H. and H. railroad in the center of the city, together with three other large coal and wood sheds in other sections of the city. Their business has grown to such proportions that several teams and large, specially constructed wagons are required to supply their trade.

Mr. Cutler has acquired considerable real estate, and in 1893 he erected the large building known as the Armory, which he still owns, and which is occupied by the National Guard. He lives in a very pleasant home on Grove street, which he purchased in 1902, having previously lived on Elm street, in a house which was built some fifty years ago by Fitzhenry Freeman. Mr. Cutler has made many improvements in the property and has made it one of the most pleasant residences in the city. He was one of the original incorporators of the Putnam Foundry & Machine Corporation. He is also a director of the First National Bank of Putnam, having served in that capacity since 1895.

Politically Mr. Cutler is a staunch Republican, and when but twenty-two years of age was appointed deputy sheriff of Plainfield, serving in that capacity nine years. He also served his town as constable, and was selectman for two years. Since coming to Putnam his business had required his attention and he has refrained from accepting the offices which have been tendered him. He has, however, served as a member of the board of relief for several years.

On Jan. 18, 1866, Mr. Cutler was married to Miss Mary Larned Buck, who was born in North Killingly, Jan. 13, 1842, on the old homestead of her grandparents, Aaron and Anna (Lawrence) Buck. She is a daughter of Elisha and Charlotte (Steere) Buck. This union has been blessed with two children: (1) Alice Laura, born Nov. 3, 1867, died April 29, 1874. (2) Annie Gertrude, born July 13, 1875, is at home. Mr. Cutler and his wife are both active members and liberal supporters of the Congregational Church of Putnam, Conn., while Mrs. Cutler is also an active worker in the cause of Temperance, being a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of which she is one of the vice-presidents. She is a woman who is deserving of great commendation for her noble character and for the charitable and benevolent nature which she has shown in many cases. She has devoted many hours of her life to relieving the suffering; her good works have been numerous and many are those who would gladly sound her praises, but her modest nature shrinks from making public the tender ministrations prompted by her Christian womanly spirit.

Mr. Cutler is a self-made man in the truest sense of the word. His success is due to his untiring efforts, his fair and honorable dealings in all business transactions. Self-reliance, conscientiousness, energy, perseverance, pluck and honesty, these are the traits of character that insure the highest emoluments and truest success, and to these may we truthfully attribute the reward that has crowned the efforts of Joseph W. Cutler. About him there can be truthfully said nothing but what is good, and no man could hand down to posterity a better record as a useful man to his community.

EDWARD JOB CUTLER, son of Job Herrick, attended the district and later a private school, leaving the latter at the age of nineteen years. During his school life he had assisted in performing the duties of the home farm, where he continued to live until he was twenty-three years of age. In 1870 Mr. Cutler established a broom factory at Central Village and was successfully engaged in this industry for six years, employing several hands and manufacturing brooms of all kinds. At the end of that time his business had grown to such proportions that he was compelled to seek a larger city for his business, and accordingly removed to Providence, R. I., where he engaged extensively in the manufacture of brooms and also dealt largely in broom corn. He also became engaged in the wholesale produce and commission business, which he successfully conducted until 1890, also carrying on the same business in Pawtucket, R. I. In 1890 Mr. Cutler purchased a cotton mill near Westerly, R. I., and engaged in the manufacture of cotton yarns. This venture not proving as successful as he had anticipated, he sold out. In September, 1897, he removed to Putnam, Conn., and the following May became a partner in the wholesale and retail coal and wood business with his brother Joseph W., who had established the business. The firm became J. W. Cutler & Bro., and is today one of the most successful and well known business firms of Putnam.

On Dec. 29, 1870, Mr. Cutler married Miss Susan Sheldon, daughter of Thomas and Lydia (Lewis) Sheldon, born in Anthony, R. I. Their union has been blessed with the following children: (1) Mabel, born Dec. 10, 1874, married April 19, 1897, Ellis Thurber, of Pawtucket, R. I. (2) Edward Irving, born Aug. 11, 1878, is successfully conducting a broom factory in Central Village, Conn. Mr. Cutler and his wife are consistent members and supporters of the Second Congregational Church of Putnam, Mrs. Cutler being an active worker in the Ladies' Aid Society. In politics Mr. Cutler is a staunch Republican, but finds little time to give to political affairs. Although a resident of Putnam but a few years, Edward Job Cutler has made many friends, and commands the entire respect of the community.

SPALDING. The name of this family was at one time spelled "Spalden," or "Sparlden," but after passing through the changes to which so many family names are subject, it became "Spaulding," or "Spalding," and is so spelled by most of the name.

(I) Edward Spalding came to New England probably between 1630 and 1633, and his name first appears in the records of Braintree, Mass., where his wife Margaret died about 1640, and there his daughter Grace also died. Later he was one of the settlers at Chelmsford, about the time of the settlement of the town. There he was selectman and surveyor of the highways. His death occurred Feb. 26, 1670, and his wife, Rachel, named in the will, died in the same year. Among the thirty-seven freeholders of Plainfield, Conn., in 1702, were John, Joseph, Edward and Benjamin Spalding.

(II) Joseph Spalding, son of Edward, the settler, was born in Braintree, Mass., Oct. 25, 1648, and died in Plainfield, Conn., April 3, 1740. His wife, Mercy, died Aug. 17, 1728.

(III) Nathaniel Spalding was born in Chelmsford Mass., Feb. 24, 1687, and died in Plainfield, Conn. The name of his wife is not known.

(IV) Joseph Spalding was born in Plainfield, Conn., Jan. 28, 1718, and died there Feb. 8, 1796. His wife Lydia, died May 14, 1804.

(V) Reuben Spalding, grandfather of Mrs. Abbie Tillinghast, was born in Plainfield, Dec. 7, 1747, where his entire life was passed in farming, in which he was very successful, becoming an extensive landed proprietor. His death occurred Dec. 4, 1821, and his ashes repose in the Union cemetery. Mr. Spalding was twice married, his first wife, Rachel Knight, dying Nov. 5, 1778. His second wife, Lucy Shepherd, died Dec. 27, 1815, at the age of sixty-five years.

(VI) Samuel Knight Spalding, the father of Mrs. Tillinghast, was born in 1778, in Plainfield, Conn., where his entire life was passed in farming, his home being what is now the Francis place, just south of Moosup. Later he sold that property, and purchased the house now occupied by David J. Babcock, where he conducted a hotel. This business he later gave up to his son, as ill health for a number of years before his death prevented his active participation in business affairs. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican. He died Jan. 31, 1847, and with his wife he is buried in the Union cemetery at Moosup. Mr. Spalding was twice married. Nabby Cary, his first wife, died Oct. 10, 1813, at the age of thirty-two years. His second wife, Lucy Prior, was a daughter of Benjamin Prior.

When she died, Jan. 11, 1831, she was forty-four years old.

To the first marriage of Mr. Spalding were born five children. (1) Joseph, who died at Webster, Mass., was twice married, his first wife being Sarah Westcott, and his second her sister Susan. He had ten children, two of whom died in infancy. For a period of years Joseph Spalding was in the hotel business south of the Union mill. (2) Lucy married Charles Hubbard, of Pomfret, and had a daughter, Lucy, who married Henry H. French, and has recently died. (3) Simon married Sarah Ballard, of Thompson, Conn., and had the following children: Sarah J.; Caroline E.; and Samuel Knight, who is with Putnam National Bank. His home was in Putnam, Conn. (4) Keziah, who died Sept. 23, 1809, when three years old. (5) Otis died Dec. 23, 1812, at the age of four years. By the second marriage there were also five children. (6) Olive, born May 1, 1818, died in Central Village; she was the wife of George Woodward, of New York, and left no family. (7) Elisha, who is now dead, married for his first wife, Phoebe Pond, by whom he had children—Emily; Ella, of Worcester, Mass.; and Albert. To this second marriage were born Reuben, who is blind, resides in Central Village, and married Susan Popple, who died in 1897. (8) Benjamin Spalding died in Central Village, Conn.; his first wife was Lucinda Irons, born in Rhode Island. She died in Central Village; their children were Harriet, the wife of Eugene Brown; Josephine, who married James Donnelly, of Rockville, Conn. (9) Abbie Cary, now Mrs. Tillinghast, was born May 1, 1826. (10) Edward Gurley, died in April, 1900; he married Mary Hancock, who died in 1900; their children were Kirk Knight, of Mystic, Conn.; and Mary Abbie, wife of George Packer, of Mystic.

Mrs. Abbie Cary Tillinghast was born in Plainfield, on the present Francis place, and as a child, attended the little school near the Union cemetery. When somewhat older she went to live with her half-sister, Lucy, at Pomfret, where she attended three winter terms of school, and for a time was a student in the Westfield Academy. Mrs. Tillinghast takes a justifiable pride in the fact that in her early youth she worked for her living, and when only seventeen years of age began factory work in Danielson. She continued in factory work in Danielson and Moosup until she was thirty-five years of age. At that age she was united in marriage with Rufus Wheeler Kennedy, who was engaged in manufacturing at Kennedy City. He later became a farmer, and died at the age of seventy-two years.

Mrs. Kennedy was married Nov. 1, 1876, to Caleb Tillinghast, a native of Plainfield, where he was engaged in teaming before the advent of the railroad. His last years were passed in farming. In politics he strongly favored prohibition. His death occurred Oct. 6, 1883.

Mrs. Tillinghast makes her home in Central Village, where she occupies the house built by her first husband some fifty-five years ago. For forty years it has been her residence, and no person in the village is better known, or more highly esteemed, than Mrs. Tillinghast. During the winter season she lives in Putnam with relatives.

HALL. The Hall family, which is worthily represented in Tolland county by Frederick L. Hall, of Ellington, has been identified with New England history and development for nearly one hundred and fifty years. Tradition says that one Libni Hall, who was born in 1764, came from England with two brothers, of whom one settled in New York State, and the other in Vermont. Libni Hall became a farmer, and lived in Somers, Conn., where he died March 24, 1842. He married Mary McGrath (or McGraw), a lady of Scotch birth, who was born in 1766, and who died Jan. 19, 1839. Both are buried in the family lot in Billings cemetery, south of East Longmeadow, on the Somers road. Among their children were: Amos, who removed to Pennsylvania; Luke; Loren; Zadock; Clarissa; and Libni Elam.

Libni Elam Hall was born March 1, 1794, and he became a farmer in Longmeadow. His political affiliations were with the Democratic party. On April 7, 1822, he married Laura W. Morgan, who was born Nov. 9, 1797, and who died at Longmeadow Sept. 13, 1858. He died there Dec. 9, 1861. He attended the Congregational Church of which his wife was an active member. Their children were: (1) Elam G., born April 9, 1823, married June 29, 1854, Julia L. Hall, who was born May 13, 1833, daughter of Seth B. and Julia B. Hall, of Somers. Their children were: William G., who married Mary Ida Patterson, daughter of Almon and Mary Ethel (Haines) Patterson, of near Londonderry, Vt., and has four children, Alice G., Donald W., H. Arnold and Esther Gertrude; and Gertrude J., who married June 30, 1891, Edward Pitts Sloane, of Springfield, Mass., and has two children, Harold H., and Marion. (2) Laura E. was born Sept. 18, 1824. (3) Charles was born Jan. 15, 1827. (4) Louisa, born July 20, 1829, died Nov. 19, 1861. (5) Samuel, born Sept. 18, 1833, died Oct. 2, 1833. (6) Mary, born Feb. 9, 1835, died Feb. 10, 1835. (7) George was born April 9, 1836. (8) Marietta, born Feb. 28, 1842, died Aug. 23, 1858.

Charles Hall, son of Libni Elam, born Jan. 15, 1827, followed farming in Somers, and for a number of years, was quite extensively engaged in the meat business. Part of his education was obtained in Springfield, Mass., and there he was as well and favorably known as in his own town of Somers. He was earnestly interested in his town and its affairs, but aside from holding the office of justice of the peace in early life, he never aspired to office holding. His years were filled with work, and his motives never questioned—so high was his reputation for integrity. He attended the Congregational Church. He married Julia A. Lull, who was born Oct. 1, 1830, daughter of Lorenzo Lull, and the following children blessed this union: Isabella J., born Aug. 23, 1851; Edwin C., born March 6, 1854; Estelle C., born July 23, 1856; Ada C., born May 9, 1859; Frederick L., mentioned below; Frank Hamilton, born April 18, 1869; and J. Merrick. Charles Hall, the father, passed to his rest in June, 1898. The mother still survives, and, having disposed of the old home, resides with her daughter, Isabella J., at No. 120 Westminster St., Springfield.

Lorenzo Lull, father of Mrs. Charles Hall, was born in Stafford, but followed farming and lived many years in Rockville. His death occurred in Longmeadow. On Nov. 27, 1828, he married Caroline Ellis, who was born in January, 1809, youngest child of Joseph and Molly (Dunton) Ellis, and their children were: Julia A., born Oct. 1, 1830; Augusta M., born Feb. 4, 1833, died Dec. 9, 1863; James W., born May 6, 1835; Dwight F., born March 31, 1838; William H., born Dec. 24, 1843; Joseph M., born Aug. 24, 1846, died Nov. 4, 1869; Ann Celestia, born Sept. 14, 1848; and Celestine E., born March 9, 1851. Joseph Ellis, father of Caroline (Ellis) Lull, was born in 1760, and died April 22, 1828. His wife, Molly Dunton, whom he wedded in Sturbridge, Mass., April 23, 1784, was born in 1762, and died Oct. 5, 1847. The children born to Joseph and Molly (Dunton) Ellis were: Sally, Polly, Joseph, Elisha, Sally (2), Wyllis, Royal, Azubah, Clarinda, Natalia, Joseph (2), Ammariles, Beulah and Caroline.

FREDERICK L. HALL, son of Charles, is now the owner of an extensive and profitable meat route over Ellington and Rockville. His business methods bespeak for him the highest integrity, and he merits the high esteem in which he is held wherever he is known. Mr. Hall was born Oct. 8, 1861. His employment was in Wilbraham, and for some time too, he was located at Somers, before his coming to Ellington, where he has met with such well deserved success in his chosen line. He has recently purchased the late Mr. Barrows' property, known as the old Pitney stand, and has added a full line of groceries to his well conducted market.

Frederick L. Hall has been twice married. His first wife, Lottie Smith, died in 1887, leaving one child, Mabel Lottie, born Sept. 20, 1885, who was a member of the class of 1903, Rockville high school, where she has taken a teacher's course, including German and typewriting, preparatory to making teaching her life work. On Aug. 8, 1888, Mr. Hall married Lillian May Allen, born May 4, 1866, daughter of Hiram and Ann (White) Allen. Three children blessed this union: Hiram Allen, born Jan. 5, 1891; Violet May, born June 28, 1892, died April 4, 1896; and Lillian Edith, born Dec. 25, 1893. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hall belong to the Grange. Mrs. Hall and Miss Mabel are members of the Congregational church, to which Mr. Hall liberally contributes.

MRS. ANN (WHITE) ALLEN. In contemplating the rapid development of the New World, the clearing of the primeval forests to make way for cultivated fields, the change from the wigwam of the savage to the comfortable homes of today—in all, the march of progress toward the highest and best use of the means at hand—the names of those men who have held conspicuous place stand prominently in view. It is seldom that the due meed of praise is bestowed upon the ruler of the home—the wife and mother who in her way wrought changes fully as great as those whose names are synonymous with the nation's history. The women who have trained their children to be loyal and upright men and women, who have shouldered vast burdens of responsibility, and in their very weakness have found their strength, have a deserved place in history. In the town of Ellington, Tolland county, on Jan. 15, 1902, there entered into rest Mrs. Ann (White) Allen, one of the most highly esteemed residents of the county, a woman who, when left alone with a daughter to care for, bravely put her shoulder to the wheel, cultivated her farm, looked after the stock, and in filling her lamented husband's place in management of affairs, none the less presided over her home, cared for and reared her only remaining child, with all the innate sweetness and love that nature bequeathed to woman.

Mrs. Allen, a daughter of Anthony White, was born April 16, 1825, in Berkshire, Vt., where she attended the district school a mile and a half from her home. At the age of fourteen she left school, and began to make her own way in the world by doing housework. For her services she received thirty-four cents a week, and she continued to do this until she was twenty-four, at which time, she had saved one hundred dollars. She then came to Tolland county, locating at Rockville, where her brother Cyrus lived. Deciding to learn a trade, she entered the service of Cyrus Winchell, to learn weaving, and with her indomitable will and energy that ever aided her in overcoming any difficulty, she soon became an expert, and earned twelve dollars a week, which, as her board was but $1.25 a week, was riches to her, and in her economy she was enabled to save no little amount.

On March 24, 1859, she was married to Hiram Allen, who was born in Ellington Feb. 14, 1824, a son of Chester and Polly (Buckley) Allen, the former a well-to-do and prosperous farmer of that town, who began life under very unfavorable circumstances, but who by thrift and courage made a place for himself. Hiram Allen was reared a farmer, but in early life he took up wagon making, and had a shop at his home on what was known as the "Bingham farm." The farm contained thirty-five acres, and he very successfully combined its cultivation with his trade until his death April 14, 1870. He was domestic in his habits, and devoted to the interests of his wife and children. In religion he was a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics a Democrat.

To Hiram and Ann (White) Allen were born two children: Ernest H., born March 19, 1860, died Nov. 2, 1867. Lillian May, born May 4, 1866, attended the district school and also a select school at Ellington, kept by Mr. and Mrs. Homer Allen; on Aug. 8, 1888, she was married to Frederick L. Hall, by whom she has had three children, Hiram Allen (born Jan. 5, 1891), Violet May (born June 28, 1892, died April 4, 1896) and Lillian Edith (born Dec. 25, 1893).

Just before Hiram Allen entered into rest, he asked his wife to retain the farm, and in pursuance with his wish the widowed mother took charge of the place, and by her good management, wise economy and general capability, she succeeded in meeting her bills and also in accumulating some money. No difficulty was too great for her to overcome, and through it all, busy and energetic, she kept her cheery disposition, and won a high place in the regard of the community. She was a member of the Methodist Church at Berkshire, Vt. Through her interest in the best and most progressive methods of agriculture, she was the first to join the Ellington Grange, on its organization, ever taking an active part in its work, and at her death she was the oldest member. Her funeral was conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Church, and the services at the grave were in charge of the Grange.

The following resolutions upon her death were adopted by the Ellington Grange:

WHEREAS, It has pleased the all-wise Master of the Universe to remove from our order a beloved sister, Ann W. Allen, be it Resolved, that we, the members of Ellington Grange, desire to express our sorrow at the death of sister Allen, feeling that in her going we have lost one whom we all highly esteemed; and we deeply sympathize with the family in their sore affliction.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our late sister, and that they be placed upon the records of our order and sent to the Rockville Journal and Leader for publication; also that our charter be draped in mourning for thirty days.

[Signed] Julia V. Hamilton, Cynthia H. Ellsworth and Oliver M. Charter, Committee on Resolutions, Ellington, Conn., Jan. 23, 1902.

SAMUEL CAMPBELL, a retired practical and skilled woolen mill man, is a resident of Dayville in the town of Killingly, Windham county. He has long been a worthy citizen of the section of Connecticut where he now resides and of the country adjacent to it in the State of Massachusetts, the home of his paternal ancestors since early in the 18th century.

Mr. Campbell was born Nov. 23, 1822, in the town of Thompson, Conn., a son of Stearns, a grandson of Samuel, a great-grandson of Duncan and a great-great-grandson of Rev. John Campbell, mention of whose families follows in order.

(I) Rev. John Campbell was born in the North of Scotland, but of his early history and pedigree little is definitely known. The generally accepted opinion among his descendants is that he was a political refugee, having espoused the failing cause of the Stuarts in the contest of 1715. It is believed, too, that he was a relative of Lord London, who when in authority in America made an official visit to Boston and on his way from New York stopped at Worcester, Mass., and with a single attendant, made a friendly visit at Oxford, the home of Rev. Mr. Campbell. It is said on good authority that London on that occasion declared his kinship with Rev. Mr. Campbell. Circumstances indicate that Mr. Campbell was educated for the army and in the French and Indian war he not only aided in filling the ranks, but personally drilled the soldiers for service.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell came to America in 1717 and located in Oxford, Mass., receiving as a homestead of forty acres of land and several additional tracts. He was very efficient in business matters and very prominent in all the public affairs of the town, his name frequently appearing all through the records of his day. At one time he probably had upwards of 1,000 acres of land. He became the first minister of the church in Oxford, Mass., and continued in charge of this parish for the long period of forty years. He possessed a diversity of acquirements, was of a sympathetic temperament and firm character, had a good knowledge of human nature and an abundance of tact, all of which made him a most useful citizen in the community. He was considered the most influential man in the early history of Oxford.

The wife of Rev. Mr. Campbell was Esther Whittle, Wheatly or Whately, of Boston, to whom he was married Feb. 6, 1722. Rev. Mr. Campbell died May 25, 1761, and his widow passed away March 11, 1777. Their children were: Mary, born Feb. 11, 1724, married (first) Jacob Town, and (second) Joseph Twiss; John born Feb. 7, 1725; Isabel, born March 29, 1726; Duncan, born March 27, 1727; Isabel (2), born July 26, 1728, married Josiah Wolcott; Elizabeth, born Aug. 14, 1730; Alexander, born Feb. 22, 1732; William, born April 2, 1734; and Archibald, born Aug. 6, 1736.

(II) Duncan Campbell, son of Rev. John, was born March 27, 1727, in Oxford, and Jan. 27, 1750, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Stearns, of Worcester, Mass., and settled in his native town, opposite the North Common. Mr. Campbell was a tavern keeper and was also engaged in trading. Before 1754 he began building a mansion house at the South Common, which house he sold, unfinished, in the same year to his brother-in-law, Josiah Wolcott. Like his father Mr. Campbell was prominent in the affairs of the town. He served the town as a justice of the peace, was collector under the excise law, etc. From 1766 to 1770 he was a resident of Dudley and was later for a time a resident of what is now the town of Auburn. From 1785 to 1787 he resided in Worcester, where he kept a tavern and later was engaged in farming operations at Putney, Vt. He returned to his native town where he passed his last days and where he died suddenly June 13, 1795. His widow passed away Nov. 18, 1821, aged ninety-one years.

J. Morton Hill, Md

The children of Duncan and Elizabeth (Stearns) Campbell were: (1) Elizabeth, born Nov. 7, 1750, married Ezra Bowman. (2) Samuel, born Aug. 5, 1752. (3) John, born Aug. 7, 1754, married Jan. 16, 1777, Mary or Martha Stevens, of Worcester. He was a soldier of the Revolution. He was a resident of Oxford in 1782 but before 1786 had removed his family to Putney, Vt., where he died Jan. 15, 1820. He was a physician and prominent both professionally and as a citizen. (4) Mary, born March 3, 1757, married in 1774, John Walker, an Englishman of some means who served at the Lexington Alarm in Craft's cavalry company. (5) Thomas, born April 7, 1759, married in 1783, Rebecca Filshaw, of Killingly, Conn., and removed to Vermont, where his death occurred. He, too, was a soldier of the Revolution. (6) Lucretia, born in December, 1762, married Nov. 12, 1792, John T. Hurley, of Boston. (7) Patty, born Feb. 5, 1765, married in 1784, Capt William Moore, U. S. A. (8) Olivia and (9) Sophia, were born Dec. 4, 1767, at Dudley, Mass., the latter dying when young. Olivia married (first) Benjamin Witt, (second) Daniel Bacon, of Charlton. (10) Alexander, born Dec. 17, 1769, became a physician and located at Putney, Vt., where his death occurred Dec. 15, 1839. (11) Archibald, born Aug. 22, 1776.

(III) Samuel Campbell, son of Duncan, born Aug. 5, 1752, married Dec. 15, 1774, Ruth, daughter of John Nichols. Mr. Campbell was a hatter by trade and carried on that business in his earlier life in Oxford, where he was the first postmaster of the town. In 1812 he removed to Chelsea, Vt., where he kept a tavern; thence he moved to Montpelier, in the same State and there kept the "Pavilion House," the leading hotel of the town. He died in Montpelier, in July, 1827. He was a good man and excellent citizen. His children were: (1) John, born Sept. 24, 1775, married and became a resident of the State of Maine. (2) Samuel, born April 11, 1777, died Jan. 19, 1796. (3) Henry, born in January, 1779, married in 1808, Sarah Blake, of Franklin; she died May 8, 1811, at Oxford, when thirty-four years of age, leaving no issue. Mr. Campbell removed to Vermont with his father and died at Montpelier. (4) Abijah, born Sept. 25, 1780, married in 1803, Patty, daughter of Samuel Davis, and located at Eddington, Me. He was a hatter in his father's employ in his earlier life in Oxford, Mass. (5) William, born Dec. 24, 1782, married Feb. 10, 1805, Lucinda, daughter of Col. Sylvanus Learned. (6) Rufus, born Sept. 29, 1784, removed to Montpelier, Vt., where he became a prominent business man. (7) Stearns, born May 25, 1786.

(IV) Stearns Campbell, son of Samuel, born May 25, 1786, in Oxford, Conn., in youth learned the saddler's trade and in 1807 was engaged in that business in a shop previously used by his father for manufacturing hats. He removed to the town of Thompson, Conn., where he married Prudence, daughter of David Lewis, of Westerly, R. I. Mr. Campbell carried on the saddlery business in Thompson, where he was a most estimable man and citizen. He died of typhoid fever April 15, 1825, aged thirty-nine years, in the prime of life. His widow lived until 1875, dying at the home of her son Samuel in Thompson, and both were buried in the Oxford cemetery. Two children were born to Stearns and Prudence (Lewis) Campbell, namely: Maria E., born in May, 1818, died in 1826; and Samuel, born Nov. 23, 1822.

(V) Samuel Campbell, son of Stearns, the subject proper of this article, in youth attended the public schools of his native town. Having been deprived of his father when but three years of age he early became self-reliant and independent. At an early age he began working in the cotton mills in West Thompson and soon learned the spinning branch of the business. At seventeen he worked as a carder spinner and weaver in the machine shop of the Grosvenor Dale Mills. In 1858 he removed to the town of Killingly and for five years was the machinist in the Williamsville Mills. Following this experience he was similarly employed at Webster, Mass. Mr. Campbell was for five years connected with the Slater Mill, and was engaged twenty-eight years in the brick-making business in Medway, Massachusetts.

Returning to Connecticut in 1896 Mr. Campbell located in Davville, where he has since made his home. Mr. Campbell is a quiet man of domestic tastes, who loves his home. He is of a genial disposition and has many friends. He is an independent Republican in his political views. In 1858 he was married to Elizabeth Seaman, daughter of Ransom Seaman. She died in 1884 and was buried in the Thompson cemetery. Mrs. Campbell was a good Christian woman, a member of the Baptist Church, and was a devoted wife. There were no children born to the marriage.

THOMAS MORTON HILLS, M. D., of Williamantic, has been longer engaged in his practice in that city than any other physician now there; and it may be also said of him that he had a longer professional career than any other physician of the city.

The Hills family is one of the oldest in Connecticut, the Doctor's first American ancestor being William Hills, who was among the first settlers of Hartford. That ancient worthy sailed from Bristol, England, in the ship, "Lyon," William Pearce, Master, June 24, 1632, and entered the harbor of Boston on the 16th of September. He married Phillis Lyman, daughter of Richard Lyman. He doubtless left Roxbury for Hartford with his father-in-law, October 15, 1635. The Rev. Thomas Hooker, with one hundred colonists, followed in 1636.

Among the earliest settlers of what is now Glastonbury, Conn., was Samuel Hills, Sr., who with the great-great-grandfather of Dr. Hills. He had one of the "long lots," which extended back three miles from the Connecticut river.

Samuel Hills, Jr., born in Glastonbury, came to East Glastonbury Hill in 1767, and bought eighty-seven acres of land on the Hebron road, east of the top of Eastbury Hill, which is the southern end of Birch Mountain. This land lies across the road from the place now owned by Nelson Bailey. He married Eunice Talcott. They had three children—Samuel (3), Israel and Hannah. Samuel Hills, Jr., bought a farm a little south of this eighty-seven acres, and built for his son Samuel (3)—this is still in the hands of the descendants and is occupied by William A. Hills. He also bought a tract of 109½ acres three-quarters of a mile to the west, and overlooking the Connecticut River Valley, and built in 1803, giving a deed of the same to his son Israel, in 1804. This family homestead is still in the hands of the children of Jared Edwin Hills.

Israel Hills, who was born in 1757, in East Glastonbury, was a Revolutionary soldier. He married Ruth Hollister, who was born in 1758, in Glastonbury. He died Sept. 18, 1827, and his widow died March 18, 1842, at the age of eighty-four.

Israel and Ruth (Hollister) Hills had two children: Jared; and Eunice, who married Frary Hale, of Glastonbury.

Jared Hills, the grandfather of Dr. Hills, was born June 17, 1779, and died June 29, 1855. His entire life was spent in East Glastonbury, where he owned much land, and lived on the family homestead. Florinda Gibson, his wife, was born July 4, 1776, and died March 27, 1855; she was the daughter of Deacon Samuel Gibson, of Glastonbury. To this marriage were born: Israel, who became a Congregational clergyman; Walter, who lived in East Glastonbury and removed to Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Jared Edwin, a farmer, who lived with his father and died on the old homestead; Norman, who took the 300-acre farm at Perkins, Erie Co., Ohio, and died there; and Florinda Angeline, who never married.

Rev. Israel Hills was born on the old homestead Oct. 12, 1801, and died in Bolton, Sept. 6, 1874; he was buried in Willimantic. His early years were spent on the homestead. When twenty-one years of age his father gave him a tract of 300 acres in Perkins township, Erie Co., Ohio. He made the trip West in a one-horse carriage; taught school during the winter and the next spring returned to Glastonbury in the same carriage that he drove out in. Desiring to devote his life to the ministry, he prepared for college at Phillips Academy. He graduated from Amherst College and he took a theological course at Andover Theological Seminary, making his entrance into the ministry at Frankfort, Maine. At different times afterward he held pastorates at Jackson, Lovell and Dixmont Corners, in the same State. Impaired health necessitated his retirement from the active work of the ministry, and he settled on a farm in Bolton, Conn., which had been owned by his father, and where he lived until his death, occasionally supplying the neighboring pulpits, and taking a wholesome interest in the welfare of the community. Politically he was a Whig and a Republican. Following the Hills type of physique, Mr. Hills was thin and sparsely built.

Rev. Israel Hills was twice married. His first wife, Lucinda Morton, the mother of Dr. Hills, was born June 30, 1813, at Jackson, Maine, and died Aug. 6, 1846, at Dixmont Corners, Maine. She was a daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Wescott) Morton, and her father was one of the first settlers of Jackson; Hannah Westcott was a daughter of William Wescott, of Limington, York Co., Maine, who was a trusted dispatch carrier for General Washington during the Revolutionary war. From his employment he was called "Post Wescott." Thomas Morton was married at Gorham, Mass., and with his wife traveled through the woods a hundred miles to reach their home in Jackson, having but sixty dollars as his entire capital with which to begin life in the new country. To Israel and Lucinda Hills were born: A daughter who died in infancy; Thomas Morton; Jared, born Jan. 27, 1841, now a farmer near Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Florinda, born April 6, 1844, who died July 28, 1872, at South Windham, the wife of Edward Button, of Andover, Conn.; and Hannah L., born April 6, 1846, who died Sept. 15, 1846.

Mr. Hills married Ann Gould, his second wife, June 7, 1848, at Camden, Maine. She was the daughter of Tilson and Betsy (Stimpson) Gould, the latter the daughter of Dr. John Stimpson, an assistant surgeon at Bunker Hill. There were no children by the second marriage, and Mrs. Hills survived her husband.

Thomas Morton Hills, M. D., since 1866 a prominent member of the medical profession of Willimantic, prepared for college at East Windsor Hill Academy, and after nine months of study with Dr. F. S. Pomeroy, at Staffordville, took his first course of lectures at Yale. At the end of this course he became office assistant to P. A. Jewett and T. B. Townsend, both eminent surgeons of New Haven. With them he had a large experience in the care of surgical cases, especially in surgical midwifery, Dr. Jewett being professor of Midwifery and Diseases of Women in Yale. He was also a volunteer surgeon under Dr. Jewett, then in charge of the Knight Military Hospital at New Haven. In October, 1862, he went to the front as first assistant surgeon of the 27th Conn. V. I., a regiment that saw hard service, and was complimented for its bravery at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. At the battle of Fredericksburg he was one of an operating corps of three surgeons who occupied the hospital nearest the battlefield, and in a very exposed position. He stood at the operating table from half past ten o'clock Saturday morning, until nine o'clock Monday evening, the last patient being then taken from the table, and sent across the Rappahannock to general hospitals. At the same time orders were received to pack up all stores and be ready to move; but it was not until three o'clock the next morning that orders were received to move. This brave band of three surgeons, three hospital stewards and three ambulance drivers was the last to cross the bridge, which was destroyed behind them. Dr. Hills received his degree in 1863, and immediately repaired to Norfolk, Va., in response to a call for physicians from the mayor of that city.

When General B. F. Butler moved his army up the James river to attack Richmond on the "South side," Dr. Hills locked his office door in Norfolk, and accepting the position of chief surgeon and agent for Drs. Brown and Alexander, government embalmers to armies operating against Richmond, he opened an office for them at Bermuda Hundred, City Point, and later on, near the Petersburg front. Having many friends at various headquarters, he enjoyed an unsurpassed opportunity to know of and see military movements, going when and where he pleased within the lines. Intending to make Richmond his future home, on the day of its fall, he accepted an invitation to go from Bermuda Hundred to the fallen capital of the Confederacy, on the government side-wheeled tug, "Blackbird," which was the first craft to pass through Dutch Gap and up the James river over torpedoes, through obstructive spiling and sunken vessels, and by the recently destroyed monitors of the Confederacy, and to make fast to the dock at "The Rocketts." For about a year he was engaged in general practice, and had charge of the Chimborazo Hospital, which was connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, but, dissatisfied with the spirit of those lately in the Rebellion, Dr. Hills returned North, and since March, 1866, has made Willimantic his home. He has a large general practice, though he makes a specialty of surgery and gynecology. In surgery he is conservative. In the treatment of fractures and dislocations he meets with an unusual measure of success on account of the great care he exercises in the preparation and application of splints and dressings. These are made in his own workshops, from his own models, and under his own supervision.

Dr. Hills belongs to the Windham County Medical Society; the Connecticut Medical Society, of which he was president in 1887; became a permanent member of the American Medical Association in 1870; and also of the National Association of Railway Surgeons. Since 1870 he has been local surgeon for the New York & New England, New York, New Haven & Hartford, and the Central Vermont Railroads. Dr. Hills is medical nominator for the section about Willimantic with several life insurance companies, and is medical examiner for many of the best life companies.

In 1888 Dr. Hills erected a commodious and convenient home on North street, in which he has also established his office. The home is spacious and comfortable, and an entire floor is devoted to the accommodation of such patients as the Doctor chooses to admit. A part of the office floor is arranged for the special convenience of gynecological patients. The rest is fitted for operations, dressing of wounds, dislocations and fractures. The building has two systems of ventilation, novel in their character, and both of the owner's design.

Dr. Hills was married June 6, 1862, in New Haven, Conn., to Mary Ann Hill, daughter of Rev. William and Mary B. Hill, of that city. To this union came one child, Minnie Morton, born Dec. 8, 1863, who died ten days before her mother, who passed away in Norfolk, Va., Jan. 16, 1864. Dr. Hills was married a second time, July 7, 1864, at New Castle, Del., to Laura S. Heath, of Magothy, Anne Arundel Co., Md. To this union have come four children: (1) Arthur Thomas, born May 11, 1865, in Richmond, Va., died Dec. 4, 1898, at Baltimore, leaving two children. (2) William Morton, born June 19, 1867, died Jan. 17, 1886, at Willimantic. (3) Mary Lucinda, born Oct. 27, 1869, is now Mrs. D. G. Baker, of Willimantic. (4) Laura Heath, born March 1, 1872, graduated from the Women's Medical College in Philadelphia in 1896, and is now practicing in Willimantic with her father; she was the first woman president of the Windham County Medical Society or of any county medical society in the State, and though young in years has attained high honors in her chosen profession.

Dr. Hills cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and has always remained a Republican, taking much interest in the success of that party. He stands foremost in his profession as a striking type of a man and a physician.

EDMUND A. DEAN, for many years engaged in the shoe manufacturing business at Danielson, Windham county, was born in Coventry, R. I., Sept. 18, 1831, and has lived in this town since his second year.

Col. Josiah Dean, father of Edmund A., was born in North Killingly (now East Putnam), Conn. He had a brother, David, who was a physician in Holland, Mass., for fifty years. Josiah Dean was reared on a farm and attended the district schools, and when a mere youth learned the shoemaker's trade at North Killingly. In time he became the possessor of a farm in the neighborhood, and while his summers were spent in its cultivation, his winters were devoted to the application of his trade. When arrived at middle age he had saved considerable money, and this served as the capital for a cotton goods manufacturing concern at Narrow Lane (now Coventry), R. I., his partners being practical mill men named Barstow. Owing to the mismanagement of the partners Mr. Dean lost about all that he had in the world, and the cotton business turned out to be a sorry venture. Nevertheless he felt the security experienced by all men who are backed by a useful trade, and he returned to Danielson, prepared to retrieve his fallen fortunes. At the time he purchased the property now owned and occupied by his son, Edmund A., going in debt for the same, and diligently working to pay up the indebtedness incurred in the cotton venture. He built a shop 14x18 feet, ground dimensions, which shop constitutes a portion of his son's establishment, and by dint of untiring effort had all but cancelled his cotton and Danielson property indebtedness at the time of his sudden death in 1844, at the age of sixty-three years. The remainder of the debt was paid by the estate. Mr. Dean was well and favorably known in Danielson, where all sympathized with his misfortunes, and appreciated his earnest endeavor to repair his losses. He was politically a Whig, and in the days of the local militia was exceedingly active, holding all of the offices up to that of Colonel, and he was always known as Colonel Dean. He was twice married. By his first union he had two children, a daughter who died young; and David, a shoemaker by trade, and for many years a factory hand, who died in Danielson at the age of seventy-five years. For his second wife Col. Dean married Bethana Carpenter, born Sept. 28, 1797, and who survived him and died Feb. 11, 1873, at the home of her daughter in Stonington, Conn. Of the second union were born four children, viz.: Sally Ann, deceased wife of Henry Card, of Killingly; Hezekiah, a shoemaker by trade, who died in Worcester, Mass., at the age of seventy-one years; Josephine, deceased wife of Orrin Doty; and Edmund A.

Until his fourteenth year Edmund A. Dean attended the public schools of Danielson, and his leisure was devoted to learning the trade of his father, he becoming quite an expert in pegging shoes. After his father's death he went to work on the farm of Elisha Danielson, and while there his wages of $6.25 a month went to his mother to assist in the family maintenance. Soon after this he went to work for Oliver Jacobs, who was a "Sole Workman," not a practical shoemaker, who secured cut goods and hired men to make them up. For nearly a year Mr. Dean pegged the soles of the Jacobs shoes, and in the meantime having learned to make every part of shoes, he felt comparatively independent. He subsequently found employment in Worcester, Mass., for a year and a half, and then began taking unfinished work from the factory of Corbin & Richards, at Oxford, Mass. This work he brought to Danielson and completed in the shop formerly occupied by his father, and after following this kind of occupation for about ten years, he was employed in the shoe factory of Abner Young, at Danielson, for a portion of the time, for several months, serving as foreman in the stitching and cutting department. For ten years he continued with Mr. Young, and after that took stock in the rough, and finished it for Charles M. Fisher, of Putnam, who was a slipper manufacturer of that place. So large did his business become that he was obliged to enlarge his shop, and to employ several hands to help him. At the end of five years he began the making of cloth slippers and a cloth turned shoe, which he continues in a small way to this day, and which he sells to jobbers and a limited retail trade.

The first marriage of Mr. Dean occurred to Clarissa Mitchell, who was born in Danielson, May 13, 1832, a daughter of Zebede Mitchell, a millwright by trade. Mrs. Dean died Sept. 27, 1885, the mother of four children, in the order of their birth as follows: Clara Elizabeth, born Oct. 21, 1853, died Nov. 1, 1855; Charles Edmund, born June 22, 1858, died March 3, 1864; Carrie Josephine is the widow of Albert T. Greene; and Arthur Allen, a clerk in the employ of the Quinebaug Company, and who, through his marriage with Florence Blackmer, has one child, Allen Irving. The second union of Mr. Dean was with Lelia L. Keach, a native of Danielson, and daughter of William C. Keach. Mr. Dean is a Republican in politics, but his quiet, retiring disposition has never led him into political activity. He has earned a competence by reason of untiring energy and frugality, and at present is able to lead a comparatively leisurely life, making a few slippers now and then when he cares to work.

MRS. MARY TERESA GARRITY has by her own efforts solved the question as to the possibility of one of her sex not only building up a large and successful business, but also doing the same without any loss of womanly characteristics and attractions. Through many obstacles and discouragements, Mrs. Garrity has earned for herself and family a comfortable home, a respected name and a flourishing business as the leading florist of Willimantic and Windham county.

Joseph Henschler, the father of Mrs. Garrity, was a carpenter by occupation, and died in his native Austria, when his only child, Mary Teresa, was quite small. Her mother, Teresa (Meinhar) Henschler brought her daughter to America in 1859, landing in New York after a passage of two weeks. Soon after Mrs. Henschler was married, in Bloomfield, N. J., to John Kline, who was a former acquaintance, but who, at this time, was residing in Cromwell, Conn. After marriage Mr. Kline took his wife and her daughter to Cromwell, and there Mrs. Kline died Sept. 1, 1898, lacking two months of being seventy years old. By her marriage with Mr. Kline, she became the mother of the following children: William H., a resident of Middletown, Conn.; John L., a farmer at Cromwell; Lizzie, residing at Saybrook, the widow of George McGuire, who was drowned in the Connecticut river; and Kate, wife of Frank Rasted, an engraver of Meriden, Connecticut.

Mary Teresa (Henschler) Garrity was born in Austria, Jan. 11, 1856, and was brought at the age of three years to the United States. Her early life was spent in the hardest kind of work, and her only schooling was gained during the winter, for a short time previous to her eighth year. She assisted her mother and step-father in the household duties, and was compelled at a tender age, to assist in farm work, and to perform duties far beyond her strength with no remuneration, no play, and as few clothes as possible. When she had reached the age of twelve, she grew rebellious, and in the hope of bettering her condition, ran away, and went to Middletown where she was employed as a nurse, receiving for this service, four dollars per month. She was not permitted either to handle or to save her wages, her mother taking them, and providing her in return with only second-hand garments. By the time Mary was fifteen years old, she saw the advantages of a trade, and resolved to become a dressmaker, soon becoming very expert with her needle, and for eight years she followed this business in Middletown; then going to New York city, she secured employment in a dressmaking establishment on Grand street, remaining there until it suited her to open up a first-class establishment in Hartford, Conn. This she located in the Marble block, on Asylum street, over Warner's music store, where she remained for five years, and then removed to another location, in Willimantic, where she continued for three years, or until 1891. Mrs. Garrity was a very successful dressmaker, and conducted her establishment on business principles. Her work was of the most perfect kind, her assistants were also trained in the same line, and thus she built up a fine class of trade. From childhood she had been accustomed to hard work and economy, and thus had been able to save a sum of about $5,000 at the time of her second marriage, to Thomas H. Garrity, a florist. On Feb. 18, 1882, she was wedded to Frederick A. Lowman, a native of London, England, who was a silver plater, by trade, and who, while introducing and patenting an invention, contracted blood poison and died, in London, and was interred there, being at the time in that city, in the interest of his invention. The children of this marriage were two sons, who have developed into most capable, industrious and excellent young men: Frederick Andrew, born April 26, 1884, who has attended the Willimantic High school, and the Willimantic Business College; and George Alfred, born Oct. 7, 1886. The second marriage was to Thomas H. Garrity, in Hartford, Conn. By occupation he was a florist, and for a number of years was in the employ of Spear, the well-known florist of Hartford. Three children came to this marriage: Eddie and Mary, twins, both deceased, the former dying at the age of eight months; and William H., born March 9, 1893.

After her second marriage, Mrs. Garrity assisted her husband in the purchase of the florist business, in Willimantic, and removed here in 1891. With her capital, the land now occupied by her greenhouses was purchased, at that time being but a rocky field. Here was erected a house, barn and greenhouses, of which in a few years Mrs. Garrity took charge, proving her excellence as a business woman. She assumed entire management of the plant, and with the assistance of her excellent and able sons, has built up a large and constantly increasing business. She has met with many reverses, and one of these was when on July 4, 1900, a miscreant fired her barn, and the house also caught on fire, the family having a very narrow escape. The barn was entirely destroyed, with tools, four wagons, and two horses, while the dwelling house was badly damaged. The insurance was but $100. Although Mrs. Garrity was badly burned in her attempt to save her property, she immediately made arrangements to rebuild, and a couple of months later had erected new buildings, among which is a fine brick house, after her own plans. In 1902 an extensive addition to the greenhouse was constructed.

The business so ably conducted by Mrs. Garrity and her capable sons is that of florist and market gardening, managing about fifteen acres of land. Previous to 1897, she conducted a flower store on Main street, in Willimantic, for several years. She is a very industrious and upright woman, and possesses fine judgment and excellent business ability. Kind and liberal to her children and ready with her help for others, she is most highly esteemed in the community. Her religious connection is with the Lutheran Church, and she is a member of the American Benefit society, of Willimantic, while both she and her son Frederick belong to the State Border Grange, No. 93.

ABRAHAM LAUBSCHER, deceased. During the progress of a useful and honored life, Abraham Laubscher was one of the best known citizens of Rockville, Tolland Co., Conn., and probably the most influential of the German residents. Self-made in the fullest sense of the term, he became successful in business by adherence to the principles of honesty and industry which he learned at his mother's knee.

Mr. Laubscher was born in the town of Weiden-thal, Bavaria, June 18, 1829, a son of Henry and Catherine (Schaeffer) Laubscher, the former of whom was a stone and marble cutter by trade. Abraham was the only son, and had one sister, Barbara, who lives in Tarrytown, N. Y., with her third husband, a Mr. Schofield.

Mr. Laubscher, having learned the trade of marble cutting from his father, decided to make his way to America, where better openings were promised young men. In 1854 he sailed from Havre and landed safely in New York, with the intention of earning enough money in the new land to assist his aged father to pay off an obligation under which the older man was suffering, having taken a large contract and lost money on it. Being thoroughly competent, he soon obtained work in New York City, but as he was entirely ignorant of the language, and could not understand the instructions given him, he was soon discharged and was so discouraged that he thought he must immediately return to his German home, but in time remembered the filial duty he had set out to perform, and tried again for work, in the meantime endeavoring to learn the language as soon as possible. Turning his back upon the great city, which to the poor, homesick boy seemed heartless and forbidding, he started for Hartford, having heard that in that direction there was plenty of work for all who would ask for it. Walking the greater part of the distance, and asking food along the way, he finally reached Hartford, penniless, and making his way to a boarding house he told his story and offered his watch as security for some food, but was there told that his honest face would be sufficient.

The first work secured in Hartford was on the postoffice which was then in course of erection, and after that Mr. Laubscher found employment in other places, Windsor Locks, East Long Meadow, and elsewhere, after his marriage locating in East Long Meadow, where he was employed in the brown stone quarries, where his skill in fancy marble cutting was in demand, although his home was a very poor one and the locality lonesome and unpleasant.

At Warehouse Point, Conn., lived Frederick and Katharine (Wehrheim) Yost, with their family of ten children, Germans, who had come to America about 1855, and to Katharine, the estimable daughter of this worthy couple, our subject was married, April 2, 1856. Mrs. Laubscher was born in Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Germany, April 2, 1833; a brother, August Yost, is now a prominent citizen of Meriden, and another, Henry Yost, a well-known citizen of New York.

About 1850 Mr. Laubscher and his family located in Rockville, he working for Mr. Lewis in the stone quarry at the warp mill, when the new addition was being made to what is now the Adams mill. In later years, Mr. Laubscher opened up a stone and marble business of his own, on Market street, in Rockville, in company with a Mr. Risley, but this business was later sold to H. T. Bolles, and our subject remained in the employ of the former. After a period he bought the business of Mr. Bolles, and then later again sold out to him. Being a fine workman, he was given the particular work to do, and many of the most elaborate tombstones in Toland county attest his skill.

While still engaged in his trade, he purchased the "American House," on Market street, which he successfully conducted for more than thirteen years, at which time poor health compelled him to give up active business, and during the remainder of his life he lived semi-retired, contenting himself with giving attention to his property interests.

Mr. Laubscher was a very prominent Democrat and took a great interest in political matters, especially in his city and town, and held a number of the minor offices, such as assessor, member of the board of relief, justice of the peace, notary public, and trial justice for a time, and he was always a great worker for party success. He was one of the founders of the German Lutheran Church, of Rockville, and one of its most liberal and substantial supporters, his generosity being equaled by that of his widow, who is one of the most prominent members of that religious body.

When Mr. Laubscher came to America it was with the expectation that he would soon return from this land of opportunity with enough means to make his parents comfortable, and then settle down in his own land, but he found conditions very different from what he expected, new ties were formed here, and the time never came for the expected return to his old home. After a busy life, he decided to revisit the old scenes, and was preparing to go, when his last illness attacked him, resulting in his death, Sept. 27, 1889; he was buried in Grove Hill cemetery, and his funeral was one of the largest ever conducted in Rockville. Not only a member of all the German societies of the city, but an active and interested one, Mr. Laubscher's death was sadly felt. He was one of the early members of the Rockville Sick Benevolent Society, No. 1, for years was its president and was frequently a delegate to the conventions of the various societies as well as the entertainer of other delegates, when they came to Rockville, hospitality being one of his virtues. When a young man he was connected with the Liedertafel Singing Society. His kind heart made any appeal to him meet with success, and the many private benefactions he bestowed will never be known to the public.

Of the family born to Mr. and Mrs. Laubscher, Charles H., born in Long Meadow, Mass., married Elizabeth Rentz, and is a letter carrier in Rockville (his son Frederick A. also being a letter carrier); he was in the Legislature one term, and was assessor of Rockville, in 1890. Martin has a sketch elsewhere. August has a sketch elsewhere. Lizzie, who was born in East Long Meadow, Mass., attended the high school, is the widow of Robert Carroll, and with her three children, George, Lillian and Everett, lives with her mother. Emma, now Mrs. Cornelius F. Wemett, of East Hartford, has one boy, Morton. Bertha, who is now Mrs. J. Paul Haun, of Rockville, Conn., has one daughter, Zoe M. Katharine is Mrs. Frank Austin, of Huntington, Massachusetts.

LOUIS HENRY LINDEMAN, one of Windham county's successful agriculturists, and a highly respected citizen of Woodstock, was born in Hanover, Germany, Aug. 16, 1834.

Ludwig Henry Lindeman, father of Louis Henry, was also born in Germany and died in that country in 1864 at the age of sixty-six years. He was an extensive horticulturist and exporter of seeds and made his first consignment of flower and vegetable seeds to the United States in 1842. His land was located just outside of Bremerhafen and was a model of cultivation. He married Anna Ohland, who came to America, after the death of her husband, in company with her oldest daughter, in the spring of 1869. She died in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1871 at the age of sixty-eight years, and lies buried at Cypress Hills Cemetery. She was the mother of six children, namely: Louis Henry, who was really named after his father, but translated the name Ludwig to Louis after coming to this country; John Henry, who was a farmer for several years in Kansas, where he married and died; Elise, who died at the age of four years; Johanna, married to William Thiers, who is living retired in San Leandro, Cal.; Katharina, widow of Louis Meyer, a former tailor of Brooklyn, N. Y., where she still resides; Herman, also a tailor in Brooklyn.

The Lindeman family originated in Holland, although members of it settled in Germany as far back as the fourteenth century. One or more of the descendants became missionaries, and a lake in Alaska is named Lindeman's Lake in honor of one of these, who was killed by the natives.

Louis Henry Lindeman attended school in Germany until fourteen years of age and then worked in his father's garden about six years, when he leased twelve acres of land in Dorum, Lande Wursten, Germany, and engaged in market gardening. Sept. 16, 1866, Mr. Lindeman sailed from Bremerhafen on the sailing vessel "Teona," and after a tempestuous passage of six weeks' duration landed at New York, Oct. 27, 1866; thence he came direct to Woodstock, and went to work for Henry T. Child, in whose employ he remained for six years. In 1873 he took up the florist's trade and bought the greenhouses known as the "Lester" place of three acres, etc., in Woodstock, to which he has added until he now owns forty-five acres, all under a high state of cultivation. He also raises nursery stock, vegetables and vegetable plants and garden truck generally, and is a model gardener. By close application to his business he has become very successful and is recognized as one of Woodstock's substantial citizens.

Mr. Lindeman is a good-natured and generous gentleman, is a good neighbor, and enjoys the unfeigned respect of all who know him. In religion Mr. Lindeman was a member of the German Lutheran Church while in the old country, but since coming to Woodstock he has affiliated with the First Congregational Church, to the support of which he is a liberal contributor. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has served as a member of the district school committee, but as a rule has been too busy to give attention to politics.

Mr. Lindeman was joined in marriage May 9, 1858, to Sophia Magdalene Tewes, a daughter of Heinrich and Regina (Thoda) Tewes, of Germany. Mrs. Lindeman, with her six children, followed her husband to America, landing at Castle Garden, New York, June 4, 1868, after a voyage of forty-nine days. She died in Woodstock, March 28, 1900, at the age of sixty-five years, and lies buried in the family lot in Woodstock Hill cemetery. Mrs. Lindeman was the mother of fourteen children, born in the following order, the first named six in Germany: Dora Anna, owner and manager of "Elmwood Hall," a summer boarding house in Woodstock, unmarried; Eide Henry, a cabinet-maker living in Brooklyn, N. Y., and married to Augusta Conklyn, who has borne him two sons; William John, a farmer of Woodstock, Conn., who married Alice (Robinson) Hyde, and has one son; August Eibe Herman, blacksmith and wheelwright, who died in Woodstock, unmarried, when twenty-four years old; Louis Henry, a farmer and well driller in Southbridge, Mass., who married Harriet E. Allen, of North Woodstock, and has two daughters; Johanna Magdelene, who assists her sister at "Elmwood Hall," unmarried; Mary Lizzie, a stenographer, unmarried; Henry Albert, farming in Slocum, R. I.; Sophia Magdelene, a twin of Henry Albert, who died when one year and two months old; Edward John, who died at the age of fourteen years; John Albert, a farmer and unmarried; Herman George, who died at the age of one year; Louisa Justina, at home, unmarried; and Charles Tewes, unmarried, who is associated with his father. The eight children last named were born in Woodstock.

Although Mr. Lindeman came to America a poor boy, by his energy, perseverance and industry he has won for himself a competence and a reputable standing among his fellow-citizens. For twenty-one years Mr. Lindeman had charge of the trees, shrubs, and floral department of Roseland Park for the late Hon. Henry C. Bowen and to him is due the credit of having made it one of the most beautiful parks in the country.

HON. LEVI NELSON CLARK, the efficient leader of the Republican party in the town of Canterbury, Windham county, is of English descent.

Francis Clark, his father, was born in Leeds, Yorkshire, England, July 22, 1815, and there acquired his education. Desiring to obtain a thorough equipment for life, at the age of fourteen he hired out as an apprentice to a tanner and currier, and acquired in the course of seven years great proficiency at the trades. After serving his time, in July, 1836, he came to America and being a skilled workman he found no difficulty whatever in securing positions. He first followed his trade in the Fry tannery, Plainfield, Conn., and later he worked at various places in New London county, and finally in the tannery of Earl Warner at Brooklyn, Conn. March 4, 1841, he married Sarah M. Heath, who was born June 30, 1823, daughter of Amos and Mary (Chapman) Heath, of Groton, Conn. Mrs. Clark is still living, and resides in Brooklyn, Conn. By her Mr. Clark had eight children: (1) Francis, born Feb. 4, 1843, married Elizabeth Leach, a school teacher, and they have had two children: Clarence, born Feb. 16, 1880; and Cora A., Aug. 27, 1881, who died Feb. 9, 1897. Mr. Clark resides in Los Angeles, Cal., and he is one of the most successful agriculturists in Southern California, having three thousand five hundred acres under cultivation at one time, and carrying on a large trade in farm products, such as hay, fancy stock, etc. He is a man of great liberality, and has built in Hyde Park, Cal., at his own expense, a church as a memorial to his daughter Cora. In this church is a memorial window to his father, his brother and his wife's mother. During the Civil war he served in Co. K, 21st C. V. I., and was a lieutenant and later captain in a colored regiment. (2) William H., born March 23, 1845, was a private in Co. K, 21st C. V. I., and was wounded at Drury's Bluff. He married a daughter of Lyman Chapman, of Stonington, Conn., and they had one daughter, Ada, who resides in Napa City, Cal. Mr. Clark died in that place, Sept. 15, 1875. (3) George W., born Feb. 16, 1847, died Dec. 14, 1847. (4) Sarah E., born March 13, 1849, married Samuel T. Cooper, of Danielson, Conn., and they have six children: Josephine S., a trained nurse; Frank S., of New Haven, who married Nellie Wilkerson; Annie, who married Albert Kilpatrick, of New London; Gladys B., who married Charles Newton, of New London; Aaron, who resides in Hartford; and William C., of New London. (5) John, born March 13, 1852, died March 14, 1852. (6) John F., born Oct. 7, 1853, resides in Azusa, Los Angeles Co., Cal. (7) Benjamin, born April 19, 1859, is a farmer and carpenter of Brooklyn, Conn., who married Nettie Shepard, and has one child, Ada. (8) Levi Nelson is mentioned below. Steady work and thrift enabled Mr. Clark in the course of time to purchase the tannery of Earl Warner and to carry on the business by himself, continuing in this line till the close of his life. His death occurred Nov. 22, 1875. He was highly respected as a consistent Christian and was a member of the Baptist Church.

John Chapman, the progenitor of the family of that name in and about Stonington, Conn., was of English origin. He was the son of John and Joanna (Sumner) Chapman, who resided about fifty miles from London. Tradition has it that John was forced into the British Navy by a press gang, and after a while the ship visited Boston, New England, where he then availed himself of the opportunity to assume the liberty of which he had been deprived. He fled and found succor in the abode of Samuel Allen, in what is now called Wakefield, R. I. Mr. Chapman was a weaver in North Stonington, and there worked at his trade the rest of his life. He married Feb. 16, 1710, Sarah Brown, and died in 1760. Their children were: Sarah, born Nov. 25, 1710, who married Ichabod Brown; Jonah, born Sept. 2, 1712; John, born Sept. 9, 1714, who married April 28, 1742, Mary Boardman; William, born Dec. 19, 1716, who married, Jan. 31, 1740, Abigail Plumb; Andrew, born March 3, 1719, married to Hannah Smith; Thomas, born about 1721, whose wife's given name only is known, Mary; Sumner, born about 1723, married to Elizabeth Herrick; and Eunice.

Mrs. Mary (Chapman) Heath, grandmother of Levi N. Clark, was a daughter of John Chapman, and a granddaughter of Levi Chapman, who served in the war of the Revolution from Groton. John Chapman married Bethany Button, a sister of Col. Button, of Jewett City, and Charles Button, of Hampton, the latter of whom had two sons, Charles and Linden. In the family of children born to John Chapman were the following: Sarah, who married Billings Lamb, of New London, and had seven children; Reuben, of Mystic, who married Emily Lamb and had three children, Emma, William and John; Roswell, who married Mary Ann Wilcox, and had four children, Marion (who married and went West), Amos, Everett and Martin; Albert, who became the father of three sons and two daughters; Lyman, who was twice married, had children and went West; Betsey, who married Nathan Lamb, of Mystic, and had three children, Betsey Emeline (who married Henry Myers and had children), Frank and Edwin; Mary, who married Amos Heath; Amos, who died unmarried; and Levi, who married Lavinia Lamb, and had eleven children.

Levi Nelson Clark was born in Brooklyn, Conn., Sept. 6, 1863. His education was acquired in the common graded schools of his town, and for a vocation he chose farming, which he followed for some time on the family homestead. Jan. 11, 1882, he married Carrie E. Larkham, who was born in Voluntown, Conn., daughter of William Larkham. Of this union there were three children: Mabel Larkham, born Oct. 30, 1882, deceased Sept. 13, 1884; Sarah Hannah, born Aug. 14, 1884; and Bertha Maud, born June 25, 1886.

On Oct. 9th, after his marriage, Mr. Clark came to Canterbury, and Nov. 4 of the following year, purchased the Baldwin place, a seventy-five acre tract in the southern part of the town. There he was engaged in farming, paying especial attention to the raising of small fruits and vegetables and to the breeding of poultry. Another business in which he has been engaged for some time has been the agency for an insurance company and also an agency for agricultural implements and fertilizers.

It is in the political field that Mr. Clark has made his greatest success. He has been honored with nearly every office in the town, and has served as second selectman for three years. For two years he acted on the board of relief, and at different times on the grand jury. In 1901-02 he represented Canterbury in the State Legislature, where his sound judgment and forceful character secured his appointment to two important committees, Constitutional Amendments, and State Prison, on the last of which he served as clerk. Special evidence of Mr. Clark's wide popularity is shown by the fact that he was elected delegate to the constitutional convention of 1902. The last convention of this nature met in 1818. In 1900 Mr. Clark took the census for the town of Canterbury. Socially he exerts quite as wide an influence as politically. He affiliates with the Quinebaug Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Danielson, Conn.; Unity Encampment, now of Danielson, of which he was high priest for three years, now Chief Patriarch; the Grand Encampment of the State; Canterbury Grange, No. 70, in which he is now serving his seventh year as secretary; and with Quinebaug Pomona, No. 2, which he joined Nov. 30, 1887, and of which he is now overseer.

It is not unlikely that the Heaths of Groton or vicinity, from whom Sarah M. (Heath) Clark, the mother of Levi N. Clark, of Canterbury, descends, are from a Haverhill family. At least in support of this is the fact that John Heath is early of record at Norwich, Conn., and from Haverhill. His wife Hannah was received into the church at Norwich, and a son, Josiah, baptized in 1715. Bartholomew Heath, born in 1600, and early at Newbury, Mass., had John, Joseph and Josiah. Of these John, born Aug. 15, 1643, married Nov. 4, 1666, Sarah, daughter of William Partridge, of Salisbury, and removed to Haverhill. Josiah married Mary, daughter of John Davis, of Haverhill, and had a son, Josiah. In the absence of family records and direct knowledge on the subject the similarity of family names is in further support of the theory of connection between the Newbury, Haverhill, and Norwich families.

William Heath, grandfather of Mrs. Clark, was a drummer in the Revolution and was killed in battle. He married a Miss Culver, and among their children was a son named Amos.

Amos Heath, father of Mrs. Clark, became a soldier in the war of 1812, serving in the summer of 1813 in the company commanded by Stephen Billings. He married Mary Chapman, who died in 1886, and had eleven children: (1) Levi Nelson, who married Mary Phillips, and lived at Norwich, Conn., died of typhoid fever at the age of forty. (2) Amos F., a member of Co. K, 21st C. V. I., was killed in the engagement of Bermuda Hundred May 16, 1864. (3) Hudson died of yellow fever on a return trip from New Zealand. (4) Lucy married Thomas Riley and resided at Norwich, Conn., but she died at Mystic, the mother of five children: Sarah, who married Capt. Charles Wheeler; Mary, wife of Arthur Maxon, general agent for the Singer Sewing Machine Company; Lizzie, who married Oscar Berry, of Mystic; Amos, who was a sea captain, and lives in Chicago; and James, a sea captain, who married Jane Noyes, and has three children. (5) Oliver, who married and lives in Virginia, has three sons and three daughters. (6) Mary, widow of Daniel Davis, resides at Clinton, Conn. Her daughter, Mary, married Elijah Morgan, of Mystic, New London county, and they had three children. (7) Sarah is mentioned as Mrs. Clark. (8) Emma married Roswell Maynard, a member of the 22d C. V. I., now deceased, and they had two children: Edward, a resident of Norwich, who has three children; and Anna, the deceased wife of Merton Reynolds, and the mother of one daughter. (9) Frances married Nealand Ward, and after his death, Nicholas Allen, becoming by the first union, the mother of one child, Alice, and by the second, of a son, Merton, the latter now in the postal service of New York City. (10) Nancy married Frank St. John, after his death, Frank Grant, and later, Chas. Swain, a grocer, of Clinton, Conn. By the first marriage there was a son; by the second, two children: Herbert, who married Elsie Stewart and lives in Sprague, Conn.; and Julia, who married Capt. John Ashcraft. By the last marriage there were six children: Oliver, superintendent of the water works at Clinton, Conn.; Amos; Fred; Elma, who married Clarence Eelman; Minnie, wife of George Champlain; and Mabel, wife of Lovell Carter. (11) Ardelia married Andrew King, and after his death, Deacon Lay of Clinton, now deceased, becoming by the first marriage the mother of two sons; Andrew, now a resident of Clinton; and Nelson.

EDGAR D. WHITE. The origin of this family of Whites in America is somewhat uncertain. According to various records and other sources of information they appear to be descended from James White, a Spaniard.

James White, the first representative in America, was born in Lisbon, Portugal, in 1675, of Spanish Catholic parents. According to tradition, when he was a lad of sixteen he either shipped or was enticed aboard a sailing vessel, and for a time was a slave; but securing his freedom, he sailed for America, where he landed both penniless and friendless. He found friends, however, in Boston, where he learned the tailor's trade, and in time married Martha Owen, a woman of English blood. His death occurred in 1782, and he left the following children; James (2), ancestor of Edgar D.; William; Samuel, who probably settled in Maine; and a daughter, whose name is lost.

According to Nancy White, granddaughter of James White (2), however, it was the latter who first came to America, on a whaling voyage from Lisbon, Portugal, and it is positively known that James (2) was born in Lisbon. He afterward decided to make his home in this country, and settled in Hebron, Conn. He persuaded his father, James White (1), to come to the New World, and the latter also made his home in Hebron, where he followed the tailor's trade. The wife with whom he lived there is supposed to have been American-born, and was his second wife; they probably met and married in Boston before his removal to Hebron.

James White (2) settled in Hebron, Conn., where it is recorded that he was married Jan. 14, 1747-48, to Rachel Chappell, daughter of Jonathan and Ruth Chappell. Mrs. Rachel White was born in Hebron, May 24, 1728, and died Jan. 10, 1795. Mr. White died July 23, 1806, at the age of eighty-eight years. To this union came nine children: Joseph, born Oct. 23, 1748; Alexander, Dec. 2, 1750; Adonijah, Oct. 22, 1752; Rachel, Aug. 15, 1754; James (3), Oct. 10, 1756; Mary, May 26, 1759; Mabel, April 24, 1761; Ebenezer, Feb. 13, 1764; Aaron, the grandfather of our subject, Sept. 20, 1767. Of the sons of this family, the five eldest served in the Revolution. Joseph and James served the longest period, and Joseph was present at the capture of Gen. Burgoyne. His military life was full of privation, and in the evolutions that culminated in the battle of Saratoga, for two days the Continental forces to which he belonged went without food or drink. When water was found the soldiers were forbidden to take more than a certain number of swallows, on pain of being shot. This was simply a precaution. At another time a half-decayed pumpkin furnished him all his food for the day, and it was pronounced by him the sweetest food he had ever tasted.

Aaron White, the grandfather of Edgar D., was born in Hebron, where he always lived, following the double occupation of farmer and joiner, and having his home in that part of the town which is now Andover. He died March 15, 1838. On March 25, 1790, he married Salome Hibbard, who was born April 17, 1771, daughter of Joseph and Temperance Hibbard, and died Dec. 25, 1816. To this union came the following children: Aaron, Jr., born Sept. 11, 1790, deceased April 6, 1794; Laura, April 5, 1792; Erastus, June 5, 1795; Nancy, May 9, 1797; Harriet, Oct. 2, 1800; Orrin Chester, April

Of this family, Nancy White never married, and lived to a ripe old age. The following appeared in the Hartford Times, for April 16, 1891:

"Miss Nancy White, Andover's oldest inhabitant, died of pneumonia, on Friday evening, April 10, after an illness of about ten days, at the advanced age of ninety-three years eleven months and one day. By the death of her mother, when Miss Nancy was only nineteen years old, the latter had almost the entire care of her youngest brother, George H. White, of Andover, who was at the time only two years old. She afterward kept house for him until he was married, and soon after that made her home with him, within a mile of the birthplace of her father's and grandfather's families, where she remained until the time of her death.

"The writer of this has heard her tell of the hardships endured by her five uncles during the Revolutionary war, and how she made home-spun cloth for the family use; also has seen her card and spin flax with the little old-fashioned spinning wheel. It is rarely that one meets an aged person with so good a memory of the many things that had come within her life. Her knowledge of scripture was equal to the best.

"There are but few persons ever found who are permitted to live long enough to see relatives representing six generations, as has been her lot, viz: Her grandfather, who died at her father's home when she was nine years old; her father and uncles, her brothers and cousins, one of her cousins being grandfather to Judge J. Hurlburt White, of Hartford, whose father she well knew, and whose son she had met, as well as quite a number of others of the same generation."

George Hibbard White grew up in his native town. During his young manhood he was almost an invalid, recovering his strength so much, however, that his life was afterward devoted to farming. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a Baptist, belonging to the church at Andover. Mr. White was married Oct. 28, 1840, to Lucia Parker, daughter of Asa and Hannah (Sprague) Parker, of whom a sketch appears elsewhere. Mrs. Lucia Parker White was born in Coventry, June 16, 1813, and is now living with a daughter, Mrs. Burnham, in Andover. Mr. White died Sept. 11, 1885. To them were born the following children: Henrietta, born July 18, 1841, deceased at the age of ten days; Adaline Calista, born May 12, 1845, who has been twice married, Jan. 22, 1867, to Joseph J. Watson, and Nov. 23, 1884, to Selah A. Burnham; Lorin Fulton, a deaf mute, born Sept. 2, 1846, who has his home in Andover; Edgar Davis, born Feb. 20, 1848. The family home was about one mile south of Andover depot, at the junction of the Gilead and the Hebron roads.

EDGAR DAVIS WHITE grew up in Andover, which became a town the year he was born. His education was secured in the local schools, and at the age of seventeen he began teaching on Grant's Hill, in district No. 9, in the town of Coventry. In the twenty-three terms that he has been in the school room he has taught during every month in the year, though the greater part of his work has been done in the winter time. Mr. White feels that during his first year as teacher he learned more than in any year of his life, not only along educational lines, but in discipline and patience as well. His work was in Coventry and Andover, in three districts in the first town, and in every district in Andover. In all but two districts he taught more than one term, showing that his efforts were appreciated.

For some years after his marriage Mr. White continued teaching, carrying on farming operations as well. In recent years he has given most of his time to farming, bestowing special attention on matters of trust, settling estates and similar undertakings.

In 1893 Mr. White traveled extensively in the West, visiting the World's Fair at Chicago, stopping at Denver, Col., and at a number of points in Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado and Ohio, where he spent much time among relatives. He made other visits to Ohio when he was called there for the purpose of contesting the will of his wife's uncle, William A. Perkins, who had given $20,000 to Oberlin College during his life time; he brought the contest to a successful conclusion after three trials.

Mr. White has always been an out-and-out Democrat, taking a leading part in the political doings of the town, and has been collector for ten years, assessor, justice of the peace, constable, grand juror, school director and auditor. For four years he was clerk of probate, for nine years notary public, and in 1899 represented his town in the General Assembly, serving on the committee on Agriculture.

Mr. and Mrs. White are both members of the Andover Grange, of which he has been master. Both belong to the Andover Baptist Church, of which for a number of years he has been trustee and deacon. Since 1883 Mr. White has been active in church work, having been since that time clerk and treasurer of the church, serving as superintendent of the Sunday-school. Mr. White was on the committee that built the temporary home for Dependent Children at Vernon, which was completed in 1900, and is a credit to the committee having it in charge.

Mr. White was married March 16, 1869, to Lydia Amanda Sprague, who was born Feb. 1, 1848, and to this union came one child—Edith Bell, born April 12, 1872; she married William J. Maxwell, of Bolton, Nov. 7, 1892, and they have the following children: Edgar Norman, born Oct. 1, 1893; Helen, Jan. 4, 1895; Mary Sprague, Jan. 19, 1898;

Avery Brewer, Aug. 8, 1899; Francis Herbert, Aug. 13, 1901. Mrs. White is a daughter of Norman and Laura (Perkins) Sprague, both the Spragues and Perkins being old and well-known families in New England. Mrs. Laura Sprague was a daughter of Amos and Olive (Alford) Perkins.

Asa Perkins, of Lebanon, and Olive Manley, of Coventry, were married Sept. 9, 1778, and had the following children: Asa, born March 12, 1780, who died in 1851; Amos, the grandfather of Mrs. White, who was born Nov. 20, 1781; George, born July 17, 1783; Chester, July 17, 1785; Darius, May 3, 1787; John, April 23, 1789; Septimus Manley, April 21, 1791; William Bela, June 6, 1793; Selah, March 26, 1795; Olive Manley, Sept. 20, 1797. Soon after the death of this last daughter the mother died and Asa Perkins married Lois Loomis, of Coventry, in February, 1800, the ceremony being performed by Dr. Joseph Parker.

Amos Perkins, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. White was born Nov. 20, 1781, and died July 3, 1849. Olive Alford became his wife Feb. 7, 1805. She was born Oct. 12, 1786, and died July 25, 1848. In 1844 Amos Perkins and his wife removed to Ohio, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The following year their son William A. also went to Ohio to live. To Amos and Olive Perkins were born four children: (1) Laura, born Jan. 11, 1806, died Feb. 4, 1894; (2) Olive Amanda, born Oct. 23, 1807, married Dr. Lemon Sperry, of Ohio, in August, 1848, and died March 3, 1853; (3) William Alford, born July 31, 1809, died in Windham, Ohio, May 26, 1894. He married Eliza Boynton, of Coventry, May 20, 1838, who was born June 16, 1816, and they had a daughter, Mary, born July 17, 1839, who became the wife of M. C. Woodworth, M. D., and bore him one daughter. Both are now deceased. (4) Sally Maria, born July 22, 1816, married Nov. 28, 1850, David J. Martin, and died June 26, 1852. They had one daughter, Sarah A., who was born Sept. 11, 1851. The mother with her babe in her arms was thrown from a buggy, and in falling struck her head against a bridge, living only forty-eight hours after the accident. Her child fell into the stream, but was rescued, and lived to become the wife of William Herman Critchet, and the mother of three children: William Legrand, born Feb. 18, 1877; Bird Byington, Aug. 13, 1879; and Minnie Belle, Aug. 25, 1881.

The Spragues are an old New England family. Eliakim Sprague was born about 1710, and died Dec. 10, 1786, aged seventy-five, being survived six years by his widow Hannah. They had three children. (1) Samuel, who died March 18, 1806, aged seventy. His wife Jerusha bore him six children: Samuel, Jr.; Elizabeth; Eliakim; Annie; Jerusha, who married Stephen Bingham and lived to be eighty-one years old, her husband dying at ninety-four; Daniel, whose son, Daniel Porter, was the father of Mrs. Albert Lyman, of Andover. (2)

Elisha. (3) Molly, Mrs. Bidwell, died July 15, 1793, at the age of thirty-six.

Elisha Sprague, the great-grandfather of Mrs. E. D. White, was born July 15, 1751, and died Jan. 7, 1824. Sybil Jones, who was born Dec. 10, 1747, and died July 16, 1827, became his wife, March 31, 1774. Her parents, Jonathan and Abigail Jones, lived to be seventy-eight and eighty-eight years old, respectively. Their children were: Sybil, Levi, Esther, Amos, Samuel, Simon, and Enoch. Mr. Jones was a farmer all his life. To Elisha and Sybil Sprague came: (1) Elisha, Jr., born Feb. 18, 1775, in Coventry, who became the grandfather of Mrs. White; (2) Hannah, born in 1783, who married Asa Parker, Dec. 23, 1806, and whose daughter is the mother of Edgar D. White and Mrs. Selah A. Burnham; (3) Asenath; (4) Lydia, who married Israel Loomis, of Coventry; (5) Bela, who married May 7, 1806, Esther Parker, born April 24, 1785. He was the father of Almira; Louisa; Charles, who was a physician, and died in 1867, leaving a son, Charles; Willard, who died in 1857, leaving a widow, who died in 1864, and three children, George, Lester and Louisa; Ralph, deceased April 4, 1838; Betsy; Electa; and Sally. The last three were unmarried, and Electa is still living.

Elisha Sprague, Jr., the grandfather of Mrs. White, was married Nov. 12, 1803, to Mrs. Lydia (Young) Woodward, who was born Nov. 26, 1774, in Windham, and died Nov. 24, 1858, outliving her husband by seventeen years. She was a daughter of William Young, who came to this country from Ireland, where he left two children, Robert and Polly. His children probably born in this country were Alfred, Zephaniah, William, Fannie House and Polly (2).

Mr. Sprague engaged in farming and carpentering, making plows and cider mills, and won an enviable reputation as an honorable and upright man. When the stage coaches were the principal vehicles of conveyance he kept a hotel for some five years near the present depot, just north of the tracks. In politics he was a Democrat. Mrs. Sprague was a Baptist. By her first husband, Mr. Woodward, she had one son, Horatio N.

To Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Sprague came three children: (1) Norman, the father of Mrs. Edgar D. White, was born in Coventry, Jan. 11, 1805, and died Jan. 22, 1894. Laura Perkins became his wife Jan. 1, 1835. (2) William Young, born June 9, 1808, died in New York, May 17, 1854. (3) Fanny Y., born March 20, 1810, died March 19, 1831. She was an idolized daughter, and her marriage, Oct. 28, 1820, to William D. Townsend, of Columbia, was an event of social notice, her bridal outfit costing a great sum of money for those days; her wedding gown, of white silk, trimmed with white satin, was a splendor and cost much beyond the means and ideas of the day. She died March 19, 1831, a few years after her marriage, leaving a daughter, Fanny Elizabeth, born Oct. 13, 1830, who died March 16, 1833.

Of the children of Norman Sprague and Laura Perkins, (1) Henry, born Oct. 25, 1835, married Mary Augusta Dickinson, Oct. 19, 1865, and died Sept. 24, 1868. They had one daughter, Nellie Augusta, who was born Jan. 28, and died Dec. 16, 1868, the same year. (2) William, born Nov. 7, 1837, never married, and died Jan. 27, 1870. (3) Fanny Jane, born June 25, 1840, died July 14, 1852. (4) Sarah Maria, born Nov. 7, 1844, never married, and died Sept. 30, 1873. (5) Lydia Amanda, Mrs. E. D. White, was born Feb. 1, 1848.

DEACON DWIGHT J. GLAZIER, one of the representative farmers and citizens of Stafford, Tolland county, is a man of whom only good is said. He was born in Willington, Conn., Feb. 14, 1837, a son of Alden Glazier, who was also born in Willington, and died in Somers, in 1863.

Willington has been the home of the Glazier family for many, many years. William Glazier, of Gloucestershire, England, accompanied Gov. Wolcott to that town, and surveyed the Gov. Wolcott turnpike from Tolland to Ashford. At one time he owned 900 acres of land in the north part of the town, a plat of which is still in existence.

Silas Glazier, son of William, was a soldier in the War of the Revolution, for which he was the recipient of a pension in later years. He married a Miss Holt, of Willington, and they had the following family: David; Daniel, who married twice, his first wife being a Miss Holt, and his second, Elizabeth Gladden; and Keziah, who became the wife of Bartholomew Potter, of Willington.

David Glazier, son of Silas and grandfather of Deacon Dwight J. Glazier, was born in Willington, where he died when Dwight J. was quite young. He was four times wedded. By his first wife, Fear Alden, his children were: Alden; Jennison, who went to Michigan; Sylvester; Ira, who married Abigail King, of Enfield; and Elisha, who went to the West, and was accidentally killed in Michigan. David Glazier married for his second wife, Celenda Marcy, who was born in 1780, in Willington, and to this union were born: Jasper, who married Morivia Grover, and after her death Abigail Wolcott, of Windham; Carlos, who married Phoebe Walker, of Middletown, Conn.; Caroline, who married Charles H. Ames, who was killed at Cedar Creek during the Rebellion; and Fear, who married Sylvester T. Preston, of Willington. For his third wife Mr. Glazier married Widow Fanny Gager, who was born in 1774, and they had one daughter, Celenda, who is now the widow of Merrick M. Johnson, of Willimantic. His fourth wife, Alice Walker, left no issue.

In his younger days Alden Glazier was a school teacher, but made farming the main business of his life. His wife, whose maiden name was Amarilis Ellis, died when her son, Dwight J., was but ten years old. To Alden Glazier and his wife were born the following children who reached adult age: Maria married Israel Wood, of Rockville, and died there. Franklin married Mary Skinner; he became interested in the manufacturer of fine cassimeres at South Glastonbury, but his later years were passed in Hartford, where he became prominent; he died in 1890. Dwight J. is the subject proper of this sketch.

Deacon Dwight J. Glazier was only some three or four years old when he was bound out to Calvin Knight, of West Stafford, by whom he was reared and educated in the district school. When he was nineteen years of age he took up farming, and when Mr. Knight died, he purchased the farm where he has lived to the present time. The success of Mr. Glazier is marked and exceptional. Beginning with nothing, he now owns 250 acres, and he has rebuilt his house and barn. His location is good, and his farm is kept in a high state of cultivation.

Deacon Glazier is a staunch Republican, and represented the town in the General Assembly of 1873, where he held an important place as a member of the States' Prison committee. For several years he has been second selectman, and for a number of years was assessor. For many years he was justice of the peace, and has served as a member of the grand jury. He is a member of the West Stafford Congregational Church, of which he has been a deacon since 1800. His services have been freely rendered on the Society's Committee, and anywhere else he could help the Church. Fraternally he belongs to the Wolcott Lodge, No. 60, A. F. & A. M., at Stafford.

On Jan. 2, 1862, Deacon Glazier was married to Elizabeth Howlett, who was born in West Stafford, Nov. 20, 1834, a daughter of Asa Lewis and Almira (Davis) Howlett. This union has been blessed with the following family: (1) Freddie Dwight, born July 9, 1866, died July 22, 1866. (2) Herbert Asa, born Oct. 19, 1868, was married Nov. 21, 1893, to Josephine Dimmock, of Stafford, and they have two children: Dimmock Burdette, and Doris Elizabeth; their home is in West Stafford. (3) Charles Dwight, born Nov. 2, 1871, is engaged both in farming and in the lumber business; he was married in 1899, to Nettie May Kibbe, of Stafford, and they have one child, Richard Charles. Deacon Glazier is a highly respected citizen of Stafford, and as a farmer is second to none. He is a kind-hearted and charitable man, and enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

WILLIAM J. AUSTIN, the city auditor of Rockville, Tolland county, and for the past twenty years an attache of the Savings Bank of Rockville, is one of the well known men of that thriving center of industry and trade, where he has resided ever since his parents came from England to America. This they did in 1870, and the change has proved a fortunate one for them and their children.

Mr. Austin was born May 4, 1860, in Trowbridge, England, and is a son of William and Emma (Franklin) Austin. Mr. Austin's paternal grandfather held an exceedingly responsible position for a large wholesale house in Trowbridge, and when his advanced years compelled him to give up the work which he had done so long and well, the firm put him on the payroll as a pensioner, a compliment as rare as it was acceptable. John Franklin, the maternal grandfather of Mr. Austin, was an expert engineer of Trowbridge.

The family of William Austin, who came to this country in October, 1870, consisted of his wife and the following children: William J.; Frank, now an electrician in Lynn, Mass.; Edward E., traveling salesman of Providence, R. I.; John H., an assistant designer in Rock mill, Rockville; Matilda A., now the wife of Edward Slugg, a manufacturer of Philadelphia, Pa. One daughter was born after their arrival in this country, but she died in infancy. They left Liverpool on a steamer and the voyage across the ocean came within three days of a month in duration. They landed at Castle Garden, New York City, and came directly to Rockville. In his home land Mr. Austin had been engaged in the contracting business, and in Rockville he worked as a carpenter and joiner, and he lived to the age of sixty-two years. Mrs. Austin died in 1875, and Mr. Austin was married a second time to Mrs. Thomas Slugg, a widow of Rockville, who is now dead. In religion he was a member of the Congregational Church, and in politics a Republican. Mr. Austin is a Past Chief Ranger of the Foresters, and was the only member in Rockville of the Foresters' Endowment Association, a branch of the Ancient Order of Foresters. Mr. Austin was also a Mason, and was devoted to its secret lore. He belonged to the Hockanum Firemen's Benevolent Association. With his wife he was buried in Grove Hill cemetery. Through his entire career he was a good citizen and a kind neighbor, and is remembered by those who knew him best as a man of integrity and unblemished character.

William J. Austin was but a lad of ten years of age when his parents came to Rockville, and there has been his home to the present time. He attended the West Side district school, and had among his first teachers a Miss McCray, of Ellington. He was a pupil of Prof. Hayward, and attended the private school which was kept by Prof. Niles. He was also a student in the German school of Prof. Miller, and in Prof. Whitlock's night school. He was at work before he was twelve years old in the Hockanum mill, so that his school work was much broken into, but he was of a determined character, and acquired a very good education. As the oldest child in the family, his help was needed to keep up the home for a number of years. After working in the Hockanum and the Florence mills, he entered the employ of the White Manufacturing Company, and for seven years was engaged in the finishing department of that company, for the last three years having entire charge of this department. As a young man he had made for himself an enviable reputation for steadiness and reliability, and in 1882 he was offered a position in the Savings Bank of Rockville, in the bookkeeping department of that institution, which he accepted. There he has remained to the present time, and is regarded as one of the competent men in that service in Rockville.

Mr. Austin cast his first presidential vote for James A. Garfield and has continued to vote the Republican ticket. In 1892, he was elected city auditor of Rockville, and he has performed the work in this office in a manner both creditable and systematic. He has held all the important offices in the order of the Foresters, and has been financial secretary and recorder of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. At one time Mr. Austin belonged to St. John's Episcopal Church, but for several years he has associated himself with the Union Congregational Church, where he has been a member of the choir for many years.

Mr. Austin was married March 4, 1885, to Hettie A. Annear, a native of Truro, England, and a daughter of Charles H. and Maria (Durham) Annear. Her father was a graduate of Cambridge and for many years had a jewelry establishment in London. He died in Camborne. After his death his widow brought her family to Rockville, where they settled when Mrs. Austin was very young. To Mr. and Mrs. Austin were born the following children: Ethel May, born Aug. 30, 1887; Vivian Emma, Sept. 17, 1891; Ruth, Nov. 10, 1898. Mr. Austin had his first home in Rockville on Elm street, but in 1900, after completely remodeling and modernizing his father's old homestead at the corner of Talcott avenue and Oak street, he made it his home.

Mr. Austin is an efficient bookkeeper and teller, and is known as thoroughly honorable and reliable in every respect.

ALBERT C. EATON is a popular and successful druggist at Stafford, Tolland county, was born Dec. 17, 1848, in Stafford, Conn., and is a son of Calvin Wells Eaton, who was born in West Stafford, Conn. Early in life he learned the trade of wool carding and was a pioneer in that business, his life work except for a few years on a farm. He died March 5, 1888 in Stafford.

C. W. Eaton married Louisa, a daughter of Wales and Hannah (Fenton) Presbrey, of Willington, Conn. Mrs. Eaton is still living, and makes her home in Stafford. Mr. and Mrs. Eaton were parents of the following family: Albert C.; George W., born in 1857, in Stafford, where he is engaged as a carpenter; Hattie L., born in 1853, in Stafford, who married George C. Cleaveland, and is now his widow with her home in Stafford; Amanda, born in 1855 in Stafford, who married Benjamin Bray, and has her home in Florida; Carrie L., born in 1860 in Stafford, where she is still living.

Deacon Joshua Wells Eaton, the grandfather of Albert C., was born in West Stafford, and during his lifetime was known as an extensive farmer. For many years he was a deacon and staunch supporter of the Congregational Church. His death occurred in 1865 in West Stafford, where he was widely known and highly esteemed. He married Anna Harrington, and among their children was Calvin Wells Eaton, the father of Albert C.

Ensign Aaron Eaton, the great-grandfather of Albert C., was born March 18, 1737, in Tolland, Conn., and died May 25, 1815, in West Stafford. His services during the Revolutionary war were freely given his country, and he was known as a patriotic and public-spirited citizen. In 1762 he was married to Lydia Barber, who was born in 1736, and died July 29, 1790. To them were born: Roxanna, born Sept. 19, 1763, in Stafford, Conn.; Aaron, May 6, 1766; Lydia, Jan. 3, 1769; Lucinda, July 26, 1772; Barber, March 14, 1775. Ensign Aaron Eaton was married to his second wife, Abigail Converse, April 12, 1791. To this union were born three children: Joshua Wells; Luther; and Sarah. Mrs. Abigail Eaton died May 30, 1815, in Stafford.

The father of Ensign Eaton was Samuel Eaton, who was born in Windsor, Sept. 11, 1705, and was a son of William Eaton, who was born Dec. 15, 1665, in Reading, Mass. He was a son of Daniel Eaton, who was born Nov. 11, 1638, in Watertown, Mass., and who spent his last years in Windsor, Conn. William Eaton, his father, came to Watertown, Mass., in 1636 from Kent, England, and very soon after his arrival removed to Reading. Martha, his wife, came with him.

It thus appears that Albert C. Eaton is in the eighth generation from the first settler of his family in this country, and that the name has been well sustained through a long line of honorable and worthy men.

Albert C. Eaton was born in Stafford, where he received his education in the public schools. After leaving school his first work was in the Mineral Springs mill, where he remained some three years, and then he entered the Converseville Woolen mill, to work in the card room under his father, where he was employed for a year and a half. In a woolen mill at Windsor, Conn., he learned the dyeing trade, which he finished at Windermere mill in Ellington, after the war. For two years he was employed in Massachusetts, and in 1869 returned to Stafford, where he took a position in the Mineral Springs mill; he remained with this company until January, 1881, the last four years as superintendent. Since 1881 he has been engaged in mercantile business. In October, 1897, Mr. Eaton purchased the W. W. Lathrop drug store in Stafford, and now owns and runs the same.

Mr. Eaton was a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war, serving as a member of Co. F, 147th N. Y. V. I. He enlisted March 6, 1865, and served until the close of the war, being mustered out in Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Eaton is a Mason, and belongs to Ionic Lodge, No. 110, F. & A. M., and the Orient Chapter, R. A. M., of Stafford. He is a director of the Stafford Springs Cemetery Association.

Albert C. Eaton and Esther Whiton, a daughter of Lucius Heber and Almeda (Converse) Whiton, of Stafford, were united in marriage, Nov. 23, 1870. Of this union the oldest son was Lucius Francis, born Jan. 11, 1872. He married Blanche Ramsdon, of Palmer, Mass., Nov. 22, 1899. He studied medicine, and after having graduated from Monson Academy, in 1889, graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College in 1892. After a brief connection with a dental firm in Hartford, he opened an office for the practice of his profession at Stafford. In 1893 he held an office in Hartford, where he spent a portion of each week. His practice, however, in Stafford so rapidly increased, that of late it has received his entire attention. Dr. Eaton makes a specialty of the preservation of the natural teeth, and though a young man has been exceedingly successful in his work, and enjoys an enviable reputation. His office, which is fitted with all the modern appliances for his work, is in Warren's Block.

The other children of Mr. and Mrs. Eaton are Alberta Louise, born Aug. 20, 1878; and Ivy Gertrude, who was born Aug.-8, 1887.

HON. ASA PETTENGILL. Although Hon. Asa Pettengill is not one of the old residents of Rockville, Tolland county, he has made his presence felt since locating there in 1888, both in business and political circles. Mr. Pettengill was elected to the State Legislature from Vernon after a shorter residence than any other incumbent of the office and served his party with great credit, as he wielded greater power in the position than any other new man from his section in that honorable body.

Mr. Pettengill comes from old New England stock and was born at Rindge, N. H., Sept. 2, 1835, a son of Asa and Lavina (Sawtelle) Pettengill, the former of whom was born at Ware, N. H., the latter being a daughter of Jonathan Sawtelle. Mr. Pettengill comes of a stalwart family, his father weighing 225 pounds and his uncle Dudley the same, the former being six feet, two inches, while the latter reached the unusual size of six feet, seven inches. Mr. Pettengill, the father of our subject, had been married previously to Polly Webster and the children of that marriage who lived to maturity were: Hosea; Polly; and Eliza. The children of the second marriage were: Almena, deceased;

Hannah, the widow of Calvin Gordon, of Saco, Maine, her first husband having been Timothy Hubbard, of Rindge, N. H., who was killed at Baton Rouge, La., during the Civil war, by the fall of a limb of a tree upon him, just as he was prepared for home; and our subject, the youngest of all.

Mr. Pettengill was a carpenter by trade but worked at other kinds of business, his death occurring at the age of eighty-six years. For two years he was a soldier in the war of 1812, being an orderly at Fort Independence, in Boston, and was also at Plattsburg, during that war. His death occurred in Keene, N. H., at the home of his son, Asa, with whom he had made his home for a couple of years, the mother having died at Rindge, N. H. Mr. Pettengill was a Jacksonian Democrat and a consistent member of the Free Will Baptist religious belief, two of his brothers, John and Dudley, being powerful Baptist ministers.

Asa Pettengill was but a boy when his parents removed from the old home and settled at Stanstead Plain, in Canada, just opposite Derby, N. H. In those days his father drove the stage between Montreal and Boston; when it required from twenty-six to thirty days to make the trip, six horses being needed, and Mr. Pettengill was well known all through that country. When he was eleven years old the family removed to Winchendon Springs Village, and there he completed his education, having attended school in all the places where the family had lived.

At the early age of sixteen Mr. Pettengill began to learn the carpenter's trade under his father, with whom he worked until he was twenty-two, when he started out for himself, at the age of twenty-five beginning to learn the trade of machinist, for which he had natural adaptability, at Peterboro, N. H. In that town he was married in June, 1860, to Miss Hannah Heard, a native of Dublin, N. H., born June 16, 1833, a daughter of Henry and Belinda (Barden) Heard, the only child of this union being Walter Edwin, born May 30, 1862, at Dublin, N. H., who married Nellie Holt, of Peterboro, and has one child, Elva H. For some years Walter Edwin was in business with his father, but is now a master mechanic in the Rock mill, of Rockville.

Asa Pettengill followed his trade at various places, being at one time the efficient superintendent of the Norwich Woolen mill, at Norwich, Conn., at another time was superintendent of the Niantic mills at Sandy Hook, Conn., and was also superintendent of the Joseph Noons & Sons mill, at Peterboro, N. H. In 1886 he went to Uxbridge, Mass., as master mechanic of the Capron Woolen Company's mill, but two years later he came to Rockville as master mechanic for the White Manufacturing Company, where he remained until that company went out of business. Soon after this Mr. Pettengill bought the property on Thompson street and there established his machine shop and factory, before his purchase known as The Thompson & Holmes Chuck Shop. When he started the business he associated his son with him, but later the son made new connections and he is the sole proprietor. The plant is fitted up with carpet cleaning works, and is properly fitted for all kinds of mechanical and electrical work, and the product has been marketed in many foreign countries. The electrical apparatus from this factory has been sent all over the United States, and comprises cutters, punchers, shears, boiler injectors, steam engine governors, shafting, pulleys, hangers, etc., dynamos and also motors being made there. The machinery in use is almost entirely from designs originated by Mr. Pettengill and his son, who have taken out several valuable patents.

Natural mechanical skill enables Mr. Pettengill to easily perform many branches of the work himself, in which he takes the greatest interest. Having inherited the robust constitution of his forefathers as well as their iron will, he bore with ill grace a severe sickness during the winter of 1899 and 1900, his determination alone bringing him back to health, as the physicians could do nothing for him, and several days were passed in a comatose condition.

Mr. Pettengill is a staunch Democrat, a sound money one, and in 1892 he was elected, after a residence of but four years, and in a Republican town, from Vernon to the State Legislature, having the largest plurality of any candidate for the office on any ticket up to that time, and served acceptably on the committee on Cities and Boroughs. This committee had the charge of Electric railroads, and Mr. Pettengill was one of the hardest workers for the electric line into Rockville, being one of its most enthusiastic advocates, in the face of influential opposition. For seven years he served as assessor in Rockville and his unceasing labor resulted in a most substantial increase of taxable property returned. It was Mr. Pettengill who fought for higher valuation and the result was a great victory. In political matters he is an enthusiastic worker. Socially he is connected with the Odd Fellows at Peterboro, N. H., and Columbia Lodge, F. & A. M. at Brattleboro, Vt., and K. of P. of Rockville; while both he and his wife are valued members of the Methodist Church of Rockville. Except for the great land-slide for the Republican party in 1894, he would have undoubtedly been elected State Senator, his friends rallying well, but at that time only one Democratic senator was elected in Connecticut.

Perhaps it is the activity of mind and the alert and intelligent grasp of events which has kept Mr. Pettengill so well preserved, physically as well as mentally, but his looks much belie his years. His name is well known throughout Tolland county, and universally respected.

HENRY M. EVANS, a prominent farmer and timber dealer of Brooklyn, Windham county, Conn., is not only the largest landowner of the town, but is also one of its most enterprising citizens.

The early records of the Evans family locate the great-grandfather of Henry M., Jonathan Evans, in Smithfield, R. I., where he followed agricultural pursuits and died at an advanced age. His son, Elijah Evans, was one of a numerous family, who was born in 1786, in Smithfield, R. I., and lived in that locality until a few years after his marriage. About 1818 he moved to Brooklyn, Conn., and there purchased a farm which has been the family home ever since. The acreage of the estate has remained the same as at the time of purchase, but the original residence has been renovated and has had three additions made to it.

Elijah Evans carried on farming and also butchering, buying considerable stock for that time. For a long time he conducted a meat market at Brooklyn Center, the farm being given over to the management of his sons as soon as they were old enough. Until stricken with a dropsical affection, he was a man of great energy and industry, but a few months of illness reduced him so that his death occurred April 28, 1856. As the result of his industry, he was able to leave his family in comfortable circumstances, a fact which gave him much comfort, as he had always been devoted to their welfare. A Democrat in his political views, he supported the party actively; he was a consistent member of the Unitarian Church of Brooklyn, living the Christian life he professed. He married Waty Smith, of Smithfield, R. I., who did not survive him long, her death taking place March 10, 1858, both being buried in the Witter cemetery in the town of Brooklyn. The children born to these good and worthy parents were six: Mercy, who died in infancy at Smithfield, R. I.; Elijah, who took an interest in the meat business and although he only lived to the age of seventeen years, was an expert in his line and of the greatest assistance to his father; Juni, who became a farmer and married Emeline Coburn, later dying in Hampton; Rachel, who married Harvey Cleveland, a farmer, and died in Wauregan, Conn.; Thomas, who married Eliza Kennedy, and in early life taught school, but later became a stock dealer, in Danielson, Conn., where he died; and Elisha, the father of Henry M.

Elisha Evans, the youngest son of Elijah, was born May 21, 1831, in Brooklyn and enjoyed the benefits afforded by the public schools through the winter seasons, assisting his father in the meat business and on the farm in the summers. Being the youngest of the family, he remained at home and managed affairs, caring for his parents until they passed away, and then succeeded to the farm. Mr. Evans had more progressive ideas than many of his neighbors and was well known as a successful dealer in stock. For many years, especially between 1850 and 1860, he made it his custom to take an annual trip through Vermont, New Hampshire and Canada, where he would buy cattle and horses, disposing of them in Brooklyn and the surrounding towns. In a small way, he also dealt in lumber, being a man of business sagacity, able to turn almost any line to his advantage.

Naturally of a robust constitution Mr. Evans took little care of his health when it interfered with his industrious habits, and probably it was this lack that finally caused his death at the age of fifty-six years, Nov. 8, 1887, after a lingering illness of six months. Mr. Evans was a man who was much missed in his community, having been reliable and prominent in all public affairs, serving faithfully the Democratic party all his life, and efficiently filling the offices of the town, at the time of his death being town road surveyor, an office which he had capably filled for twenty-five years. Mr. Evans was a consistent member of the Unitarian Church, of which he was a liberal supporter.

Elisha Evans was married June 16, 1856, to Miss Dilla Cady, who still survives him. She was born July 25, 1835, in Brooklyn, and was a daughter of Lemuel and Lydia (Taylor) Cady, the former of whom was a farmer who spent his life in that locality. The children born to Elisha Evans and his wife were: Charles C., who was born Nov. 9, 1857, and died July 9, 1867; Esther, born Aug. 8, 1861, who married Jerome M. Woodward, and resides in Hampton; and Harvey S. and Henry M., twins, born Oct. 22, 1863, the former of whom died Sept. 17, 1864.

Henry Morey Evans was born in the house he now occupies, and is encircled still with the surroundings which gave him a happy boyhood. Until he was nineteen years old, his winters were passed in the district school, while his summers were devoted to farm work on the home estate. At the age of twenty years, Mr. Evans was hired by Dwight Bassett, of Brooklyn, a miller, to drive his team, and the young man continued with Mr. Bassett for one and one-half years, or until the illness of his father necessitated his return home, where he has remained ever since, with the exception of eight months, when he was in the employ of the dairy of the Wauregan Company. As early as the age of seventeen years, Mr. Evans saw the commercial advantages to accrue from a well managed lumber business, and since that time he has been engaged in getting out timber, being at present in partnership with his brother-in-law, Jerome M. Woodward, of Hampton, in his line, their trade in timber of all kinds being a very large one.

Mr. Evans has been a successful farmer and not only operates his own farm, but also one comprising 168 acres which he purchased a few years ago from Jesse Fuller. Combined with an industry which enables him to show satisfactory results in this and other lines, Mr. Evans is successful also as a citizen, on account of his upright character and sterling honesty. In politics he follows in the footsteps of his father and grand-father, upholding the principles of the Democratic party, and he has faithfully and efficiently served his town in many responsible positions. His first public office was that of assessor, and soon after the close of his term, he was elected as second member of the board of selectmen, holding this office through the year, being re-elected in 1900, and serving until the fall of 1901. In November, 1901, he was elected to represent Brooklyn in the State constitutional convention, in this election receiving a very decisive majority over his Republican competitor. The convention was held in the State capitol, beginning Jan. 1, 1902, and adjourned May 15, 1902. At the present time Mr. Evans is chairman of the board of relief, and is the representative from Brooklyn to the General Assembly of 1903-04. Mr. Evans is one of the progressive men of his section and is identified with many of its leading interests.

The marriage of Mr. Evans took place Aug. 18, 1894, to Miss Susie E. Andrews, who was a daughter of Russell Andrews, of Wauregan, and the children born to this union are: Walter H., a sturdy little representative of his father, born March 28, 1896; and Edith May, born Dec. 6, 1898. Both Mr. and Mrs. Evans belong to the Unitarian Church, to which Mr. Evans is a liberal contributor, and they enjoy the respect and esteem of the whole community.

ANDREW JACKSON McCORMICK, of Tolland, was born in Phillipsburg, N. J., and is a son of David McCormick, who was a native of the North of Ireland.

The father was a contractor and builder, and an extensive lumber dealer, who came to this country in 1824, at the age of sixteen years. Settling in Luzerne county, Pa., he presently became very wealthy, and bought a tract of 1,000 acres of timbered land, building a steam saw-mill and calling into existence a village of some twenty-five houses in which he kept his help. An energetic and pushing man, he had a large and growing business until a fire swept through the woods, destroying his mills and houses, and everything within a radius of fifteen miles. He lost over $80,000, and died shortly after the fire, in which his health was greatly broken. The Morris canal, running from Easton, Pa., was built by him, the work extending through several years and employing over 400 men. It is said that he built the first brick house in Phillipsburg. A Republican, and earnest for the party welfare, he was not a politician or an office seeker, his business demanding all his energies. A popular and genial gentleman, he was one of the best informed men in the State regarding the things in which he was interested. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. McCormick was married about 1830 to Mary Lockwood, who was born March 15, 1813, in New Jersey and died May 20, 1900, in Pennsylvania. The children, besides Andrew J., whose name heads these lines, were: William C., of Lehigh, Pa., the general manager of the Lehigh Valley Emery Wheel Company, who holds a prominent position in the city, is at present a member of the city council and has been three times married; George W., who is married, and is living in Laurel Run, Pa., where he holds a position with the Lehigh Valley Railroad; Thomas, married, a cabinet maker in New Haven; David, married, and a decorator and painter in Brooklyn, N. Y., where he died; Agnes, who married Hiram Transue, a farmer, and died in Delaware Water Gap, Pa.; two children who died in infancy.

Andrew Jackson McCormick was born in Phillipsburg, N. J., and had his education very largely in the public schools of Easton, Pa. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to the cabinet maker's trade to a man who did not treat him well, and he ran away after working about a year, and made his way to his widowed mother, who was living at that time in Brooklyn, N. Y. His father died when he was but five years of age, shortly after the great fire, and the vast change of the family fortunes indicated the greatness of that disaster.

In Brooklyn the stout young lad worked for a stair-builder some six months and then clerked in a hardware and cutlery store for about twelve years. At the expiration of that period he began a business in hardware and painters' supplies, with a partner; the firm was known as A. J. McCormick & Co., located at 914-916 and 977 Fulton street. The firm conducted a very successful business from 1874 until 1880, when Mr. McCormick sold out to his partner on account of ill-health, and removed to Coventry, Conn., where he went on a farm in hopes of regaining his health. In 1883 he came to Tolland and settled on a farm belonging to his wife's mother. It consists of ninety-four acres, and there he still resides, carrying on a considerable papering and painting business in addition to his farming operations. Mr. McCormick is making quite a business of poultry raising. For several years he was secretary of the Tolland Grange and is one of the active workers in that valuable organization. All the family belong to the Methodist Church.

Mr. McCormick is a staunch Republican, and has served on the board of selectmen for a number of years, and at present is its chairman. He was one of the special assessors of the town in 1893, having served as assessor for several years. Mr. McCormick has also filled the office of justice of the peace with satisfaction to the community and credit to himself. He was also a corporator of the Savings Bank of Tolland, and a director in the public library.

Mr. McCormick was married Sept. 6, 1871, to Lizzie Naomi, the daughter of William Hamlyn, and a native of New York. She died Feb. 6, 1877, at the age of twenty-five years, and was mother to Frank Lockwood, who was born July 24, 1872, and Andrew Jackson, Jr., born May 16, 1875. Both these sons are at home. Mr. McCormick was married a second time, April 15, 1878, to Isabelle M. Woodruff, born Nov. 27, 1858, and a daughter of David and Nancy S. (Benham) Woodruff. To this union were born: Edith Abbie, born Sept. 5, 1881, deceased April 13, 1898; Ida May, April 16, 1884, at home; Clara Belle, born March 18, 1888, at home; Wilbur Benham, born July 1, 1901.

Mr. McCormick is an ideal citizen, well liked, and highly esteemed in the community.

DART. This is an old family that has long been identified with the growth and advancement of Tolland and Hartford counties, where its various representatives have been prominent farmers and tillers of the soil. Records in Bolton show that many years ago the Darts were among the first farmers of the town, whither Daniel Dart came from New London about 1720.

William Dart was a native of Bolton, where he grew up and married Charlotte Perrin. He lived on land owned by his parents and was engaged in farming until 1794, when he moved to South Windsor, where he died Nov. 9, 1828, aged seventy-two years. Mrs. Charlotte Dart died March 17, 1837, at the age of seventy-two years. Both were buried in the cemetery near Talcottville.

Oliver Dart, the only son of William and Charlotte Dart, was born in Bolton, April 13, 1786, and accompanied his parents on their removal to South Windsor when he was eight years old. There he was married Dec. 25, 1809, to Alice Collins, who was born in 1792, and died Aug. 24, 1814. To this union were born two children: William Dart, Jr., born Nov. 25, 1810; and Emeline, born Aug. 17, 1812, who died June 8, 1815. Oliver Dart married Amanda Barber, his second wife, April 26, 1818. She was born Nov. 29, 1794, and died Nov. 5, 1874. He died Feb. 27, 1870. His boyhood days were spent in the Dart District in South Windsor, where he attended district school. After his marriage he settled on his father's farm, devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits, and engaged in farming on a large scale, at one time having 100 acres of rye alone. When he died he owned about 200 acres of land, but his holdings of real estate in former years had greatly exceeded this. Mr. Dart was always interested in everything that aimed to promote the public good. In his early life he was a Whig, but became a Democrat in his later years. In 1852 Mr. and Mrs. Dart became members of the Vernon Centre Congregational Church. To Oliver and Amanda (Barber) Dart were born six children: (1) Adron, born May 2, 1819, died March 18, 1886. He was married to Wealthy Avery for his first wife, who died June 1, 1862. He married for his second wife Hannah Kingsbury, of Coventry. By each marriage he had three children. His home was in South Windsor, where he was engaged in farming. (2) Emeline, born Aug. 7, 1824, died April 25, 1851. (3) George, born Oct. 23, 1827, died Aug. 3, 1889. (4) Cyrus, born Oct. 11, 1829, went West and made his home in Illinois. He wrote home saying, "Dont write again until you hear from me, as I am going farther West," and was never heard from again. (5) James, born March 19, 1832, died Jan. 15, 1900. He married Flavia Barber, by whom he had nine children, six of whom are now living. He settled on the old homestead in Windsor. (6) Oliver, born March 23, 1839, died Aug. 11, 1879. He was three times married. Emily Goodrich, his first wife, died Sept. 25, 1860, soon after her marriage. Aurelia Barber was his third wife, by whom he had two children, Dora and Leonard. She died Jan. 7, 1896.

Oliver Dart met with an experience during the war of the Rebellion that few could have survived. He was a member of the 14th C. V. I., and Dec. 14, 1862, when the battle of Fredericksburg was at its height, a shell burst in the midst of Company D, his company, killing a number of men and blinding Mr. Symonds, of Rockville, while a fragment of the shell tore off the lower portion of Mr. Dart's face and jaw, and inflicted a severe wound on his arm. For hours he was left on the field of battle, thought to be either dead or fatally wounded. With others he was sent to the hospital at Washington, being met on the way by his older brother, George, who found him neglected and in a terrible condition. From the hospital at Washington he was presently taken to the home of James Dart, where he underwent the first operation his wound demanded. At the old homestead he passed through the second, and gradually made recovery. George Dart and his wife were almost constantly with their injured brother, and gave him every care and attention. In time he recovered, though the wound was always visible and in later years his mind was somewhat affected, undoubtedly due to the shock and the suffering that ensued from the injury.

George Dart was born in South Windsor, where he grew to manhood. He attended the home schools and spent two terms at Manchester. Feb. 9, 1852, he married Harriet M. Thompson, a daughter of James A. and Maria (Barber) Thompson, and a granddaughter of John McKnight and Sabra (Allen) Thompson. Soon after his marriage he was given a farm of sixty acres by his father. Upon this he built a house and barn, and settled down for farming, but at the request of his father soon returned to the old homestead, where he devoted himself to the care and comfort of the parents as long as they lived. His entire life was devoted to farming, and he threw himself heartily into it.

Though a hard worker, he found time to devote himself to the interests of his town and church. In politics he was a Democrat, and served in various offices, as selectman, assessor and representative. When he was fourteen years of age he united with the Congregational Church at Wapping, and in 1852, with his parents, united with the church at Vernon Centre. Intimately associated with the church for a number of years before his death he served it as deacon. He was a man of few words, but of strong convictions. Mrs. George Dart joined the Vernon Centre Congregational Church in 1852, and is still a member.

Mr. and Mrs. George Dart had the following children: Ella M., born Aug. 25, 1856, who married Norman H. Strong, Nov. 28, 1878, and is the mother of two children; George W., born Oct. 17, 1859, who married Alice M. Brown, May 1, 1889; Albert C., born Jan. 5, 1862, who married Hattie L. Skinner, March 23, 1886, and has one daughter; Charles O., of Vernon, born Nov. 9, 1864, who married Eva M. Isham, June 20, 1884, and has one son.

CHARLES OLIVER DART, a son of George Dart, was born in South Windsor, where he grew to manhood, attending the home school until he reached the age of seventeen years, when he began farm work in the town of Vernon, which he followed for three years. For a time he was employed as a watchman in the Hockanum mills. For a year he tilled a rented farm in Vernon, and in December, 1891, purchased the George Hammond place at Vernon Centre. This is one of the attractive homes of the place. Mr. Dart began his farming in a modest way, giving special attention to dairying, and though he has been in business but a few years, he has built one of the largest and most profitable dairies in the town. He keeps thirty-eight cows and sells his milk at retail in Rockville. He has met with reverses, but he has overcome them in a large and courageous way. In 1898 he lost his barns by fire, but has rebuilt.

Mr. Dart was united in marriage, June 20, 1884, with Eva M. Isham, a daughter of Noah W. and Caroline F. (Sanford) Isham, and their son, Elmer Sanford Dart, was born Jan. 12, 1886. This young lad is now in the junior class at the Rockville high school. Mr. Dart is a Democrat, but has never had political aspirations. He attends the services of the Vernon Centre Congregational Church, and in a social way belongs to the United Workmen and the Heptasophs at Rockville.

ALBERT CYRUS DART, born in South Windsor, Conn., attended the home schools, and continued his schooling in the winter until he was nineteen years old. He remained at home until he was twenty-two years old assisting in the farm work. Prior to this, however, he had been absent for seven months assisting in the farm work at Meriden. Mr. Dart bought the Holmes farm in the Northwest District of Vernon, in November, 1885. From this farm, which contained 166 acres at the time of its purchase, he has since sold fourteen acres. When he bought it Mr. Dart found the land exhausted and starved almost beyond the possibility of recovery. However, he has worked hard, given his farm anxious thought, and brought it up to a high pitch of fertility. It now amply supports thirty cows and four horses and yields a good profit to its owner. Mr. Dart sells his milk to the creamery at Wapping, of which he is a stockholder and director.

Mrs. Hattie L. Dart is a daughter of George T. and Harriet M. (Dart) Skinner. Their daughter, Eula Marion, was born March 13, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Dart belong to the Vernon Grange. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

GEORGE WILLIAM DART, a noted young farmer of South Windsor, was born in the town where he is engaged in agriculture, and in his home district, which is known as the "Dart District," received his schooling. When a young man he began farming for wages, being employed in the neighboring farming communities, and at the age of twenty-one began teaming for a grist mill company. For about a year he worked for that establishment and then came back home to remain another year. His next move was to go to Northfield, where he spent two years, when he came back to work in the Hockanum mills for about a year; he then bought a farm of seventy acres in the Dart District, which he farmed for two years, and then sold, in order to return again to the old homestead, where he was needed, and where he remained four years. For three and a half years he was employed on the Hayden farm, and in the spring of 1899 located on the Oliver Dart, Jr., place, a farm of about sixty acres. There he engages in general farming and dairying, keeping about twelve cows, and is also a stockholder and a director of the Vernon Creamery. Mr. Dart is a Republican, and attends the Congregational Church. He belongs to the United Workmen and is also a member of the Wapping Grange. Mrs. George William Dart is a daughter of J. B. and Belle (Seymour) Brown, and their daughter, Belle Harriet, was born May 11, 1893.

ADOLPH KORPER. While later in life decisions of great importance may be made, the life history of many notable men turns upon a choice that was made in youth. In 1866 at the age of twenty years Adolph Korper, now one of the most prominent citizens of Willington, Tolland county, resolved to migrate from Bohemia, his native land, to America. Within three years he became connected with a leading manufacturing company of the town, to which he has since devoted over a third of a century, and which has repeatedly honored him officially for his intelligence and invaluable services. These two events may be regarded as critical turning points of his most successful career.

Mr. Korper was born in Bohemia, Austria, Feb. 27, 1846, the younger son of David and Lena (Lederer) Korper, and the grandson of Samuel Korper. The father was a prosperous cloth dealer of Bohemia, who died at the age of fifty-six years, his wife surviving to the age of seventy-six years. Moritz Korper, the elder brother of Adolph, born in 1844, was first a bookkeeper, and later the partner in a commission merchant in Vienna, where he died some years ago.

Adolph Korper received an excellent common school education in the village of Tereschau, his school days ending when he was fifteen years of age. He began his mercantile career as office boy in a large seed store at Prague, the firm shipping heavily to Hamburg, for the American trade. He remained there three years, and during that time he was several times promoted with corresponding increase in wages, unsolicited, because of his efficient services. He had diligently applied himself to his work, in every possible way advancing the interests of his employer. He then accepted a position as clerk in Bohemia, and two years later he came to America. He had been excused from service in the army of his Fatherland, and procuring a passport, he sailed from Bremen and arrived in New York City, June 8, 1866.

For several months Mr. Korper remained among friends and relatives in New York, but stirred with ambition to provide independently for himself he started out on the road with some "Yankee notions" as merchandise. While at Willington, Conn., in 1867, selling his wares, he was offered a position in the plant of the Willington Glass Co. At first he worked at odd jobs, but his exceptional intelligence and his willingness to work attracted the attention of his employers and he was given charge of the store and also acted as bookkeeper. Here he remained until the plant was destroyed by fire; then in October, 1868, entered the employ of E. A. Buck & Co., at Westford, Conn. Three months later he was offered a position as bookkeeper with Gardiner Hall, Jr., & Co., of South Willington, which he accepted. With the exception of a few months in 1872, he has since Jan. 18, 1869, been uninterruptedly connected with this company. He has acted as paymaster and has had general charge of the financial end of the business, under Mr. Hall, for over thirty-three years, during which time he has made out for the firm every check, whether business or personal. From childhood Mr. Korper had been careful, conscientious and conservative in his business methods, and these qualifications combined with his readiness to be of service to his employers, has led to the conferring upon him of responsibilities which have made his services almost indispensable.

In politics Mr. Korper is a staunch Republican, and he has taken an active part in public affairs.

Charles H. Koser

He has served his town as first selectman continuously since 1886, having probably held that office longer than any other man in the State. He represented the town of Willington in the State Legislature in the session of 1879, serving on an important committee. He has also served the town in various other capacities, always to the complete satisfaction of his constituents and with credit to himself. He served as county commissioner of Tolland county from July 1, 1891, to July 1, 1895, and during this time he was secretary of the board of commissioners. Since 1870 he has been a member of Uriel Lodge, No. 24, F. & A. M., of Mansfield, Conn., and he has for a number of years filled the office of secretary and treasurer of the lodge. He attends the Baptist Church of Willington, of which his wife is a member.

Mr. Korper married, Aug. 25, 1873, Mary Isabel Brigham, daughter of the late John P. Brigham, who was one of Tolland's prominent citizens. To Mr. and Mrs. Korper have been born four children, namely: Lena Grace, who was married June 2, 1902, to George W. Brockett, stenographer for James H. McDonald, highway commissioner of the State; Louis John, bookkeeper for Charles L. Boss, lumber and coal dealer, Willimantic, Conn.; Leo Adolph, bookkeeper for Hillhouse & Taylor, coal and lumber dealers of Willimantic; and Leslie Earl, a student in the Willimantic high school, class of 1904.

In the full sense of the word Mr. Korper is a self-made man. His energy, perseverance and pluck have been among his predominant characteristics. He is highly esteemed and respected, not only by his fellow townsmen, but by all who know him. His unselfish interest in town affairs has been repeatedly demonstrated; for whatever measure or plan has for its aim the welfare of Willington, has ever received his hearty and most cordial support. He is a typical and representative citizen, loyal and devoted to all public and patriotic calls, ever ready to sink personal comfort, or even gain, at the behests of public weal.

HENRY K. SAFFORD. Among the well known and representative citizens of Woodstock, Windham county, none is held in higher estimation than Henry K. Safford. He is a member of one of the old New England families which has had much to do with the progress and development of this section of the Nutmeg State.

The first member of the family that is of record was the grandfather of Henry K. Safford, Ephraim Safford. His wife's name was Dorothy Morgan. He was a manufacturer of satinets, or jersey cloth, for the Southern trade, and prior to the great panic of 1837 was a man of fine property and of great influence in the community in which he resided, but during that panic he lost most of his property. He died in Canterbury.

Kirby Ephraim Stafford, the father of Henry K., was born June 15, 1808, in Canterbury, Conn., and died in Woodstock, Oct. 6, 1895. He married June 8, 1835, Sarah Bennett Raymond. This lady was born July 23, 1810, in the town of Canterbury and was the daughter of Joseph and Lydia Franklin Raymond. She died July 26, 1898, in Woodstock, leaving three children, all of whom were born in Canterbury. Lydia Franklin, born March 2, 1838, married June 15, 1858, in West Woodstock, Marshall Hunt Williams, who was born March 20, 1828, and was the son of William Pitt and Maria Theresa (Fox) Williams. Their children are: Sarah Maria, born Feb. 16, 1866, who married Sept. 22, 1895, Frederick James Williamson, son of James J. Williamson, of Woodstock, and had one daughter, Eunice Marion, Feb. 14, 1897; and Mary Lydia, born Nov. 3, 1868. The second child of Kirby Safford was Henry K. Joseph Raymond, born June 10, 1848, suffered death by accident, being thrown from a horse and killed, May 3, 1862.

The father of this family was for a few years in company with his father in the manufacturing business, and later conducted the mill for himself. He finally closed out the factory and removed to Brooklyn, Conn., where he leased a farm for two years, and in 1844 removed to West Woodstock, where he purchased the Rodney Martin farm of 180 acres. He operated this farm until the year 1880, when he sold it to his son, Henry. He passed the remaining years of his life with his daughter Mrs. Williams, in Woodstock. He was a staunch supporter of Democratic principles and was for years prominently identified with the interests of the town in which he lived. His chief characteristics were his great industry and activity, combining hard work with splendid business judgment, which secured him a very reasonable competence on which he lived the latter part of his life. He was an attendant and liberal supporter of the West Woodstock Congregational Church.

Henry K. Safford was born Feb. 26, 1841, in Canterbury, Conn. He was therefore but three years of age when the family removed to West Woodstock. He passed the period of his early boyhood and youth in attendance on the district and select schools of his home, and later supplemented this by a course at a select school in East Woodstock. He then tried school teaching for one term in North Ashford, but finding it not to his liking, he returned to the home farm, where he has since lived with the exception of one year (1867) which he spent as clerk in a freight depot in Clinton, Mass. To the farm of 180 acres which he purchased of his father he added 170 acres, which made him one of the largest holders of real estate in the county. Nearly all of this is under a high state of cultivation. In the spring of 1902 he sold his farm in West Woodstock and is now living in South Woodstock, devoting his time to farming and his varied interests. In a fraternal way Mr. Safford affiliates with Crystal Lake Grange, No. 60, of Eastford, of which he has served as overseer and steward. In religious affairs he is an attendant on the services of the West Woodstock Congregational Church, where his wife is a leading member, having served as president of the Ladies' Aid Society for several years. Mr. Safford himself, though not a member, was one of the most active workers in connection with Winfield S. Kenyon, on the Building committee of the church, and in that connection has done a large amount of gratuitous service for the church organization.

Mr. Safford, like his father before him, is an earnest supporter of the principles of Jefferson, and has served his town six years on the board of selectmen, three years on the board of relief, a like period as assessor, and has been a member of the school board for several years. He is a man of fine business ability and his sound judgment in such matters has resulted in his being chosen as administrator and executor of several large estates.

Marriage was entered into by Mr. Safford, June 1, 1869. Daria Sherman, his wife, was born Jan. 11, 1846, in West Woodstock, and is the daughter of Robert Aplin and Cynthia (Underwood) Sherman. Her mother was a daughter of Deacon Laban Underwood. Robert A. Sherman, her father, was born in Pomfret, Conn. Early in life he was a carpenter, and later became a prosperous farmer of Woodstock, where he and his wife both died. To the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Safford the following children have been born: Robert Kirby, May 8, 1873, who married Nov. 25, 1901, May Helen Blackmar, daughter of Captain Erastus and Sarah Helm (Bigelow) Blackmar, of Woodstock, and who is now employed as a clerk in W. W. Sheldon's South Woodstock store; Florence Cynthia, born April 3, 1886, a student at Woodstock Academy, class of 1903.

FRANK ADELBERT HOPKINS, one of the well-known business men and esteemed residents of Putnam, Windham Co., Conn., comes of Rhode Island ancestry, both of his grandparents having been natives of that State.

Randall Hopkins, the paternal grandfather, was born in Centerville, R. I., where he married Zilphia Potter and they became the parents of one child, Stephen Green Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins was a blacksmith by trade and in following it was called upon to put the irons on the first water loom which was set up in Rhode Island. His skill was so great that he was known over a great part of the country and had he lived beyond the age of forty years, might have accomplished some notable work in his line. His home was in Centerville although he went to Woodstock, Conn., to look at land for his son, finally buying a farm of 150 acres for him there, returning then to Rhode Island, where he died.

Stephen Green Hopkins, only son of Randall and Zilphia (Potter) Hopkins, was born in Centerville, R. I., May 17, 1801, and died Nov. 26, 1888, in West Woodstock, Conn. Until he was thirty-five years of age he occupied a clerical position in a company store at Centerville. Removing to the farm in West Woodstock, purchased by his father, he engaged on that place in farming for the balance of his life. Mr. Hopkins was much more than the average farmer, being a man of literary tastes, who took a deep interest in passing events and to the best of his ability assisted in the great anti-slavery movement. One of the first in Woodstock to sympathize with anti-slavery doctrines, he continued through life to be an Abolitionist. Mr. Hopkins took great pleasure in his fine library and inculcated a love of reading in his children. While still a resident of his native State he was a colonel in the Rhode Island militia and was offered the position of general, but refused this honor. Never during life being anxious for public office, although an ardent member of the Republican party, he was called upon to serve in a number of positions in its gift and was Woodstock's representative in the Legislature at New Haven in 1849-1850. Consistent in everything, Mr. Hopkins was devoted to the interests of the Baptist Church, serving as clerk for a great number of years. An oil painting of Mr. Hopkins, executed when he was a youth of twenty years, in 1821, is one of the valued possessions of his son Frank, and this shows fair promise of the robust and intellectual man he became in later life.

The first marriage of Mr. Hopkins took place Dec. 26, 1824, to Eliza Ralph, of Centerville, R. I., born Nov. 3, 1807, in the same place, where she died July 17, 1828. The children of this union were: Phebe Harris, born Nov. 7, 1825, who died Aug. 23, 1845, in Centerville; and Eliza Ralph, born July 3, 1828, who died the first of the succeeding month. The second marriage of Mr. Hopkins occurred June 1, 1835, in Scituate, R. I., to Miss Maria Louise Fenner, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary (Angell) Fenner. Her death took place March 1, 1880, during a visit she was making to her childhood home at Scituate. The children of this second union were ten in number: (1) Stephen Randolph, born Jan. 28, 1837, in Warwick, R. I., has always been a farmer and is now a resident of West Woodstock. Dec. 20, 1859, he married Sarah Maria Bicknell, daughter of Erastus and Catherine (Work) Bicknell, and they have three children. Phebe Imogene, born March 14, 1862, married Holden Arnold, of Eastford, and now lives at Lebanon, where Mr. Arnold is a farmer and also conducts a grocery in Willimantic. The Arnold children are: Dora Imogene, born April 18, 1888; Maude Esther, born March 1, 1890; Ezra Holden; and Arthur. Arthur Bicknell, second child of Stephen R. Hopkins, born Feb. 8, 1876, died Sept. 7, 1892. Charles Francis, born July 3, 1878, is a clerk in Sheldon's grocery store at South Woodstock. (2) Francis Milton, born Feb. 22, 1839, in Woodstock, died Feb. 19, 1842, in Rhode Island. (3) Eliza Maria, born Aug. 19, 1841, in Woodstock, died there March 4, 1842. (4) Frank A., of this sketch. (5) Mary Eliza, born May 11, 1845, died April 7, 1847, in Woodstock. (6) Abby Louisa, born Aug. 7, 1847, in Woodstock, married Burgess Bradford of Woodstock, and died June 6, 1869. (7) Millard Fillmore, born Jan. 27, 1850, in Woodstock, lives on his mother's old homestead in Scituate, and on Feb. 11, 1880, married Marion J. Southwick. (8) Winfield Fenner, born Jan. 16, 1852, in Woodstock, died Jan. 15, 1853. (9) Mary Amelia, born Nov. 26, 1853, in Woodstock, on Jan. 29, 1881, married Frank E. Richmond, of Geneseo, Ill., where they now reside and have four children. (10) Addie Maria, born Feb. 4, 1859, in Woodstock, married George H. Sumner of West Woodstock, June 6, 1883.

Frank Adelbert Hopkins, son of Stephen Green and Maria Louise (Fenner) Hopkins, was born Jan. 22, 1843, in West Woodstock, Conn., and there attended the district schools, the Woodstock Academy, and spent one term at the Dudley, Mass. Academy. At the age of eighteen years he left school and two years later went to Chicago, Ill., where he became head clerk for the firm of Clark & Co., publishers, stationers, etc., continuing there for a year and a half, until the firm sold out, when he returned to Woodstock. Prior to this he had engaged in teaching and upon his return to his home he resumed that profession for one winter.

In the spring of 1865 Mr. Hopkins became a member of a party which went to Colorado, taking machinery to the quartz mines. It was necessary to drive teams of oxen from Nebraska City, which was then the end of the railroad line, over 650 miles to their destination in Colorado. This party had seventeen loaded wagons and made the trip in safety. Mr. Hopkins remained in Colorado until the following spring, in April going to Denver. In June, 1866, he was offered what proved to be a very excellent proposition, at Fort Larned, in the central part of Kansas, and made the trip from Denver on horseback, the distance being 450 miles. The business was the supplying of six government forts with beef, and Mr. Hopkins bought a third interest in the contracts and for one year superintended the business, remaining there two years.

While at Fort Larned Mr. Hopkins, who has always been an excellent business man, in company with another dealer, bought 528 head of Texas cattle and took charge of them. These he later sold to an Indian contractor. In the meantime he provided the fort with fresh milk for a time, keeping twenty-three milch cows and getting twelve and one-half cents per quart. Another business venture of Mr. Hopkins during his residence in the West was in Kansas, where, in partnership with W. F. Steere, also of Woodstock, he purchased and took up Government land on which they kept over 300 head of Texas cattle, wintering some, and marketing each fall.

Wishing to return to eastern civilization, after a residence of eight years in the West, Mr. Hopkins decided to leave the plains and return to his home which he did after selling out his western cattle interests. In the following spring he became a clerk in the general store of Ezra C. Mays, in West Woodstock, where he remained a year and then accepted a similar position with Samuel Slater, who operated at Webster, Mass., one of the largest general stores in the State. As manager of the furniture department, Mr. Hopkins remained with Mr. Slater for seventeen years.

In May, 1890, Mr. Hopkins came to Putnam, Conn., as bookkeeper for the Putnam Foundry & Machine Corporation, a few months later, on the meeting of the directors, being elected assistant secretary and treasurer and superintendent, which very responsible position he still holds. In the year of his location in Putnam, Mr. Hopkins added to the value and attractiveness of this city by the erection of his residence on School street. At a sacrifice to himself, he had become the owner of the 160 acre homestead farm, April 1, 1877, in order that his dearly beloved parents might live out their lives on the old place. This property he sold in 1890.

Through all his business changes, Mr. Hopkins has remained a staunch Republican, although his tastes have never led him into the political arena. His busy life has never obliterated his early religious teaching, his devotion to the Baptist Church having been marked wherever his location. In Webster he was the beloved superintendent of the Sunday-school for ten years, a deacon in the church for seven years, and for the same period the church collector. Two years after settling in Putnam he was chosen church treasurer and held that office three years, was superintendent of the Sunday-school for six years, has been one of the deacons five years, and is a trustee and member of the Society's committee. In fraternal life, Mr. Hopkins belongs to the United Order of the Golden Cross and the Royal Arcanum.

On Nov. 20, 1871, Mr. Hopkins was united in marriage with Ella Josephine Barber, daughter of Joseph R. Barber, extended mention of whom will be found elsewhere. To Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins have been born the following children: Charlotte Abigail, born March 2, 1873, in West Woodstock, who after graduating from the Webster high school, taught for three terms in West Woodstock and Thompson and in 1890 became the very efficient bookkeeper for the Putnam Foundry & Machine Corporation, holding this responsible position at the present time; Grace Agnes, born Feb. 11, 1875, who graduated from the Putnam high school, taught for three years in Putnam, and passed out of life, July 10, 1898; Maud Ethel, born in Webster, Mass., Oct. 20, 1877, in 1899 married to John P. Sabin, of Putnam; Judith Barber, born Nov. 6, 1884, in Webster, who graduated at the Putnam high school in 1902, and is now a student of the Woman's College of Brown University; and Alice May, born Dec. 7, 1886, in Webster, a student at the Putnam high school—a family of remarkably intelligent and cultured young ladies.

By prompt and efficient performance of every duty, by an upright life and a liberal public spirit, Mr. Hopkins has won the esteem of those with whom he has come in contact, and living up to the demands of the day, he has identified himself with Putnam and works for Putnam's advancement.

JAMES J. BUNDY. It is unfortunate that more complete data are not available concerning the Bundy family in connection with the identification of the name with the annals of New England colonial history, and though in public records are found references to those bearing the name in the early epoch of American history, still the information is slight and so disconnected that no consecutive narrative of genealogy can be secured at the present day. We are, however, able to enter an interesting record concerning the representatives of the name in Windham county, Connecticut, where the family was established many generations ago and where a distinguished and honored representative of the present day is James J. Bundy, of Woodstock.

The Bundy family was not numerically strong in New England in the early colonial epoch, but it is found that one John Bundy was a resident of Plymouth in 1643 and that he removed thence to Boston and later, in all probability, to Taunton, Mass. There was a James Bundy, born in 1695, who in company with his wife and five sons and probably two daughters, located in Walpole, N. H., where he was residing as early as 1762 and where he died in 1772, the locality from which he removed being not known. At the organization of the town of Thompson, Conn., in 1785, one Ebenezer Bundy, who was undoubtedly the grandfather of James J., took the freeman's oath at the first town meeting, held June 21, of that year. He became one of the prominent and influential citizens of the town, and by a vote of the enfranchised citizens of the same, Feb. 16, 1786, provision was made for the establishing of two work-houses for the care of the indigent. Mr. Bundy was chosen to provide one of these houses and to become master of the same, and Deacon James Dike was chosen for a similar position. As masters of the poor these two worthy citizens provided places for their unfortunate charges who were cared for by various families in the town, while from four shillings to one pound and six pence per week was paid for their keeping. The masters also provided clothing and medical attendance. About this time there was little activity in business, times having been hard and money scarce for a period of several years, and the local mills for grinding, sawing and cloth-dressing supplied the indispensable necessities. Ebenezer Bundy had at this time succeeded the Eatons in the ownership and operation of the cotton mills on the upper falls of the Quinebaug river and he entered into brisk competition with old Captain Cargill, who was located half a mile below him. A road was laid out and constructed for their especial benefit in 1782, the same running east of Fort hill and through Thompson, thus considerably shortening the distance to Boston, the advantages thus gained being so unmistakable that no damages were paid to the owners of the land traversed by the new thoroughfare. An effort was also made to secure a more direct road to Bundy's mill, but the plan was ineffective. He finally disposed of his mill property to Smith Wilkinson, the pioneer cotton manufacturer of that locality.

Of the children of Ebenezer Bundy we are able to offer a brief record, as follows: Asa was a resident of West Woodstock, where he was engaged in in farming until his death; Hiram, who was a painter by trade and vocation, died in South Woodstock; Adolphus removed to New York City, where he passed the remainder of his life; Prosper, the father of James J., is made the subject of more detailed mention in following paragraphs; Thomas, who was a talented portrait painter, remained a bachelor until his death, which occurred in West Woodstock.

Thus it is evident that representatives of the Bundy family were numbered among the early settlers of Thompson, Conn., while later the name became one of prominence in Woodstock and Putnam. In the town records of Thompson is found mention of Silas Bundy, who was married, May 3, 1790, to Lucy Mitchell, and the names of their four children, with respective dates of birth, are there entered as follows. William, born Oct. 20, 1791; Charles, Oct. 25, 1792; Augustus, Oct. 5, 1797; and Lucy, Sept. 4, 1804. At a later point in the same records, mention is made of the marriage of Thomas Bundy to Sarah Sheldon, Dec. 28, 1858.

Prosper Bundy was born in Putnam (Ballou's Village), April 20, 1805, and his death occurred in Putnam Oct. 20, 1880. In the year 1829 was solemnized his marriage to Miss Lucretia Vinton, who was born in Woodstock, April 13, 1810, and who died in the same town, Oct. 13, 1884. She was a daughter of Timothy and Dolly (Shumway) Vinton and was a descendant in the fifth generation of John Vinton and his wife, who were the immigrant ancestors and of whom record is found at Lynn, Mass., as early as 1648, in which year is recorded the birth of their first child. It is practically well authenticated that they later resided in Malden, Mass. To Timothy Vinton the lineage is directly traced through John (2), John (3), and Joseph.

John Vinton (2) was born in Lynn, Mass., March 2, 1650, and Aug. 26, 1677, he married Hannah Green, who was born Feb. 24, 1659 or 1660, the daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Green, of Malden. Mr. Vinton was a worker of iron, and he resided in Malden until 1695, when he removed to Woburn, Mass., where he died in 1727, known as a man of energy and marked business acumen. His son, John Vinton (3) was born about 1680, and March 9, 1702, he married Abigail Richardson, of Woburn, who was born Nov. 4, 1683; and who died June 21, 1720. Mr. Vinton subsequently married Abigail Converse and after her death took unto himself a third wife in the person of Hannah Richardson. He resided in turn in Woburn, Stoneham and Dudley, Mass., and was a man of distinctive ability and of marked prominence in public affairs. He was a member of the first board of selectmen on the organization of Stoneham and served in that capacity for a term of six years. He also was incumbent of the office of justice of the peace and was lieutenant and later captain in the militia, while in 1734 he was a representative in the Massachusetts Legislature. He died in Dudley in 1760. Joseph Vinton, great-grandfather of James J. Bundy in the maternal line, was born in Stoneham, Mass., July 24, 1714, and Feb. 19, 1733 or 1734, he was united in marriage to Hannah Baldwin, who was born in Stoneham, Sept. 4, 1715, the daughter of Timothy and Hannah (Richardson) Baldwin. Mr. Vinton removed to Dudley not long after 1735, and there he passed the residue of his life, his death occurring in 1795. Timothy Vinton, son of Joseph, was born Feb. 14, 1749, and his marriage to Dolly Shumway, of Thompson (formerly Killingly), Conn., was there solemnized, and they afterward took up their residence in Woodstock, where they passed the remainder of their lives. Mr. Vinton was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, having first been a private in a company of minute men commanded by Captain Nathaniel Healey, in Ebenezer Larnard's regiment, which marched to the front at the time of the memorable Lexington alarm; later he served for three months in Captain Benjamin Richardson's company, in Colonel Dike's regiment, in defense of Dorchester Heights.

In his boyhood Prosper Bundy entered upon an apprenticeship at the painter's trade, and after attaining years of maturity and beginning his independent career, he resided on a small farm in Woodstock, to which he gave his attention during his spare time while carrying on the work of his trade in and about Woodstock, employing at certain times several men and doing work in many of the adjoining towns. Finally, in 1846, he removed to Quinebaug (now Putnam), where superior opportunities were offered him in connection with his chosen vocation. He located in what was known as the "Upper Village," in the vicinity of the present site of the Morse mills, and after several years he removed to the vicinity of the present plant of the Putnam Woolen Company, and still later took up his abode in a house which stood opposite the present Congregational Church, on Main street. Soon after acquiring possession of that property he rebuilt the house, which was found inadequate for the accommodation of his large family, and the building was eventually converted into a business block, which was destroyed by fire in November, 1901, thus obliterating one of the old landmarks of the town. On the site has been erected the Bradley block, a modern and attractive structure. Mr. Bundy was the first painter to locate in Putnam and for many years was the only one there engaged in his vocation. He there continued to successfully conduct a business in that line until a few years prior to his death, when he retired, turning over the business to his eldest son and passing the remainder of his days in well earned rest and repose. His remains were laid to rest in the North Woodstock cemetery, and there also were deposited, only a few years later, all that was mortal of his cherished and devoted wife. Mr. Bundy was a man of marked energy and industry, progressive in his methods and ever animated by the loftiest integrity of purpose, while his genial and kindly disposition gained to him the friendship of all with whom he came in contact, though he was in no sense a sycophant, but a man of stern convictions and one who ever had the courage to defend his position, in assuming which he invariably demanded the approval of his sensitive conscience. He and his wife were zealous and devoted members of the Congregational Church, to whose support they contributed liberally. In his earlier life he was a staunch supporter of the Whig party of the old line, but upon the organization of the Republican party he transferred his allegiance to the same and ever afterward was a stalwart advocate of its principles and policies.

At this juncture is consistently entered a brief record concerning the children of Prosper and Lucretia (Vinton) Bundy. (1) Sarah Smith, who was born in North Woodstock, May 17, 1831, became the wife of William H. Austin, of Putnam, who was a painter by trade and who was for many years associated with his father-in-law in the business. Mrs. Austin died in January, 1856, at the age of twenty-five years, leaving one daughter, Emma Elvena, who married Frank Day. She died in California. (2) Mary Jane, who was born in North Woodstock, Jan. 9, 1833, married Francis G. Blackmar of Putnam, who served in the Civil war four years—one year in the 7th regiment, C. V. I., and later three years in the 18th regiment. He was taken prisoner at Richmond and was in Andersonville prison. He was identified with the construction of the original line of the Hartford & Worcester Railroad through Putnam. Mrs. Blackmar died in Putnam, leaving three children, namely: Edwin Prosper and Frances Estella, who now reside in Franklin, Mass.; and Susan Maude, who resides in Providence, R. I. (3) Julia Ann, who was born in North Woodstock, Aug. 1, 1834, married Charles L. Wilcox, of Norwich, Conn., who is a baggage master in the employ of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, and they now reside in New London, Conn., having no children. (4) Susan was born in North Woodstock, April 22, 1836, and there her death occurred in June, 1840. (5) Frances Lucretia, who was born in North Woodstock, Aug. 15, 1837, married Charles Henry Perkins, who is the inventor of the "Rhode Island" horse shoe and who is now at the head of the Rhode Island Horse Shoe Company, engaged in the manufacture of this shoe at Valley Falls, near the city of Providence, where he maintains his home. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins have had five children: Charles H., Jr.; Willard Clifford; Ada Lucretia; and two who died in infancy. (6) Thomas Larkin, born in North Woodstock, June 21, 1839, married Sarah Sheldon, of Putnam, where he conducted the leading painting business for several years prior to his death, having succeeded his father. He died in Putnam Dec. 12, 1897, leaving one daughter, Mabel Viola, who is the wife of Clayton Gill, engaged in the painting business in Putnam. (7) Henry Milton, who was born in North Woodstock, April 12, 1842, was first married to Nettie Talbot, of Providence, R. I., and after her death to Sarah C. McFarland, of Little Compton, that State, where he died May 2, 1892. He was for a time associated with his father in the painting business and later became identified with the Rhode Island Horse Shoe Company, with whose interests he was concerned for several years, after which he took up farming in Little Compton, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was a valiant soldier in the war of the Rebellion, having been a member of Co. G, 18th C. V. I., with which he served for a term of three years. He left four children, namely: Henry M., Jr., Willard Chestnut, Richard Fairfax and Elizabeth C. (8) James Jephtha, the next in order of birth, is the immediate subject of this review. (9) Susan Emily, who was born in North Woodstock, Aug. 24, 1845, was married in 1868 to Charles Briggs, of Canton, Maine. He was engaged in farming for a number of years and later became identified with the construction of the Hartford & Worcester Railroad through Putnam, being employed in the capacity of foreman. He died in Pomfret, Conn., in 1870, leaving no children, and Dec. 21, 1871, his widow was united in marriage to Samuel H. Newton, of Worcester, Mass., who is a painter by trade but who has for the past several years been an overseer in the Central mills, in Southbridge, Mass., where they now maintain their home. They have no children. (10)

Martha Adelia, the tenth and youngest of the children of Prosper and Lucretia Bundy, was born in Putnam, Feb. 7, 1847, and she married George E. Weaver, of Providence, R. I., where he is successfully engaged in the hardware business, their home being in the town of Warwick, a suburb of that city. They have two children, Ardele and Harry, the former having been born in France, where her parents were sojourning at the time.

James Jephtha Bundy was born on the homestead farm in North Woodstock, June 10, 1843, and was reared and educated in Putnam, receiving his educational discipline in the public schools, having been less than three years of age at the time of his parents' removal to Putnam. After leaving school Mr. Bundy was for several years associated with his father in his extensive painting business, and he then entered the employ of the Rhode Island Horse Shoe Company. Shortly afterward he took the contract for the work in the hammering department of the company's plant, and he continued to be identified with the operations of this corporation for more than thirty-five years, as a contractor, employing an average of about 120 hands, and in the meanwhile accumulating considerable property in the city of Providence and elsewhere. As a progressive and discriminating business man he attained a high degree of success and early laid the firm foundation for that generous and grateful prosperity which is now his portion and which enabled him to retire from the more active duties of business in 1894, since which time he has given his attention to looking after his various financial interests and investments, while he has taken up his permanent abode on the old Bundy homestead farm, in West Woodstock, the home of his parents. He still passes a portion of his time in Providence, but looks upon Woodstock as his home, and there he enjoys the unequivocal esteem and friendship of the community in which the name he bears has long been an honored one.

In his political proclivities Mr. Bundy is a staunch Republican, taking a proper interest in public affairs and never shirking any of the duties devolving upon him as a citizen, though the honors of political office have never presented sufficient attraction to lead him to seek public preferment. Fraternally he is identified with Crescent Lodge, No. 24, I. O. O. F., in the city of Providence. Although not a member of any religious organization Mr. Bundy has the deepest reverence for the spiritual verities and is numbered among the liberal supporters of the Baptist Church in West Woodstock.

In September, 1863, Mr. Bundy was united in marriage to Miss Mary Josephine Boylan, born Oct. 16, 1841, in Ireland, daughter of Mr. Boylan, of Providence, where her death occurred July 2, 1880. She became the mother of six children, namely: (1) Lillian Gertrude, born Feb. 7, 1865, died April 9, 1865; (2) Ida Frances, who was born in Providence, Feb. 14, 1866, and who is now the wife of Herbert Ricker, an expert accountant of Providence, where they maintain their home, which is brightened by the presence of their three children, Charles Herbert, James Everett and Howard Bundy; (3) Ella May, born in Providence, March 6, 1868, who became the wife of Robert Soper, of Providence, where she died, without issue, Feb. 7, 1899; (4) Frederick Eugene, Dec. 21, 1869, deceased Dec. 26, 1879; (5) James Everett, Sept. 11, 1871, deceased April 16, 1890; (6) Albert Newton, Sept. 13, 1874, deceased July 25, 1875.

Mr. Bundy consummated a second marriage June 28, 1897, being then united to Miss Clara Eliza Angell, daughter of Gideon and Mary (Ingalls) Angell, of Providence, and of this union no children have been born. Mrs. Bundy was a registered pharmacist at the time of her marriage, prior to which she had successfully conducted a drug store of her own in Providence, carrying on the business for a period of thirteen years. She is a woman of culture and gracious refinement, and the attractive home in West Woodstock is a center of cordial hospitality and a favorite rendezvous of a wide circle of friends.

RANDALL. The woolen and other manufacturing interests of Rockville, Tolland county, attracted in an early day the attention of some of the brightest and most progressive young men of England to its possibilities, and they came thither to find work for themselves and homes for their families. In this way some of the best families of the city have been established, and the Randall family, now represented by George W. and Francis A. Randall, who hold an enviable position in the city's commercial circles, had its beginning in the coming of William Randall to Rockville in 1856.

George Randall, the father of William and the grandfather of George W. and F. A. Randall, lived and died in North Bradley, England. He was a weaver, and his wife, Maria Stillman, was also engaged in the same work. George Randall died at the age of forty-seven years, and his widow came to the United States in 1867, making her home at Rockville, where she died when seventy-nine years old. The parents of George Randall were George and Edith (Chapman) Randall, and their entire lives were spent in England. Eleven children were born to George and Maria Randall, as follows: William; Ann, who is Mrs. Walters, of Rockville; Jane, who married William H. Jones, and lives in Rockville; Charlotte, who is Mrs. Edward Marshman, of Rockville; George, a farmer in Oregon; Amelia, who is Mrs. John Hook, of Rockville; Maria, the widow of Thomas Nichols, of Rockville; Samuel, who died in Rockville at the age of eleven years; and three others, who died in infancy.

William Randail came to this country in early life, and landed in New York after a long and tedious voyage. Coming to Rockville he found employment in the Rock mill at small wages, but it was good in that it was a chance, and he made rapid progress in mill work, presently becoming overseer in the spinning department of the Florence mill. In his maturer years he became engaged in business for himself and conducted a bottling establishment on Village street, succeeding M. M. Bacon, and building up an extensive trade in carbonated beverages. Previous to this venture he had opened a grocery store on the same street, and in 1875 he gave up mill work to devote himself entirely to his interests in the grocery and the bottling establishment. He died in 1890 at the age of fifty-seven years. Starting with nothing but his own energy he became a prominent and successful business man, whose reliability was never questioned; a man of public spirit and broad views, he represented the town in the General Assembly of 1884 and 1887. Devoted to the success of the Republican party, he was a good citizen and a patriotic and loyal son of his adopted country, taking pride in her institutions, and jealous of her good name. Mr. Randall was a member of Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., at Rockville, and charter member of the Hockanum Benevolent Society. One of the organizers of St. John's Church, he was a leading man in the affairs of the Episcopal denomination, and served as a vestryman for several years.

Mr. Randall was married in July, 1856, in Rockville, Conn., to Miss Sarah Bailey, born near Trowbridge, England, Jan. 13, 1835, the daughter of Joseph and Ann (Bailey) Bailey. Joseph Bailey and his wife were both weavers by trade, and that was the principal occupation of the inhabitants of that part of England. Sarah Bailey came to the United States in the fall of 1855, sailing from Liverpool and landing at Philadelphia. After a short stay in Philadelphia she came to Rockville, where her brother Joseph Bailey, deceased, had preceded her some years. Her mother and brother William, now of Windsor, Conn., followed her some years later, and the former died in Rockville in 1865. Her marriage to William Randall was the culmination of a romance which began in England. To their union were born: George W., a sketch of whom will be found in a later paragraph; Albert, who died of scarlet fever at the age of five years and three months; Francis A., who is also mentioned in a later paragraph; Aletha I., the wife of O. F. Toop, of South Manchester, Conn. Mrs. William Randall is still living, in her home on Village street; she is a member of St. John's Episcopal Church, and bears herself with remarkable vigor.

GEORGE W. RANDALL, the present postmaster at Rockville, was born on Village street in that city, May 19, 1857, the oldest child of his parents, and was reared in that community. Early in his life he was put into practical business, and has made himself what he is by hard and faithful work. His schooling began in the west district school, where he had among others for his teachers Miss Sarah McCray and Miss Holton, and it terminated after one year in the high school, supplemented, however, by a course at Hannum's Business College in Hartford.

Mr. Randall entered the office of the Florence mill in 1875, where he was employed at clerical labor for the next four years. In May, 1879, he sailed from New York, on the White Star Liner, "Baltic," for England, for the purpose of recuperation and the study of instrumental music, for which he had no little natural gift. While in England he visited the homes of his parents and the ancestral cradle of his family for many generations back. The homeward voyage was made on the Inman liner, "City of Berlin," in November of the same year. On his return he founded the Rockville Music Store in the Henry Block. Previous to this, however, he had for some time been engaged in the sale of musical instruments, having had the agency for Mason & Hamlin for a number of years. The Music Store prospered and was sold in 1889 to P. Wendhiser and Son. During this time, while conducting his store, Mr. Randall had built up a considerable fire insurance business and this is still in his hands, under the firm name of Randall & Randall.

Mr. Randall was appointed postmaster in July, 1890, and very shortly began his duties. He has introduced into the management of the post office several features that added greatly to the comfort and satisfaction of the public. He continued postmaster four years, and was again appointed in April, 1899, and is in charge of the post office at the present time. A staunch Republican, for many years he has been a party worker, and has served as assessor in the city of Rockville and the town of Vernon. In 1886, while a candidate for Representative he was overwhelmed by the landslide of that year, and in common with all the other candidates went down to the defeat that waited the party in every doubtful state. During 1889 and 1890 he was president of the Republican Club. He has been for many years chairman of the Republican town committee.

Mr. Randall has various fraternal affiliations and relations, as a member of the Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M., Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Court Hearts of Oak, F. of A. In this last order he is a prominent member, and is at present Grand Chief Ranger of the Grand Court of Connecticut. Mr. Randall belongs to the Knights of Honor, the Sons of St. George, and has been a vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church, of which he is now the organist.

Mr. Randall was married Oct. 20, 1880, at the residence of his parents, to Miss Emma M. Hook, of Fitchburg, a native of Rockville, where she was born Jan. 28, 1860, the oldest daughter of Mark and Lydia (Greenland) Hook. Her parents came from England, and had their home in Rockville many years. To this union were born: Lillian A.; Ruby Frances; Louise Bailey.

Mr. Randall is a representative citizen of Rockville, where he has many friends.

FRANCIS A. RANDALL, one of the representative business men of Rockville, was born Jan. 19, 1861, in Rockville, where he attended the west district school, and had Miss Sarah McCray, Churchill Palmer and E. T. Hayward among his earlier and best teachers. A course at Hannum's Business College finished his education. When but a lad, and not at school, he was at work assisting his parents in their store, early manifesting his proclivities for business and receiving a most excellent training for his after work. He remained with his parents until twenty years old, when he opened a book and stationery store in the old Doane Block. The stock with which he began was small, and only occupied a part of the room, but it prospered, and in a few years so outgrew its narrow quarters that a change to his present location in the Henry Block became a necessity. Part of this room was occupied by his brother George W. In 1889 the music store was sold, and Mr. Randall has used the entire room for his own business. In 1893 the room was greatly enlarged to fit the growing business, and his present business standing is creditable in every way to his pluck, push, determination and energy.

Mr. Randall was married Oct. 5, 1882, to Miss Adell S. Bilson, born June 20, 1862, in Rockville, a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Franklin) Bilson, who came from Trowbridge, England. Her father was overseer for years in the burling department of the Hockanum mills of Rockville.

Mr. and Mrs. Randall have one child, Mildred S., who was born Feb. 5, 1890. Mr. Randall voted for the first time for James G. Blaine, and has since been a staunch supporter of the Republican party. Since 1893, he has served as city clerk of Rockville, and is the third man to hold that position. For a number of years he has been registrar of voters in Vernon, and on the incorporation of Rockville became that city's registrar of voters. He is at present director in the Peoples' Savings Bank of Rockville. Mr. Randall belongs to Fayette Lodge, F. & A. M.; Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F.; the A. O. U. W.; the Royal Arcanum, of Court Hearts of Oak, No. 16, F. of A., of which he has been financial secretary since 1890; the Sons of St. George; the American Woodmen; and a charter member of the Rockville Wheel Club. Mr. Randall belongs to St. John's Episcopal Church, where he has been a faithful worker. Well known in business and commercial circles, he is one of the self-made men of Rockville.

F. ELLIOTT METCALF. With increasing prosperity in every line of trade, as the city of Rockville, Tolland county, grows in population and importance, the business of dealing in drugs has kept pace with other industries, and probably one of the best known dealers in this line, is F. Elliott Metcalf, the subject of this sketch. Mr. Metcalf is a native son of the city, born in the old homestead on Vernon avenue, where he still resides, on May 14, 1859, the only son of his parents, Martin Van Buren and Alvira (Richardson) Metcalf.

J. Elliott McLeary

The Metcalf family is not only one of the oldest in the State of Connecticut, but is one of the earliest settled families in New England. The founder of the family in America was Michael Metcalf, of Norwich City, Yorkshire, England, who arrived in Boston, June 17, 1637, on the ship "Rose of Sharon."

(II) Michael Metcalf, Jr., son of Michael the emigrant, married Mary Fairbanks on Jan. 14, 1644.

(III) Jonathan Metcalf, son of Michael, Jr., was married in 1674, to Hannah Kendricks, and they had ten children.

(IV) Ebenezer Metcalf, third son of Jonathan, was born Feb. 14, 1680, and in 1702 he settled in Lebanon, Conn. He married Hannah Abell, of Norwich, Connecticut.

(V) Timothy Metcalf (known as Deacon Timothy), son of Ebenezer, was one of the first deacons in the Congregational Church, in Mansfield, at the organization of the Church there. He owned large tracts of land in that section of the State, which has since been divided into other farms and town lots, in Coventry and Mansfield. About 1737 he settled in the northwestern part of the town of Mansfield, on the Willimantic river, when the town was yet in Windham county. His wife was his cousin, Hannah Metcalf, a daughter of the well-known Rev. Joseph Metcalf, of Falmouth, Mass.

(VI) Ebenezer Metcalf, son of Deacon Timothy, was married in 1782 to Silence Morey. They settled in Mansfield, where they reared a family of eight children: Alice, born in 1783, married Samuel Trapp; Ebenezer, born in 1785; Susan, born in 1787, married Elisha Hopkins and reared nine children; William, born in 1790, married Chloe Jewett, of Tolland; Hannah, born in 1793, married David Jewett, Jr., and later moved to Ohio, where she contracted a second marriage, and died in Elyria; Sybil, born in 1796, married John Essex, and removed to Michigan, the town of Essexville, in that State, having been named for their son, Ransom Essex; Salome, born in 1799, married George Olney; Joseph Bonaparte, born Aug. 9, 1804, was the grandfather of our subject. Ebenezer Metcalf was one of the brave men who answered the Putnam alarm from Mansfield, during the Revolutionary war.

(VII) Joseph Bonaparte Metcalf, was born near the Willimantic river in Mansfield, and in Tolland, in 1831, he married Elmina Leonard, who was born in 1808, a daughter of Abiel and Barbara (Stafford) Leonard, the former of whom was a blacksmith by trade and lived in Bolton for years, and during the progress of the Revolutionary war he worked at the making of gun barrels. His father, Jedediah Leonard, was one of the first settlers of Bolton. The children born to Joseph and Elmina Metcalf were four in number: (1) Charles, born in 1831, resides in Rockville; he married Lucy Bennett and their children were, Ada Elizabeth (deceased), William A. (who married Carrie Steele of Bolton and lives in Hazardville), and Arthur H. (who married Ada B. Bliss). (2) Andrew Jackson, born March 13, 1837, married Jane Morrison, of Ellington and resides in Tolland; his children are; Abiel Leonard (who is postmaster of Tolland), and Joseph Morrison (a farmer of Tolland). (3) Martin Van Buren, a twin brother of Andrew Jackson, was the father of our subject. (4) Elizabeth, died in 1843, in Somers, Connecticut. Joseph B. Metcalf died in Tolland, in 1898, his wife having passed away in 1871, and both are buried in Grove Hill cemetery in Rockville. During his long life he was a prominent and influential man. His sympathies were with the Republican party, although at one time he had been an advocate of what he considered Democratic principles, later, declaring that the Democratic party had left him, he became a very ardent Abolitionist, and during his residence in Somerville, he sheltered and assisted many fugitive slaves. The names of himself and twin brother were given them by Luther Eaton, a friend of the family, and the father of United States Senator Eaton, a very prominent Democrat of that section.

Possessed of great mechanical skill, Joseph Metcalf was able to work at almost any trade, and he invented many kinds of machinery, but realized very little from them, many of his ideas being used later by others. One of his inventions of value was the first paint grinding machine, another was a cloth measuring machine, many of these being now in use in the great Rockville mills, but he never reaped any benefit, as he did not push his interests before others took them and obtained patents. Mr. Metcalf worked in a number of the mills and in various capacities, such as machine repairing in both wood and iron, and he also became an expert weaver, living in Tolland, Somerville, East Glastonbury; coming then to Rockville, but returning to Tolland where his wife died; he removed then to Mansfield, but again returned to Tolland to pass his last days. During his last residence in Rockville, he carried on a cabinetmaking establishment, the business being in the name of his son, Andrew, and this was his last active work. Mr. Metcalf was a consistent member of the Methodist Church in which he held various offices, where his value was tested and his Christian character sustained.

(VIII) Martin Van Buren Metcalf, the father of our subject was born on March 13, 1837, in the south part of Tolland, on a farm owned by Leverett Luce, where his father was conducting a small business in cabinetmaking, and he passed away on Jan. 3, 1863, in Emory Hospital, a victim of the Civil war, one of the brave and gallant men who fell at Fredericksburg, on Dec. 13, 1862. When but a small child his father removed the family to Rockville for a short time, later to Somerville, where he first attended school, finishing his education in the former place when the family returned there. Learning the carpenter trade he became a skilled workman and continued at this business until his enlistment, on July 29, 1862, when he entered the 14th Conn. V. I., and participated in the battles of Antietam, Harpers Ferry, and went later to Belle Plain, Va., thence to Fredericksburg, where he received his death wound, and is now buried at Rockville. He married Alvira Richardson, who was born in Willington, Conn., Aug. 23, 1830, and died Jan. 13, 1892 in Rockville, and is buried in Grove Hill cemetery. She was one of a family of ten children born to Nathan and Huldah (Edson) Richardson, the former of whom was born in 1794, and the latter in 1793. At death Martin Metcalf left a widow and two children, F. Elliott, and his sister Ellen, the latter of whom married Rev. H. H. Martin, a minister of the Methodist Church. The mother of our subject resided in Rockville for a number of years.

F. Elliott Metcalf attended school in Rockville under competent teachers until he went on a visit to his uncle Nathan Richardson, who lived in Newark, N. J., and there he took a course in business methods at Bryant & Stratton's Business College. Mr. Richardson was superintendent of stairbuilding for a large contracting firm in Newark, and our subject remained in his home for some time, and would undoubtedly have located there had not the serious illness of his sister recalled him to Rockville. Later he entered the finishing room of what was the White Manufacturing Co., and remained there one year, leaving it to learn the drug business with E. F. Wilson.

The details of this new business were soon familiar to Mr. Metcalf, and, closely applying himself, he soon became well instructed and competent, remaining in this store until March, 1884. He left to open up a business of his own, the firm name being W. A. & F. E. Metcalf, and the location where his present store stands. This same firm later opened up a second store in what was the Maxwell Block, which stood on the south-west corner of Main and Union streets, and the two stores were conducted with success until 1890, when our subject took the East Main street store as an individual, which he has since conducted, and for a number of years has had the representative business of this kind in Rockville.

Mr. Metcalf was married on June 3, 1886, in Warehouse Point, Conn., by Rev. H. H. Martin, his brother-in-law, to Miss Lina M. Glaser, of Rockville, who was born May 9, 1862, in Saxony, Germany, a daughter of Ernest and Ernestine (Uhlig) Glaser, the former of whom came from the same part of Germany as did his wife, and there learned the trade of weaver. Mr. Glaser brought his family to America in 1864, sailing from Hamburg, and after forty-nine days on the water landed in New York, where they lived for some two years, and then came to Rockville, but a few years later removed to Davenport, Iowa, where he followed his trade, returning four years later to Rockville, and in June 1886 went to Fremont, Ohio, where he remained one year before his final location in Rockville. The family born to Mr. and Mrs. Glaser were: Lina Mary, wife of our subject; Ida, now the wife of Frederick Rabe, of Hartford; Agnes, who married Eli Geedhill, of Mystic, Conn.; Amelia; Louis, of this city; Hattie; Minnie; and Elsie.

After his marriage Mr. Metcalf located in his father's homestead on Vernon avenue, where he has since resided, and where his three children have been born: Martin, born in 1887; Elliott Harrison, in 1888; and Marjorie, in 1893. The first Presidential vote cast by Mr. Metcalf was for James A. Garfield, and ever since he has been a supporter of the Republican party. Socially he is connected with Rising Star Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Rockville, and since January, 1893, has been its treasurer. He is also a member of Midian Encampment, No. 7, of Hartford. Both he and wife have long been valued members of the Methodist Church, in which our subject officiates as steward and to which he most cheerfully contributes to the various charitable and benevolent enterprises. Mr. Metcalf is a man who enjoys outdoor recreation and pleasures, and thoroughly appreciates short vacations spent in this way, although there is no man in the city more attentive to his business, or more highly regarded in business circles.

THOMAS DOWLING, deceased. The death of Thomas Dowling closed a life history that began in humble surroundings, but ended in a setting of comfort and eminent respectability. From a young man, blessed only with an abundance of energy and ambition, to whom the opportunity to obtain work in any form was a benefaction, he became one of the most substantial and successful merchants of Rockville, leaving at his death a handsome competency for those he left behind, and with it an honorable and excellent name.

Thomas Dowling was born in the Province of Leinster, Queens Co., Ireland, in 1843, a son of Michael and Elizabeth (McDerby) Dowling. The occupation of the father was that of a laborer, and in the hope of better providing for his growing family, with his son James, he came to the United States, May 11, 1848, locating at Ellington, Conn., where he found work and became satisfied that it would be safe to send for the rest of the family. In December, 1848, his wife came with William, Mary, Elizabeth, Thomas and Bridget, leaving John, who was delicate, but later also came, and finally the whole family was re-united in Ellington, remaining there three years, during which time Francis was born. The parents later removed to Rockville, where they passed their last years. The family consisted of the following named children: William, a resident of Rockville; James, deceased; John, who became a merchant of Rockville, a partner of Thomas, and is deceased; Francis, deceased; Elizabeth, the wife of William Brennan, who lives in Talcottville; Bridget, deceased, who married James Breen; and Mary, who lives in Rockville, the widow of William Murphy.

Thomas Dowling was a boy of six years when he was brought to the United States and his first schooling was in the Beebe District of Ellington; after their removal to Rockville he worked in the warp mill, and went to school during the winter. As soon as old enough he began to learn the trade of harness maker, under the instruction of Nathan Crane, of Rockville, soon becoming very proficient, and engaging in this line in various places, Stafford Springs, Conn., Barre, Mass., New Bedford, Mass., and Keene, N. H., being among the number; he did high-class roped work and gained quite a reputation as successful in that kind of work, his skill earning him sometimes $50 a week. His brother John had taken employment with a New York book firm and was very successful in that line, and this caused Thomas also to go into that business, where he immediately succeeded, his pleasant personality and gracious manners winning him friends very easily.

Traveling all through New England and the eastern States, he followed the book business until 1873, when, becoming tired of a traveling life, he associated himself with his brother John, who had already opened up a mercantile business in Rockville, the firm becoming J. and T. Dowling; locating in the Doane block, they did a thriving trade. In July, 1878, Mr. John Dowling died, and Thomas conducted the enterprise alone until the block was destroyed by fire, and with it his entire stock. This calamity did in no wise discourage Mr. Dowling. Some years previously he had bought the property on the corner of West Main and Union streets and at once after this fire he began the erection of what is the best business block in Rockville, known after his death as the Maxwell Block. This building was ready for occupancy in April, 1888, and there Mr. Dowling opened up one of the largest and most complete dry goods stores in the locality, doing an immense business until 1892, when he retired from all business activity. This business block was in reality a monument to his push and business energy. It was destroyed by fire Jan. 3, 1901, and was not rebuilt.

In 1873, in Holyoke, Mass., Mr. Dowling was married to Miss Mary Moore, born in Oakland, Conn., a daughter of John and Mary (Wallace) Moore, both natives of Ireland. Two daughters, Mary E. and Catherine R., were born of this union.

Mary E. died when four years old; Miss Catherine Dowling was educated at Notre Dame school at Waterbury, where she attended for seven years, and she now resides with her widowed mother in their pleasant home on High street, Rockville.

The death of Thomas Dowling occurred just as he was beginning to enjoy the fruits of his successful labors, the immediate cause being apoplexy, Sept. 3, 1892; his last resting place is in St. Bernard cemetery in Rockville. Mr. Dowling was a man of superior gifts of mind and character, possessing an energy and determination which enabled him to carry on large enterprises successfully. In commercial lines his foresight and good judgment were excellent, and his systematic attention to business never permitted tiresome details to discourage him. To a marked degree he enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all his business associates, as his integrity was unquestioned, and his family has been among those most respected in Rockville.

JOHN A. PAINE. In taking advantage of the opportunities at his command John A. Paine has evinced a financial and executive generalship consistent with the lasting well-being of communities wherever found. The traits of character which have placed him at the head of numerous important undertakings in Danielson, Windham county, are, with few exceptions, the heritage of boys who rise early on their father's farms, and who embark upon the tide of success with assets that partake rather of the mental and moral than the material. Also, he comes of the conservative, reliable New England stock which maintains the Puritanical stability of remote ancestors who lived in Rhode Island long before the present degree of prosperity and enterprise was inaugurated. Mr. Paine was born in Woodstock, Conn., March 13, 1850, a son of Martin and grandson of Cyril Paine, both natives of Pascoag, R. I.

MARTIN PAINE spent his youth on his father's Rhode Island farm, and when arrived at manhood removed to Woodstock, Conn., locating on the Perrin farm in the southern part of the town. A house lot of ten acres which is a part of the present farm was granted to Samuel Perrin in 1693 and has been in the Perrin family since that time. He was public-spirited and enterprising, and up to the time of his death, Dec. 29, 1891, continued to take an interest in public as well as private affairs. He was a staunch Republican in political affiliation, was selectman, and Representative of Woodstock in the State Legislature. In Woodstock in 1843 he was united in marriage with Lucia Maria Perrin, born in Woodstock Sept. 6, 1817, a daughter of Amos and Marena (Blanchard) Perrin. Of this union there were four children: Marcia, who died young; Amos, who lives on the old homestead; John A.; and Caroline, a widow, still living on the homestead at the ripe old age of eighty-five years.

The education of John A. Paine was acquired in the public schools and at Woodstock Academy, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1871. For one term he taught school in the Harrisville District of Woodstock, and in September, 1872, he entered the arena of business as a salesman and bookkeeper for J. O. Fox & Co., lumber dealers of Putnam. In 1877 he became interested with John Davenport in the purchase of the coal, lumber, fertilizer and builders' supply materials business of O. M. Capron & Son, the two partners continuing this association amicably and profitably until the dissolution of the partnership in March, 1882. At that time Mr. Davenport assumed charge of the coal business, while Mr. Paine continued the rest of the enterprise until 1896, in which year he sold out to James A. Nichols, the present manager and owner. At the same time Mr. Paine engaged in the real estate business, and laid the foundation for the present large holdings of which he is the possessor, and the management of which occupies the greater part of his time. He is half owner of the Keystone block, and is one of the directors and owners of the Phoenix block. His own pleasant home on Broad street was erected in 1885. For a short period of time he was owner of the Aspinock mill property, but eventually disposed of it to Everett E. Tripp, of Fall River, by whom it was disposed of to the Uncas Knitting Company.

Since disposing of the lumber and supply business Mr. Paine has been especially active in general town affairs, and as a Republican has made his influence felt in promoting clean and disinterested public service. In 1897 he represented Killingly in the State Legislature, but a serious illness prevented the finishing of his term. The friend and advocate of education, he has suggested improvements of an important nature during his service on the school board since 1890, and his influence has materially strengthened since his appointment to the trusteeship of the board in October, 1900. Nov. 4, 1902, he was elected judge of probate of the town of Killingly on the Republican ticket. For several years he was a member of the board of burgesses of the borough of Danielson, and has held other offices of more or less importance. Mr. Paine was the last president of the First National Bank during the life of that institution, and since its disposal in 1896 to the Windham County Bank people, he has been a director in the latter institution. He has also been a trustee of the Windham County Savings Bank since 1893 and vice-president since June, 1902. In his church relations Mr. Paine is connected with the Westfield Congregational Church, of which he has been a deacon since 1891. He is a member of the committee of the Bugbee Memorial Library, now in course of construction.

On Jan. 25, 1882, Mr. Paine married Fannie G. Dorrance, born Jan. 30, 1863, a native of Brooklyn, Conn., and daughter of Charles and Jeannette (Sharpe) Dorrance. To Mr. and Mrs. Paine have been born five children, viz.: Everett Augustin, born Aug. 24, 1882, deceased May 25, 1895; Arthur Rupert, born Oct. 5, 1884, graduated from the Killingly high school in 1902, at present attending Worcester Academy; Wallace Martin, born May 13, 1887; Corrinne Lucia, born May 30, 1889; and Dorothy Dorrance, born Aug. 14, 1895. Mr. Paine is quiet and unostentatious, yet conveys an impression of reserve strength so readily recognized in the reliable, successful and highly respected business men of the more prosperous New England towns.

WILLIAM H. JUDSON, M. D., whose residence is at Danielson, Windham Co., Conn., holds a very enviable professional standing in that part of the State, and is highly esteemed not only for his medical learning, but for his personal character as well.

The history of the Judson family in Connecticut begins with the career of William Judson, who was originally of Concord, Mass., but later at New Haven, Conn. His first wife, Grace, was born in England, where he married her. She died in New Haven, Sept. 29, 1659, and he married for his second wife, Elizabeth Wilmot, Feb. 8, 1660, at New Haven, where he died July 29, 1720. His children, all of whom were born in England, were Joseph, Jeremiah and Joshua. Their descendants were numerous in Stratford, and the neighboring towns, especially in Woodbury, from whence came a number who were prominent in the ministry.

Rev. Andrew W. Judson was born in Stratford, Conn., Feb. 1, 1749, and was educated in Dartmouth College, from which he was graduated about 1773. He became the settled orthodox minister at Eastford, Conn., and was married to his first wife, Elizabeth Work, Jan. 7, 1779; and to his second wife, Mary Work, March 13, 1785. Mary Work was born March 8, 1763, and became the mother of a numerous family, several of whom were eminent in public life. The husband and father died Nov. 15, 1804, in the twenty-sixth year of his ministry. By his first wife, Elizabeth, he had the following children: Josie, born Feb. 6, 1780; John W., July 8, 1782; Andrew T., Nov. 23, 1874. By his marriage to Mary Work, were born: Elizabeth M., Nov. 24, 1785; Sylvester G., Feb. 15, 1788; Zuinglius, grandfather to Dr. William H., Jan. 30, 1790; Melancthon, Sept. 22, 1794; twins, born May 3, 1797, who both died in infancy.

Zuinglius Judson was born in Eastford, where he became a very successful cabinet maker, and where his life was spent in honorable and useful labor. He was married Dec. 4, 1816, to Crissa Storrs, a daughter of the Rev. William and Abigail (Hovey) Storrs. Her birth occurred in Westford, Conn., March 15, 1793, and she became the mother of the following children: Andrew William, born in Eastford, Conn., Aug. 26, 1820; Crissa, born in Eastford, April 23, 1823, who married

Thomas Clark, Sept. 19, 1854, and had her home in Canterbury, Conn. Mr. Judson died Dec. 1, 1840, and his widow, Crissa, married Rev. Asa King, June 16, 1844.

Andrew William Judson was born and reared in Eastford, where he married Lucy B. Matthews, June 6, 1844. She was born in North Brookfield, Mass., June 3, 1823, a daughter of Charles P. and Hannah (Southworth) Matthews. To this happy union were born: William H., born in Milford, Mass., June 27, 1854; Rosetta S., born in Milford, Mass., April 8, 1861; and Helen Cecilia, born in Milford, Mass., March 13, 1864, who married Jefferson Lyford and lived at West Upton, Mass. Mr. Judson located in Milford, Mass., in 1853, and established the first photographer's business in the place, a pursuit he followed with fair success for some fifteen years, when he retired from that line, and a year later associated himself with George M. Sartelle and O. S. Tuttle, under the firm name of Judson, Sartelle & Co., engaged in the house-furnishing business.

Six years later Mr. Judson removed to Mendon, Mass., and died Dec. 5, 1887. His widow survived him until Sept. 19, 1897. Both Andrew W. Judson and his wife were members of the Congregational Church, and were highly respected wherever they were known. In political matters he was at first a Democrat, but joined the Republican party at its organization.

Dr. William H. Judson has risen by industry and studious application, joined with a natural aptitude for his great profession, to a creditable position in the community where his useful years are swiftly passing. In the pursuit of his education he worked his way from the parental farm in Mendon, Mass., on which he was employed until he was eighteen years of age, through Phillips Exeter Academy, graduating in 1875; the Medical Department of the University of Michigan, class of 1877, and the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, class of 1878, under such rare masters of the healing art as Drs. Gross, DaCosta and Pancoast. His professional career began in Pomfret, at the village of Abington, where he remained about half a year. In 1879 he removed to Wauregan, where he continued his practice for some eight years:

Dr. Judson located in Danielson, Conn., in 1887, and there he is meeting with that large success in his chosen field of labor that his natural aptitude, upright character and thorough mastery of his work demand and receive.

Dr. Judson was married Dec. 3, 1886, in Wauregan, to Anna McKinney, a daughter of John and Isabelle McKinney, of Wauregan, Conn., and to them has come a daughter, Ethel Rosetta, born Nov. 12, 1890.

Dr. Judson belongs to the State and County Medical Societies, the Quinebaug Lodge, A. O. U. W., of Danielson, and the Royal Arcanum of Putnam. In all political matters he is a Republican, and both the Doctor and his excellent wife are esteemed members of the Methodist Church, of Danielson.

LAMBERT WORTHINGTON CADY, deceased. During the useful and busy life of Lambert Worthington Cady, he was one of the most successful, highly esteemed and popular citizens of Somerville, Tolland county, Conn., and sincere grief was universally expressed at the time of his death, Jan. 26, 1899.

Lambert W. Cady was born Jan. 17, 1846, in Warren, Mass., where he resided until the age of eleven years and then came to Somers to make his home with his grandfather Cady, where he remained for two years, going to school during this time in Somers. Early in life, he began to care for himself by engaging in farm and factory work, first at Hazardville and then at Broad Brook, Conn., being employed at the latter place when the Civil war broke out. Enthusiastic and patriotic, the lad immediately determined to become a soldier, but his father refused consent on account of his tender age, and he was obliged to wait until Dec. 31, 1864, when he enlisted, in Warren, joining Co. F, 3d Regiment, Mass. Cav., and saw considerable service in Missouri. While on his way to the West to fight the Indians, the regiment was mustered out Sept. 28, 1865, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Previous to his enlistment Mr. Cady had learned the blacksmith trade under a Mr. Cunningham, in Hampden, Mass., and after returning from his country's service, he was employed in Lakewood, N. J., until 1867 at which time he came first to Somerville and was employed by Henry Rogers in his blacksmith shop and remained with him through one year and then purchased the shop of Mr. Rogers, although he was obliged to go into debt to do so. Being an excellent workman he soon paid his indebtedness and continued the business during his whole life. His work was far superior to that of any other in the locality and as he was honest and obliging, he was kept constantly busy, and in the course of time accumulated an independence. His lamented death was caused by pneumonia, due to exposure, and he was buried in the new cemetery at Somers, where a handsome stone has been erected to his memory. It was remarked at the time of his funeral that every one had seemed to grieve, and sought to honor him, as his burial was attended by a large concourse of people who had known him during his life.

Although Mr. Cady was an ardent Republican, he declined the many offers of office until his friends prevailed upon him to accept the nomination for representative of Somers and he was elected to the General Assembly in 1885, running considerably beyond the ticket; while in the Legislature he served on the committee on Temperance, most acceptably.

Mr. Cady was a charter member of Mt. Vernon Lodge, No. 10, O. U. A. M., and served as treasurer of the same from its organization until his death. As a member of the G. A. R. Post at Thompsonville, he was valued by his comrades and was always welcomed by his Masonic brethren at Stafford. In religious life, Mr. Cady was a Spiritualist and enjoyed his experiences and sought to interest others for their own benefit. He had a pleasant personality, being a man of fine physique and genial, agreeable manner.

Mr. Cady was married May 21, 1874, to Eva N. Arnold, a native of Somers, a daughter of Samuel and Jerusha (Kibbe) Arnold. Samuel Arnold was a manufacturer of Shaker hoods and bonnets, in Somerville, but met with financial reverses and went to Illinois, where he was engaged as a railroad contractor; he was successful, and returning then to his old home, he paid all of his obligations and again engaged in the manufacture of the Shaker bonnets, and also dealt in lumber, dying in Somerville July 29, 1878. His marriage to Jerusha Kibbe, who died Aug. 14, 1863, at the age of fifty-four, resulted in the birth of five children: Gilbert, a merchant at Latrobe, Ohio, who died while on a railroad train, Dec. 27, 1861, at the age of twenty-nine; Theodore K., a mechanic living in Somerville, married to Eliza Dexter; Emily, living in Somerville, married to Charles Standish; Jane E., the widow of Abbott Prior of Hartford; and the youngest, Mrs. Cady. The second marriage of Mr. Arnold was to Mrs. Fidelity Wadsworth, who resides in Springfield, Massachusetts.

RICHARD GOODWIN WATEROUS, who is living retired at Windham, was for many years a prominent business man of Hartford, and was born Dec. 31, 1855, in Mansfield, Connecticut.

Abraham Allen Waterhouse, grandfather of Richard G., was a prominent merchant in New York for many years. In 1837 he came to Hartford county, Conn., and located at East Hartford, where he lived retired until his death.

Richard Goodwin Waterous, Sr., changed the spelling of the family name from Waterhouse to Waterous. He was a hatter and furrier in Hartford. In 1868 he visited the European capitals with Gen. Tom Thumb and Minnie Warren, and was entertained by the crowned heads. Mr. Waterous was a man of literary tastes, and wrote several articles, besides a book, descriptive of the home of the Duke of Devonshire. Not only was he well acquainted with European countries, but he traveled extensively in his own, visiting Colorado and New Mexico. From the latter territory he made the journey home to East Hartford on horseback. In 1888 he retired from active business, and passed the rest of his life with the books he so enjoyed. He died at his home in East Hartford in 1897. In politics he was a Republican, but in no sense a politician, and was well known for his honesty and upright character. He married Annie Ramsdell, daughter of Thomas and Mary Elizabeth (Lathrop) Ramsdell, and sister of Mrs. Guilford Smith, of Windham. Four children blessed this union: Richard Goodwin; Thomas C., who resides in San Diego, Cal.; and two that died in infancy. Mrs. Waterous is still living and resides in Hartford.

Richard Goodwin Waterous, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Hartford, and at a private school in Norwalk. He became a member of the wholesale grocery firm of E. S. Kibbe & Co., of Hartford, where he remained until 1890, when he sold out his interest and retired from business. In 1900 he bought a home in Windham, a tract of fifty acres of picturesque ground, improved with a colonial mansion, one of the most attractive places in old Windham. Mr. and Mrs. Waterous pass their summers in this beautiful place, but in the winter they seek a milder climate. Mr. Waterous is a gentleman of pleasing manners and genial disposition. In politics he was a Republican, and served in the Internal Revenue offices at Hartford and Providence during the administrations of Presidents Cleveland and Harrison. Socially he belongs to the Hartford Club.

In June, 1900, Mr. Waterous was united in marriage in Windham, with Eugenia Isabelle Campbell, daughter of Charles Campbell, and one child, Richard Goodwin (3), has come to brighten their home.

LAURITS HANSEN, who is very highly esteemed in Tolland for his many manly and excellent qualities, was born in Schleswig (then a province of Denmark, but now belonging to Prussia), Aug. 18, 1847, and is a son of Hans Anderson Trulsen Bosen, a native Dane, who lived and died in his own country. A hand weaver and a hard worker, he left a name of honest worth and simple integrity. Mettie Marie Laustdater, his wife, lived and died in Denmark, her native land, and is remembered as a good wife and mother. They were the parents of eight children: Anna Marie, who married Gens Christian Sorrensen, and now lives in Tolland; Boy Hansen, who settled in Tolland and died on his farm; Carl, a farmer, living in West Stafford, Conn.; Laurits; Hans Mathiesen, who now lives in Tolland, a thrifty farmer; the other children died when young.

Laurits Hansen attended the local schools in his Danish home until he reached the age of fourteen years, when he began to work on a farm, a step made necessary by the poverty of the family. Early in his career he formed the plan of coming to the United States to seek the larger and better life denied him at home. In April, 1870, he was able to carry out his long-cherished desires, and sailed from Hamburg, on the English liner, "Etruria," landing in New York, May 9, 1870, practically penniless, but with a mighty courage and a will to succeed. His first work was in a brick yard in Perth

Amboy, where he found his standing and from that rapidly worked up to more important things. In six weeks he was offered a better position in a brick yard at Hartford, Conn., which he accepted and worked in the yards some months. Mr. Hansen assisted in the construction of the Hartford horse car tracks and the roadbed of the Connecticut Western Railway. He was employed in the National Screw Company, of Hartford, for three years, beginning in the fall of 1871.

In 1874 he leased the Seth Kenyon farm of forty acres on "Blue Hills," Hartford, for which he paid $700 a year, and conducted it for five and a half years, having at the same time a milk route in Hartford. In this time by close economy and unceasing industry he saved enough to buy a farm in Tolland.

Mr. Hansen came to Tolland in 1880 and bought the old Birch Grover farm of 190 acres, and there he settled his family. This was practically moving into an unbroken forest, as the oaks and elms were growing in their original splendor. Mr. Hansen applied himself earnestly to the work of converting this forest into a farm, and his efforts were rewarded with rich success. A dairy was established and milk sold to the people of Stafford until 1898, when he sold the farm to his daughter, Mrs. Nels Larson, reserving, however, the right to a small portion of the farm upon which he and his devoted wife are now living practically in retirement.

Mr. Hansen avows much of his success is due to his wife, who has never failed him in adversity and trial. Much of the credit for the rapid improvement of that portion of Tolland which is known as "Bufcapp," is due to Mr. Hansen. "The Mountain Park Pleasure Club" of Tolland was formed in 1900 very largely through the instrumentality of Mr. Hansen, and its object is the social and open-air benefit of the Danish and Swedish inhabitants of "Bufcapp"; the grounds they use belong to the farm he rescued from the primeval forest. Mr. Hansen is the president of the Club and takes much interest in its successful operation.

Mr. Hansen is a Republican and has filled several local and town offices so perfectly to the satisfaction of the public that he has been re-elected. His honor and integrity are above reproach. Mr. Hansen was assessor of the town two years, and justice of the peace two terms; he has also served as grand juror several terms. Mr. Hansen and his wife are both members of the Lutheran Church, but as that church is not represented in Tolland, they attend the Episcopal Mission.

Mr. Hansen was married April 28, 1869, to Miss Amelia Fredrica Juul, who was born Aug. 22, 1847, in Denmark. To this union have come the following children: Metta, born in Denmark, who married Nels Larson, a thrifty and prosperous farmer of Tolland, and has had three children, Mildred Corinne, Raymond Laurits, who died in infancy, and Carina Altea; Carl, born in Hartford, deceased in infancy; Catherine Patrea, born in Hartford, who married Herbert Swede, and is the mother of two children, Ruby Catherine and Charles Herbert; Hans Anderson, born in Hartford, who married Mary E. Jacobsen, a daughter of Anthony Jacobsen, and is working at the carpenter trade in Hartford; Amelia Louise, born in Hartford, who married Nels Nelson, and lives in Hartford, where they have one child, Mabel Esther; Peter Peterson, born in Hartford, a baker by trade, who married Mary Jordan, of Hartford.

The farm on which Mr. Hansen toiled so long is one of the most productive in Tolland, and its fertility is largely due to his unwearied industry. Mr. Hansen came alone to this country, when but twenty-three years of age, and presently had saved enough to send for his family. The road which he has followed has been a difficult one, but he has persevered and a large success has crowned his efforts. In the years that have passed his kindly nature has often displayed itself, and his charities, which have been many, have been shrouded by his modest disposition.

HON. EDWIN SUMNER AGARD. As treasurer of the William Sumner Belting Company, and as a lawyer of ability, Edwin Sumner Agard, of Tolland, is one of the leading citizens of the town and is conspicuous as an influential politician and representative man.

Edwin Sumner Agard was born in Hartford, Conn., Nov. 11, 1851, and in his native city he was an apt and ambitious pupil in the public schools. Next he was sent for a course of two years to a private school in Ellington, which was taught by Edward Hall, whose attainments made this a noted school in his day. From there Edwin went to the East Greenwich Academy, at East Greenwich, R. I., where he was graduated in 1874 as the salutatorian of his class.

The following two years were passed by Mr. Agard in St. Louis, Mo., where he was associated with the musical instrument house of A. Sumner & Co., but his mind was set on the law, and after his return to Tolland he entered upon a course of legal study with the noted jurist, Charles Phelps, of Rockville. In 1880, he was admitted to practice in the State of Connecticut and since that time has been one of the active lawyers of this part of the State. In 1884 he accepted the position of treasurer of the Underwood Manufacturing Company, and this office he still holds, under the new firm, which is now a joint stock company.

As a staunch Republican Mr. Agard soon became known to local politicians and served as justice of the peace in 1880, for six years was Tolland town clerk, and in 1881 was elected as representative to the Legislature, during his term of service being made chairman of the committee on Federal Relations. In 1897 the confidence of his fellow-citizens was shown by his being sent again to the Legislature, and during this term he was a member of the committee on Banking and his services were instrumental in having passed the charter of the Savings Bank of Tolland, permitting them to receive deposits subject to checks.

Mr. Agard was married Sept. 5, 1876, to Sara Stanton Browning, of South Kingston, R. I., who was a daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Crandell) Browning. The children of this union are Harry Browning, born June 21, 1877, who graduated from the law school of Yale, in 1900, and was admitted to the bar in September of the same year, previous to that time having graduated from the Rockville high school, and having studied two years at Oberlin College; Florence Edna, born June 30, 1881, graduated from Smith College, class of 1902; Lilla Sumner, born March 6, 1885, a graduate of the Rockville high school in 1902, and Elizabeth Browning, who was born Oct. 31, 1892.

Mr. Agard has been prominently identified with many business interests in Tolland, and is now director of the Savings Bank of Tolland. For a very long period he has been a leading member of the Congregational Church, and has served as clerk and as treasurer of the Ecclesiastical Society of the church.

HUGH KERNAN is one of the best known Irish citizens of Rockville, Tolland county, and is one whose activity in mind and body is not lessened by advanced years, both being in remarkable preservation. In considering the valued citizens of the busy little city, Mr. Kernan should not be left out, for his example of honest industry through the many years of his residence there, and his accumulation of ample means on account of it, have not been lost upon the community.

Hugh Kernan was born in Feb., 1828, in County Cavan, Ireland, and was a son of Patrick and Bridget (Callahan) Kernan, who spent their entire lives in that country. He had but limited school advantages, and in 1848 determined to leave the old home and join others of his neighborhood who had already departed and become prosperous in America. Sailing from Liverpool in the "Cornelia," of the Red Star Line, after five weeks and three days, he landed in the city of New York and found work at South Norwalk, Conn., as a laborer on what is now the Consolidated Railroad, which was then building, and a few months later went to Pennsylvania, where, with others as new to the country as himself, he found work on the Delaware and Hudson canal, fifteen miles south of the town of Honesdale. About a year was spent in that locality and then Mr. Kernan started north where more building was being done, going by way of boat to Hartford, thence by a stage which started from the old "American Hotel," to Rockville, where he worked in the American mill in the gig room, his wages being $15.00 per month and as he was obliged to board himself, he had but a small amount left. He remained about a year in this mill and then went to the New England farm, where he worked a few months and then began to do teaming for Hammond & Doane, sometimes driving four and even six horses, the hauling being done to and from Hartford and Rockville; in those days the plan of hauling goods was the common one and the sight of a six-horse team, with a heavy load of manufactured goods or merchandise was not uncommon. During his long term of service in this line of work, Mr. Kernan grew interested in it and later began a little business in the same line for himself, beginning with two horses and a wagon, later adding two more and for a number of years using four horses in general teaming and trucking.

When the railroad was built into Rockville in 1864, the business became less profitable and Mr. Kernan took up the business of buying wood lots and selling off the timber, which business he has followed ever since and has a wood yard on Grove street, and in this line is the oldest dealer in the city, having delivered many cords of wood there.

Mr. Kernan was married in Stafford Springs, Conn., to Miss Ann Smith, who was born in his own county in Ireland, and soon after marriage they went to housekeeping on Grove street, where he yet lives, in a house which he and his brother Philip built. The children of this union are: Mary, Francis, Hugh and Thomas, all of them residents of Rockville.

When Mr. Kernan settled in Rockville he was almost the first Irishman there, since which time many others of his countrymen have come. Always a great worker, he has found little time for either education or politics, but has voted the Democratic ticket although he has taken no active interest in any particular candidate, and has become, by close observation, a very intelligent citizen and a real type of his genial and quick-witted race. His real estate holdings in the city are valuable and he has the satisfaction of knowing that all has been honestly earned, although sometimes the way seemed long and hard, but the time has never been when he shirked a duty or failed to pay an honest debt. Mr. Kernan is one of the most respected men in the city of Rockville.

THOMAS FREDERICK MULLEN. The name of Mullen has become associated through New England with the manufacture of a very fine quality of cassimere cloth, but long prior to this connection, it was respected in Massachusetts, whither came John Mullen, in 1853, from his native Ireland. His location was in Millbury, Mass., where he was much respected during a busy life. His widow, Mary (Maloy) Mullen died in Blackstone, Mass., one of the oldest residents of the State, having almost reached her 100th year. The children born to John and Mary Mullen were: Joseph, born in Ireland, in 1839, who was the founder of the business with which Thomas Frederick Mullen is now connected; Dennis, who was a carder in the Stafford mill, married Mary Ward, and was killed by the cars, in this place, in 1900; Kate and Della, both of whom died in Iowa; Thomas Francis; John, who entered the army during the Civil war, at the age of eighteen years, and died in a hospital in Virginia; Mary, who married Barney Baggins, and lives in Blackstone; and Jane, who married James Cunningham, and lives in Blackstone, Mass.

Thomas Francis Mullen was born in Ireland, in 1845, and he was about eight years old when he came to America and settled with his family in Millbury, Mass. By trade he was a carder, and later for two years was associated with his brother Joseph, in East Brookfield, Mass. He then removed to Palmer, Mass., where he purchased the Silver Street mill, which he conducted until the time of his death. His mill was engaged in the making of satinets, and the business prospered during his three years management. His death occurred in Palmer, on June 19, 1881.

Mr. Mullen was married on March 1, 1868, to Catherine Farrell, a daughter of James Farrell, of Uxbridge, Mass., the latter being an engineer by trade. The children of this marriage were: (1) John Henry, born April 6, 1869, in Webster, Mass., removed to Stafford in his youth and was educated in the Stafford High school. Soon after graduation, he entered into the employ of his uncle Joseph, and in 1890, was admitted into partnership. His close attention to the work and his knowledge of every detail thoroughly fitted him for the responsibilities that fell upon him by the death of his uncle in 1891, as during his management of the mill the business not only maintained its high standard, but was enlarged, which fact, when his comparative youth is considered, reflects unusual credit upon his rare managerial ability. After his uncle's death, he purchased the interests of the other heirs, and became the sole owner. His death took place on May 26, 1898, in Stafford, his mantle falling upon Thomas Frederick, his brother, of this sketch. (2) Mary Francis, born Feb. 20, 1875, is at home. (3) Thomas Frederick. (4) and (5) both died in infancy. (6) Joseph Edward, born March 12, 1881, is now at home.

Thomas Frederick Mullen was born Aug. 1, 1877, in East Brookfield, Mass., and was brought to Stafford when about six years of age. His education was acquired in the Stafford schools, and he graduated from the High school in 1895, at which time he entered into the business which his brother was successfully conducting. Beginning at the bottom, he thoroughly learned every detail, and when his brother's lamented death occurred, in 1898, he was able immediately to assume control and continue its prosperity. Since that time, Mr. Mullen has introduced many improvements, and in 1901, added a very decided one, this being a new picker house and brick dry-room. His energy and industry are indicative of the future continued success of the Forest mill.

In his political convictions, Mr. Mullen is a staunch Republican, although the cares of a great business have prevented his accepting any of the offices for which he is so eminently fitted. His religious membership is with St. Edward's Catholic Church, of Stafford Springs.
